"Nights on Broadway." "Nights on Broadway" is the second single from Main Course. "Nights on Broadway" established Barry's falsetto voice in the chorus. While recording, the producer Arif Martin asked if one of the Bee Gees could do some screaming during the main chorus to make the song more exciting. In return, Barry began singing higher and higher, revealing a surprising yet powerful falsetto. It was a defining moment in the Bee Gees' musical style. This legendary falsetto became a hallmark of the Bee Gees sound.

"Stayin' Alive." "Stayin' Alive" was released as a single in 1977, the group's second hit from the album Saturday Night Fever: Original Soundtrack, one of the best-selling film sound tracks of all time. Partly because it was played in the opening scene of the tremendously successful disco film, "Stayin' Alive" is one of the Bee Gees' most popular and most identifiable songs. The lyrics and the bouncy backbeat of "Stayin' Alive" mirror the central character (played by John Travolta) as he coolly struts along the streets of New York. The chorus features the famous falsetto vocals and the percussive background track.

"Alone." "Alone" is the opening track and first single on the multiplatinum Still Waters album released by the Bee Gees in 1997. The song is a melancholy pop ballad written by Barry, Robin, and Maurice and recorded in 1996. The use of bagpipes and upbeat tempo conflict with the sad lyrics of the song. This highly criticized album was the Bee Gees' attempt to get into the adult contemporary music market. This particular song was considered one of the standout tracks, displaying the Bee Gees' unique blend of soft rock and falsetto.

Musical Legacy

At numerous times throughout their careers, the Gibb brothers endured commercial dry spells and critical backlash. Nonetheless, the legacy of the Bee Gees is marked by the extraordinary success of their Saturday Night Fever disco period, their continuing pop appeal, and the contemporary standards they produced ("To Love Somebody," "How Can You Mend a Broken Heart"). Many hit covers of the Bee Gees' songs have been recorded by such artists as Janis Joplin, Al Green, Destiny's Child, and Feist.

The band's music has also been sampled by dozens of hip-hop artists, including Wyclef Jean. The Bee Gees demonstrated a remarkable musical adaptability and an astonishing aptitude for creating hits.

In recognition, the Bee Gees have twice received Britain's Ivor Novello Trust for Outstanding Contribution to British Music (1988, 1997) and the BRIT Award (1997). In 1994 they were placed in the Songwriters Hall of Fame. Their induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1997 led to the release of the album Still Waters.

Samantha Ryan Barnsfather

Further Reading

Bebbington, Warren. The Oxford Companion to Australian Music. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997. This resource, which contains biographies of chief musical figures and groups and lists of musical organizations and companies, musical works, genres, instruments, and terms, has an extended reference on the Bee Gees.

Bee Gees. Bee Gees Anthology. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 1991. This forty-three-song anthology includes the group's music for piano, vocal, and guitar. It provides a brief discography, bibliography, and song-by-song recollection from each one of the Gibbs.

Bilyeu, Melinda, Hector Cook, and Andrew Mon Hughes. The Bee Gees: Tales of the Brothers Gibb. London: Omnibus Press, 2004. With a heavy reliance on press clippings and interviews, this seven-hundred-page book covers the life of the Gibb family members, beginning in the 1940's and ending with the death of Maurice. Includes appendixes, a complete album and singles discography, a cover versions list, and a bibliography with books, magazines, newspapers, and Web sites.

English, David. The Legend: The Illustrated Story of the Bee Gees. London: Quartet Books, 1983. Illustrated by Alex Brychta, this cartoon biography of the Bee Gees portrays Barry as "Lionheart," Robin as the "Red Setter," and Maurice as an "Eager Beaver." English was a close friend of Barry Gibb, and his book is a favorite among Bee Gees' fans because it captures the personalities of the Gibb brothers.

Leaf, David. Bee Gees: The Authorized Biography by Barry Gibb, Robin Gibb, and Maurice Gibb. London: Octopus Press, 1979. Although authorized, this book is surprisingly frank about many aspects of their lives and careers. It contains hundreds of black and white photographs, a discography, and a song list until the late 1970's.

See also: Harrison, George; Joplin, Janis; Lennon, John; McCartney, Sir Paul; Ross, Diana; Simone, Nina; Streisand, Barbra.

Gilberto Gil

Brazilian singer, guitarist, and songwriter

A famous artist of the MPB (Música Popular Brasileira) generation, Gil promotes the music and culture of Brazil. The components of compassion and social conscience in his music have made his work popular throughout the world.

Born: June 29, 1942; Salvador, Brazil

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Vira mundo; Louvação, 1967; Frevo rasgado, 1968; Cérebro eletrônico, 1969; Nega, 1971; Expresso 2222, 1972; Gil e Jorge, 1975 (with Jorge Ben); Refazenda, 1975; Refavela, 1977; Refestança, 1978; Nightingale, 1979; Realce, 1979; Brasil, 1981; Luar (A gente precisa ver o luar), 1981; Um banda um, 1981; Extra, 1983; Quilombo, 1984; Raça humana (Human Race), 1984; Dia dorim noite neon, 1985; Personalidade, 1987; Soy loco por ti America, 1987; Um trem para as estrelas, 1987; O eterno deus mu dança, 1989; Parabolic, 1991; Acoustic, 1994; Caetano y Gil: Tropicalia 2, 1994; Indigo Blue, 1997; Quanta, 1997; Copacabana mon amour, 1998; O sol de Oslo, 1998; Quanta Live, 1998; Me You Them, 2000; Gilberto Gil and Milton Nascimento, 2001; Kaya n'gan daya, 2002; Z: 300 anos de Zumbi, 2002; Eletracústico, 2004; As canções de "Eu tu eles," 2005; Gil luminoso, 2006; Rhythms of Bahia, 2006.

The Life

Gilberto Gil (zhihl-BEHR-toh zhihl) was born in Salvador, the capital of the Brazilian state of Bahia, but he grew up in Ituaçu, a small town in the interior of Bahia. His early musical influences were varied, including the folk music of the sertão (the remote, sparsely populated interior of northeastern Brazil), especially the accordion music of Luiz Gonzaga; European classical music; North American jazz; Afro-Cuban music; and the polkas and waltzes of Europe. Not surprisingly, his first instrument was the accordion, but he switched to guitar after he heard Antônio Carlos Jobim's "Chega de Saudade" (No More Blues) in 1958.

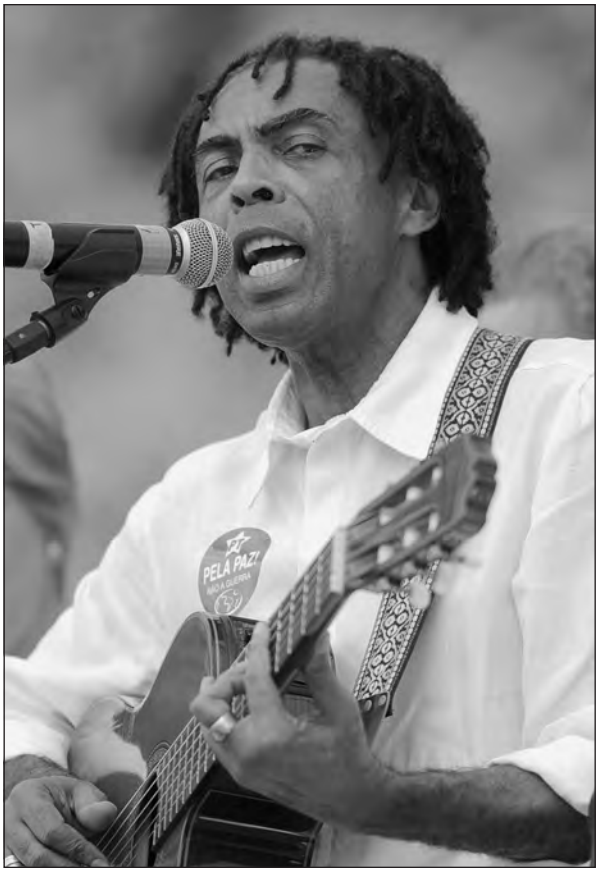
He received a degree in business administration from the federal university in Salvador, and he worked for a year for a São Paulo corporation before becoming a full-time musician. In 1965 he released his first single. The year after, Elis Regina's recording of Gil's "Louvação" (Praise) became a hit, and the same year his song "Ensaio Geral" (General Rehearsal) was awarded a prize at an important MPB (Música Popular Brasileira) festival. Música Popular Brasileira is a form of urban popular music that combines traditional Brazilian music with contemporary influences. In 1967, along with Caetano Veloso (whom he had met at the university), he founded the radical musical movement Tropicalia.

Briefly imprisoned without charges by the ruling military junta in 1969, Gil moved to England, returning to Brazil in 1972. Throughout the late 1980's and 1990's, Gil continued to record and to perform, though at this time he became active in politics. He took time off from his musical career to serve as the secretary of culture for the city of Salvador and as a member of its city council.

Gil has performed all over the world, while releasing a steady stream of both popular and critically acclaimed recordings, including two that won Grammy Awards: Quanta Live and Eletracústico. Brazilian President Lula da Silva named Gil Minister of Culture in 2003, and Gil served in that post for five years.

The Music

Gil's earliest recordings exhibit the social awareness that has typified his writing throughout his career. His first release contained the protest songs "Roda" (Circle) and "Procissão" (Procession). Louvação contained his version of the song made famous by Regina. These early songs shared the theme of the redemption of the common man from oppression.



Gilberto Gil. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Tropicalia. The Tropicalia movement—freely absorbing and transforming any and all musical influences—was effectively launched by Gil and Veloso with their entries in the 1967 TV Record Festival. Gil's entry, "Domingo no Parque" (Sunday in the park), was emblematic of the Tropicalia aesthetic: It mixed a wide and disparate array of musical and cultural elements in a modern and cinematic way. The song, arranged by avant-garde composer-conductor Rogério Duprat, was heavily influenced by the production techniques of the Beatles' song "A Day in the Life," mixing folk rhythms and instruments, electric guitars, and sound effects. While the Tropicalia movement was effectively over by the early 1970's, Gil's music continued to display the eclecticism made possible by the movement's suspension of musical boundaries.

Spirituality. When he returned from England in 1972, Gil was firmly committed to his own spiritual and artistic cultivation. The ideas of rebirth, revival, and growth are common themes in his lyrics. "Oriente," which he wrote that year, contains a subtle wordplay on the idea of the individual orienting himself or herself spiritually in the world and an obvious reference to Eastern philosophy implicit in the song's title. A number of tunes from the same period, such as "Então Vale a Pena" (then it's worth it) and "A Morte" (a death), are meditations on death and the perspective it offers on the nature and value of life.

Gil was deeply affected by his experiences performing in Africa in 1976, and much of his music since then is concerned with exploring his African roots. His 1980 collaboration with Jimmy Cliff, which included the cover of Bob Marley's "No Woman, No Cry," brought reggae to Brazil.

Reaching the Mainstream. In the late 1970's and early 1980's, Gil performed extensively in the United States and Europe. During this period, he released two recordings in the United States, Nightingale and Human Race. At the same time, he consciously shifted his musical focus from the poetic and artistic concerns of the song to the accessibility of the rhythm. His exploration of the dance rhythms of afoxé, reggae, funk, soul, and rock was a deliberate attempt to make his music more popular and to reach a wider audience. His concern with black culture, personal spiritual growth, and social justice remained, however. He saw the mass-audience appeal of dance music as a vehicle to reach out to a wide international audience.

Quanta. The 1997 album Quanta, containing twenty powerful songs, is an example of Gil at his most prolific. Stylistically diverse and with unusually high production values, the album represents Gil at the peak of his abilities. The live version of the materials from the album won a Grammy Award in 1998.

Musical Legacy

Gil's musical career represents the successful resolution of a paradox. At once sacred and profane, his work has mass appeal without sacrificing honesty and integrity. Like the seeming opposites of Gil himself—politician and pop star—his music reconciles the sensuality of dance music with the spirituality of personal and societal salvation. Gil's powerful message of hope and redemption, aligned with the celebration of his African heritage, is an inspiration to the people of the African diaspora. Nevertheless, his appeal and his message are not exclusive to any one group, no matter what their race, and they embrace all who share the human experience.

Matthew Nicholl

Further Reading

Gil, Gilberto. Songbook, Vol. 1 and Vol. 2. Edited by Almir Chediak. Rio de Janeiro: Luniar Editora, 1992. This collection has more than one hundred Gil songs, along with essays about his life and music, in Portuguese with English translation. The lead sheets and essays have been reviewed and approved by Gil.

McGowan, Chris, and Rocardo Pessanha. The Brazilian Sound. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1998. This well-researched book tells the story of Brazilian popular music, beginning with samba at the beginning of the twentieth century, and covering the development of bossa nova and MPB (Música Popular Brasileira). Excellent photographs, discography, and bibliography.

Murphy, John P. Music in Brazil: Experiencing Music, Expressing Culture. New York: Oxford University Press, 2006. This book provides an excellent presentation of the cultural context of contemporary Brazilian popular music, and it contains numerous references to Gil and other MPB musicians. Includes a sampler compact disc.

Perrone, Charles A. Master of Contemporary Brazilian Song: MPB, 1965-1985. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1989. Provides cultural and musical context for the songwriting of five important MPB songwriters: Chico Buarque, Veloso, Gil, Milton Nascimento, and João Bosco. Includes biographical detail and translations and analyses of many song lyrics.

Schreiner, Claus. Música Brasileira: A History of Popular Music and the People of Brazil. New York: Marion Boyars, 1993. This resource is written by a German radio producer and journalist who has been involved in the Latin music scene since the early 1970's. Includes references to Gil, a bibliography, a glossary, an index, and a list of samba schools in Rio de Janeiro.

See also: Gilberto, João; Jobim, Antônio Carlos; Nascimento, Milton.

João Gilberto

Brazilian Latin guitarist, singer, and songwriter

Gilberto created the subdued, lyrical style of bossa nova by transforming the composition and performance of samba canção (samba song), introducing Brazilian popular music to the world.

Born: June 10, 1931; Salvador, Bahia, Brazil
Also known as: João Gilberto Prado Pereira de Oliveira (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Chega de saudade, 1959; Brazil's Brilliant, 1960; Gilberto and Jobim, 1960 (with Antônio Carlos Jobim); O amor, o sorriso e a flor, 1960; Samba de uma note so, 1960; João Gilberto, 1961; The Boss of the Bossa Nova, 1962; Getz/Gilberto, 1963 (with Stan Getz); The Warm World of João Gilberto, 1964; João Gilberto en Mexico, 1974; Best of Two Worlds, 1976; Amoroso, 1977; Brasil, 1981 (with others); João Gilberto, 1988; The Brazilliance Music of Rhythm, 1990; Performance, 1991; João, 1992; Bossa Nova Jubileu, Vol. 1, 1994; Bossa Nova Jubileu, Vol. 2, 1994; Ela e' carioca, 1994; Eu sei que vou te amar, 1994; Musica!, 1998; Prado Pereira de Oliveira, 1999; Besame mucho, 2000; João voz e violão, 2000; So João, 2000.

The Life

The youngest of six children of a prosperous businessman who lived in the interior of northeast Brazil, João Gilberto Prado Pereira de Oliveira (zhoo-OW zheel-BEHR-toh) early demonstrated an exceptional affinity for music. Skilled in the guitar and immersed in Brazilian and American popular music, he sought a musical career, moving to Rio de Janeiro in his late teens. Although he was recognized for his musical talent, he was withdrawn and temperamental, unable to hold a steady position with a musical group. He moved to various cities, finally settling again in Rio de Janeiro in 1956.

Throughout these itinerant years, resolutely composing and practicing, he developed the bossa nova (new wave) beat. The composer-lyricist duo Antônio Carlos Jobim and Vinicius de Moraes recognized the resonance of Gilberto's style, and began to record his music in 1958.

Attracting attention in the United States, Gilberto moved to New York in 1962, recorded with Stan Getz, performed at Carnegie Hall, and collaborated with Frank Sinatra. After a two-year period in Mexico, Gilberto returned to New York, settling definitively in Rio de Janeiro in 1980. He married the singer Astrud Weinert in 1960. After their divorce, he married the singer Miúcha Buarque de Holanda in 1968. Their daughter is the singer Bebel Gilberto.

The Music

Gilberto wove the alluring web of bossa nova from numerous strands. Sung slowly and softly, the music achieved a warm intimacy. Its spare simplicity and gliding improvisation achieved a rich lyricism, accentuated by the play of syncopated dissonance against a dominant harmony in the interaction of solo voice and instrument. This interplay was underscored by the so-called stuttering (gago) guitar. The effect was like that of a piano nocturne, one hand playing a slight disrhythm overlaid by a dominant harmonizing hand.

Three phases define Gilberto's musical development. The first was the matured emergence in Brazil of bossa nova, encapsulated principally in three albums: Chega de saudade, O amor, o sorriso e a flor, and João Gilberto. The next phase was the diffusion around the world of bossa nova from the collaborative base Gilberto established with American musicians in the United States from 1962 to 1980. Among the principal albums of this phase are Getz/Gilberto and Best of Two Worlds, along with the one from his Mexican sojourn, João Gilberto en Mexico. The third phase extends over the period since his return to Brazil in 1980, characterized by recordings of works of the historic creators of Brazilian popular music and with the leading contemporary Brazilian artists of that genre. Prominent albums include Prado Pereira de Oliveira, Brasil, the Montreux Jazz Festival discs, Eu sei que vou te amar, and João voz e violão.

"Chega de saudade." This vanguard music of bossa nova was the first in which Jobim incorporated Gilberto's distinctive rhythm. With lyrics by de Moraes, this song was first recorded on a single by Elisete Cardoso in 1958. Gilberto's rendition appeared a year later on the Chega de saudade album.

"Bim Bom." This onomatopoeic presentation of the swish of female hips expresses the minimalist, soothing quality of bossa nova. In this genre also is "Hó-bá-lá-lá," echoing the Yoruba sounds of the rituals of candomblé (an Afro-Brazilian religion). Experimentally conceived in the early 1950's, the songs first appear as identifiable recordings of Gilberto on Chega de saudade.

"The Girl from Ipanema." This Grammy Award-winning signature anthem of bossa nova swept the world in the mid-1960's, and it celebrates the insouciant, hypnotizing beach stroll of a young girl in Ipanema. The original Portuguese lyrics by de Moraes were translated into English by Norman Gimbel in a version sung by Astrud Gilberto on Getz/Gilberto. The song reverberated more resonantly when recorded in 1967 by Frank Sinatra.

Musical Legacy

Over the course of his career, Gilberto molded the classic canon of Brazilian popular music, particularly the samba canção. He created a singular style of music that listeners worldwide immediately recognize as Brazilian. Brazilian performers and composers attest to Gilberto's influence on their work, especially the leading figures of the tropicalismo (tropicalism) movement, such as Caetano Veloso and Gilberto Gil. His admirers have imitated the gliding, intimate style with which he imbued samba canção, the signature Brazilian musical genre. Significantly, Gilberto pioneered collaborations with U.S. musicians, composers, and record producers, which helped spread Brazilian popular music throughout the world.

Edward A. Riedinger

Further Reading

Buenosaires, Oscar de. Bossa Nova and Samba: History, People, Scores, Books, Lyrics, Recordings. Albuquerque, N.Mex.: FOG, 1999. Bibliographic reference work and critical assessment of the creators and creations of bossa nova.

Castro, Ruy. Bossa Nova: The Story of the Brazilian Music that Seduced the World. Chicago: A Capella Books, 2000. A journalist familiar with the important figures of bossa nova details the origins and diffusion of the style.

McGowan, Chris, and Ricardo Pessanha. The Brazilian Sound: Samba, Bossa Nova, and the Popular Music of Brazil. 2d ed. Philadelphia, Pa.: Temple University Press, 1998. Standard work introducing Brazilian popular music, placing the work of Gilberto in its national context.

Moreno, Albrecht. "Bossa Nova, Novo Brasil: The Significance of Bossa Nova as a Brazilian Popular Music." Latin American Research Review 17, no. 2 (1982): 129-141. The writer discusses the bossa nova as a reflection of Brazil's socioeconomic and political conditions.

Veloso, Caetano. Tropical Truth: A Story of Music and Revolution in Brazil. Translated by Isabel de Sena. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 2002. A leading musician of the tropicalismo movement, the writer expresses his admiration for and his debt to the work of Gilberto.

See also: Getz, Stan; Gil, Gilberto; Jobim, Antônio Carlos; Sinatra, Frank; Tormé, Mel.

Dizzy Gillespie

American jazz trumpeter, singer, and songwriter

Gillespie was a significant contributor to jazz, pioneering bop with Afro-Cuban rhythms, adapting big band orchestration to modern harmonies, teaching and inspiring new generations of musicians, and becoming an international icon of music through his showmanship and good will.

Born: October 21, 1917; Cheraw, South Carolina
Died: January 6, 1993; Englewood, New Jersey
Also known as: John Birks Gillespie (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Dizzy Gillespie with Charlie Christian, 1941; Jivin' in Be Bop, 1947; Dizzy Gillespie Plays, Johnny Richards Conducts, 1950; The Champ, 1951; Dizzy Gillespie, 1951; School Days, 1951; Dizzy Gillespie, Vol. 1, 1952; Dizzy Gillespie with Strings, 1952; Horn of Plenty, 1952; On the Sunny Side of the Street, 1952; Diz and Getz, 1953 (with Stan Getz); Dizzy Gillespie/Gerry Mulligan, 1953; Dizzy Gillespie/Stan Getz Sextet, Vol. 1, 1953; Dizzy Gillespie/Stan Getz Sextet, Vol. 2, 1953; Hot

vs. Cool, 1953; Afro, 1954; Diz Big Band, 1954; Dizzy and Strings, 1954; Dizzy Gillespie and His Latin Rhythm: Afro, 1954; Dizzy Gillespie and His Orchestra, 1954; Dizzy Gillespie and His Original Big Band, 1954; Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra, 1954; Dizzy Gillespie with Roy Eldridge, 1954; Jazz Recital, 1954; Trumpet Battle, 1954; The Trumpet Kings, 1954; The Dizzy Gillespie Big Band, 1955; Tour de Force, 1955; Dizzy Gillespie Plays, 1956; For Musicians Only, 1956; The Modern Jazz Sextet, 1956; World Statesman, 1956; Birk's Works, 1957; Dizzy at Home and Abroad, 1957; Dizzy Gillespie and Stuff Smith, 1957; Dizzy Gillespie Duets, 1957 (with Sonny Rollins and Sonny Stitt); Duets: Sonny Rollins and Sonny Stitt, 1957; The Greatest Trumpet of Them All, 1957; Sittin' In, 1957; Sonny Rollins/Sonny Stitt Sessions, 1957; Sonny Side Up, 1957 (with Rollins and Stitt); Diz and Bird, 1959 (with Charlie Parker); The Ebullient Mr. Gillespie, 1959; Have Trumpet, Will Excite!, 1959; An Electrifying Evening with the Dizzy Gillespie Quintet, 1961; Gillespiana, 1961; A Musical Safari, 1961; Perceptions, 1961; Composer's Concepts, 1962; Dizzy on the French Riviera, 1962; The New Continent, 1962; New Wave, 1962; Dateline Europe, 1963; Dizzy Gillespie Goes Hollywood, 1963; Something Old, Something New, 1963; The Cool World, 1964; Jambo Caribe, 1964; Dizzy Gillespie and His Quintet, 1965; With Gil Fuller and the Monterey Jazz Festival Orchestra, 1965; Soul Mates, 1966 (with Roy Eldridge); Jazz for a Sunday Afternoon, 1967; Swing Low, Sweet Cadillac, 1967; Reunion Big Band, 1968; Cornucopia, 1969; My Way, 1969; Soul and Salvation, 1969; Enduring Magic, 1970; Blues People, 1971; Dizzy Gillespie and the Dwike Mitchell-Willie Ruff Duo, 1971; Giants, 1971 (with others); The Real Thing, 1971; The Giant, 1973; Dizzy's Big Four, 1974 (with others); Trumpet Kings Meet Joe Turner, 1974 (with others); Afro-Cuban Jazz Moods, 1975; Bahiana, 1975; The Dizzy Gillespie Big Seven, 1975 (with others); Dizzy's Party, 1976; Free Ride, 1977; Gifted Ones, 1977 (with Count Basie); Diz, 1978; Manteca, 1979 (with Chano Pozo); The Trumpet Summit Meets the Oscar Peterson Big Four, 1980; Endlessly, 1981; To a Finland Station, 1982 (with Arturo Sandoval); Closer to the Surface, 1984; New Faces, 1984; Dizzy Gillespie Meets the Phil Woods Quintet, 1986; 'Round Midnight, 1986; Symphony Sessions, 1989; The Winter in Lisbon, 1990; Bebop and Beyond Plays Dizzy Gillespie, 1991; Dizzy Gillespie and Mitchell-Ruff, 1991; Rhythmstick, 1991; Ruff Duo, 1993; To Diz with Love: Diamond Jubilee Recordings, 1992; All the Things You Are, 1994; Big Bands, 1994; Con Alma, 1994; Diz Meets Stitt, 1995 (with Rollins); Lady Be Good, 1994; Strangers in Paradise, 1994; Groovin' with Diz, 1995; Hot House, 1995; No More Blues, 1995; Swing Love, 1995; Dizzy Gillespie, 1996; Dizzy for President, 1997; Triple Play, 1998; Continental, 2002; Portrait, 2003.

The Life

John Birks Gillespie was born in a small South Carolina town in 1917, the youngest of nine children of James and Lottie Powe Gillespie. James was a bricklayer who played in a local band on weekends. Gillespie began playing the piano at three years old; at twelve he played trumpet in Robert Smalls secondary school band. In 1933 Gillespie received a music scholarship to attend the prestigious Laurinburg Institute in North Carolina. While there he fell under the influence of the music of Louis Armstrong, who had transformed the art of improvised jazz with his Hot Five and Hot Seven recordings. At the end of the 1935 academic year, Gillespie left Laurinburg for Philadelphia, where his family had migrated. Gillespie joined the local black musicians' union and played in local swing bands, earning the nickname Dizzy for his comic stage antics. In 1937 Gillespie moved to Harlem, New York, where he played in the Teddy Hill Orchestra and, starting in 1939, the Cab Calloway Orchestra. On May 9, 1940, Gillespie married Lorraine Willis. On September 21, 1941, the hot-tempered Gillespie stabbed Calloway with a knife in the course of an argument, and he was fired from the band.

Joining the Earl Hines Orchestra, Gillespie collaborated with fellow band member Charlie "Yardbird" Parker to pioneer the bebop (or bop) revolution in jazz. Gillespie was the leader in the bop quintets he played with Parker on New York's Fifty-second Street in 1945 and 1946. From 1946 to 1950 he headed two big bands, introducing Afro-Cuban music to jazz. In the 1950's he began touring internationally, sometimes sponsored by the U.S.

State Department. Although he was celebrated for his contributions to jazz and bop and was a popular performer through the 1960's and 1970's, Gillespie experienced personal difficulties, some brought on by his ingesting too much alcohol. Despite his stable marriage to Lorraine, he was the subject of several paternity suits and acknowledged that Jeanie Bryson was his daughter from a liaison in the 1950's with Connie Bryson. In 1970 Gillespie became an adherent of the Baha'i faith, a conversion that helped stabilize his personal life and spurred his interest in becoming an international spokesperson for unity—in jazz, in music, and among cultures. He formed the United Nations Orchestra (UNO) in 1989. After several years of successful international tours with the UNO, Gillespie died in 1993 of pancreatic cancer.

The Music

As a young trumpet player in leading swing bands of the late 1930's and early 1940's, Gillespie was noted for several talents, all of which played significant roles in his career: his technical virtuosity, his harmonic boldness, and his stage antics. With Gillespie's first big band chair in Philadelphia's Frankie Fairfax Orchestra from 1935 to 1937, he already showed the influence of jazz trumpeter Roy Eldridge. Eldridge was a fiery, upper-register trumpeter, and the early performances of Gillespie reflected the same dazzling use of rapid high notes and powerful attack. Playing with New York's Teddy Hill Orchestra from 1937 to 1939, and with the Cab Calloway Orchestra from 1939 to 1941, Gillespie picked up much of the showmanship and stage presence that earned him his nickname. Gillespie acknowledged that he was influenced by New York's leading jazz showman of the day, Fats Waller.

Gillespie's most important big band apprenticeships were from 1943 to 1944 with the orchestras of Hines, Coleman Hawkins, and Billy Eckstine; he served as the musical director of the Eckstine orchestra. (Gillespie arranged for the brilliant young trumpeter Fats Navarro to take his position as trumpet player when he left.) Gillespie was developing the new harmonic and melodic ideas emerging from the famous after-hours jam sessions at Minton's Playhouse and Monroe's Uptown House. His music already incorporated such elements as double time playing, new chord variations, substitution chords (such as an A minor chord), offbeat accenting, asymmetrical and jagged melodic lines, and double bass patterns that replaced the swing sound of walking bass lines. Some of these ideas would be displayed in the small combo (bop differed from swing orchestration in its emphasis on the small band), which he formed with bassist Oscar Pettiford in 1944 to play at the Onyx Club on New York's Fifty-second Street. In his recording of "I Can't Get Started" with Pettiford and a septet on January 9, 1945, Gillespie produced a beautifully lyrical solo bursting with his new harmonic ideas.

Gillespie and Parker Quintets. While playing for the Hines band, Gillespie began the collaboration with alto saxophonist Parker that would establish bop. As Gillespie biographer Donald Maggin explains, bop was a multifaceted innovation that greatly expanded the range of possibilities for the improviser. It created irregular rhythmic patterns out of the constant four-beat pattern of swing. Its melodies were linear, were oddly phrased, and, although played by the horns, rested on complex, imaginative rhythms of the drums, piano, and bass. Bop brought a harmonic freshness to jazz, focusing on chromaticism, building chords on all twelve notes of the scale, not just the seven notes that characterized the diatonic harmony of blues and swing. In other words, bop musicians discovered the chords at higher intervals, the ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth, which bop musicians referred to as "flatted" or "flattened" fifths (deriving from the augmented eleventh interval, which is also a flat fifth).

Gillespie's discovery of the flatted fifth, while listening to a Rudy Powell arrangement in 1938, paralleled Parker's famous epiphany in Dan Wall's Chili House in December, 1939, while playing the higher-interval chords of "Cherokee." Parker brought an essentially blues phrasing to bop, which unified bop's rapid rhythms, angular melodies, virtuosic soloing, and innovative note choices. Gillespie was not captivated by jazz's blues roots. Instead, he focused on the development of bop theory in his playing, composition, and arrangements, emphasizing the overall architectural shape and articulating harmonic and rhythmic principles. It was a role that made Gillespie the natural spokesman for and teacher of the bop movement.

Gillespie and Parker exploded on the postwar scene with their famous quintet of 1945 and 1946, headlining the Three Deuces Club on New York's Fifty-second Street and making seminal bop recordings, such as the Gillespie compositions "Salt Peanuts," "Dizzy Atmosphere," "Groovin' High," "Shaw Nuff," "Bebop," "Oop Bop Sh'Bam," "Things to Come," and "Anthropology" (also known as "Thriving from a Riff").

"Groovin' High." "Groovin' High," recorded with Parker in a sextet on February 28, 1945, is emblematic of the new jazz style. Gillespie's careful composition features a jagged two-note phrase throughout that illustrates how bebop derived its onomatopoeic name. "Groovin' High" opens with an infectious melodic theme played in perfect unison by Gillespie and Parker, alternating with bass, drum, and piano patterns, exemplifying the central role the rhythm section assumes in bop. The ensemble playing of Gillespie and Parker is taken at breathless speed, gliding up and down the scale. The soloists improvise complex variations over the underlying chords derived from the popular standard "Whispering," before Gillespie slows the tempo for a bravura high-note trumpet climax.

"Night in Tunisia." Gillespie recorded his most famous composition, "Night in Tunisia," several times with Parker and throughout his career. The song reflects Gillespie's innovative harmonic ideas, his interest in Latin rhythms, and his roots in big band swing. Gillespie derived the basic compositional framework of "Night in Tunisia" from his first major composition, the chromatic and polyrhythmic "Pickin' the Cabbage," recorded by Calloway and his orchestra on March 8, 1940. As Gillespie biographer Alyn Shipton points out, "Night in Tunisia" is built around an A thirteenth chord, which resolves to D minor. Gillespie's interest in Latin music is apparent in the opening ostinato rhythm in the bass line. In his January 26, 1945, recording as a guest soloist with the Boyd Raeburn Orchestra, Gillespie builds a dramatic solo from a series of staccato phrases before resolving the song with a high-note coda. In September, 1946, Gillespie and Parker recorded a sizzling live version at Carnegie Hall.

Perhaps Gillespie's most celebrated recording of "Night in Tunisia" is from the famous performance recorded live in Toronto's Massey Hall in 1953 with other pioneers of bop—Parker, Bud Powell on piano, Max Roach on drums, and Charles Mingus on bass. After Roach, Mingus, and Powell introduce the tempo and ostinato line in the first twelve bars, Gillespie plays the first theme of the song over Parker's countermotives. Parker replies with a second theme played over Gillespie's perfectly rendered counterpoint. Parker, Gillespie, and Powell follow with three choruses each of beautiful soloing. Gillespie dramatically ends the tune with a retard, free solo, and a high-note cadenza.

Dizzy Gillespie. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Manteca. Gillespie believed that Latin and Cuban rhythms reflected the direct influence of African percussion. In 1947 Gillespie collaborated with Cuban percussionist Chano Pozo to introduce Afro-Cuban polyrhythms to jazz. Their most celebrated recording was Manteca, recorded in December of that year. Pozo plays an infectious conga rhythm of eighth notes while Gillespie showcases two exciting eight-bar solos and cries of "Manteca!"

Dizzy Gillespie Big Band. Gillespie maintained a love of big band music throughout his life. Although bop contrasted with swing in its emphasis on smaller bands, as opposed to a dance-oriented orchestra, Gillespie led two big bands in the 1940's and 1950's, until economic realities curtailed both efforts. Gillespie also enjoyed playing with the best orchestras whenever possible. For example, in 1959, Gillespie was a guest soloist with the Duke Ellington Orchestra for a recording of Billy Strayhorn's composition "U.M.M.G." Gillespie plays his first two choruses with a muted horn. (A chorus is a structured sequence that repeats itself in different variations throughout a song. In most jazz and popular songs such as "U.M.M.G." a chorus consists of a thirty-two-bar aaba structure.) After several choruses by the Ellington orchestra, Gillespie returns for a blaring open-horn solo before concluding with another brilliant coda. When the State Department financed Gillespie's international touring orchestra in 1956, Gillespie revived his big band arrangements as a goodwill ambassador. It was a natural role for Gillespie, with his innate flair for showmanship reinforced by his trademark goatee and beret, chipmunk-like puffed cheeks, and angled trumpet. Gillespie's love of orchestral play and humor found ample room at the annual Monterey Jazz Festival. Gillespie was the master of ceremonies and star performer who opened the first Monterey Jazz Festival on October 3, 1958, with a performance of the "Star-Spangled Banner." He was a fixture at the festival over the following decades. His orchestral flair was revived again at the end of his career when the United Nations sponsored his international orchestra, which toured twenty-seven countries.

Musical Legacy

Gillespie made numerous contributions to jazz history, any one of which would have been enough to earn him prominence. Foremost was his status as a pioneer of bop. Although bop derived from the ideas of many jazzmen, including such artists of Harlem after-hours jam sessions as Charlie Christian, Kenny Clarke, Thelonious Monk, and Bud Powell, it was Gillespie and Parker who brought bop to fruition and prominence. After Parker's sad demise, Gillespie was bop's living icon for forty years, receiving five Grammy Awards. He continuously revived the flame of big band jazz, although it was imbued with the complexities of his rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic thoughts. Gillespie introduced Afro-Cuban rhythms to jazz, paving the way for the bossa nova craze that would sweep the nation in the early 1960's. Gillespie mentored numerous young musicians, and he was an instantly recognizable figure with his puffed cheeks, angled horn, and clowning antics. He was the successor to Armstrong as the international goodwill ambassador of jazz.

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Gillespie, Dizzy, with Al Fraser. To Be, or Not—To Bop: Memoirs. London: W. H. Allen, 1980. Includes interviews with Gillespie's family, friends, and collaborators.

Maggin, Donald. Dizzy: The Life and Times of John Birks Gillespie. New York: Harper, 2006. Sympathetic biography organized around extensive quotes, anecdotes, and insightful musical analysis.

Shipton, Alyn. Groovin' High: The Life of Dizzy Gillespie. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999. Prolific jazz historian argues that Gillespie's contributions to bop outweighed even those of Parker.

Yanow, Scott. Afro-Cuban Jazz. San Francisco: Miller Freeman Books, 2000. A history of Afro-Cuban jazz in which Gillespie plays the critical role, beginning with his collaboration with Pozo in 1947.

See also: Akiyoshi, Toshiko; Armstrong, Louis; Bacharach, Burt; Barretto, Ray; Blades, Rubén; Blakey, Art; Brown, Clifford; Burton, Gary; Carter, Benny; Christian, Charlie; Coltrane, John; Corea, Chick; Fitzgerald, Ella; Getz, Stan; Gordon, Dexter; Hawkins, Coleman; Jones, Quincy; Kirk, Rahsaan Roland; Legrand, Michel; Makeba, Miriam; Masekela, Hugh; Mingus, Charles; Monk, Thelonious; Navarro, Fats; Parker, Charlie; Peterson, Oscar; Powell, Bud; Roach, Max; Rollins, Sonny; Shaw, Artie; Stone, Sly; Vaughan, Sarah; Waller, Fats; Williams, Mary Lou.

Philip Glass

American classical and film-score composer

A self-characterized theater composer, Glass was a founder of minimalism, a style based on repetitive melodies and rhythms that pleased large audiences and influenced other avant-garde composers.

Born: January 31, 1937; Baltimore, Maryland

Principal works

BALLET: Glass Pieces, 1983.

CHAMBER WORKS: String Quartet, 1966; Music in the Shape of a Square, 1967 (for two flutes); Dance No. 2, 1979 (multimedia work); Dance No. 4, 1979 (multimedia work); Fourth Series, Part III, 1979 (for violin and clarinet); Dance No. 1, 1980 (multimedia work); Dance No. 3, 1980 (multimedia work); String Quartet No. 2, 1983; String Quartet No. 3, 1985; String Quartet No. 4, 1989; String Quartet No. 5, 1999.

CHORAL WORKS: Another Look at Harmony, Part IV, 1975 (for chorus and organ); Dressed like an Egg, 1977 (for chorus and organ); Fourth Series, Part I, 1979 (for chorus and organ); The Photographer, 1982 (for chorus and mixed media); The Civil Wars: Cologne, 1984; The Civil Wars: Rome, 1984; The Olympian, 1984 (for chorus and orchestra).

FILM SCORES: Koyaanisqatsi, 1982; Mishima, 1985; Hamburger Hill, 1987; Powaqqatsi, 1988; The Thin Blue Line, 1988; Mindwalk, 1990; A Brief History of Time, 1991; Candyman, 1992; Orphée, 1992 (chamber opera; libretto by Glass; based on Jean Cocteau's film); Candyman II: Farewell to the Flesh, 1994; Jenipapo, 1994 (The Interview); La Belle et la bête, 1994 (Beauty and the Beast; libretto by Glass); Bent, 1996; The Secret Agent, 1996; Kundun, 1997; The Truman Show, 1998; Dracula, 1999; The Hours, 2002; Naqoyqatsi, 2002; The Fog of War: Eleven Lessons from the Life of Robert S. McNamara, 2003; Notes on a Scandal, 2006; Animals in Love, 2007; Cassandra's Dream, 2007; Monsters of Grace, 2007; New York Nights, 2007; No Reservations, 2007.

INSTRUMENTAL WORKS: In Again Out Again, 1967 (for two pianos); One Plus One, 1967 (for amplified tabletop); Gradus, 1969 (for saxophone); Strung Out, 1976 (for amplified violin); Mad Rush, 1979 (for solo piano or organ); Fourth Series, Part II, 1979 (for solo organ); Fourth Series, Part IV, 1979 (for solo organ); Arabesque in Memoriam, 1988 (for flute); Melodies for Saxophone, 1995; Études for Piano, 1999.

OPERAS: Einstein on the Beach, 1976 (libretto by Glass and Robert M. Wilson); Satyagraha, 1980 (libretto by Glass and Constance DeJong; based on the Bhagavad-Gita); Akhnaten, 1984 (libretto by Glass); The Juniper Tree, 1984 (two-act opera for chamber orchestra, small chorus, and soloists; music with Robert Moran; libretto by Arthur Yorinks; based on a story by J. L. Grimm and W. C. Grimm); The Making of the Representative for Planet Eight, 1986 (three-act opera; based on Doris Lessing's novel); One Thousand Airplanes on the Roof: A Science Fiction Music Drama, 1987 (libretto by David Henry Hwang); Hydrogen Jukebox, 1990 (chamber opera; based on Allen Ginsberg's poetry); The Voyage, 1992 (libretto by Hwang); Les Enfants terribles, 1996 (libretto by Glass and Susan Marshall; based on the novel by Jean Cocteau); Waiting for the Barbarians, 2005 (libretto by Christopher Hampton; based on J. M. Coetzee's novel); Appomattox, 2007 (libretto by Hampton).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Two Pages, 1968; Music in Contrary Motion, 1969; Music in Fifths, 1969; Music in Similar Motion, 1969; Music with Changing Parts, 1970; North Star, 1977; Glassworks, 1982; A Descent into the Maelstrom, 1985 (based on Edgar Allan Poe's story); Songs from Liquid Days, 1986; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, 1987; Dancepieces, 1987; The Canyon, 1988; The Fall of the House of Usher, 1988 (two-act opera; based on Poe's story); Anima Mundi, 1992; Glassworks, 1993; Symphony No. 1, 1993 (also known as Low Symphony; based on David Bowie's film Low); Symphony No. 2, 1994; Symphony No. 3, 1995; Symphony No. 4, 1996 (also known as Heroes Symphony; based on Bowie's album Heroes); Symphony No. 5, 2000 (Requiem, Bardo, Nirmanakaya); Symphony No. 6, 2001 (Plutonian Ode); Symphony No. 7, 2005 (A Toltec Symphony); Book of Longing, 2007.

VOCAL WORKS: Music for Voices, 1970; Music in Twelve Parts, 1974 (for voice, winds, and keyboards); Another Look at Harmony: Part III, 1976 (for voice, clarinet, and piano).

The Life

Philip Glass was born in Baltimore, the grandson of Lithuanian Jewish immigrants and the son of Benjamin Glass, who ran a radio repair shop that also sold records. The slow-selling records served as Glass's introduction to such composers as Ludwig van Beethoven, Dmitri Shostakovich, and Béla Bartók. He began violin lessons at age six but quickly switched to the flute, and in 1946 he became the youngest student ever admitted to the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore, Maryland. After only two years of high school he gained admission to the University of Chicago, where he majored in philosophy and mathematics while continuing his musical development by studying the piano. Having decided to become a composer, he left Chicago in 1956 for the Juilliard School in New York, where he studied such genres as concerti and choral works as well as modern film scoring. During a summer in Aspen, Colorado, he was the pupil of French composer Darius Milhaud. After receiving his master's degree from Juilliard, he accepted a Ford Foundation composer-in-residence grant to work in the Pittsburgh public school system.

An early turning point in his career occurred when he accepted a Fulbright scholarship to study with the acclaimed composition teacher Nadia Boulanger at the Paris Conservatory. Boulanger's methods forced him to reevaluate his previous musical education, and his marriage to first wife JoAnne Akalaitis, an actress, playwright, and director, influenced his developing fascination with modern theater. Also felicitous was his encounter with Indian sitarist Ravi Shankar, whose raga improvisations helped to shape Glass's emerging musical style, which increasingly centered on cyclic musical events created through a tension between melody and harmony.

Upon his return to New York in 1967, he formed the Philip Glass Ensemble to perform his new music, which others characterized as minimalist or systematic, while he preferred calling it "music with repetitive structures." Glass's group performed in such unconventional venues as nightclubs, lofts, restaurants, and public parks. Though the ensemble helped to disseminate his new music, he still needed to support himself by such jobs as cabdriving, plumbing, and furniture moving. All this changed with the phenomenal success of his theatrical extravaganza Einstein on the Beach. He capitalized on this success with a series of large- and small-scale works, which in turn led to fruitful collaborations with choreographers and filmmakers. During the 1980's, 1990's, and early twenty-first century he expanded and deepened his style by continuing to work on film scores, most notably a trilogy based on the films of Jean Cocteau, but he also collaborated with artists from a wide variety of fields, including such popular singers as Paul Simon and David Byrne and such writers as

Philip Glass. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Allen Ginsberg, Doris Lessing, and J. M. Coetzee. During this period he also managed to reinvigorate such traditional classical forms as the symphony, concerto, and string quartet.

The Music

Through his early life and education, Glass had become familiar with classical and modern music, but his own style evolved as an esoteric blend of Western and Eastern traditions, established and avant-garde music, as well as various theatrical influences. He learned about modern compositional techniques from his Juilliard teachers, and, while in Paris, he was deeply impressed by new French plays and films. He was so fascinated by Shankar that Glass traveled to India, where he deepened his knowledge of Eastern culture and music. By the time he returned to the United States, the basics of his distinctive minimalist style were already informing his compositions.

Early Works. The first concert of Glass's new music in 1968 contained Music in the Shape of a Square for two flutes, composed as an homage to Erik Satie, who had written Music in the Form of a Pear (1903). Glass and a fellow flutist performed the piece while walking in opposite directions around a square on the stage. During the early years of the Philip Glass Ensemble, he also wrote Music in Fifths as an ironic tribute to Boulanger, who had attempted to wean Glass from using hidden fifths in his compositions. This early phase of Glass's compositional odyssey culminated in Music in Twelve Parts, which took three years to write and ran more than four hours in performance. Some saw this composition as an anthology of twelve independent pieces with various rhythmic and harmonic patterns, while others saw it as a unified composition characterized by a progressive movement of greater and greater vertical complexity.

The Portrait Trilogy. Einstein on the Beach, which has been called a landmark of twentieth century musical theater, originated in the early 1970's, when Glass met the director Robert M. Wilson. They chose Albert Einstein as their opera's "subject" (a term that Glass was reluctant to use) because this great scientist could symbolize, through music and spectacle, the themes of creativity, space, and time. Organized more like a dream than a conventional narrative, this theater piece was unconventional in its libretto, singing, and acting. Its premiere occurred at the Avignon Summer Festival in France on July 25, 1976, but it was its American premiere at the Metropolitan Opera in New York that made Glass famous and helped to determine the direction of his subsequent career.

Glass and Wilson collaborated on two other dramatic works, Satyagraha and Akhnaten, which, like Einstein on the Beach, were character operas. Satyagraha's character was Mahatma Ghandi, and Akhnaten's was the pharaoh who introduced monotheism to Egypt. Glass scored Satyagraha for a full symphony orchestra, whereas Akhnaten, which had been commissioned by the Stuttgart Opera and which was sung in Akkadian, biblical Hebrew, and ancient Egyptian, eventually required a small orchestra, because the premiere in Germany took place in a theater with a small orchestra pit. Glass felt that the chamber-like sound was better suited to the nature of the material.

Works for the Theater, Films, and Special Occasions. Glass was able to adapt his music of repetitive structures to a wide variety of forms. For example, he was able to continue his collaboration with Wilson in The Civil Wars, both in its Cologne section and in its Rome section. He collaborated with other artists in The Juniper Tree for chamber orchestra, small chorus, and soloists. The American Repertory Theater of Cambridge, Massachusetts, commissioned this work, which was based on a tale by the Brothers Grimm. One Thousand Airplanes on the Roof had its premiere in a hangar at the Vienna International Airport. One critic described it as "a light show, a ballet, a spoken opera, an art exhibit, [and] a lesson in Zen."

During the 1980's, 1990's, and the early twenty-first century, Glass composed the scores for a wide variety of films. For example, he created the scores for a trilogy of "cinematic poems" directed by Godfrey Reggio: Koyaanisqatsi, Powaqqatsi, and Naqoyqatsi, whose non-narrative views of the interaction between humans and their environment were well served by Glass's hypnotic music. His scores for the documentaries of Errol Morris—The Thin Blue Line, A Brief History of Time, and The Fog of War—were highly praised for enhancing the themes of these films. Glass also scored such Hollywood narrative films as Paul Schrader's Mishima, John Irvin's Hamburger Hill, and Stephen Daldry's

The Hours. His score for Martin Scorsese's Kundun earned him an Academy Award nomination, and his score for The Truman Show won a Golden Globe Award.

Glass's many successes enhanced his reputation as an efficient composer, and he was often invited to create music for special occasions and distinguished musicians. For example, he wrote the music for the torch-lighting ceremony at the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. In 1987 he created a concerto for violinist Paul Zukovsky, and in 1992 the Metropolitan Opera commissioned him to compose The Voyage, a three-act opera to commemorate the five-hundredth anniversary of Columbus's discovery of America.

New Ways of Composing in Traditional Forms. Though he had a penchant for theatrical work, Glass still found time to compose music in such traditional forms as symphonies, concerti, and string quartets. He composed several symphonies that blended his musical style with historical materials from Romantic and polytonal musical approaches. He adjusted his style to the talents of the Kronos Quartet, and his knowledge of Bartók's work informed his piano études composed for Dennis Russell Davies.

A Second Triptych. Glass eliminated the original music from three films of Jean Cocteau and created a new experience for viewers. His treatment of Cocteau's Orphée (1949) was emotionally rooted in his personal experience of the untimely death of his third wife, the artist Candy Jernigan. He treated the script of La Belle et la bête (1946) as a cinematic libretto to be performed by opera singers accompanied by the Philip Glass Ensemble. He scored Les Enfants terribles for voices and three pianos. Glass composed these new scores in the 1990's.

A Composer for All Seasons. In the twenty-first century Glass manifested no signs of slowing down. His operas Waiting for the Barbarians and Appomattox exhibited his love for experimentation characteristic of his theatrical works throughout his career. He also continued his collaborations with important artists. For example, he wrote a concerto for cello and orchestra for Julian Lloyd Webber's fiftieth birthday. His piano concerto, "After Lewis and Clark," commemorated these explorers' famous trip across the North American continent. His love for Leonard Cohen's poetry resulted in his Book of Longing for seven instruments and a vocal quartet.

Musical Legacy

Glass is one of the most prolific and influential composers of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Through his many compositions and his collaborations with some of the most talented artists in the world, he has exerted an extraordinary influence on the musical and cultural life of his time. His works have been extensively performed and recorded, and to preserve for posterity his entire musical legacy, Glass founded, with some colleagues, the Orange Mountain Music label. His music has not lacked critics, some of whom find his minimalist works lacking in depth and variety, and others have been repelled by what they see as his predilection for self-promotion. Glass has found it easy to ignore his critics since he has acquired the largest audience of any contemporary composer of serious music. What Andy Warhol did for art, Glass accomplished for classical music, which he showed could be commercially successful if it borrowed mass-media methods. His music has certainly given pleasure to many listeners, and as a composer of liberation, he has freed both himself and his audiences to hear new and wonderful sounds.

Robert J. Paradowski

Further Reading

Kostelanz, Richard. Writings on Glass: Essays, Interviews, Criticism. New York: Schirmer Books, 1996. Written with Glass's cooperation and with access to his archives, Kostelanz's book contains an analysis of his subject's life and compositions. Includes a bibliography, discography, and a list of works.

Maycock, Robert. Glass: A Portrait. London: Faber & and Faber, 2002. Maycock, an English critic, combines biography and musical analysis in his readable account of Glass's evolution from early minimalist works to twenty-first century symphonies and concerti. Contains a concise chronological list of Glass's principal compositions.

Mertens, Wim. American Minimal Music: La Monte Young, Terry Riley, Steve Reich, and Philip Glass. Translated by J. Hautekiet. New York: Alexander Broude, 1983. Mertens analyzes Glass's chief works in the context of other minimalist composers, especially their roots in African and Asian music. Illustrated, with a bibliography.

Potter, Keith. Four Musical Minimalists: La Monte Young, Terry Riley, Steve Reich, Philip Glass. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2000. Potter emphasizes the early works of these minimalist composers, which he analyzes from a biographical perspective.

Rockwell, John. All American Music: Composition in the Late Twentieth Century. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1983. Rockwell's chapter on Glass is a critical overview rather than a systematic survey. Includes bibliography, discography, and index.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Boulanger, Nadia; Bowie, David; Carlos, Wendy; Cohen, Leonard; Milhaud, Darius; Reich, Steve; Shankar, Ravi; Shostakovich, Dmitri; Vega, Suzanne.

Gerry Goffin

American rock singer and songwriter

Songwriter Goffin made the transition from the commercial tunes produced in New York's Brill Building in the early 1960's to the introspective style of the Woodstock generation in the 1970's.

Born: February 11, 1939; Queens, New York
Also known as: Gerald Goffin (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: It Ain't Exactly Entertainment, 1973; Back Room Blood, 1996.

SONGS: "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow," 1960 (with Carole King; recorded by the Shirelles); "Run to Him," 1961 (with Jack Keller; recorded by Bobby Vee); "Take Good Care of My Baby," 1961 (with King; recorded by Vee); "Who Put the Bomp (In the Bomp, Bomp, Bomp)," 1961 (with Barry Mann; recorded by Mann); "Go Away Little Girl," 1962 (with King; recorded by Steve Lawrence); "The Loco-Motion," 1962 (with King; recorded by Little Eva); "Don't Say Nothing Bad (About My Baby)," 1963 (with King; recorded by the Cookies); "Hey Girl," 1963 (with King; recorded by Freddie Scott); "One Fine Day," 1963 (with King; recorded by the Chiffons); "Just Once in My Life," 1965 (with King and Phil Spector; recorded by the Righteous Brothers); "Pleasant Valley Sunday," 1967 (with King; recorded by the Monkees); "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," 1967 (with Aretha Franklin; recorded by Franklin); "I've Got to Use My Imagination," 1973 (with Barry Goldberg; recorded by Gladys Knight and the Pips); "Theme from Mahogany (Do You Know Where You're Going To)," 1975 (with Michael Masser; recorded by Diana Ross); "Saving All My Love for You," 1985 (with Masser; recorded by Whitney Houston); "Miss You Like Crazy," 1989 (with Masser; recorded by Natalie Cole).

The Life

Gerald Goffin remembers making up songs as an eight-year-old. Upon graduation from Brooklyn Technical High School, Goffin enlisted in the Marine Corps Reserves, and later he went to the U.S. Naval Academy. Resigning from the Navy in 1958, Goffin enrolled in the chemistry program at Queens College, where he met a musically talented education major named Carole King. They began writing music together, and in 1959 they were married. In 1960 Don Kirschner signed them to the Aldon Music label, where their first hit, "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow," went to Billboard's number-one spot for the Shirelles later that year. They literally started at the top, and their first hit proved one of the most enduring, recorded by dozens of major artists, including five other Billboard Top 100 versions between 1968 and 1978.

Although they divorced in 1968, Goffin and King continued to write together into the 1970's, and Goffin, who had collaborated with other composers even during his string of hits with King, continued to find talented composers with whom to work. With their help, he learned to write his own melodies. Goffin and King's daughter, Louise Lynn Goffin, also became a successful songwriter and singer.

The Music

Goffin and King were among the last of the Brill Building composers, who churned out hits in small offices that had been home to music publishers since the 1930's. Many of the writers working there had been creating songs since the big band era, and they had made the transition to rock and roll only by imitation, trying to guess the tastes of the teen audience that was driving popular music by 1960. Barely out of their teens at that time, Goffin and King were in tune with youthful listeners. Goffin was later critical, though never apologetic, about the commercial nature of his early writing, but the continued rerecording of those hits over five decades is a tribute to their universality.

"Will You Love Me Tomorrow." Although rated by Rolling Stone as one of the top five hundred pop-rock songs of all time, this hit was almost discarded. Lead singer Shirley Owens of the Shirelles thought it was too country for her style, but she gave it a second chance when the producers added a string arrangement. Despite being banned by many radio stations for its sexually suggestive lyrics, it succeeded both commercially and artistically. "Will You Love Me Tomorrow" explored the fears and anxieties of the generation's increasing sexual freedom. The question in the title (which is repeated in the chorus) is clearly heartfelt, and it is posed the moment before the singer's decision, creating a certain amount of tension. Cover versions appeared almost immediately: Mike Berry's in 1961; Dusty Springfield's in 1964 in England; Cher's in 1966; and the Four Seasons' in 1968, a rendition that peaked at number twenty-four on the pop charts.

"Who Put the Bomp (In the Bomp, Bomp, Bomp)." While not nearly as successful as Goffin's other hits, this novelty tune, which reached Billboard's number-seven spot for co-author Barry Mann (backed by the Halos), is noteworthy as a mark of Goffin's ability not to take himself or his craft too seriously. Goffin playfully provides lyrics that were merely nonsense doo-wop sounds, such as the "bomp-bomp-ba-bomp" of the Marcels' remake of "Blue Moon" and the title sounds of the Edsels' "Ram-a-lam-a-ding-dong," both of which were still playing on the radio when Mann and Goffin wrote the song. Unfortunately, the irony was lost on some critics. Comedian Steve Allen, who had created a comic sensation on his Tonight Show by donning a tuxedo and reciting "Be-Bop-a-Lulu" as if it were a Shakespearean sonnet, gave the Mann-Goffin song the same treatment, without acknowledging the fact that the lyrics were already parodic.

Musical Legacy

Inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1990, along with his former wife, King, Goffin is assured a prominent place in popular music history. Goffin's Academy Award nomination (with composer Mike Masser) for the theme song to Mahogany (1975), also known as "Do You Know Where You're Going To," brought him recognition beyond the world of rock and roll. His knack for finding the top singers in the business continued when he hired Kelly Clarkson to do some demo work a year before her success on the television talent show American Idol. His songs continue to be revived by new generations of singers ("Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow" alone was recorded by eleven major artists between 1960 and 1992) and to inspire new generations of songwriters, including Louise Goffin, his daughter by King.

John R. Holmes

Further Reading

Brown, Mick. Tearing Down the Wall of Sound: The Rise and Fall of Phil Spector. London: Bloomsbury, 2007. Because Spector was involved with the "Aldon group" of songwriters, to which Goffin belonged, the early part of this biography is rich in references to Goffin.

Friedlander, Paul. Rock and Roll: A Social History. 2d ed. Boulder, Colo.: Westview Press, 2006. This general history of rock and roll is designed as a textbook for popular culture courses.

Pollock, Bruce. In Their Own Words. New York: Collier Books, 1975. This collection includes a 1974 interview with Goffin at the offices of Screen Gems Music, in which the songwriter talks about his creative process, his musical influences, and changing musical tastes.

Simons, David. Studio Stories: How the Great New York Records Were Made: From Miles to Madonna, Sinatra to the Ramones. New York: Backbeat Books, 2004. This general history of the New York recording studios prominently features the songwriters of the Brill Building, including Goffin.

See also: Franklin, Aretha; King, Carole; Ross, Diana; Spector, Phil; Stoller, Mike.

Jerry Goldsmith

American classical and film-score composer

A prolific composer, beloved especially for his themes for the television series Star Trek, Goldsmith is a key figure in the development of the language of contemporary film music.

Born: February 10, 1929; Los Angeles, California
Died: July 21, 2004; Beverly Hills, California
Also known as: Jerrald Goldsmith (full name); J. Michael Hennagin

Principal works

FILM SCORES: City of Fear, 1959; Studs Lonigan, 1960; Freud, 1962; Lonely Are the Brave, 1962; The Spiral Road, 1962; A Gathering of Eagles, 1963; Lilies of the Field, 1963; The Prize, 1963; The Stripper, 1963; Fate Is the Hunter, 1964; Rio Conchos, 1964; Shock Treatment, 1964; In Harm's Way, 1965; Morituri, 1965; A Patch of Blue, 1965; Von Ryan's Express, 1965; The Blue Max, 1966; Our Man Flint, 1966; The Sand Pebbles, 1966; Seconds, 1966; Stagecoach, 1966; To Trap a Spy, 1966; Trouble with Angels, 1966; The Flim-Flam Man, 1967; Hour of the Gun, 1967; In Like Flint, 1967; Warning Shot, 1967; Bandolero!, 1968; The Detective, 1968; Planet of the Apes, 1968; The Chairman, 1969; A Hundred Rifles, 1969; The Illustrated Man, 1969; Justine, 1969; The Ballad of Cable Hogue, 1970; Patton, 1970; Rio Lobo, 1970; Tora! Tora! Tora!, 1970; The Travelling Executioner, 1970; Escape from the Planet of the Apes, 1971; Homecoming: A Christmas Story, 1971; The Last Run, 1971; The Mephisto Waltz, 1971; Ace Eli and Rodger of the Skies, 1972; Anna and the King, 1972; The Other, 1972; Pursuit, 1972; The Don Is Dead, 1973; Hawkins on Murder, 1973; One Little Indian, 1973; Papillon, 1973; Police Story, 1973; Red Pony, 1973; Shamus, 1973; Winter Kill, 1973; Chinatown, 1974; High Velocity, 1974; QB VII, 1974; *S*P*Y*S*, 1974; A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, 1974; Babe, 1975; Breakout, 1975; A Girl Named Sooner, 1975; Ransom, 1975; The Reincarnation of Peter Proud, 1975; Take a Hard Ride, 1975; The Wind and the Lion, 1975; Breakheart Pass, 1976; Logan's Run, 1976; The Omen, 1976; The Cassandra Crossing, 1977; Contract on Cherry Street, 1977; Damnation Alley, 1977; Islands in the Stream, 1977; MacArthur, 1977; Twilight's Last Gleaming, 1977; The Boys from Brazil, 1978; Capricorn One, 1978; Coma, 1978; Damien: Omen II, 1978; Magic, 1978; The Swarm, 1978; Alien, 1979; The Great Train Robbery, 1979; Players, 1979; Star Trek: The Motion Picture, 1979; Caboblanco, 1980; The Final Conflict: Omen III, 1981; Inchon, 1981; Masada, 1981; Night Crossing, 1981; Outland, 1981; Raggedy Man, 1981; The Salamander, 1981; The Challenge, 1982; First Blood, 1982; Poltergeist, 1982; The Secret of N.I.M.H., 1982; Psycho 2, 1983; Twilight Zone: The Movie, 1983; Under Fire, 1983; Gremlins, 1984; Runaway, 1984; Supergirl, 1984; Baby: Secret of the Lost Legend, 1985; Explorers, 1985; King Solomon's Mines, 1985; Legend, 1985; Rambo: First Blood Part II, 1985; Amazing Stories, 1986; Hoosiers, 1986; Link, 1986; Poltergeist II, 1986; Extreme Prejudice, 1987; Innerspace, 1987; Lionheart, 1987; Alien Nation, 1988; Criminal Law, 1988; Rambo III, 1988; Rent-a-Cop, 1988; The 'Burbs, 1989; Leviathan, 1989; Star Trek V: The Final Frontier, 1989; Warlock, 1989; Gremlins 2: The New Batch, 1990; The Russia House, 1990; Total Recall, 1990; Help, 1991; Love Field, 1991; Mom and Dad Save the World, 1991; Not Without My Daughter, 1991; Sleeping with the Enemy, 1991; Basic Instinct, 1992; Forever Young, 1992; Hollister, 1992; Matinee, 1992; Mr. Baseball, 1992; Dennis the Menace, 1993; Malice, 1993; Rudy, 1993; Six Degrees of Separation, 1993; The Vanishing, 1993; Bad Girls, 1994; The River Wild, 1994; The Shadow, 1994; City Hall, 1995; Congo, 1995; First Knight, 1995; Powder, 1995; Chain Reaction, 1996; Executive Decision, 1996; Fierce Creatures, 1996; The Ghost and the Darkness, 1996; Star Trek: First Contact, 1996; Two Days in the Valley, 1996; Air Force One, 1997; The Edge, 1997; L.A. Confidential, 1997; Deep Rising, 1998; Mulan, 1998; Small Soldiers, 1998; Star Trek: Insurrection, 1998; U.S. Marshals, 1998; The Haunting, 1999; The Mummy, 1999; The Thirteenth Warrior, 1999; Hollow Man, 2000; Along Came a Spider, 2001; The Last Castle, 2001; Star Trek: Nemesis, 2002; The Sum of All Fears, 2002; Looney Tunes: Back in Action, 2003; Basic Instinct 2, 2006; Inside Man, 2006.

The Life

Jerrald Goldsmith was born and raised around Los Angeles. His parents encouraged their son's musical talents with lessons in piano, theory, and musicianship under pianist Jakob Gimpel, who later introduced Goldsmith to Miklós Rózsa, composer of the score to Spellbound (1945), a movie that had impressed Goldsmith as a teenager. He briefly attended Rózsa's composition class at the University of Southern California and later decided to attend Los Angeles City College, where he studied with the leading composers Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco and Ernst Krenek.

In 1950 Goldsmith got a job typing scripts at CBS, which had a full music department on staff and had given several composers their start. His first assignments were composing for radio shows and then for live television; by the time he left in 1960, he had scored several series, notably episodes of The Twilight Zone, Climax, and Playhouse 90. Impressed by Goldsmith's television scores, legendary film composer Alfred Newman hired him to do the music for the film Lonely Are the Brave, his first major feature film score.

By the late 1960's Goldsmith was one of the most in-demand film composers in Hollywood, with credits such as Freud, A Patch of Blue, Planet of the Apes, and The Sand Pebbles, all of which were nominated for Academy Awards. The 1970's brought him even more success with scores for Patton, Star Trek: The Motion Picture, Chinatown, The Boys from Brazil, and The Omen, which won the Oscar for Best Score in 1977.

Goldsmith went on to bigger-budget movies in the 1980's, mostly a mix of comedy and adventure films, including the box-office hit Gremlins and the Rambo series, among several other action movies, a genre that he helped redefine musically.

In the 1990's Goldsmith's career continued to flourish through his collaboration with directors Paul Verhoeven (Total Recall, Basic Instinct) and Fred Schepisi (The Russia House, Six Degrees of Separation), more big-budget action movies (Air Force One, The Mummy), thrillers (L.A. Confidential), and Star Trek sequels. He continued his successful career into the new millennium, with such projects as The Sum of All Fears, Along Came a Spider, and Mulan.

Beyond scoring films, Goldsmith also enjoyed conducting his music all over the world, building a strong relationship with the London Symphony Orchestra. He received an honorary doctorate from the Berklee College of Music in Boston and taught a graduate seminar in film scoring at the University of California, Los Angeles. He died on July 21, 2004, after a long battle with cancer.

The Music

A musical chameleon, Goldsmith came from an era when film composers were well trained in classical and contemporary idioms. Constantly experimenting, Goldsmith expanded the boundaries and scope of film music: Planet of the Apes and The Omen were essentially avant-garde scores, with textures and extended (or unconventional) techniques new to film music. Extremely sensitive to orchestral timbre, he explored unusual instrumental combinations. He embraced technology and experimented with a wide variety of electronic sounds and instruments as they became available. He also conducted and produced most of his scores.

Beyond his natural sense for melody, Goldsmith was inventive with rhythm and harmony, employing odd meters and dissonance to create musical counterpoint to the screen action. He was sensitive to the role of music and silence in dramatic and emotional control. His sense of timing and tension control, revealed in his skill at music spotting (placing music in the film), was extremely refined.

Planet of the Apes. Often mistaken for an electronic score, Planet of the Apes, one of Goldsmith's most innovative and avant-garde, is all acoustic, save for an Echoplex, a delay device used to feed through pizzicato string tracks. The composer uses unusual sounds and extended techniques.

Chinatown. Goldsmith was hired in 1974 to replace Phillip Lambro's rejected score, and he completed the job in ten days. Regarded as a classic period score, it features an unusual ensemble of solo trumpet, four pianos, four harps, guiro, and strings, a key aspect in defining the film's film noir aspect.

The Omen. The haunting score to the 1976 thriller won an Academy Award for its creator. Goldsmith composed a daring contemporary score, using extended vocal techniques in the choir, unusual percussion and string techniques, and mounting ostinatos.

Islands in the Stream. Goldsmith's favorite, Islands in the Stream, is based on one of the last works of Ernest Hemingway. The composer's score is extremely lush and impressionistic, built around a web of haunting themes, one on solo French horn and supplemented by another playful theme using similar intervallic identity in a diminutive form. Most prominent is the introduction of a central whole-tone rising-and-falling motif for the sea.

Star Trek: The Motion Picture. Probably Goldsmith's best-known score, Star Trek (1979) was inventive in its instrumentation and use of massive orchestral forces. It was intended to be as dramatic as John Williams's score for Star Wars, yet not derivative of it.

Musical Legacy

Goldsmith thought of himself not as a film composer but as a composer who writes for film. He cited Igor Stravinsky and Béla Bartók as his influences, placing himself within the context of twentieth century serious music. Goldsmith credited his work in live television as his training ground for learning how to score films. What set him apart from other film composers and the source of his long-lasting career was his ability to adapt and evolve musically. His scores are models for younger generations of composers.

Yiorgos Vassilandonakis

Further Reading

Burt, George. The Art of Film Music. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1995. An academic look at film music, including analyses, aesthetics, and philosophical issues. Goldsmith is mentioned prominently, and his score to Tora! Tora! Tora! is analyzed.

Cordes, Cynthia Ann, et al. On the Track: A Guide to Contemporary Film Scoring. New York: Routledge, 2004. A comprehensive technical guide to film scoring, this book includes quotes and score excerpts by Goldsmith.

Darby, William, and Jack Du Bois. American Film Music: Major Composers, Techniques, Trends, 1915-1990. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1999. History and development of film music, focused on the careers of prominent composers, including Goldsmith. Several film scores are considered, and there are musical examples and filmographies for each composer.

Morgan, David. Knowing the Score: Film Composers Talk About the Art, Craft, Blood, Sweat, and Tears of Writing for Cinema. New York: HarperCollins, 2000. A collection of interviews with and essays by film composers. Goldsmith offers insight on choosing projects, orchestration, working with directors, using electronics, finding the sound of a film, and more.

Prendergast, Roy M. Film Music: A Neglected Art—A Critical Study of Music in Films. New York: W. W. Norton, 1992. Academic look into film scores, including essays on Goldsmith's music style as well as some of his classic scores.

Thomas, Tony. Music for the Movies. Los Angeles: Silman-James Press, 1997. A survey of film-scoring styles and composers for the general reader, with a chapter dedicated to Goldsmith.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Newman, Alfred; Rózsa, Miklós; Steiner, Max; Stravinsky, Igor.

Osvaldo Golijov

Argentine classical composer

In his compositions, Golijov utilizes diverse influences, from the ethnic styles of Argentine tango, Ashkenazic and Sephardic Jewish music, and Arabic music of the golden age to the instruments from the Silk Road and Gypsy bands.

Born: December 5, 1960; La Plata, Argentina

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Yiddish ruakh, 1990; There Is Wind and There Are Ashes in the Wind, 1991; Yiddishbbuk, 1992; Third World, 1993; Av horachamin, 1994; Ballad of the Drowned Solitude, 1994; K'vakarat, 1994; November, 1994; Last Round, 1996; Din, 1998; Fish Tale, 1998; Rocketekya, 1998; Doina, 1999; Mariel, 1999; How Slow the Wind, 2001; Luce, 2001; Lullaby and Doina, 2001; K'in sventa ch'ul me'tik Kwadalupe, 2002; Tenebrae, 2002; Ayre, 2004; Tekyah, 2005.

CHORAL WORKS: Oceana, 1996; La pasión según San Marcos, 2000.
FILM SCORE: Youth Without Youth, 2007.
OPERA: Ainadamar, 2003.
ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Crónicas, 1990; Amor americano, 1991; Death of the Angels, 1996; Last Round, 1996; How Slow the Wind, 2002; Lúa descolorida, 2002; Night of the Flying Horses, 2002; Rumba Mariana, 2003; The Dreams and Prayers of Isaac the Blind, 2005.

The Life

Osvaldo Golijov (ahz-VAWL-doh GOH-liks-of) was born in Argentina to Jewish parents of Eastern European background. His mother was a pianist whose family had emigrated from Romania, and his father was a physician from the Ukraine. As a child, Golijov studied piano, and he sang in the synagogue choir. He studied at the Rubin Academy in Jerusalem, with George Crumb at the University of Pennsylvania (where Golijov earned a Ph.D.), and with Oliver Knussen at Tanglewood. Beginning in the 1990's, he composed many works on commission from such performers as Dawn Upshaw, the Kronos Quartet, the St. Lawrence Quartet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Silk Road Ensemble, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, which appointed him a composer-in-residence in 2006.

Golijov moved with his wife and children to Boston, and he began teaching at the Boston Conservatory and at the College of the Holy Cross. His music has been featured at such venues as Chicago's Ravinia Festival, New York City's Lincoln Center, and the European Music Festival.

The Music

Golijov was exposed to many musical influences while growing up in Argentina. Attending the local opera house, he became familiar with operatic style, which influenced his vocal works. In other venues, he heard the tango style of Astor Piazzolla, which influenced his instrumental music. Guided by his pianist mother, he became familiar with a range of keyboard literature, from Johann Sebastian Bach to the Russian nationalists (Modest Mussorgsky, Nikolay Rimsky-Korsakov) to the twentieth century neoclassicists (Dmitri Shostakovich, Igor Stravinsky, Aaron Copland). Possibly the strongest influence on his work was the Jewish music with which he grew up and in which he was educated. Golijov has written works in every major form, including orchestral, keyboard, chamber, film, choral, and opera and other vocal music. He has shown a tendency to revise works in different versions and instrumentation, influenced by Bach and Gustav Mahler, among others.

The Dreams and Prayers of Isaac the Blind. This five-movement work for klezmer clarinet and string quartet, based on mystical writings of a great Kabbalist rabbi of the thirteenth century, features styles ranging from synagogue music to klezmer. The use of a purely instrumental medium for music based on prose prayers may be founded on models as diverse as Ludwig van Beethoven and Copland, although the fourth movement is a reworking of K'vakarat, in which the part written for the clarinet (a frequent instrument among klezmorim) had been composed for a cantorial soloist.

La pasión según San Marcos. This ambitious work for chorus and orchestra is one of four settings of the Passion of Christ in the Gospels commissioned in 2000 by Helmuth Rilling, artistic director of the Internationale Bachakademie Stuttgart, to commemorate the 250 years since Bach's death. The irony of choosing a Jew to follow in the footsteps of Bach in this work was not lost on Golijov, who chose a text in Spanish but included Jewish influences, for example, the Kaddish (a Hebrew prayer for the dead) at the Crucifixion.

Ainadamar. Golijov's opera, was composed in 2003 and revised in 2005. It is based on the story of the relationship between the actress Margarita Xirgu and the poet Federico García Lorca, who was murdered in the Spanish Civil War. The story is portrayed by historical characters, including García Lorca, a role sung by a female singer (perhaps harking back to the trouser roles, in which women dressed in pants sang men's parts, seen in works by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Richard Strauss). Much of this music is folk-based, following the examples of Béla Bartók and the Russian nationalists. Golijov incorporated his earlier setting of the Mexican song "K'in Sventa Ch'ul Me'tik Kwadalupe" (2002) for string quartet, marimba, and tape into this work, adding a chorus.

Youth Without Youth. Golijov had only limited experience with film composition when director Francis Ford Coppola commissioned him to compose the score for this 2007 film, which tells the story of a fugitive in the Europe of the 1930's. It is based on the work of the Romanian writer Mircea Eliade. Working with musicians in Romania (a homecoming to the country from which his mother's family had emigrated), Golijov found his time in Bucharest a learning experience. The story of the fugitive passing through many countries allowed diverse indigenous musical styles, from Gypsy to the Silk Road, to permeate his kaleidoscopic score.

Osvaldo Golijov. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Ayre. This is a group of ten songs and one instrumental composition, composed in 2004 for soprano Dawn Upshaw. The texts are in Ladino (the language of the Jews expelled from Spain in 1492), Spanish, Sardinian, Arabic, and Hebrew. Not a song cycle in the usual sense, this combination evokes the coexistence of Catholics, Jews, and Muslims in southern Spain during the centuries leading up to the Reconquista, and the message of this esoteric grouping is relevant to the political divisions of the present day, a lesson that Golijov probably learned during his studies in Israel, where Jews, Muslims, and Christians must live together. The scoring of the chamber ensemble that accompanies the soloist is reminiscent of the works of early twentieth century composers (including the Second Viennese School, Stravinsky, and Paul Hindemith) in its modest size, probably a reaction to the size of major works of the post-Romantic period.

Musical Legacy

Golijov has said that his work is grounded in his musical education and his ethnic background. The combination of influences of composers from Bach to Hindemith and Stravinsky, of folk music, and of Jewish religiosity is unique without including modernism. While Golijov is a world composer in terms of content and style, his use of form is often neoclassical.

Susan M. Filler

Further Reading

Berger, Kevin. "Golijov's World." Salon (January 20, 2006). Written in anticipation of "The Passion of Osvaldo Golijov" at Lincoln Center, New York, it provides an introduction to the composer's life and background.

Eichler, Jeremy. "Standing the Whole World on Its Ear." The New York Times, January 22, 2006. Speaks directly to the composer's polyglot musical background as an influence on his music, especially the Jewish aspect.

Ross, Alex. "Deep Song." The New Yorker (September 1, 2003). Primarily concerned with the opera Ainadamar as an expression of Spanish-Argentine influence on Golijov's music.

Yearwood, Pauline Dubkin. "Making Beautiful Music: From Tango to Klezmer, Osvaldo Golijov Brings a Fresh Sound to Orchestra Hall." Chicago Jewish News, February 9-15, 2007, pp. 18-19. An enlightening interview, emphasizing the composer's cosmopolitan views of his life and his work as a facet of his Jewish background.

See also: Crumb, George; Gubaidulina, Sofia; Hindemith, Paul; Ma, Yo-Yo; Piazzolla, Astor; Stravinsky, Igor; Tan Dun.

Benny Goodman

American jazz clarinet player and composer

A virtuoso clarinetist and a bandleader, Goodman was nicknamed the King of Swing for his orchestra and chamber groups that dominated the swing jazz scene in the late 1930's and beyond.

Born: May 30, 1909; Chicago, Illinois
Died: June 13, 1986; New York, New York
Also known as: Benjamin David Goodman (full name); King of Swing

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: A Jazz Holiday, 1928; B. G. and Big Tea in NYC, 1929 (with Jack Teagarden); Benny Goodman and the Giants of Jazz, 1929 (with Teagarden); Swinging '34, Vol. 1, 1934; Swinging '34, Vol. 2, 1934; The Birth of Swing, 1935; Air Play, 1936; Roll 'Em, Vol. 1, 1937; Roll 'Em, Vol. 2, 1937; From Spirituals to Swing, 1938; Mozart Clarinet Quintet, 1938; Featuring Charlie Christian, 1939 (with Charlie Christian); Eddie Saunter Arrangements, 1940; Swing into Spring, 1941; Undercurrent Blues, 1947; The Benny Goodman Session, 1949; Let's Hear the Melody, 1950; Session for Six, 1950; Sextet, 1950; Benny Goodman, 1951; The Benny Goodman Trio Plays, 1951; Goodman and Teagarden, 1951 (with Teagarden); The Benny Goodman Trio, 1952; Easy Does It, 1952; The Benny Goodman Band, 1953; The Benny Goodman Touch, 1953; B. G. in Hi-Fi, 1954; For the Fletcher Henderson Fund, 1954; The New Benny Goodman Sextet, 1954; The Benny Goodman Story, 1955; With Charlie Christian, 1955 (with Christian); Benny Goodman Combos, 1956; The Benny Goodman Six, 1956; Date with the King, 1956 (with Rosemary Clooney); The Great Benny Goodman, 1956; Mostly Sextets, 1956; Mozart Clarinet Concerto, 1956 (with the Boston Symphony Orchestra); Trio Quartet Quintet, 1956; The Vintage Benny Goodman, 1956; Peggy Lee Sings with Benny Goodman, 1957 (with Peggy Lee); Benny Goodman Plays World Favorites in High Fidelity, 1958; Benny Rides Again, 1958; Happy Session, 1958; The Benny Goodman Treasure Chest, 1959; Benny in Brussels, 1959; In Stockholm 1959, 1959; The Sound of Music, 1959; Kingdom of Swing, 1960; Together Again!, 1963 (with others); Hello, Benny, 1964; Made in Japan, 1964; Meeting at the Summit, 1966; Listen to the Magic, 1967; Let's Dance Again, 1969; London Date, 1969; The King Swings, 1973; Seven Comes Eleven, 1975.

SINGLES: "He's Not Worth Your Tears," 1931 (with Scrappy Lambert); "Ain't Cha Glad?," 1934 (with Jack Teagarden); "King Porter Stomp," 1935; "Let's Dance," 1935; "The Glory of Love," 1936; "Goody-Goody," 1936; "It's Been So Long," 1936; "These Foolish Things (Remind Me of You)," 1936; "Don't Be That Way," 1937; "I Let a Song Go out of My Heart," 1937 (with Martha Tilton); "Sing, Sing, Sing (With a Swing)," 1937; "This Year's Kisses," 1937 (with Margaret McCrae); "And the Angels Sing," 1939 (with Tilton); "Memories of You," 1939; "There'll Be Some Changes Made," 1941 (with Louise Tobin); "Somebody Else Is Taking My Place," 1942 (with Peggy Lee); "Taking a Chance on Love," 1943 (with Helen Forrest); "Gotta Be This or That," 1945; "Symphony," 1946 (with Liza Morrow); "Swedish Pastry," 1948 (with Stan Hasselgard).

The Life

Benjamin David Goodman was the ninth of twelve children born to David Goodman and Dora Rezinsky, Jewish immigrants from Eastern Europe. They met in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1894, they married, and they moved in 1902 to Chicago, where Goodman was born in 1909. His father, a tailor, had to take extra jobs to support his large family. Goodman's first music lessons were at a synagogue; later, he and two of his brothers joined the band at Hull House, a settlement house established by Jane Addams. He also received lessons from Franz Schoepp, an excellent teacher who charged modest rates.

Brimming with jazz musicians, Chicago was a propitous place for Goodman to grow up. By the age of thirteen, he was a professional clarinetist, and in addition he had acquired skill on the alto saxophone. He played with a variety of bands, and, at the age of sixteen, he joined Ben Pollack's band for an engagement at the Venice Ballroom in Los Angeles. By the early 1930's Goodman had migrated to New York and recorded with the well-known bands of Red Nichols, Ben Selvin, Ted Lewis, and Paul Whiteman. By 1934 Goodman was ready to form his own band; its residency at the Palomar Ballroom in Los Angeles the next year made it famous. At the same time he organized his first chamber group, a trio that included pianist Teddy Wilson and drummer Gene Krupa. Later, the trio expanded to a quartet with the addition of vibraphonist Lionel Hampton. The band's most productive years were 1937 and 1938, when its lead trumpeter was Harry James. On January 16, 1938, Goodman's orchestra played a concert at Carnegie Hall in New York, previously the exclusive home of classical music.

Although a number of Goodman's performers had departed to form their own orchestras by 1939, he continued to lead both large and small groups, with his quartet sometimes expanded to six or seven performers, for decades thereafter. The roster of singers with the band included, at various times, Helen Ward, Helen Forrest, Martha Tilton, and Peggy Lee. After World War II Goodman's orchestra made a number of tours in many European, Asian, and South American countries.

In 1942 he married Alice Hammond Duckworth, the sister of John Hammond, a great jazz promoter in the 1930's. They had two daughters, and the marriage ended with her death in 1978. Goodman continued to perform in his sixties and seventies, his last concert coming only days before his death from cardiac arrest in 1986.

The Music

Goodman was an enormously talented and extraordinarily hard-working clarinetist and orchestra leader. He did succeed in classical music, but his great love was the swing music of the late 1930's. Swing was characterized by a steady beat, the harmonic structures of popular songs and the blues, and improvisions for soloists. Goodman was a difficult taskmaster, sometimes seeming to forget that the musicians in his orchestra could not attain his own standards. His bands delighted audiences for more than fifty years.

"Let's Dance." In the 1930's and 1940's radio programs featuring popular orchestras attained popularity. One was Let's Dance, with the Goodman orchestra in 1934 and 1935. A song with this title was published, and it was recorded by Goodman, becoming his theme song throughout his career. The song was heard in a number of films, including The Benny Goodman Story in 1956, a film loosely based on Goodman's life.

"King Porter Stomp." Most of Goodman's most popular recordings were made in the 1930's. "King Porter Stomp," recorded in 1935, is an excellent representative of Goodman's swing style. Like a number of his other recordings, it was arranged by Fletcher Henderson, an outstanding black bandleader and arranger. The saxophone, not a particularly popular instrument in classical music since its invention in 1840, became popular in the era of jazz music, and Goodman's saxophone quartets influenced many other orchestras at the time. In this recording the players were unified, and they worked smoothly with the brass section, at that time featuring trumpeter Bunny Berigan. The rhythm section, not always outstanding in Goodman's bands, here gave an effective 4/4 beat, which in this era replaced the 2/4 rhythm that had characterized bands in earlier jazz. Henderson's arrangement provided innovative dynamic contrasts. To this arrangement Goodman added a clarinet solo, with trombones playing softly behind it. This exciting arrangement was demanded repeatedly by dancers who listened to the band on the radio and in ballrooms.

Benny Goodman. (Library of Congress)

Benny Goodman and His Swing Orchestra. Under this title the Goodman orchestra performed at Carnegie Hall on January 16, 1938. This debut of jazz in a renowned home of classical music was promoted by impresario Sol Hurok. A section of the program called "Twenty Years of Jazz" included "Sensation Rag," as played by the Dixieland Jazz Band (usually considered the first recording jazz band) in 1917; "I'm Coming Virginia," in the style of the great cornetist Bix Beiderbecke; and imitations of works associated with Ted Lewis, Louis Armstrong, and Duke Ellington. Compositions by the leading composers of the day—George Gershwin, Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers, and Jerome Kern—were heard. The work from this production that became most famous was "Sing, Sing, Sing (With a Swing)," the basic tune composed by Louis Prima and complemented by solos from some of Goodman's best musicians and strains from other works. This number lasted twelve minutes and thirteen seconds. The concert was recorded in a rather primitive fashion: It was temporarily lost, and it was not issued as a recording for twelve years.

"Memories of You." Written by two black performers, Andy Razaf and Eubie Blake, in 1930, this song was recorded several times by Goodman, and it became one of the regular offerings at his concerts. The 1939 version, performed by Goodman's sextet, is particularly interesting. Two members of the original trio had left Goodman, so this recording includes the great jazz guitarist Charlie Christian, whose career was cut short three years later by tuberculosis when he was only twenty-five. Hampton, the vibraphonist who made Goodman's trio into a quartet in 1936, also played in this sextet, as did Goodman's favorite arranger, pianist Henderson. Although white and black musicians had sometimes played together informally in the early days of jazz, Goodman took an important initiative in using black performers as regular members of his musical organizations. Artists such as Wilson, Hampton, and Henderson gained wider acceptance because of Goodman's efforts at racial integration, a policy he regarded as a way of making the best music.

Mozart Clarinet Concerto. Primarily a jazz and popular artist, Goodman also performed classical music brilliantly. In 1956 he joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, in a performance of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Concerto for Clarinet and Orchestra in A Major (1791). Highly praised by critics, the performance was recorded by RCA Victor, on the album Mozart Clarinet Concerto.

Goodman in Moscow. In 1962 the U.S. State Department arranged for American performers to tour the Soviet Union. On May 30, Goodman's orchestra performed at the Soviet Army Sports Palace before forty-six hundred people, including Premier Nikita Khrushchev. The initial number was "Let's Dance." Next the orchestra played "Mission to Moscow," a number composed by Mel Powell. This arrangement, featuring dance syncopations that were Balkan rather than Russian, may have sounded more familiar to the audience. While disavowing any knowledge of American dances, Khrushchev remarked that he enjoyed the concert.

Goodman's orchestra played music from their usual jazz repertoire in Moscow and in other cities during several weeks in the Soviet Union. Public reaction to this tour was mixed, but introducing people in the Soviet sphere to American jazz and popular music was an attempt to break down the cultural divide between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Musical Legacy

Goodman was a superb clarinetist whose work was recognized by jazz, popular, and classical audiences. He made a great contribution in bringing the artistic medium of jazz to the attention of both the American public and the classical audiences. Until Goodman's orchestra appeared in Carnegie Hall in 1938, it was strictly a venue for classical works and audiences. Although Goodman could ably perform the works of such composers as Mozart and Paul Hindemith, his program on that occasion featured jazz and popular music. Later his tours to Europe, Asia, and South America brought American jazz to audiences beyond the relatively few Western European countries where it had been already recognized.

Goodman's career was unusually long and productive. Widely recognized as a great clarinetist even in his early twenties, he continued to perform into his seventy-eighth year. As soon as he became a conductor, his orchestra and chamber groups became springboards for talented performers, many of them black musicians who now could find work in musical organizations previously dominated by white performers playing for white audiences. The success of his small groups inspired other jazz musicians to give new emphasis to a form of jazz endeavor that the larger bands of the 1930's had been neglecting. Recordings made by his groups ranging from three to seven players have remained among his most popular performances.

Goodman received many awards. He was the second jazz performer to be honored at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C., in 1982, the first having been Count Basie the previous year. His academic awards included a doctor of music degree from Columbia University a few weeks before his death.

Robert P. Ellis

Further Reading

Collier, James Lincoln. Benny Goodman and the Swing Era. New York: Oxford University Press, 1989. This biography traces Goodman's life, and the author attempts to analyze the personality of a musician he found enigmatic.

Connor, D. Russell. Benny Goodman: Wrappin' It Up. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 1996. Connor collects information about Goodman's performances and recordings that had eluded previous biographers.

Giddins, Gary. Visions of Jazz: The First Century. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. Chapter 17 of this book argues that Goodman's death signified that "an age had passed, and not just a musical one."

Goodman, Benny. Benny, King of Swing: A Pictorial Biography Based on Benny Goodman's Personal Archives. New York: William Morrow, 1979. This book is primarily a pictorial, with 212 illustrations, but it also contains a fifty-seven-page introduction by Stanley Baron that reviews Goodman's career.

Goodman, Benny, and Irving Kolodin. The Kingdom of Swing. New York: Stackpole Sons, 1939. Kolodin was one of the first distinguished music critics to acknowledge Goodman's contribution to the musical world.

Schuller, Gunther. The Swing Era: The Development of Jazz, 1930-1945. New York: Oxford University Press, 1989. Although Schuller is more critical of Goodman than are other jazz historians, he significantly begins this book with a forty-three-page chapter on the clarinetist. He sees Goodman as a rare example of a true bond between popular taste and creative music.

See also: Barretto, Ray; Beiderbecke, Bix; Carter, Benny; Christian, Charlie; Fitzgerald, Ella; Getz, Stan; Hampton, Lionel; Henderson, Fletcher; Hindemith, Paul; Holiday, Billie; Jones, Elvin; Jones, Hank; Lee, Peggy; McPartland, Marian; Mancini, Henry; Mercer, Johnny; Miller, Glenn; Navarro, Fats; Nichols, Red; Puente, Tito; Shaw, Artie; Smith, Bessie; Szigeti, Joseph; Tormé, Mel; Whiteman, Paul; Williams, Mary Lou; Young, Lester.

Dexter Gordon

American jazz saxophonist and composer

An important link between the swing era and modern bebop, Gordon was noted for his assertive yet sensitive tenor tone, his penchant for quoting, and his incomparable ballad playing.

Born: February 27, 1923; Los Angeles, California
Died: April 25, 1990; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Also known as: Dexter Keith Gordon (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Dexter Rides Again, 1945; Long Tall Dexter, 1945; The Chase, 1947 (with Wardell Gray); Dexter Gordon Quintet, 1947; The Duel, 1947 (with Teddy Edwards); The Hunt, 1947; The Daddy Plays the Horn, 1955; Dexter Blows Hot and Cool, 1955; The Resurgence of Dexter Gordon, 1960; Dexter Calling, 1961; Dexter Gordon, 1961; Doin' Allright, 1961; Landslide, 1961; Cry Me a River, 1962; Go!, 1962; A Swingin' Affair, 1962; Our Man in Paris, 1963; One Flight Up, 1964; Clubhouse, 1965; Gettin' Around, 1965; Body and Soul, 1967; Both Sides of Midnight, 1967; Take the "A" Train, 1967; Day in Copenhagen, 1969 (with Slide Hampton); More Power!, 1969; Power!, 1969; The Tower of Power, 1969; Jumpin' Blues, 1970; The Panther!, 1970; The Shadow of Your Smile, 1971; Ca'Purange, 1972; Generation, 1972; Tangerine, 1972; Blues à la Suisse, 1973; Dexter Gordon-Sonny Grey with the Georges Arvanitas Trio, 1973; The Apartment, 1974; Revelation, 1974; Bouncin' with Dex, 1975; More than You Know, 1975; Something Different, 1975; Stable Mable, 1975; Biting the Apple, 1976; Featuring Joe Newman, 1976 (with Joe Newman); Homecoming, 1976; Lullaby for a Monster, 1976; Strings and Things, 1976; True Blue, 1976 (with Al Cohn); Midnight Dream, 1977; Sophisticated Giant, 1977; Great Encounters, 1978; Manhattan Symphonie, 1978; Gotham City, 1980; Jive Fernando, 1981; The Other Side of 'Round Midnight, 1985; 'Round Midnight, 1985.

The Life

Dexter Keith Gordon was born on February 27, 1923, in Los Angeles, California, son of Frank Gordon, one of the first African American doctors in Los Angeles, and Gwendolyn Baker. While still in high school, Gordon was recruited to join Lionel Hampton's band, with which he toured extensively and made his first recordings. He spent the majority of the 1940's touring with some of America's top big bands, most notably with Louis Armstrong and Billy Eckstine.

The 1950's were largely a period of inactivity for Gordon, who was in and out of prison for drug-related offenses. By 1960, however, Gordon had the first of two major resurgences in his career: He signed a contract with Blue Note Records, and he recorded some of his most revered sessions as a leader. In 1962 Gordon relocated to Europe, and he spent the next fourteen years living and recording in Paris and Copenhagen, one of many prominent American jazz musicians who found Europe in the 1960's better suited their musical lives.

Gordon permanently relocated to the United States in 1976, with a special return engagement at the Village Vanguard. That event received such praise that it resulted in the second major revitalization of his career. In the 1980's Gordon's playing began to decrease, and he launched a second career as an actor. He was nominated for an Academy Award for his portrayal of an expatriate jazz musician in 'Round Midnight (1986), and he had a minor role in Awakenings (1991), which was released after his death. When he died of kidney failure on April 25, 1990, Gordon was survived by his widow, Maxine, and his five children, Robin, Dierdre, Mikael, Benjamin, and Woody.

The Music

In the 1940's Gordon first appears on recordings with the Lionel Hampton Big Band (where he shared tenor saxophone duties with Illinois Jacquet). In 1943 he led his first session (released as "I've Found a New Baby"), featuring Nat King Cole on piano. Gordon then went on to perform and to record with many of the top big bands of the era, from Fletcher Henderson to Armstrong to Eckstine. It was his time in Eckstine's band that led to his development as a bebop player, sharing the bandstand on any given evening with fellow swing-to-bop pioneers Fats Navarro, Sonny Stitt, Dizzy Gillespie, Art Blakey, and Sarah Vaughan.

Early Works. As early as 1945, Gordon recorded bebop sides in a quintet led by Gillespie (released as In the Beginning), and soon he began increasing the frequency of his releases as a leader. With various quartets and quintets in 1945 and 1946, Gordon released his trademark self-titled compositions, from "Long Tall Dexter," to "Dexter Digs In," to "Blow Mr. Dexter" (ironically, the "Dexter" titles, so closely tied to his career as a leader, were not contributed by Gordon). Many of these tracks can be found on Long Tall Dexter, released on Savoy Records in 1945. In 1947 Gordon teamed up with fellow tenor saxophonist Wardell Gray and released The Chase, a famous bebop recording featuring extended duels between the two tenors. Later in 1947, Gordon recorded with trumpeter Navarro and pianist-arranger Tadd Dameron on famous bebop sessions for Savoy Records.

Doin' Allright. With a few exceptions (Los Angeles session dates in 1955 under the titles Dexter

Dexter Gordon. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Blows Hot and Cool and The Daddy Plays the Horn), the 1950's saw little recording from Gordon because of his imprisonment on drug charges. Upon his release, Gordon was recruited by Blue Note Records, and he released some of his most critically acclaimed and beloved recordings. The Blue Note period featured Doin' Allright (with trumpeter Freddie Hubbard), Dexter Calling, Go!, A Swingin' Affair, Our Man in Paris, One Flight Up, Clubhouse, and Gettin' Around. Gordon was also a sideman on Herbie Hancock's legendary first record, Takin' Off, in 1962.

Homecoming. Living in Paris and Copenhagen from 1962 to 1976 (returning occasionally to record sessions for Blue Note and to visit his family), Gordon also recorded sessions for the European labels Steeplechase and Black Lion. A series of legendary concerts at Copenhagen's Montmartre Club led to the release of multiple recordings in 1967, including Body and Soul and Both Sides of Midnight. While still living in Europe, Gordon released American recordings for the Prestige Label, including The Tower of Power, The Panther!, Jumpin' Blues, Tangerine, and Generation. Upon permanent relocation to the United States in 1976, Gordon's return engagement to the Village Vanguard was released as Homecoming on the Columbia Records label. Throughout the late 1970's and occasionally in the 1980's, Gordon made recordings on various labels (Columbia, Blue Note), and he collaborated with Hampton, Hancock, and Woody Shaw.

Musical Legacy

For much of his career, Gordon did not garner the praise that some of his fellow tenor saxophonists did. Perhaps this was because he was not strictly a swing-era star such as Lester Young or a bebop avant-garde pioneer such as John Coltrane. However, after he returned to live in the United States in 1976, adulation for Gordon and his music grew. Jazz aficionados recognized him as a musician who was influenced by the swing players and who at the same time had a significant influence on the bebop players. Additionally, his style of combining swing and bebop influences with his powerful tone, harmonic inventiveness, and lyrical ballad playing has been emulated by following generations of tenor saxophonists. Gordon was elected to the Down Beat Hall of Fame in 1980, and he was nominated for an Academy Award (as Best Actor in 'Round Midnight) in 1986.

Eric Novod

Further Reading

Britt, Sam. Dexter Gordon: A Musical Biography. New York: Da Capo Press, 1989. Contains biographical information on Gordon with a focus on his career in music. Includes discography.

Gioia, Ted. West Coast Jazz: Modern Jazz in California, 1945-1960. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1998. This work includes many references to Gordon's influence on the West Coast jazz scene in the late 1940's.

Outhwaite, Tony. "Back in the U.S.A." National Review 29, no. 38 (September 30, 1977). An article that focuses on the excitement surrounding the return of Gordon to the United States after fourteen years of living in Europe.

Panken, Ted. "Jackie McLean on Dexter Gordon." Down Beat 71, no. 7 (July, 2004): 32. Famous jazz alto saxophonist McLean discusses the significance of Gordon's tenor saxophone playing and his importance place in jazz history.

Taylor, Arthur. Notes and Tones: Musician to Musician Interviews. New York: Da Capo Press, 1993. This expanded edition contains a dialogue between Taylor and Gordon, and they discuss jazz's musical and racial history.

See also: Cole, Nat King; Coltrane, John; Hampton, Lionel; Navarro, Fats; Powell, Bud; Rollins, Sonny; Young, Lester.

Glenn Gould

Canadian classical pianist, composer, and conductor

A prodigiously gifted pianist and multimedia communicator, Gould revived interest in long-neglected composers and advanced aesthetic and philosophical theories that, while initially dismissed as eccentric, have come to be seen as prophetic of the potential for technology to enhance the performance of serious music.

Born: September 25, 1932; Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Died: October 4, 1982; Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Also known as: Glenn Herbert Gould (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Sonata for Bassoon and Piano, 1950; Prelude, Cantilena, and Gigue, 1951 (for clarinet and bassoon); String Quartet, Op. 1, 1956.

CHORAL WORKS: Lieberson Madrigal, 1964 (for four solo voices or mixed chorus and piano); So You Want to Write a Fugue?, 1964 (for chorus and piano or string quartet).

PIANO WORKS: A Merry Thought, 1941; Rondo in D Major, 1948; Sonata for Piano, 1950; Five Short Piano Pieces, 1951; Two Pieces, 1952.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Siegfried Idyll, 1982 (by Richard Wagner).

ALBUMS (as pianist): Goldberg Variations, 1956 (by Johann Sebastian Bach); Sonata No. 30 in E Major, Op. 109, 1956 (by Ludwig Van Beethoven); Sonata No. 3, Op. 92, No. 4, 1959 (by Ernst Krenek); Sonata, Op. 1, 1959 (by Alban Berg); Three Piano Pieces, Op. 11, 1959 (by Arnold Schoenberg); Intermezzi, 1961 (by Johannes Brahms); Bach: The Art of the Fugue, 1962; Bach: The Well-Tempered Clavier, 1962-1971 (six volumes); Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Op. 15, 1962; Beethoven: Concerto No. 5 in E-flat Major, Op. 73, 1966; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Op. 15, 1962; A Consort of Musicke Bye William Byrde and Orlando Gibbons, 1971; Handel: Suites for Harpsichord Nos. 1-4, 1972; Schoenberg: Complete Songs for Voice and Piano, Vol. 2, 1972; Hindemith: Das Marienleben, 1978.

RADIO SCORE: The Solitude Trilogy, 1967-1977 (includes The Idea of North, 1967; The Latecomers, 1969; The Quiet in the Land, 1977).

The Life

Glenn Herbert Gould (gewld) was born in 1932 to Russell and Florence Gold, their only child. The family changed Gold to Gould probably to avoid being mistaken for Jews during a time of heightened anti-Semitism; the Golds were Scottish. His mother was a piano teacher who traced her lineage to the Romantic Norwegian composer Edvard Grieg. Her early efforts at acquainting her son with the piano revealed his photographic memory, superior digital dexterity, and perfect pitch.

At the age of seven Gould won a competition sponsored by the Toronto Conservatory. By the age of ten he was studying with the Chilean pianist and conductor Alberto Guerrero and rapidly mastering a large body of compositions from the Baroque, classical, and Romantic repertoires. Three years later he performed as a featured soloist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

In the decade that followed, his combination of talent and odd performance mannerisms (humming loudly while he performed, conducting himself, adopting odd performance postures) made him a musical celebrity in Canada. However, it was his January 11, 1955, concert at Town Hall in New York City that earned him a contract with Columbia Records.

Gould's Columbia debut, a recording of Johann Sebastian Bach's Goldberg Variations, was an immediate best seller and launched him on a grueling, worldwide performance tour. Nine years and more than 250 concerts later, he stunned his audience by abandoning the concert stage and devoting himself to perfecting his art in the recording studio, where, he insisted, he could achieve ideal performances by splicing together the best of multiple takes.

Glenn Gould. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Contrary to conventional wisdom, Gould's retreat from the stage did not negatively affect his record sales, in part because he used his newly acquired free time to embark upon a career in radio, television, and journalism that kept him in the public eye. From 1967 to 1975 he recorded three celebrated and influential contrapuntal radio documentaries that have come to be known collectively as The Solitude Trilogy.

Such extracurricular projects notwithstanding, Gould continued to record music at an exhausting pace, slowing down only during the mid-1970's to combat mysterious illnesses that hindered his playing. A lifelong hypochondriac, Gould relied on a heavy regimen of prescription drugs that, along with his punishing work ethic, most likely contributed to the stroke that he suffered on September 27, 1982, and from which he died one week later, nine days after his fiftieth birthday.

The Music

Although Gould's musical career was by no means limited to his recordings and performances, he was most well known for his charisma as a pianist. He was nearly as infamous for his eccentricities and iconoclastic approach to venerated composers (particularly Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Ludwig van Beethoven) as he was for his prolific and excellent musicianship. Best known for his recordings of Bach and Arnold Schoenberg (the two composers whose intellectually rigorous and un-Romantic sensibilities, although separated by two hundred years, best reflected his own), Gould also recorded music from the repertoires of Franz Joseph Haydn, Alban Berg, Johannes Brahms, Richard Strauss, Sergei Prokofiev, Grieg, William Byrd, George Frideric Handel, Georges Bizet, Richard Wagner, Paul Hindemith, Robert Schumann, Jean Sibelius, Aleksandr Scriabin, Ernst Krenek, Jan Pieterszoon Sweelinck, and Barbara Pentland. Somewhat surprisingly, given how little he recorded of his music, Gould claimed that his favorite composer was the Tudor-era Orlando Gibbons. Gould also recorded on the organ (the instrument on which he first played in public at the age of twelve) and the harpsichord.

Long credited with discovering and perfecting a meticulously tactile approach to the piano, Gould actually adapted techniques that he had absorbed from the recordings of the pianists Artur Schnabel and Rosalyn Tureck and from his years as a student of Guerrero. That he remained frustrated in his often-stated intention to become a great composer and conductor was apparently of consequence only to himself.

Goldberg Variations. Gould's debut, recorded in 1955 and released in 1956, caused an instant sensation and rapidly became a best seller. Perpetually in print, it was rereleased several times by Sony Classical in the years following Gould's death, both alone and paired with his 1981 rerecording. In 2006 it became the template for the first of the Zenph Studios' "re-creations" when, before an audience of Gould's friends and colleagues, a specially prepared Yamaha piano "performed" the piece in response to a computerized encoding of Gould's original performance.

Intermezzi. For all of his deeply rooted anti-Romanticism, Gould was surprisingly receptive to these pieces by Brahms, which he recorded in 1959 and 1960 with a sensitivity born of a genuine and intimate affection.

Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Op. 15. On April 5, 1962, Gould performed this staple of the Romantic repertoire with the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Leonard Bernstein. Gould's radically un-Romantic reinterpretations of Brahms's well-known tempi, although hesitantly agreed to by Bernstein (who admired Gould's intelligence and respected his instincts), provoked considerable turmoil among critics and audience members alike and became for years the most cited example of Gould's audacity.

String Quartet, Op. 1. The first of what Gould hoped would be many of his original compositions turned out to be his last. Recorded in 1960 with the Symphonia String Quartet, it elicited kind, if generally unenthusiastic, reviews. The most common complaint was that its multitude of musical ideas was ultimately unfocused.

The Art of Fugue, Vol. 1, Contrapunctus 1-9. Gould made the majority of this recording in 1962 on a Casavant organ housed in Toronto's All Saints' Church. Like the twelve piano recordings that preceded it, his sole organ recording emphasized both the precision of his playing and his objection to the typical organ record's reverberant sonorities. In part because the Casavant, whose Baroque-sensitive registration he loved, was destroyed in a fire, he never recorded The Art of the Fugue, Vol. 2.

The Well-Tempered Clavier. Gould recorded both books of Bach's monumentally influential keyboard work in six volumes between 1962 and 1971. Together with his two recordings of the Goldberg Variations, they represent the fullest musical articulation of Gould's deeply rooted appreciation for the composer whose compositions he recorded more than any other.

Concerto No. 5 in E-flat Major ("Emperor"). This 1966 recording would prove to be unique in Gould's oeuvre for two main reasons. First, it found him giving an eccentricity-free performance of a well-known composition. Second, it would be his only performance with an orchestra under the baton of his hero, the conductor Leopold Stokowski.

A Consort of Musicke Bye William Byrde and Orlando Gibbons. This Tudor-music album, recorded in 1967, 1968, and 1971, represents Gould's only documented excursion into the music of his favorite composer, Gibbons.

Complete Songs for Voice and Piano. Together with his recording of Hindemith's Das Marienleben with Roxolana Roslak, these performances, recorded between 1964 and 1971, capture not only Gould's love of Schoenberg but also his capacity for providing sympathetic accompaniment (in this case to the singers Helen Vanni, soprano; Cornelius Opthof, baritone; and Donald Gramm, bass-baritone).

Suites, Nos. 1-4. For someone who loved the harpsichord so much that he insisted his pianos be tuned to replicate the harpsichord's dry precision as closely as possible (a demand that drove Steinway's, and later Yamaha's, tuners to great frustration), Gould recorded very little on the instrument. He also recorded very little Handel, a fact that makes this 1972 recording doubly valuable.

Das Marienleben. Gould's 1976-1977 recording of the original 1923 version of Hindemith's song cycle based on the life of Mary was released in 1978 and featured not only the exquisite soprano singing of Roslak but also Gould's extensive and critically acute liner notes, which concluded with his declaration that Das Marienleben was the finest song cycle ever composed.

Posthumous Releases. Sony Classical (formerly Columbia, later CBS, Masterworks) went to great lengths to keep Gould's recordings in circulation after his death, repackaging them mainly in the Glenn Gould Edition and the Glenn Gould Anniversary Edition series. The most conceptually original and consistent compilation was 2003's Glenn Gould . . . and Serenity, which brought together the most serene recordings from the entire spectrum of Gould's discography.

Musical Legacy

It has been said that Gould was more popular after his death than he was while he lived. Unlike many artists of whom such a statement has been made, however, Gould also enjoyed immense popularity during his lifetime. Indeed, the escalating sales of his many posthumously repackaged recordings were merely a continuation of a long-established trend among lovers of Gould's music.

Gould's notoriously reclusive tendencies notwithstanding, he was open to collaborations with other musicians (the Juilliard Quartet, the Philadelphia Brass Ensemble, violinists Yehudi Menuhin and Israel Baker, cellist Leonard Rose), singers (operatic sopranos Vanni and Roslak), and conductors (Bernstein, Vladimir Golschmann) who shared, or at least tolerated, his often unorthodox interpretations. Gould demonstrated his generosity in other ways as well, notably and endearingly in his championing of Stokowski as the greatest conductor of the twentieth century and one of its most visionary musical geniuses.

In the years after his death, Gould became the subject not only of several well-written biographies but also of video documentaries and the impressionistic biopic Thirty Two Short Films About Glenn Gould (the segments of which were structured along the lines of the thirty-two Goldberg Variations). In 1988 the National Library of Canada mounted "Glenn Gould 1988," a major exhibition made possible by the library's staggeringly vast amount of Gould memorabilia, which it acquired in 1983. Like every other presentation having to do with Gould's life and music, it attracted a large, enthusiastic, and diverse audience. Since his death, Gould's recordings and his determination to bring the works of neglected or misunderstood composers to his audience (which was the broadest of any classical solo instrumentalist) have emerged as his greatest legacy.

Arsenio Orteza

Further Reading

Angilette, Elizabeth. Philosopher at the Keyboard: Glenn Gould. Lanham, Md.: Rowman & Littlefield, 2001. A fascinating attempt to construct a coherent philosophy of art and life from Gould's many writings and documented statements.

Bazzana, Kevin. Wondrous Strange: The Life and Art of Glenn Gould. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 2006. Authoritative Gould biography, benefitting from the author's scholarly understanding of Gould's repertoire and the subtleties of the pianist's interpretations and from his access to people and documents heretofore inaccessible or underexplored. Thoroughly examines Gould's public accomplishments and what is known of his private life, fairly assessing his strengths and weaknesses. Concludes that the more sensationalized aspects of Gould's life have been exaggerated to the detriment of a sober appreciation of his work, its importance, and its enduring popularity.

Cott, Jonathan, and Glenn Gould. Conversations with Glenn Gould. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2005. Of value both for the incisiveness of Cott's questions and for the fact that, unlike many of Gould's other widely circulated interviews, Cott's were not ghost-scripted in advance by Gould. Includes photographs and detailed listings of Gould's recordings and radio and television projects.

Friedrich, Otto. Glenn Gould: A Life and Variations. New York: Vintage, 1989. Full-scale Gould biography valuable for the accuracy and detail of its interview-enriched narrative and painstakingly documented listings of Gould's concert, studio, radio, and television performances.

McGreevy, John, ed. Variations: Glenn Gould by Himself and His Friends. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1983. Handsome and skillfully edited combination of career-spanning photographs and essays, combining the best of Gould's writings ("Glenn Gould Interviews Glenn Gould About Glenn Gould," "Stokowski in Six Scenes," "Toronto") with eloquent, humorous, and touching reminiscences written by Gould's closest friends and colleagues (Bernstein, Menuhin, Bruno Monsaingeon).

Payzant, Geoffrey. Glenn Gould, Music and Mind. Toronto, Ont.: Key Porter, 2005. Gould-approved exploration of the aesthetic and philosophical ramifications of his abandonment of the concert stage for the studio and his utilization of "creative cheating" to construct the best musical performances possible in an era of increasing technological sophistication.

See also: Berg, Alban; Bernstein, Leonard; Hindemith, Paul; Prokofiev, Sergei; Schoenberg, Arnold; Scriabin, Aleksandr; Stokowski, Leopold; Strauss, Richard; Takemitsu, Tōru; Tan Dun; Watts, André.

Percy Aldridge Grainger

Australian American classical pianist and composer

A virtuoso pianist and an orchestral composer and conductor, Grainger was particularly significant for his preservation of British folk songs and his promotion of band music as a serious art form.

Born: July 8, 1882; Melbourne, Victoria, Australia
Died: February 20, 1961; White Plains, New York
Also known as: George Percy Aldridge Grainger (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: My Robin Is to the Greenwood Gone, 1912 (for flute, English horn, and six strings); Youthful Rapture, 1929.

CHORAL WORKS: The Lads of Wamphray, 1907 (for male chorus and two pianos or orchestra; later arranged for wind band); Kipling Jungle Book Cycle, 1947 (for mixed chorus and chamber orchestra).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Fisher's Boarding House, 1899; We Were Dreamers, 1899; Green Bushes, 1906 (passacaglia on an English folk song); Mock Morris, 1911 (for six solo strings or string orchestra); Handel in the Strand, 1912 (for piano and string orchestra); In a Nutshell, 1916 (suite for orchestra, piano, and percussion); The Warriors, 1916 (music for an imaginary ballet; for three pianos and orchestra); Blithe Bells, 1931; The Immovable "Do" (The Cyphering "C"), 1939; Danish Folk Music Suite, 1941; Dreamery, 1943; The Power of Rome and the Christian Heart, 1943 (for wind instruments and organ); Youthful Suite, 1945; Faeroe Island Dance, 1946 (for concert band).

PIANO WORKS: Klavierstuck in A Minor, 1897 (for solo piano); Klavierstuck in E Major, 1897 (for solo piano); Klavierstuck in D Major, 1898 (for solo piano); Hill Songs Nos. 1 and 2, 1907 (for solo piano); English Dance, 1909 (for two pianos and six hands); Shepherd's Hey!, 1913 (folk song for piano); Spoon River, 1922 (for solo piano).

VOCAL WORKS: The Secret of the Sea, 1898 (for male voice and piano); The Men of the Sea, 1899 (for voice and piano); Merciful Town, 1899 (for voice and piano); Northern Ballad, 1899 (for voice and piano); Ride with an Idle Whip, 1899 (for voice and piano); There Were Three Friends, 1899; Songs of the North, 1900 (fourteen folk songs for voice and piano); Sailor's Chanty, 1901 (for male voice and piano); Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon, 1901; Irish Tune from County Derry, 1902; Zanzibar Boat Song, 1902; Colleen Dhas (The Valley Lay Smiling), 1904; Sir Eglamore, 1904; The Sea Wife, 1905; Walking Tune, 1905 (for symphonic wind choir); I'm Seventeen Come Sunday, 1906; Bold William Taylor, 1908 (folk song for solo voice and piano); Soldier, Soldier, 1908 (for voice and piano); Shallow Brown, 1910 (chanty for one or two voices and piano); Colonial Song, 1911 (for voices and piano); The "Gum-Suckers" March, 1911; King Solomon's Espousals, 1911; Love Verses from "The Song of Solomon," 1911; Scotch Strathspey and Reel, 1911; The Sussex Mummers' Christmas Carol, 1911; Willow Willow, 1911 (for voice and piano); Six Dukes Went a-Fishin', 1912 (folk song for voice and piano); At Twilight, 1913; Molly on the Shore, 1914 (folk song for orchestra); The Merry Wedding, 1915; Arrival Platform Humlet, 1916; Gay but Wistful, 1916; Pastoral, 1916; Children's March: Over the Hills and Far Away, 1918 (for voices and band); Country Gardens, 1918 (for voice and orchestra); The Brisk Young Sailor (Who Returned to Wed His True Love), 1919; British Waterside (The Jolly Sailor), 1920 (folk song for voice and piano); The Pretty Maid Milkin' Her Cow, 1920 (folk song for voice and piano); Creepin' Jane, 1921 (folk song for voice and piano); To a Nordic Princess (Bridal Song), 1928; Lisbon (Dublin Bay), 1931; Tribute to Foster, 1931; Harvest Hymn (Harvest Time in Sweden), 1932 (for voices and orchestra); Lincolnshire Posy, 1937 (folk song suite for wind band); Lord Melbourne (War Song), 1937; The Lost Lady Found, 1937 (folk song for voice and piano); Rufford Park Poachers, 1937; The "Duke of Marlborough" Fanfare, 1939 (for voice and brass band); The Merry King, 1939; Early One Morning, 1940; The Beaches of Lukannon, 1941 (for voice and piano); Hard-Hearted Barb'ra (H)ellen, 1946 (folk song for voice and piano); Marching Song of Democracy, 1948 (for mixed chorus, organ, and orchestra).

The Life

George Percy Aldridge Grainger (GRAYN-jur) was the only child of John Grainger and Rose Aldridge, a domineering woman who gave her son his first piano lessons. In 1895 Rose took Grainger (whose father had left in 1890) to Europe to further his musical education.

Grainger studied piano and composition in Frankfurt, Germany, forging lifelong friendships with outstanding student musicians. In 1901 the Graingers moved to London, where Percy became a common fixture at recitals and society performances. He also studied in Berlin with Ferruccio Busoni and toured Australia with Ada Crossley. Grainger was one of the first musicians (in 1905) to use a phonograph to collect folk songs. His career as a pianist flourished, exceeding one hundred performances yearly. With encouragement from Edvard Grieg and Frederick Delius, Grainger began to publish his compositions, using the name Percy Aldridge Grainger.

At the outbreak of World War I, Rose and Grainger fled to the United States, where Grainger toured in support of the Red Cross. In 1917 he joined the U.S. military as a band man; he became a U.S. citizen in 1918. At war's end, Grainger continued to tour, perform, compose, and record. In 1922, plagued by health problems and mental deterioration, Rose committed suicide. Grainger temporarily abandoned performing, but by 1923 he had resumed his strenuous regimen of concertizing and touring throughout the world. On one such tour, in 1926, he met a fascinating Swedish woman, Ella Ström.

Ström proved to be a kindred spirit and they became engaged. The wedding was set for August, 1928, coinciding with conducting appearances by Grainger at the Hollywood Bowl. The promoters persuaded Grainger to schedule the ceremony at one of the concerts. Unaware of the enormity of the venue, Ella acquiesced. The Graingers were wed in front of twenty-two thousand audience members.

The 1930's saw the Graingers undertake the establishment of a Grainger Museum at the University of Melbourne. When the United States entered World War II, Grainger again performed in support of the Red Cross. By 1953 prostate cancer forced him to slow down. Despite ongoing treatment, metastatic cancer spread throughout his body and brain, and in February, 1961, he succumbed. Grainger's body was laid to rest in Adelaide, Australia, in the vault of his mother's family, the Aldridges.

The Music

Grainger completed more than twelve hundred compositions, spanning many different genres. Much of his reputation results from his settings of folk songs for piano and for orchestra and from his band music. Grainger's publications were unique, utilizing vernacular words for musical descriptions, "blue-eyed English," rather than the traditional Italian terminology.

"Country Gardens." Grainger's first major success was an uncomplicated arrangement of a folk song. Although much of Grainger's compositional output was substantially more complex, experimental, and cerebral, it is this simpler work that established Grainger's compositional reputation. "Country Gardens" appears in several versions, including solo piano (1918), full orchestra (1949), and band (completed 1953, published 1990). An earlier version (perhaps 1908) for "two whistlers and a few instruments" remains unpublished.

Percy Aldridge Grainger. (Library of Congress)

Lincolnshire Posy. Grainger's six-movement masterpiece for winds demonstrates his innovative nature. This 1937 composition sets folk tunes he had collected decades earlier the way a jeweler sets a gem: the careful, tasteful setting enhances the natural beauty of these musical wildflowers without obscuring their inherent characteristics.

Techniques utilized in Lincolnshire Posy are representative of Grainger's style and have influenced subsequent wind composers. To represent different interpretive shadings a folksinger might apply to the verses of a song, Grainger uses continuous variation, with differing rhythmic, harmonic, and orchestrational structures. Exotic harmonies that might have been more at home in the music of Duke Ellington (whom Grainger considered the greatest living composer) bring a richness to the setting. Dynamic effects are meticulously planned, including Grainger's characteristic cross-fade, where one voice increases volume while another fades.

The rhythmic freedom of a folksinger is depicted several different ways. The most basic way is through the use of rhythmic variation. A second method emphasizes the irregularity of the singer by employing continually changing mixed meters. Another technique achieves rhythmic freedom by the temporary banishment of barlines.

Lincolnshire Posy also demonstrates Grainger's concept of tuneful percussion, expanding the mallet percussion choices beyond the simple xylophone and bells favored by so many composers of that era.

Grainger's innovative use of constantly changing and unusual combinations of instruments creates a wide palette of tone colors. This feature might just be the most influential aspect of Lincolnshire Posy. Not only did the varying rich timbres demonstrate Grainger's unique abilities as a composer for winds, they also served to demonstrate to other composers the wide range of possibilities inherent in a large collection of wind and percussion instruments. Lincolnshire Posy thus accelerated the recognition of the wind band as a serious compositional medium.

Grainger sought rhythmic and melodic freedom echoing the complexities and irregularities of nature but exceeding the capabilities of instruments and musicians. Some of his emphasis on rapidly changing mixed meter caused his most serious compositions to suffer from neglect. The third movement of Lincolnshire Posy, for example, is often deleted from performances of the work, even to this day, just as it was at its premiere performance, because of the perception of its rhythmic difficulty.

Experimental Music. Grainger desired to build a machine that would allow him complete freedom of choice in both pitch and rhythm. In the 1920's he began to manipulate piano rolls to create free music, publishing an article about his efforts in 1924. A 1935 Australian radio broadcast employed a string quartet to demonstrate pitch freedom that exceeded the traditional twelve fixed tones of the chromatic scale. Grainger composed for the siren-like electronic musical instrument, the Theremin, and failed in an attempt to induce inventor Léon Theremin to create a device that would achieve Grainger's goals. Grainger experimented with using a phonograph to layer recordings of his voice, a technique which predated later experiments in multitracking by those who manipulated magnetic tape. Grainger eventually turned to the use of electronic media, moving from vacuum tubes to transistors. While his experiments paralleled many similar efforts by composers of electronic music, his efforts remained largely unknown.

Musical Legacy

Grainger's musical legacy consists primarily of his heartfelt settings of folk music. Among his best known works are the Irish Tune from County Derry, which is performed by solo pianists, choirs, bands, and orchestras; Country Gardens, which is performed in the piano, orchestral, and band versions; and his important series of wind works, including Lincolnshire Posy, Molly on the Shore, Children's March, Colonial Song, the Hill Songs, and Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon. Grainger's careful attention to the wind band helped secure its role as a serious musical medium.

William S. Carson

Further Reading

Bird, John. Percy Grainger. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999. A definitive depiction of the life and works of Grainger, updated from the 1976 version. Illustrations, list of published compositions, discography, bibliography.

Dorum, Eileen. Percy Grainger: The Man Behind the Music. Hawthorn, Vic.: IC & EE Dorum, 1986. An Australian viewpoint informs this biography. Illustrations, bibliography.
Slattery, Thomas C. Percy Grainger: The Inveterate Innovator. Evanston, Ill.: Instrumentalist, 1974. This depiction of Grainger's life emphasizes his music. Illustrations, catalog of compositions, discography, selected writings, bibliography.

See also: Busoni, Ferruccio; Ellington, Duke; Theremin, Léon.

Grandmaster Flash

American rap vocalist and songwriter

One of the first deejays in hip-hop, Grandmaster Flash was instrumental in bringing the South Bronx subculture to larger audiences. He introduced a number of important techniques to the repertoire of deejay skills, including scratching, backspin, and punch phrasing.

Born: January 1, 1958; Bridgetown, Barbados
Also known as: Joseph Saddler (birth name); Biggie Grand Member of: The Furious Five

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): They Said It Couldn't Be Done, 1985; The Source, 1986; Ba-Dop-Boom-Bang, 1987; Salsoul Jam 2000, 1997; Flash Is Back, 1999; The Official Adventures of Grandmaster Flash, 2002.
ALBUMS (with the Furious Five): The Message, 1982; On the Strength, 1988.

The Life

Grandmaster Flash was born Joseph Saddler in Barbados, and he grew up in the South Bronx. As a child, he expressed great curiosity about his father's jazz record collection. He attended a vocational high school, where he trained to become an electronics technician. Following high school, he adopted the moniker Grandmaster Flash, and he quickly gained a loyal following as a deejay in the local party scene. He soon added a team of five MCs (rappers)—the Furious Five—to his performances, including Cowboy (Keith Wiggins), Melle Mel (Melvin Glover), Rahiem (Guy Williams), Kidd Creole (Nathaniel Glover), and Scorpio (Eddie Morris).

Prompted by this success of the Sugar Hill Gang's "Rapper's Delight," Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five signed with Enjoy Records to release their first twelve-inch single, "Superappin'," in 1979. The following year, the group signed with Sugar Hill Records. In 1981 and 1982 they won critical and popular acclaim with two revolutionary singles, "The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash on the Wheels of Steel" and "The Message." This success, however, was short-lived. Tension over the popularity of "The Message" grew until the group ruptured, and Grandmaster Flash left Sugar Hill Records. They reunited for a number of concerts and albums throughout the 1980's, but they never achieved the same level of acclaim. Grandmaster Flash remains active as a performer, a radio host, and a hip-hop producer.

The Music

As a teenager, Grandmaster Flash began to experiment with deejay gear (turntables and a mixer) in his bedroom. While he assiduously studied the styles of his forebears, particularly Kool DJ Herc and Pete DJ Jones, he sought to improve what he perceived as their weaknesses. Grandmaster Flash aspired to create a distinctive music and party experience. In his hands, records contained not only the music of other artists but also the possibility of creative manipulation. The pursuit of this goal led him to three technical innovations that are standard deejay practices today.

Grandmaster Flash realized that many songs contain short drum breaks. Seeking to isolate these parts and extend them for long durations to accompany dancing, he developed the backspin technique, or quick-mix theory. Using duplicate copies of the same record, he learned to play the break on one record while searching the other copy on his headphones for the same moment of music. When the break finished on one turntable, he used the mixer to quickly switch to the other. Using this technique, he could repeat the same ten seconds of music indefinitely.

The development of punch phrasing, or clock theory, involved isolating short blasts of sound (typically horn-section hits) and rhythmically interpolating them into the sound matrix. While a beat played on one record, he located horn hits on the other turntable, and then he quickly turned up the volume to punch a new sound over the groove. Far from the earlier deejay model of passively pressing play on a turntable, Grandmaster Flash's new technique was performance.

Finally, Grandmaster Flash perfected the technique of scratching, which involves dragging the record backward and forward under the needle, creating a novel rhythmic sound. Like punch phrasing, scratching allowed the deejay to create new music from old records.

Early Singles. The group's early recordings share a common aesthetic characterized by the instrumental accompaniment of a live band. "Superappin'" (1979) served as an inauguration of this particular sound, with carefully choreographed ensemble rapping and boasts. However, despite lyrical references to the deejay, Grandmaster Flash does not perform on the song. The group's two urban hits from 1980, "Freedom" and "The Birthday Party," share a similar sound: instrumental grooves and party-oriented rapping predominate, while the namesake deejay is conspicuously absent.

"The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash on the Wheels of Steel." In 1981 the group released a radically different single. "The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash on the Wheels of Steel" is a masterful showcase performance of the deejay's technical virtuosity in the form of a playfully polymorphic sonic collage. It was the first record to be composed purely of other records, launching a revolution in deejay technique and hip-hop beat craft. The seven-minute single seamlessly weaves together elements from Chic's "Good Times," Blondie's "Rapture," Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust," the group's own "Freedom," and a host of other recorded material. A purely solo project by Grandmaster Flash, "The Adventures of Grandmaster Flash on the Wheels of Steel" was recorded live in a single take.

"The Message." In 1982 Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five released the biggest commercial success of their career, "The Message." Utilizing nascent electronic instruments for the beat, the song features only two MCs, Melle Mel and Duke Bootee, a Sugar Hill percussionist. Again, Grandmaster Flash is not included. The most original element of "The Message" is the lyrical subject matter; unlike the party rapping found in earlier hits, "The Message" makes a tragic journey through poverty, drug abuse, violence, and other unfortunate facets of inner-city life. "The Message" was the first socially conscious single in hip-hop. It was also a commercial triumph, entering the Billboard Hot 100 and later earning gold-record status.

Grandmaster Flash. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Grandmaster Flash's contributions to hip-hop and dance music are significant. As the inventor of three important deejay techniques, he directly influenced the craft of all modern deejays. He is responsible for the standard deejay gear set-up, consisting of two turntables, headphones, and a mixer. Moreover, Grandmaster Flash is considered by many to be the conceptual father of modern deejaying: Before his refinements, a deejay simply pressed play and listened. His innovations introduced a renaissance of creativity and individuality in the deejay world, showing that records could be musical instruments, not just passive containers for music. Using recorded material as the basis for beats initiated the record-based aesthetic common in hip-hop. In 2007 Grandmaster Flash was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, the first hip-hop musician to be given this honor.

Zachary Wallmark

Further Reading

Chang, Jeff. Can't Stop Won't Stop: A History of the Hip-Hop Generation. New York: Picador, 2005. Chang offers a comprehensive social history, showing the origins of Grandmaster Flash's early career. Includes bibliography.

Fricke, Jim, and Charlie Ahearn. Yes Yes Y'all: The Experience Music Project Oral History of Hip-Hop's First Decade. Cambridge, Mass.: Da Capo Press, 2002. This insightful publication is a compilation of interviews and conversations with the luminaries of early hip-hop, including frequent appearances by Grandmaster Flash. Includes photographs.

Ogg, Alex, and David Upshal. The Hip-Hop Years: A History of Rap. New York: Fromm, 2001. A well-researched, thorough introduction to the history of hip-hop, with extensive references to Grandmaster Flash.

Rose, Tricia. Black Noise: Rap Music and Black Culture in Contemporary America. Hanover, N.H.: Wesleyan University Press/New England, 1994. In this seminal text in hip-hop studies, a leading scholar examines the sociological dimensions of the genre, presenting a detailed analysis of Grandmaster Flash's achievements. Includes bibliography.

Toop, David. Rap Attack: African Jive to New York Hip-Hop. New York: Serpent's Tail, 1991. Toop was one of the first writers to address the history and culture of early hip-hop, and his book is an excellent resource. Includes photographs.

See also: Combs, Sean; D. M. C.; Ice Cube; Ice-T; Jay-Z; Kool DJ Herc; LL Cool J; Notorious B.I.G.; Simmons, Joseph "Run"; Snoop Dogg.

Amy Grant

American gospel singer and songwriter

A singer-songwriter, Grant was among the first artists from the contemporary Christian market to make a significant impact on mainstream music.

Born: November 25, 1960; Augusta, Georgia
Also known as: Amy Lee Grant (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Amy Grant, 1977; My Father's Eyes, 1979; Never Alone, 1980; Age to Age, 1982; A Christmas Album, 1983; Straight Ahead, 1984; Unguarded, 1985; Lead Me On, 1988; A Moment in Time, 1989; Heart in Motion, 1991; Home for Christmas, 1992; Creation, 1993; The Gingham Dog and the Calico Cat, 1993; House of Love, 1994; Behind the Eyes, 1997; Takes a Little Time, 1997; A Christmas to Remember, 1999; A Special Wish, 2001; Legacy . . . Hymns and Faith, 2002; Simple Things, 2003; Rock of Ages . . . Hymns and Faith, 2005; Hymns for the Journey, 2006.

The Life

Amy Lee Grant was born in Augusta, Georgia, but she grew up in Nashville, Tennessee, in an affluent household. The youngest of four daughters, she began writing songs when she was fifteen years old, and she was offered her first record contract with Word Records in 1976. Her first album was released in 1977, selling fifty thousand copies in the first year. After graduating from high school, Grant majored in English first at Furman University and then at Vanderbilt University, before dropping out to concentrate on her music career.

In 1982 Grant married singer-songwriter Gary Chapman, and she released her breakthrough album, Age to Age, which became the first recording by a solo gospel artist to sell more than one million copies and be certified platinum. Grant's 1985 release, Unguarded, was her introduction to the mainstream. The first single from the album, "Find a Way," reached number twenty-nine on the Billboard Hot 100 and number nine on the adult contemporary chart. A year later, Grant had her first number-one hit with "The Next Time I Fall in Love," a duet with Chicago vocalist Peter Cetera. Lead Me On, released in 1988, was the first album by a gospel artist to sell more than five hundred thousand copies before it was released.

In 1999 Grant and Chapman separated and then divorced. The couple had three children: Matt, Millie, and Sarah (named after family friend and comedian Minnie Pearl, whose real name was Sarah Cannon). Grant married country singer-songwriter Vince Gill in 2000. Their daughter, Corrina, was born in 2001.

With the exception of her 2003 release, Simple Things, Grant remained true to her gospel roots, releasing two collections of hymns, one in 2002 and one in 2005. Grant entered the realm of reality television in 2005 when she hosted the NBC show Three Wishes. The show was popular, but high production costs forced its cancellation after only one season. In 2007, Grant's thirtieth year in music, she was inducted into the Gospel Music Hall of Fame, and she released a book entitled Mosaic: Pieces of My Life So Far, which she described as a collection of memories rather than as an autobiography.

Amy Grant. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

Grant has explored a variety of musical styles over the course of her career. Many of her early albums draw on the soft rock-folk rock of the 1970's, with a hint of country and Southern gospel. Beginning with 1984's Straight Ahead, Grant's music began to mature into a more radio-friendly variety of soft rock. Heart in Motion is pure pop, with catchy hooks and bouncy, memorable melodies. Her 1994 release, House of Love, exhibits more of a pop-country sound, and the 1997 follow-up, Behind the Eyes, is mostly acoustic soft rock. Her hymn collections from 2002 and 2005 feature a blend of gospel, country, bluegrass, and modern worship pop.

"El Shaddai." Grant's first breakthrough album, Age to Age, contained many songs that would become a standard part of Christian hymnody. "El Shaddai," written by Michael Card, is one of those songs. The chorus uses Hebrew terms of adoration and worship while the verses recount biblical accounts of God's greatness and provision, culminating in the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross. The simple piano, drums, and string accompaniment provide a foundation for the lyrics.

"Sing Your Praise to the Lord." Rich Mullins' "Sing Your Praise to the Lord" is another contribution to modern hymnals from the Age to Age album. Like "Shaddai," the simplicity of the song is its greatest strength. The song begins with a piano introduction derived from Fugue No. 2 in C Minor from Johann Sebastian Bach's The Well-Tempered Clavier (1722) before building to an upbeat rock song to accompany the exuberant exhortation to sing praise to God.

"Thy Word." Straight Ahead also contained a song that has become a part of modern hymnody. "Thy Word," a collaboration with singer-songwriter Michael W. Smith, is based on Psalm 119:105: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." (KJV) It is a song of hope and assurance that no matter what circumstances she may face, she is confident that God will lead her through. The simplicity of the lyric is matched by simple piano and strings accompaniment.

"The Next Time I Fall in Love." Grant's first number-one hit outside the Christian music industry was "The Next Time I Fall in Love," a duet with ex-Chicago frontman Peter Cetera. It is a standard pop ballad, with Cetera and Grant splitting verses and coming together to harmonize on the chorus. This song and its accompanying video displeased some of Grant's Christian audience, who believed it was wrong for her to be singing a love song to a man who was not her husband. Many of these fans accused Grant of choosing pop stardom over her Christian faith. Grant faced this charge for much of the rest of her career.

"Baby, Baby." The first single from Heart in Motion was marketed as a romantic love song, but it was inspired by a different kind of love. Grant wrote the song six weeks after the birth of her second child, Millie. The lyrics of total devotion to her "baby" along with the infectious keyboard hook made "Baby, Baby" Grant's second number-one hit and her first number-one solo hit.

"I Will Remember You." Perhaps the most artistic track on Heart in Motion, "I Will Remember You" is a song of longing and remembrance. It was revived ten years later, when it was used by a number of radio stations in montages commemorating the events of September 11, 2001.

Musical Legacy

Grant started her career as a teenage girl writing songs for her parents, and she ended up a success in both the gospel and the pop markets. Although she was frequently accused of diluting the Christian message, her songs remained honest expressions of her life and faith. Like so many others, Grant does not believe that the wall between gospel music and popular music needs to exist, and her career is testament to that belief.

Eric S. Strother

Further Reading

Grant, Amy. Mosaic: Pieces of My Life So Far. New York: Doubleday, 2007. Reflecting its title, this book offers bits and pieces of Grant's life, vignettes that are interspersed with appropriate lyrics from her songs. She recounts her successes, her struggles, and her efforts to remain positive and hopeful through it all.

Keith, Evan. Amy Grant. New York: Dell, 1992. A short biography looks at Grant's life, her faith, and her career in music.

Millard, Bob. Amy Grant: The Life of a Pop Star. New York: St. Martin's Griffin Press, 1996. A recounting of Grant's life, with emphasis on the challenges she faces in straddling the secular and the religious in her music and in her personal life.

See also: Cleveland, James; King, Carole; Smith, Michael W.; Staples, Pops.

Stéphane Grappelli

French jazz composer and violinist

A pioneer in jazz violin, Grappelli stands out as a responsive, humorous, and melodic improvisator of exceptional tone, clarity, and creativity.

Born: January 26, 1908; Paris, France
Died: December 1, 1997; Paris, France
Member of: Quintet of the Hot Club of France

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Unique Piano Sessions, 1955 (with Stuff Smith); Violins No End, 1957; Improvisations, 1958; Feeling + Finesse = Jazz, 1962; Two of a Kind, 1965 (with Svend Asmussen); I Remember Django, 1969; In Paris, 1969; Limehouse Blues, 1969 (with Barney Kessel); Stéphane Grappelli Meets Barney Kessel, 1969 (with Kessel); Venupelli Blues, 1969 (with Joe Venuti); I Hear Music, 1970; Afternoon in Paris, 1971; Homage to Django, 1972; Jalousie: Music of the 30's, 1972 (with Yehudi Menuhin); Satin Doll, 1972; Parisian Thoroughfare, 1973; Stardust, 1973; Stéphane Grappelli, 1973; Stéphane Grappelli/Bill Coleman, 1973 (with Bill Coleman); Stéphane Grappelli Meets the Rhythm Section, 1973; Talk of the Town, 1973; The Giants, 1974 (with Jean-Luc Ponty); Les Valseuses, 1974 (with Georges Delerue); Stéphane Grappelli Meets Earl Hines, 1974 (with Earl Hines); Les Calmos, 1975 (with Delerue); Violinspiration, 1975; Paris Encounter, 1976; The Reunion, with George Shearing, 1976 (with George Shearing); Tea for Two, 1977 (with Menuhin); London Meeting, 1978; Uptown Dance, 1978; Stéphane Grappelli and Hank Jones: A Two-fer!, 1979 (with Hank Jones); Young Django, 1979; At the Winery, 1980; Happy Reunion, 1980 (with Martial Solal); Vintage 1981, 1981; Stephanova, 1983; Bringing It Together, 1984 (with Toots Thielemans); Together at Last, 1985 (with Vassar Clements); Grappelli Plays Jerome Kern, 1987; Stéphane Grappelli: Who's Who in Jazz, 1987; How Can You Miss?, 1989; My Other Love, 1990; One on One with McCoy Tyner, 1990; Shades of Django, 1990; Something Old, Something New, 1990 (with the Franciscan Chamber Players); Tivoli Gardens, 1990 (with Joe Pass); Anything Goes, 1992; Conversations, 1992; Stéphane Grappelli and Michel Legrand, 1992 (with Michel Legrand); So Easy to Remember, 1993; It's Only a Paper Moon, 1994; Flamingo, 1995 (with Michel Petruccian); Aquarius, 1996; It Might As Well Be Swing, 1996; Le Sur Le Toit de Paris, 1996 (recorded 1969).

SINGLES (with Quintet of the Hot Club of France): "Sweet Sue, Just You," 1935; "Ultrafox," 1935; "Georgia on My Mind," 1936; "Swing Guitars," 1936; "Ain't Misbehavin'," 1937; "Tears," 1937; "Black and White," 1938; "Daphne," 1938; "Honeysuckle Rose," 1938; "My Sweet," 1938; "Souvenirs," 1938; "H.C.Q.," 1939; "I Wonder Where My Baby Is Tonight," 1939; "Japanese Sandman," 1939; "Jeepers Creepers," 1939.

The Life

Stéphane Grappelli (grah-PEHL-lee) was the only child of a French mother and an Italian father. When he was four years old, his mother died of cancer. Brief study with Isadora Duncan at the unconventional American expatriate's dance studio exposed Grappelli to the music of Claude Debussy, Maurice Ravel, and Richard Wagner.

Grappelli spent most of World War I under abysmal conditions in the Catholic orphanage system because of his father's compulsory conscription into the Italian army. After the war, Grappelli reunited briefly with his father under penurious circumstances. Encouraged by his father, Grappelli began to study piano and violin, guided by music books from Le Bibliothèque Nacionale de France. Largely self-taught, Grappelli attended the Paris Conservatory beginning in 1920 for three years, his only formal musical training. Fully professional and living on his own by fifteen, Grappelli performed violin publicly in courtyards and cinema houses. His early repertory consisted primarily of small pieces by composers such as Gabriel Fauré, Robert Schumann, Enrico Toselli, and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Grappelli supported himself through most of the 1920's playing piano in a style akin to Bix Biederbecke's. As part of a jazzy band called Gregor and the Gregorians, Grappelli again picked up the violin, and by the end of the decade he played that instrument almost exclusively.

In the early 1930's, Grappelli and Django Reinhardt formed the Hot Club Quintet, comprising the unusual combination of three guitars, violin, and double bass. Comparable to and inspired by the style of Joe Venuti and guitarist Eddie Lang from Paul Whiteman's Orchestra, the group attained transatlantic fame with virtuosic performances and recordings of American standards by jazz icons such as George Gershwin, Fats Waller, and Irving Berlin, along with original tunes, before disbanding at the start of World War II. Grappelli joined with pianist George Shearing during the 1940's and reunited with Reinhardt briefly before settling into a steady gig at the Paris Hilton.

From the 1960's until the end of his life, Grappelli embarked on multiple recording and performance projects in myriad venues around the world with a wide array of respected artists such as Duke Ellington, Oscar Peterson, Lakshminarayanan Subramaniam, Jean-Luc Ponty, Paul Simon, Earl Hines, Manhattan Transfer, McCoy Tyner, Yo-Yo Ma, and Yehudi Menuhin. Grappelli died in 1997 after complications from surgery, and he was buried in Paris in Pére Lachaise Cemetery.

The Music

Grappelli's music epitomizes the hot jazz movement of the 1930's. His improvisations spring from the melodies to explore the gamut of emotions. Known best for covering jazz standards by composers in a lively swing fashion, Grappelli has also covered an impressive multiplicity of works, ranging from Johann Sebastian Bach's Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor (1731) to the Beatles' "Hey Jude." Although Grappelli has written a modest number of works, which he keenly conveyed with animation, they have been overshadowed by his renditions of more popular melodies.

Stéphane Grappelli. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"H.C.Q. Strut." Coauthored by Grappelli and Reinhardt, the aptly titled work served as a theme for the Hot Club Quintet. The recording opens with a lively introductory interplay between violin and guitar, which features harmonics and typifies the short lively tunes with steady guitar-driven rhythms and virtuosic improvisation featured in the quintet's repertory during the 1930's. The singing melody provides a vehicle for Grappelli's spirited performance.

"Honeysuckle Rose." This jazz standard by Waller and Andy Razaf, again marked by an introductory duet by Grappelli and Reinhardt, serves as a prime example of the quintet's characteristic approach to familiar melodies. Grappelli answers Reinhardt's stunningly fluid two-fingered solo passages with his archetypal creativity, complete with rapidly bowed arpeggios, swinging scalar runs, and slides.

"Jalousie." Penned by Jacob Gade, this work warrants attention as the first televised collaboration between classical violinist Menuhin and Grappelli on the British Broadcasting Corporation. Despite Menuhin's skills as an interpreter of classic works, he does not improvise, and his part had to be arranged and memorized. Conversely, Grappelli's performances in rehearsals varied each time, earning deep respect from Menuhin for their deftly responsive enthusiasm. The performance plays like a dialogue between two intimate friends, testifying to Grappelli's ability to respond dynamically to the music as it evolves. The unusual partnership helped bridge gaps between the classical and jazz realms, and it further legitimized Grappelli's standing as a world-class violinist.

"Stéphane's Blues for Abby." In 1990 Grappelli composed this blues tune as one of three original pieces for an album of solo piano playing entitled My Other Love. Revered for his prowess on violin, Grappelli provides a rare glimpse into his formidable talents as a pianist, and this work represents a fine example of his skills at transforming melodies.

Musical Legacy

Grappelli facilitated the acceptance of violin in all forms of jazz and of jazz violin as a medium for interpreting works from all genres. In his autobiography, Menuhin paid homage to Grappelli, declaring that the artist could off the cuff "use any theme to express any nuance—wistfulness, brilliance, aggression, scorn—with a speed and accuracy that stretch credulity." In 1997 the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences honored Grappelli with a Grammy Award for Lifetime Achievement.

Gary Galván

Further Reading

Balmer, Paul. Stéphane Grappelli: With and Without Django. London: Sanctuary, 2003. A musician, multimedia director, and British Broadcasting Corporation broadcaster, Balmer constructs this authorized biography from several interviews, including one with Grappelli's only daughter. Includes illustrations.

Glaser, Matt, and Stéphane Grappelli. Jazz Violin. New York: Oak, 1981. An instructional guide, this work includes transcriptions of and tips on improvisation from key figures, including Grappelli, Venuti, and Jean-Luc Ponty.

Smith, Geoffrey. Stéphane Grappelli. London: Pavilion, Michael Joseph, 1987. Smith capitalizes on exclusive interviews with Grappelli and the violinist's contemporaries to provide a contextualized biography. Includes illustrations and discography.

See also: Beiderbecke, Bix; Berlin, Irving; Debussy, Claude; Ellington, Duke; Legrand, Michel; Ma, Yo-Yo; Menuhin, Sir Yehudi; Reinhardt, Django; Simon, Paul; Tyner, McCoy; Waller, Fats.

Adolph Green and Betty Comden

American musical-theater composers and lyricists

One of Broadway's most prolific and long-lasting lyricist-librettist teams, Comden and Green wrote sophisticated, witty screenplays, and they collaborated with such accomplished composers as Leonard Bernstein, Jule Styne, Cy Coleman, André Previn, and Morton Gould.

Adolph Green

Born: December 2, 1914; Bronx, New York
Died: October 23, 2002; New York, New York

Betty Comden

Born: May 3, 1917; Brooklyn, New York
Died: November 23, 2006; New York, New York
Also known as: Basya Cohen (birth name); Betty Kyle

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (lyrics and libretto): On the Town, 1944 (music by Leonard Bernstein); Billion Dollar Baby, 1945 (music by Morton Gould); Two on the Aisle, 1951 (music by Jule Styne); Wonderful Town, 1953 (music by Leonard Bernstein; libretto by Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov); Peter Pan, 1954 (with Carolyn Green; music by Styne, Mark Charlap, Elmer Bernstein, and Trude Rittman; based on the play by James M. Barrie); Bells Are Ringing, 1956 (music by Styne); A Party with Betty Comden and Adolph Green, 1958 (music by Leonard Bernstein and Styne); Say, Darling, 1958 (music by Styne; libretto by Abe Burrows, Marian Bissell, and Richard Bissell); Do Re Mi, 1960 (music by Styne; libretto by Garson Kanin); Subways Are for Sleeping, 1961 (music by Styne); Fade Out—Fade In, 1964 (music by Styne); Hallelujah, Baby!, 1967 (music by Styne; libretto by Arthur Laurents); Applause, 1970 (music by Charles Strouse; lyrics by Lee Adams); Lorelei, 1974 (music by Styne; libretto by Kenny Solms and Gail Parent); On the Twentieth Century, 1978 (music by Cy Coleman); A Doll's Life, 1979 (music by Larry Grossman); Singin' in the Rain, 1985 (music by Nacio Herb Brown; lyrics by Arthur Freed); The Will Rogers Follies, 1991 (music by Coleman; libretto by Peter Stone).

The Lives

Betty Comden was born Basya Cohen in Brooklyn in 1917 to Russian immigrants. Her father, Leonard, was a lawyer, and her mother, Rebecca, was a teacher. Comden credits her interest in music to her father, who encouraged her to take piano lessons, and to her Uncle Ezra and Aunt Celia, who took her to opera productions at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Adolph Green was born in the Bronx in 1914 to Hungarian immigrants, Daniel and Helen Green. From an early age, he had an interest in acting and writing, and he had a keen ear for music. As a young man, he infamously whistled symphonies and concerti everywhere he went.

The two first met in 1938 through mutual friends. At the time, Green was working as a Wall Street runner and trying to break into the theater. Comden was studying drama at New York University, although she eventually graduated with a degree in nursing. The two formed an acting troupe with John Frank, Alvin Hammer, and Judy Holliday called the Revuers. The troupe was frequently joined by a young pianist and composer, Leonard Bernstein. Comden and Green wrote not only their own lyrics but also frequently their own music for the Revuers.

Based on the troupe's performances, Comden and Green got an invitation to go to California and to take bit parts in the film Greenwich Village (1944), which starred Carmen Miranda and Don Ameche. When that failed to lead to anything more substantial, Comden and Green returned to New York, where Bernstein asked them to transfer choreographer Jerome Robbins's ballet Fancy Free into a Broadway show, On the Town, which opened in 1944. After the failure of their second Broadway effort, Billion Dollar Baby, they began a successful career on the West Coast, writing for Hollywood.

The two enjoyed a six-decade friendship on and off the stage. Although often mistaken for a husband-and-wife team, they were never married to each other. Comden married designer and businessman Stephen Kyle in 1942, and they had two children, Susannah and Alan. Kyle died in 1979, and Comden never remarried. Her son Alan died in 1990 after a long struggle with drug addiction and with AIDS. Adolph Green had two brief, unsuccessful marriages before marrying actress Phyllis Newman in 1960. They had two children, Adam and Amanda. Following Green's death of natural causes in 2002, Comden appeared at a memorial where she interrupted her eulogy to say, "It's lonely up here." Comden died of heart failure in 2006.

The Music

The lyrics and screenplays of Comden and Green are among the wittiest ever penned. Their career spanned six decades, and while they worked with a number of different composers and performers, they never worked separately. Much of their work revolves around New York City or Hollywood and the glamorous spotlit lives of the characters who populated their shows. They frequently incorporated contemporary pop cultural references into their quick-rhyming lyrics.

On the Town. Their first venture, On the Town, was one of their most successful and memorable. Expanded from the ballet Fancy Free, with choreography by Robbins and a score by Bernstein, the show tells the tale of three sailors on a twenty-four-hour leave in New York City. The show produced several hit songs, from the rousing opening "New York, New York" and jazzy "Come Up to My Place" to the melancholy "Lonely Town" and the closing number, "Some Other Time." Comden and Green contributed not only their writing skills but also their vocal and performing talents. Green appeared as Ozzie, one of the sailors, who pairs up with Comden's man-hungry anthropologist Claire de Loone.

Comden and Green were also hired to retool the show for the screen, a film directed by Stanley Donen and Gene Kelly and starring Kelly and Frank Sinatra. For this, they crafted not only the screenplay but also new lyrics to go with Roger Edens's new music (Bernstein's score was thought by producer Arthur Freed to be too classical). While they kept Bernstein's "New York, New York" and "Come Up to My Place," they revised the lyrics. The former was bowdlerized, changing "New York, New York, a hell of a town" to "New York, New York, a wonderful town," while the latter was more extensively rewritten to update some of the New York City references.

Singin' in the Rain. Following their successful collaboration with Kelly and Donen for On the Town, Comden and Green rejoined them three years later for another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer musical, Singin' in the Rain. Initially viewed as a mediocre trifle, the film eventually garnered great acclaim, and it is considered one of the greatest film musicals ever made. In it, Kelly and Jean Hagen are silent-film stars Don Lockwood and Lena Lamont transitioning to "talkies." Among the problems they face are technical difficulties, Lamont's tinny voice, and a romantic triangle among the stars and Debbie Reynolds' golden-voiced chorus girl Kathy Selden. The screenplay is peppered with some of the snappiest one-liners ever assembled. The film mostly uses preexisting tunes, although Comden and Green did contribute the tongue-twisting lyrics to the comic number "Moses Supposes." In 1985 the film was adapted for Broadway, with Comden and Green again as librettists, and it included more interpolated songs.

Wonderful Town. Following a string of successful films, the duo returned to New York, reteaming with Bernstein for another romance set in New York City. Wonderful Town, which opened on Broadway in 1953 and starred Rosalind Russell, is an adaptation of several short stories by Ruth McKinney, dramatized later as the play My Sister Eileen by Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov, who also wrote the libretto for Wonderful Town. The story revolves around two sisters, Ruth and Eileen Sherwood, who move from Ohio to New York to pursue careers in journalism and acting respectively. Bernstein's score ranges from an Irish jig sung by the policemen to a conga sung by Brazilian sailors, and Comden and Green's lyrics easily match the diversity of the score. Among the memorable songs are "The Wrong Note Rag," "A Little Bit in Love," and Ruth's comic lament, "One Hundred Easy Ways (To Lose a Man)." Recent archival work by Carol Oja uncovered earlier drafts of songs that display a direct confrontation with McCarthy-era politics, involving Communist witch hunts, although the final drafts are considerably less political.

Peter Pan. The following year was the beginning of Comden and Green's long association with composer Jule Styne, which spanned two decades, from Peter Pan in 1954 to Lorelei in 1974. The adaptation of J. M. Barrie's classic children's tale of the boy who never grew up was largely conceived as a vehicle for Mary Martin to return to Broadway. While the show closed its Broadway run early, it did so to become a television musical special (for which Martin won an Emmy Award in addition to her Tony Award). Some songs in Peter Pan were contributed by lyricist Carolyn Leigh and composer Mark Charlap. Comden and Green supplied the rest to Styne's music; their big number was Peter Pan's anthem, "Never Never Land."

Bells Are Ringing. Comden and Green's second musical with Styne reunited them with longtime friend Holliday, who starred as Ella Peterson, an operator at a telephone answering service who falls in love with the voice of one of her clients. The sparkling score includes some of Comden and Green's best-known songs, including "The Party's Over," "I'm Going Back," and "Just in Time." Styne had composed the music to "Just in Time" earlier, and Comden and Green refused to give up the tune, eventually finding lyrics to match it. Bells Are Ringing also marked their first full Broadway libretto in more than a decade.

The two were hired to update the show for director Vincente Minnelli's film treatment of the show, in which Holliday reprised her role, starring opposite Dean Martin. While Comden and Green did not have to write new songs (as for On the Town), they did update the lyrics to some songs, including "Drop That Name," which initially featured director Minnelli's name.

On the Twentieth Century. Cy Coleman was the third composer to collaborate with Comden and Green on multiple projects. On the Twentieth Century details the backstage battles between a star and a producer trying to woo her back while riding a luxury train. Coleman's score and Comden and Green's lyrics create an operetta-style pastiche, and although it received strong reviews and multiple awards, the show's run was short-lived, and it remains somewhat in obscurity.

The Will Rogers Follies. If their first musical, On the Town, was their most memorable, then their last was their longest running. Opening in 1991, The Will Rogers Follies enjoyed a two-and-a-half year run. The score and lyrics sampled many genres, going from country-style cowboy songs to ragtime-era chorus numbers, and Comden and Green make ample and clever use of Rogers's own witticisms, most notably, "I never met a man I didn't like."

Musical Legacy

Creating some of Broadway's best-loved songs, Comden and Green took their place among musical theater's most important lyricists and writers. They are most known for their prolific output, both in terms of numbers of shows and in their versatility in writing lyrics and librettos. Many of the projects they worked on showcased their talent to write for specific singers, from Russell's plain-spoken, jokey delivery in Wonderful Town to John Collum's operatic grandeur in On the Twentieth Century. They had their share of flops (most notably A Doll's Life, a musical sequel to Henrik Ibsen's 1879 play, A Doll's House, which ran for only five performances), but success never seemed to be far away. Their collective oeuvre earned them five Tony Awards, four for their lyrical contributions (The Will Rogers Follies, On the Twentieth Century, Hallelujah, Baby!, and Wonderful Town) and one for their book for On the Twentieth Century. The pair was also awarded Kennedy Center Honors in 1991.

In addition to a prolific career writing for the stage, they were influential in Hollywood. They penned a number of popular musicals, some adapted from the stage and others original. Among them were The Barkleys of Broadway (1949), starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and Auntie Mame (1958), their only nonmusical film. They earned Academy Award nominations for their screenplays for The Band Wagon (1953) and It's Always Fair Weather (1955). The Writers Guild of America honored them for their work on On the Town, Singin' in the Rain, and Bells Are Ringing, and in 2001 it presented them the Laurel Award for Screen Writing Achievement.

Finally, Comden and Green should not be forgotten for what they began as: performers. They appeared sporadically onstage over the years: in a 1985 concert version of Stephen Sondheim's Follies (1971) and in the revue A Party with Betty Comden and Adolph Green, which they created and presented in 1958 and later performed in 1977. They also recorded a number of songs they wrote, some of which were cut from shows on which they had worked.

Dan Blim

Further Reading

Bryer, Jackson R., and Richard A. Davison. The Art of the American Musical: Conversations with the Creators. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 2005. Includes an insightful interview with Comden and Green, focusing on their output and observations on songwriting and also mining their collective memory for reactions to shows.

Comden, Betty. Off Stage. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1995. Comden's autobiography brims with witty and touching anecdotes of her childhood and marriage, and it also contains accounts of her personal relationships with several luminaries, including Green, Bernstein, and Lauren Bacall.

Hischak, Thomas A. Boy Loses Girl: Broadway's Librettists. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2002. Includes a chapter devoted to Comden and Green, with a broad if not deep introduction to their collected work.

McGillan, Patrick. Backstory 2: Interviews with Screenwriters of the 1940's and 1950's. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991. A rare glimpse at Comden and Green's work for Hollywood, with insight into the differences and similarities between films and musicals.

Robinson, Alice M. Betty Comden and Adolph Green: A Bio-Bibliography. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1994. Extremely comprehensive and detailed account of the lives and work of Comden and Green. Unrivaled in its scope and informative quality.

See also: Bernstein, Leonard; Previn, Sir André; Sondheim, Stephen; Styne, Jule.

Al Green

American rhythm-and-blues singer and songwriter

Green introduced a smooth and mellow jazzlike vocal style to the soul music of the early 1970's, a lighter approach to the soul shouting that preceded it.

Born: April 13, 1946; Forrest City, Arkansas
Also known as: Albert Greene (birth name); Reverend Al Green
Member of: The Soul Mates

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Back up Train, 1967; Green Is Blue, 1970; Gets Next to You, 1971; Let's Stay Together, 1972; I'm Still in Love with You, 1972; Call Me, 1973; Livin' for You, 1973; Al Green Explores Your Mind, 1974; Al Green Is Love, 1975; Full of Fire, 1976; Have a Good Time, 1976; The Belle Album, 1977; Truth 'n' Time, 1978; The Lord Will Make a Way, 1980; Higher Plane, 1981; Highway to Heaven, 1981; Precious Lord, 1982; I'll Rise Again, 1983; The Christmas Album, 1983; He Is the Light, 1985; Trust in God, 1986; White Christmas, 1986; Soul Survivor, 1987; I Get Joy, 1989; From My Soul, 1990; Al Green Presents the Full Gospel Tabernacle Choir, 1990 (with the Full Gospel Tabernacle Choir); Sings Gospel, 1992; Love Is Reality, 1992; Don't Look Back, 1993; Gospel Soul, 1993; Your Heart's in Good Hands, 1995; Cover Me Green, 1995; Feels Like Christmas, 2001; I Can't Stop, 2003; Everything's OK, 2005; What Makes the World Go Round, 2008.

SINGLES: "Let's Stay Together," 1971; "Tired of Being Alone," 1971; "I'm Still in Love with You," 1972; "Look What You Done for Me," 1972; "You Ought to Be with Me," 1972; "Sha-La-La (Make Me Happy)," 1974; "Put a Little Love in Your Heart," 1988.

The Life

Al Green was born into a sharecropping family with ten children in the rural Arkansas delta. His family joined the great migration north in search of better economic and social opportunities, relocating to Grand Rapids, Michigan, in the fall of 1955. When his carefree Arkansas childhood was replaced by the frustrations of inner-city living in the industrial North, Greene struggled socially and academically. Eventually, tensions with his strict father over Greene's love of secular music led to Greene leaving home. He spent a couple of hardscrabble years on the ghetto streets of Grand Rapids.

In the early 1970's, Green dropped the final "e" on his surname, and he moved to Memphis, Tennessee, where he met producer Willie Mitchell. With Mitchell's guidance, Green reached great popular success and sold tens of millions of albums. Green experienced a spiritual reawakening in 1973, and in 1974 he was hospitalized after being scalded by a suicidal fan. These incidents led to the singer's departure from pop music and to a break with Mitchell. In 1979 an onstage accident in Cincinnati, Ohio, caused Green to focus his work increasingly on gospel music, and he became the pastor of the Full Gospel Tabernacle in the Whitehaven section of Memphis.

Al Green. (Bill Greenblatt/UPI/Landov)

The Music

Green's vocal range modulates from a baritone to a high, heartbreaking falsetto, and his improvisations are often startling. Mitchell's ingenious arranging at Royal Studios layered Green's sweet voice over a rich tapestry of softened drumbeats, string embellishments, and the call-and-response of the celebrated Hi Rhythm and Hi Horn sections (Hi Records' backing band).

Early Works. Green began his musical career touring with the family gospel troupe the Greene Brothers. However, he was soon attracted to the work of such rhythm-and-blues radio stars as Jackie Wilson and Sam Cooke. At the age of eighteen, he had surreptitiously formed a rhythm-and-blues group with high school friends in Grand Rapids, and they frequently performed at the El Grotto Club in Battle Creek, Michigan, playing alongside legendary rhythm-and-blues performers Junior Walker and the All-Stars. In 1967 this group, christened Al Greene and the Soul Mates, self-produced the album Back up Train, the title track of which was a rhythm-and-blues hit. Its popularity led to the group's appearance at the Apollo Theater in Harlem in March, 1968, where they performed nine encores. By late fall of 1969, however, the Soul Mates had disbanded. Green, now a solo act, could not re-create the success of "Back up Train," and his music career stalled.

Green met Mitchell by chance at a seedy nightclub in Midland, Texas, and they shared a van trip back to Memphis. By the time they arrived, the two men had decided to work together.

"Tired of Being Alone." Green's first major Billboard pop hit for Hi Records reached number eleven on the U.S. charts in 1971. He had written the song a year earlier, when he was on the road in the rural Michigan countryside. Green awoke from a dream with the lyrics echoing in his ears. As he observed the dawn creeping over the landscape outside his motel, and as he listened to a lonely rooster call and a solitary dog respond, he was enveloped by a quiet peace. Half an hour later, the song was finished.

"Let's Stay Together." Mitchell and Al Jackson, the drummer for Booker T. and the MGs, had to persuade Green to record this composition, for which Green said that he reluctantly wrote the primary lyrics in less than ten minutes. This was one of Green's many collaborative efforts with Jackson, before the drummer's brutal murder in 1975. During the recording, Mitchell instructed Green to soften his vocals and emphasize his falsetto. Within ten days of the record's pressing, it became a number-one song, and it remained so for nine weeks.

"Love and Happiness." Originally on the album I'm Still in Love with You, this song also appeared on Al Green's Greatest Hits in 1975. It captures the spirit of Green and his collaborators at Hi Records during their heyday. Primarily written by guitarist Teenie Hodges, this song features Green's heartfelt, mellow singing juxtaposed with the gritty sound of the Hi Rhythm and Hi Horn sections. At its finest, Mitchell's arranging produced a "silky on the top, rough on the bottom" sound that the crew at Royal Studios originated and perfected for Green. The song features a memorable guitar riff by Hodges, as well as some lush organ work, which contributes to the song's gospel feel. Although it starts off as a series of metaphorical vignettes of "Love and Happiness," by its middle, Green has crossed over into the role of a secular witness. As the tempo slowly rises, Green preaches to the lovers' choir, as he calls and responds to Hodge's guitar work, the backup singers, and the blatting staccato of the Hi Horn section.

Musical Legacy

Green's smooth, soft approach opened the door for the velvet soul music of such crooners as Barry White and Luther Vandross. Nevertheless, Green never left his beloved gospel music behind, even at the height of his popular success. He answered his call to preach, but he occasionally returns to secular music. He has collaborated with a wide range of musicians, including Annie Lennox and Lyle Lovett, and has reunited with Mitchell.

Don Allan Mitchell

Further Reading

Awkward, Michael. Soul Covers: Rhythm and Blues Remakes and the Struggle for Artistic Identity (Aretha Franklin, Al Green, Phoebe Snow). Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 2007. Focusing on Green's Call Me album, the book describes the singer's struggles with the sacred and profane in his music.

George, Nelson. The Death of Rhythm and Blues. New York: Penguin, 2003. By examining the corporatization and assimilation of black music, the book provides an economic context to understanding how American music becomes popular.

Green, Al, and David Seay. Take Me to the River. New York: HarperEntertainment, 2000. A thorough biography, this book traces Green's life from his childhood to his breakthrough to superstardom.

Guralnick, Peter. Sweet Soul Music: Rhythm and Blues and the Southern Dream of Freedom. New York: Back Bay Books, 1999. Necessary reading on the rise and fall of Memphis soul, written by a scholar of African American music.

Ward, Brian. Just My Soul Responding: Rhythm and Blues, Black Consciousness, and Race Relations. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1998. Firmly locates rhythm-and-blues music in the political foment of the Civil Rights movement and the struggle for African American identity.

See also: Brown, Roy; Cooke, Sam; Gibb, Barry, Maurice, and Robin; Lovett, Lyle; Pickett, Wilson; Raitt, Bonnie; Turner, Tina; Wilson, Jackie.

Dave Grusin

American jazz composer, keyboardist, pianist, and film-score composer

By using electronic components to complement acoustic music, Grusin became a leader in the fusion jazz movement. Unlike many who compose for different fields, Grusin uses the same instruments (and even musicians) in both his jazz recordings and his film scores.

Born: June 26, 1934; Littleton, Colorado

Principal works

FILM SCORES: Divorce American Style, 1967; A Man Called Gannon, 1968; The Heart Is a Lonely

Hunter, 1968; Generation, 1969; Adam at Six o'Clock, 1970; The Pursuit of Happiness, 1971; Shoot Out, 1971; Fuzz, 1972; The Great Northfield Minnesota Raid, 1972; The Friends of Eddie Coyle, 1973; The Midnight Man, 1974; Three Days of the Condor, 1975; The Yakuza, 1975; The Front, 1976; Murder by Death, 1976; Bobby Deerfield, 1977; The Goodbye Girl, 1977; Heaven Can Wait, 1978; The Champ, 1979; Absence of Malice, 1981; On Golden Pond, 1981; Author! Author!, 1982; Tootsie, 1982; Falling in Love, 1984; The Little Drummer Girl, 1984; Racing with the Moon, 1984; The Goonies, 1985; Lucas, 1986; Ishtar, 1987; Clara's Heart, 1988; The Milagro Beanfield War, 1988; Tequila Sunrise, 1988; The Fabulous Baker Boys, 1989; The Bonfire of the Vanities, 1990; Havana, 1990; The Firm, 1993; The Cure, 1995; Selena, 1997; Hope Floats, 1998; Random Hearts, 1999.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Subways Are for Sleeping, 1961; The Many Moods of Dave Grusin, 1962; Kaleidoscope, 1964; Discovered Again, 1977; One of a Kind, 1977; Mountain Dance, 1979; Out of the Shadows, 1982; Night Lines, 1983; Dave Grusin and the N.Y.-L.A. Dream Band, 1984 (with the N.Y.-L.A. Dream Band); Harlequin, 1985 (with Lee Ritenour); Cinemagic, 1987; Little Big Horn, 1988 (with Gerry Mulligan); Sticks and Stones, 1988 (with Don Grusin); Zephyr, 1988; Migration, 1989; The Gershwin Connection, 1991; Homage to Duke, 1993; The Orchestral Album, 1994; Two for the Road: The Music of Henry Mancini, 1996; West Side Story, 1997; Two Worlds, 2000 (with Ritenour and Renée Fleming); Discovered Again Plus, 2004; Now Playing: Movie Themes, Solo Piano, 2004; Amparo, 2008 (with Ritenour).

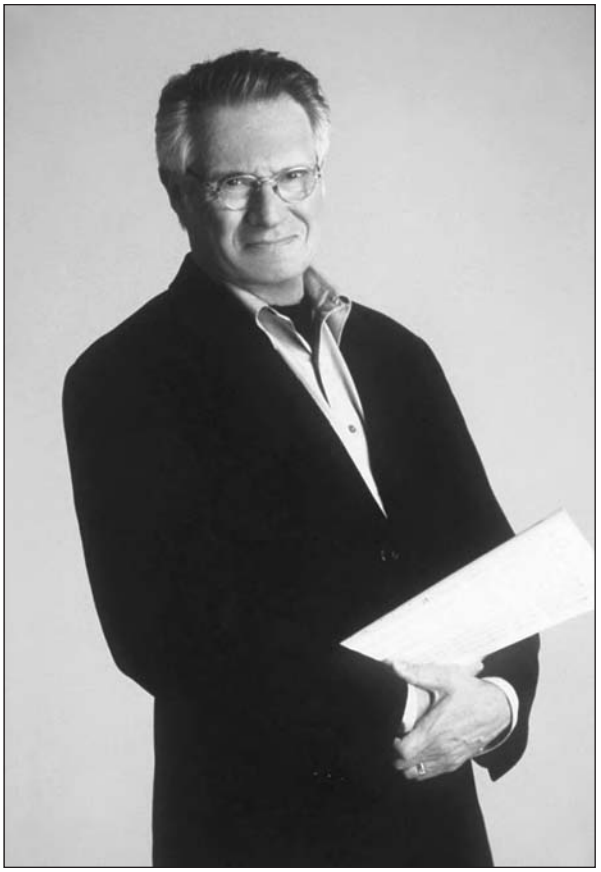
The Life

David Grusin (GREW-sihn) was born June 26, 1934, in Littleton, Colorado. Grusin grew up with a classical-music background: His father, Henri, was a professional violinist, and his mother, Rosabelle, began giving Grusin piano lessons when he was four. Grusin continued his piano studies at the University of Colorado under Storm Bull, the grandnephew of Edvard Grieg and a former pupil of Béla Bartók, graduating in 1956.



Dave Grusin. (AP/Wide World Photos)

After serving in the U.S. Navy, Grusin planned to continue his studies at the Manhattan School of Music only to be hired as the accompanist for Andy Williams in 1959. He played piano on the singer's recordings and eventually served as leader of the Dave Grusin Orchestra on the televised The Andy Williams Show from 1962 to 1965. In addition to acting as arranger, conductor, producer, and musician on many jazz and pop recordings, Grusin recorded three jazz piano albums during the 1960's.

Grusin became interested in a new challenge after being hired by his friend Quincy Jones to play on the sound track of director Sydney Pollack's The Slender Thread (1965). He began composing for the television series Gidget in 1965-1966 and for The Girl from U.N.C.L.E. the following season. This work led to Grusin's first film score, Divorce American Style.

Grusin continued working on film scores, television music, and jazz recordings. He and producer-engineer Larry Rosen, once Grusin's drummer, formed Grusin Rosen Productions to create albums by young jazz artists for such labels as Blue Note. In 1982 they founded GRP Records, a pioneer in digital recording, releasing some of the first jazz albums in the new medium of compact discs.

His most significant film relationship began in 1975 with The Yakuza, the first of his nine scores for Pollack. Two of these earned Academy Award nominations: Havana and The Firm. He was also nominated for an Academy Award for Best Score for Heaven Can Wait, The Champ, On Golden Pond, and The Fabulous Baker Boys, in which he also performs the piano pieces played by Jeff Bridges's character. Grusin won an Academy Award for scoring Robert Redford's The Milagro Beanfield War. He was nominated for best song, along with lyricists Alan and Marilyn Bergman, for "It Might Be You" from Tootsie.

Grusin won Grammy Awards for his work on The Fabulous Baker Boys, The Milagro Beanfield War, The Gershwin Connection, Homage to Duke, and The Orchestral Album and another for his arrangement of "Mean Old Man" for James Taylor's album October Road (2002). He has received honorary doctorates from the Berklee College of Music and the University of Colorado and a Golden Score from the American Society of Musicians, Composers, and Arrangers.

The Music

Fusion Jazz. Grusin became a leader in the fusion jazz movement, melding electronic and acoustic music, and he often uses the same instruments and the same musicians for his jazz recordings and for his film scores. He even includes a piece from his jazz fusion album Mountain Dance in his score for Falling in Love. While his jazz compositions are generally upbeat, his film scores are more contemplative. Exceptions to the latter include the frisky "New Hampshire Hornpipe" segment from the family drama On Golden Pond and the title music for Tootsie, which emphasizes the hopeful optimism of the main character, a struggling actor.

Diverse Film Scores. While many film composers specialize in certain genres, often employing variations of the same themes and motifs from film to film, Grusin has been remarkably diverse. He has done Westerns such as The Great Northfield Minnesota Raid, crime dramas such as The Friends of Eddie Coyle, Neil Simon comedies such as The Goodbye Girl, political films such as The Front, and romances about the pain of young love, Racing with the Moon, and about adulterous love, Falling in Love.

For each type of film, Grusin does not impose his jazz-accented style but finds ways of combining his usual approach with the conventions of the genre. For On Golden Pond, Grusin creates a simple, haunting score emphasizing the film's melancholy nature without resorting to sentimentality. This mutedly forlorn sense of loss can also be heard in Havana, which resists the musical clichés of a film set in Latin America. For The Little Drummer Girl, he adds Middle Eastern drums, pipes, and stringed instruments to reflect the setting, yet he uses them in a jazzy blend to emphasize how the title character is torn between two cultures.

Grusin has probably done his best work for longtime collaborator Pollack. For the thriller Three Days of the Condor, his jazz score uses strong percussive beats and dissonance to underscore the paranoia of the spy played by Redford. This film also displays Grusin's skill in counterpoint. The theme carries an almost carefree tone because the protagonist marked for death does not anticipate the horrors awaiting him. Grusin creates a softer, reflective piece for the photographer played by Faye Dunaway to match the mood of her somber black-and-white pictures, yet he mixes it with the theme to show how she is torn between conflicting emotions. For another Pollack paranoia thriller, The Firm, Grusin uses a solo acoustic piano, alternating between repetitive and melodic sounds to underscore the uncertainties of the young lawyer played by Tom Cruise.

Because the title characters in The Fabulous Baker Boys play well-worn pop tunes in their nightclub act, the initial music is an amalgam of Broadway conventionality. Because the character portrayed by Bridges hates this music and longs to be a jazz pianist, the score gradually shifts, becoming jazzier, more improvisational and introspective, aligning itself with the character's need for freedom.

Jazz Compositions and Performance. Grusin balanced his film and television work with his output as jazz pianist and composer. In addition to Mountain Dance, his best-known nonfilm work, his jazz fusion albums include Out of the Shadows, Dave Grusin and the N.Y.-L.A. Dream Band, Harlequin

(with frequent collaborator guitarist-composer Lee Ritenour), Little Big Horn (with saxophonist Gerry Mulligan), Sticks and Bones (with his brother Don, also a keyboardist), Migration, and Two Worlds (with Ritenour and soprano Renée Fleming). Two Worlds explores the composer's interests in classical and folk music in addition to jazz.

In the 1990's Grusin returned to acoustic piano and the work of other composers, issuing tribute albums to George Gershwin, Duke Ellington, Elmer Bernstein, Henry Mancini, and West Side Story (1957). In 2004 he released Now Playing: Movie Themes, Solo Piano, a collection of his film themes transcribed for solo piano.

Musical Legacy

A man of many talents, Grusin has shown aspiring musicians that they can enjoy producing a diverse range of musical styles while working in a variety of positions. By working as soloist, accompanist, sideman, arranger, conductor, and composer in several fields, Grusin has proved that musicians can thrive by meeting numerous challenges. As a recording executive, he helped the careers of young performers while preserving the past accomplishments of jazz greats and film composers. His cofounding of the National Foundation for Jazz Education demonstrates his commitment to encouraging new talent. Grusin's greatest achievement has been his many film and television scores, demonstrating his ability to adapt his style to the needs of the individual projects.

Michael Adams

Further Reading

Kalbacher, Gene. "Film Scoring: An Inside Look." Down Beat 52 (March, 1985): 59, 61. Grusin discusses decisions made while composing a score and the work of such composers as Georges Delerue and Jerry Goldsmith.

Pulliam, Becca. "Maintaining Standards: Keith Jarrett and Dave Grusin." Down Beat 59 (May, 1992): 19-22. Grusin talks about his love for the Tin Pan Alley tradition.

Yanow, Scott. "Dave Grusin: Scoring It Big." Down Beat 56 (July, 1989): 24-26. This article describes Grusin's jazz career.

Zych, David. "Dave Grusin: Inside Story." Jazz Times 28 (February, 1998): 48-51. This piece discusses Grusin's arrangements of songs from West Side Story.

See also: Bergman, Alan; Bernstein, Elmer; Ellington, Duke; Gershwin, George; Jones, Quincy; Mancini, Henry; Taylor, James.

Sofia Gubaidulina

Russian classical composer

Gubaidulina's vocal, orchestral, and chamber-music compositions are characterized by emotional strength, an expansive line of development, and a fine sense of sound expressiveness in timbre and performance method. Her works synthesize Eastern and Western traditions into a spiritual whole.

Born: October 24, 1931; Chistopol, Tatar Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic, Soviet Union (now in Tatarstan)

Also known as: Sofia Asgatovna Gubaidulina (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Five Études, 1965; Quintet, 1957 (for piano, two violins, viola, and violoncello); Allegro Rustico: Klänge des Waldes, 1963 (Sound of the Forest; for flute and piano); Concordanza, 1971; String Quartet No. 1, 1971; Detto II, 1972 (for cello and chamber ensemble); Dots, Lines, and Zigzag, 1976 (for bass clarinet and piano); Trio, 1976 (for three trumpets); Duo, 1977 (sonata for two bassoons); Lamento, 1977 (for tuba and piano); On Tatar Folk Themes, 1977 (for bass dombra and piano); Detto I, 1978 (sonata for organ and percussion); Introitus, 1978 (concerto for piano and chamber orchestra); In Croce, 1979 (for cello and organ); Jubilatio, 1979 (for four percussionists); Descensio, 1981 (for three trombones, three percussionists, harp, harpsichord, and piano); Rejoice!, 1981 (sonata for violin and cello); Sieben Worte, 1982 (Seven Words; for cello, bayan, and strings); Quasi Hoquetus, 1984 (for viola, bassoon, and piano); String Quartet No. 2, 1987; String Quartet No. 3, 1987; Der Seiltänzer, 1993 (Dancer on a Tightrope; for violin and string piano); Early in the Morning, Right Before Waking, 1993; String Quartet No. 4, 1993; In Erwartung, 1994 (for saxophone quartet and six percussionists); Music, 1994 (for flute, strings, and percussion); Quaternion, 1996 (for four cellos); In the Shadow of the Tree, 1998 (for koto and bass koto).

CHORAL WORKS: Night in Memphis, 1968 (for mezzo-soprano, men's chorus, and orchestra); Stufen, 1972 (for speaking chorus and orchestra); Hommage à Marina Tsvetayeva, 1984; Jauchzt vor Gott, 1989 (for mixed choir and organ); Alleluia, 1990 (for mixed chorus, boy soprano, organ, and large orchestra); Aus dem Stundenbuch, 1991 (for cello, orchestra, male chorus, and female speaker); Jetzt immer Schnee, 1993 (Now Always Snow; for chamber chorus and chamber ensemble); Sonnensang, 1997 (The Canticle of the Sun; concerto for cello, chamber chorus, and percussion orchestra; based on a poem by Gennadi Aigi); St. John Passion, 2000 (for soloists, two choruses, and orchestra).

ELECTRONIC WORK: Vivente-Non Vivente, 1970 (for synthesizer and tape recorder).

INSTRUMENTAL WORKS: Ten Preludes, 1974 (for solo cello); Light and Darkness, 1976 (for organ); Flute Sonatina, 1978.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Concerto, 1975 (for bassoon and low strings); Offertorium, 1981 (for violin and orchestra); Stimmen . . . Verstummen, 1986; Antwort ohne Frage, 1989 (The Unasked Answer; collage for three orchestras); The Feast Is in Full Procession, 1993 (for viola and orchestra); Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, 1996; Two Paths, 1998 (for two violas and orchestra).

PIANO WORKS: Chaconne, 1962; Piano Sonata, 1965; Musical Toys, 1969 (fourteen piano pieces for children).

VOCAL WORKS: Hour of the Soul, 1974 (poem for mezzo-soprano and orchestra; based on a poem by Marina Tsvetayeva); Perception, 1981 (for soprano and baritone speaking voices and seven string instruments); Hommage à T. S. Eliot, 1987 (for soprano and eight instruments); Witty Waltzing in the Style of Johann Strauss, 1987 (for soprano and octet); Galgenlieder à 3, 1995 (fifteen pieces for voice, percussion, and double bass); Galgenlieder à 5, 1996 (fourteen pieces for mezzo-soprano, flute, percussion, bayan, and double bass).

The Life

Sofia Asgatovna Gubaidulina (gew-bi-doo-LEE-nuh) was born on October 24, 1931, in Chistopol, Tatar Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic. She received her initial musical training at the Kazan Music Academy, and in 1949 she entered the Kazan Conservatory, studying piano with Grigory Kagan and composition with Al'bert Leman. In 1954 she began graduate studies in composition with Nikolai Peiko at the Moscow Conservatory and postgraduate work with Vissarion Shebalin.

Upon completion of her studies, she rejected the prosperity of a pedagogical career to become a freelance composer, encouraged by a first prize for Sound of the Forest, a work for flute and piano, awarded to her at the All-Union composition competition, as well as by publication of her works Quintet, Chaconne, and Piano Sonata.

The year 1965 was a turning point for Gubaidulina's works. In the early stages of her mature style (1965-1977), chamber music held precedence (around twenty-five works), while orchestral and vocal works took a backseat. Her developing individual style is reflected in Five Études for harp, bass, and percussion, as she began to open up to the world of unusual, rarely used timbres and methods of sound production. Such instruments as the dombra (long-necked string instrument), bayan (Russian button accordion), bassoon, and bass were increasingly used in her works. A purely electronic composition for synthesizer and tape recorder, Vivente-Non Vivente, was created in 1970 at an experimental studio in Moscow.

Always interested in ethnic music and instruments of various cultures, Gubaidulina in 1975 formed an improvisational group with Vyacheslav Artyomov and Viktor Suslin called Astrea that researched sounds created by folk instruments from Asia and the Caucasus region. From 1978 to 1991, Gubaidulina began to give more attention to the expressiveness of the vocal line and spiritual subjects. Her musical language was enriched by rhythmic searches and methods of expressing time. She also unexpectedly resorted to light and color, which she organized rhythmically. In one of her largest compositions, Alleluia, for mixed chorus, boy soprano, organ, and large orchestra, the composer utilized color projectors with an arrangement of colors—from yellow to purple—specific to the work.

In instrumental works of this time period—Offertorium and Seven Words—the methods of playing instruments were invested with symbolism: For example, playing above the bridge of a stringed instrument suggests heaven and, below the bridge, earth.

In 1990 a festival of Gubaidulina's works was presented at the Sverdlovsk Philharmonic in Russia. In 1991, an anniversary year for the composer, she was widely celebrated both in Russia and abroad. Also that year Gubaidulina moved to Germany, near Hamburg, where she would be at the center of musical events, accepting worldwide accolades for her works. She undertook many commissions for famous artists and groups. The cycle Now Always Snow, on a poem of Gennadi Aigi, was composed for Amsterdam's Schönberg Ensemble and chorus. After meeting with Kazue Sawai, a Japanese instrumentalist who performs on the folk instrument koto, Gubaidulina composed Early in the Morning, Right Before Waking for seven kotos. Others include the String Quartet No. 4 for the Kronos Quartet; Impromptu for flute, violin, and strings for Gidon Kremer (in honor of the two hundredth anniversary of Franz Schubert's birth); Concerto for Viola and Orchestra for Yuri Bashmet; The Canticle of the Sun for cello, chamber choir, and percussion, commissioned by Radio France and first performed in Frankfurt with Mstislav Rostropovich as soloist; and St. John Passion for the European Music Festival in Stuttgart.

Sofia Gubaidulina. (Sergei Savostyanov/Itar-Tass/Landov)

Gubaidulina has been a recipient of many awards, among them the Koussevitzky Prize, the Russian State Prize, Prize of the International Festival of Women Composers in Heidelberg, and the Léonie Sonning Music Prize in Copenhagen. In 2004 she was elected a foreign honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

The Music

In Gubaidulina's compositions, musical numeric progressions of sound and color cross. The progressions are measures of information, chosen arbitrarily, without an organic dependence on sound or other material.

Early Works. Quintet, Chaconne, and Piano Sonata, composed during her graduate and postgraduate studies, are tonal compositions. They possess characteristics that presage her later works: polyphony and acute rhythms.

Hour of the Soul. This work on the poem of Marina Tsvetayeva (originally subtitled "Poem for a Large Band with Insertion of Female Voice in the Finale") has undergone a few transformations. The most radical one was in 1976 when it was turned into a concerto for symphony orchestra, multiple percussion, and a female soloist and titled Percussio di Pekarski (for Mark Pekarsky, the composer's friend, a percussionist who collects percussion instruments from all over the world). In the new rendition the orchestra was surrounded by six groups of percussion instruments, and the soloist-percussionist went from one to another. The Chinese sheng, a mouth instrument, was used as a ritornello (recurring refrain), accompanying the vocalist singing Tsvetayeva's poem.

Offertorium. In 1980, after meeting violinist Kremer, Gubaidulina composed this violin concerto. A friend suggested that she include in it the royal theme from Johann Sebastian Bach's Musical Offering. Here Gubaidulina builds the music on consecutive omission of the end notes on both sides of the theme. At first the theme seems on the brink of destruction, but its gradual restoration brings the work to a beautiful conclusion. Kremer premiered Offertorium on May 30, 1981, although Gubaidulina was not able to be present because her visa was denied. It was with Kremer's help that Gubaidulina became known in international circles. This piece, now performed all over the world, merges the contrasting characteristics of the composer: strict calculation and intuition, formal mastery and spiritual awakening.

Seven Words. In this composition for cello, bayan, and fifteen strings, Gubaidulina turns to a religious theme, although it is interpreted subjectively. Compositions of Heinrich Schütz and Joseph Haydn (bearing the same title) served as prototypes, and Haydn's chromatic motif appears in all seven of the sections in her work. Gubaidulina personifies the instruments: bayan is the Father; cello is the Son; strings are the Holy Spirit. There is also harmonic symbolism: chromaticism and microtones are spheres of earthly suffering (depicted in the timbres of bayan and cello), while the diatonic language, reflecting the heavenly sphere, is given to the strings. The intersection of these two systems in unison and octaves make up the shape of a cross.

Stimmen . . . Verstummen. In this symphony, the mystery of the spirit unfolds. The twelve sections are characterized by opposing lines: The odd sections portray the eternal heavenly world; the even represent the chaotic earthly one. In the eighth, and most expanded, section, the theme recreates the universal catastrophe of Judgment Day as revealed in the biblical Apocalypse. The ninth section is the culmination of the piece, in which the orchestra becomes silent and the conductor beats out a rhythm noted in the score (according to the Fibonacci series of 1-2-3, 2-3-5, 3-5-8). This unique solo symbolizes the aftermath of the catastrophe.

String Quartet No. 4. This work, commissioned by the Kronos Quartet, juxtaposes three aspects: a live performance of music; prerecorded music that runs on two separate tracks tuned a quarter-tone apart; and visual effects using light and darkness. String Quartet No. 4 begins in complete darkness with the prerecorded material—rubber balls bouncing on strings. This is followed by color and light effects, and finally the performers begin to play in dialogue with the tracks. The instruments eventually take on the language of the tracks by playing with the same rubber balls. This quiet, calm piece presents a conflict-free conversation between the real and unreal entities.

St. John Passion. In 2000 Gubaidulina was one of four composers commissioned by Helmuth Rilling, artistic director of the Internationale Bachakademie Stuttgart, to compose a Passion in commemoration of the 250 years since Bach's death. Sung in Russian, St. John Passion, for soloists, two choruses, and orchestra, demonstrates the composer's deep Russian Orthodox faith.

The oratorio comprises eleven episodes in two sections (1-7 and 8-11). Gubaidulina uses two texts—the Gospel account of Christ's Passion and the narrative of St. John on the Last Judgment—to show an intersection between events on earth (Passion, Nos. 1, 6, 9, and 11) and those in heaven (Apocalypse, Nos. 2-5, 7, and 10). This intersection is supported by the orchestra—glissandi of some instruments cut through the sustained notes of others. In this work, the composer discloses God's Word, showing that his flesh in the Passion and his spirit in the Last Judgment at last come together in perfect balance. The work was recorded on September 1, 2000, by the Orchestra of Mariinsky Theatre, St. Petersburg, conducted by Valery Gergiev at Konzert- und Kongresszentrum Liederhalle, Stuttgart.

Musical Legacy

Her enormous talent coupled with her artistic independence have made Gubaidulina one of the most interesting composers of the twentieth century. Despite the complexity of Gubaidulina's musical language, her aesthetic and spiritual views are becoming more and more accessible to the general public, who are drawn to her intellectual mastery, inventive use of sound, and deep spiritual motivation.

Karina Bruk

Further Reading

Griffiths, Paul. Modern Music and After: Directions Since 1945. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995. Includes a short commentary on the composer's style with a brief comparison to other composers in regard to her treatment of various devices such as color, light, and metric values. Cites specific compositions.

Kurtz, Michael. Sofia Gubaidulina: A Biography. Edited by Christoph K. Lohmann and Malcom Hamrich Brown. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2007. Based on interviews taken with her, her colleagues, and her family, as well as her papers. Discusses the evolution of her work in the context of the culture and politics of the post-Stalin Soviet Union. List of works has been updated for this revised and expanded edition.

Pendle, Karin, and Robert Zieroff. "Composers of Modern Europe, Israel, Australia, and New Zealand." In Women and Music: A History, edited by Karin Pendle. 2d ed. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2000. Multicultural history of women in music that briefly addresses Gubaidulina's life and includes a discussion of a few of her works: In Croce, Seven Words, Alleluia.

Polin, Clair. "Conversations in Leningrad." Tempo 168 (March, 1989): 19-20. Gubaidulina speaks of her work Hour of the Soul in an interview given at the Soviet Union's Third International Festival of Contemporary Composers held in Leningrad, 1988.

Redepenning, Dorothea. "Sofia Gubaidulina: An Interview with Dorothea Redepenning." In Contemporary Composers on Contemporary Music, edited by Elliott Schwartz and Barney Childs. New York: Da Capo Press, 1998. Gubaidulina answers questions regarding the reception of her (and other composers') works in Russia. She discusses her usage of musical quotations and her concept of musical time. Preceded by a brief biographical note.

See also: Nono, Luigi; Pärt, Arvo; Rostropovich, Mstislav; Schnittke, Alfred.

Arlo Guthrie

American folksinger, guitarist, and songwriter

Although identified with the counterculture of the 1960's, Guthrie composed, recorded, and performed into the twenty first century, increasingly using his popularity as a musician to attract attention to his work on behalf of various charitable social causes.

Born: July 10, 1947; Coney Island, New York
Also known as: Arlo Davy Guthrie (full name)
Member of: Shenandoah

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Alice's Restaurant, 1967; Running down the Road, 1969; Washington County, 1970; Hobo's Lullaby, 1972; The Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys, 1973; Arlo Guthrie, 1974; Amigo, 1976; A Tribute to Leadbelly, 1977; Arlo Guthrie with Shenandoah, 1978; One Night, 1978; Outlasting the Blues, 1979; Power of Love, 1981; Precious Friend, 1981 (with Pete Seeger); Hard Travelin', 1986 (with Woody Guthrie and others); Someday, 1986; Baby's Storytime, 1990; All over the World, 1991; Son of the Wind, 1992; Woody's Twenty Grow Big Songs, 1992 (with Woody Guthrie and the Guthrie Family); Mystic Journey, 1996; BanjoMan: A Tribute to Derroll Adams, 2002.

The Life

Arlo Davy Guthrie (GUH-three) was born into an artistic family. His mother, Marjorie Mazia Guthrie, was a former professional dancer with the Martha Graham Company and taught dance throughout his childhood. His father, Woody Guthrie, was one of America's most prolific and best-known folk-protest singers and the composer of innumerable songs, including "This Land Is Your Land."

Guthrie made an indelible mark in 1967 with "Alice's Restaurant Massacree," an eighteen-minute ballad that told a shaggy-dog story loosely patterned after his father's talking-blues style. An instant counterculture favorite, the real-life events described in the song served as the basis for the 1969 film Alice's Restaurant, in which Guthrie starred as himself. Although he continued to record major-label albums through 1981, his only other radio hit was his 1972 recording of Steve Goodman's "City of New Orleans."

After 1991 Guthrie occupied himself increasingly with the Guthrie Center, a nonprofit interfaith church foundation dedicated to various forms of social activism, such as caring for AIDS patients and raising awareness about Huntington's disease, the degenerative disorder from which his father died. A practicing Catholic during much of the 1970's, Guthrie eventually became a follower of the Kali Natha Yoga master Ma Jaya Sati Bhagavati.

The Music

Given his status as the eldest son of Woody Guthrie, Arlo Guthrie could have carved out a comfortable musical niche simply by covering his father's songs or by composing in his father's well-known folk-protest style. Instead—with his instantly recognizable nasal voice, his charming and quirky sense of humor, his ear for catchy melodies, and his intimate familiarity with folk songs from many traditions—he established himself from the outset as a singer-songwriter. Besides covering Woody's "Oklahoma Hills" on Running down the Road, "1913 Massacre" on Hobo's Lullaby, and "Ramblin' Round" on The Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys, Guthrie also wrote protest songs that, similar in spirit to his father's Dust Bowl classics, were clearly a response to the specific sociopolitical crises of the 1960's and 1970's.

Alice's Restaurant. With "Alice's Restaurant Massacree" comprising all of side one, this 1967 album made Guthrie an instant counterculture celebrity. Its length aside, what distinguished Guthrie's eighteen-minute story-song from the rest of the antiwar-music pack was his comic timing.

The Best of Arlo Guthrie. Released ten years after Guthrie's debut, this compilation suffered from the restrictions of the twelve-inch vinyl long-playing record. That "Alice's Restaurant Massacree" would make the cut was obvious, as was the inclusion of "The Motorcycle Song" (in its six-minute version) and Guthrie's 1972 hit "City of New Orleans." The challenge was to condense the best of the rest of Guthrie's first eight albums into the remaining twenty minutes. Predictably, the result was spotty, with two songs from The Last of the Brooklyn Cowboys and one apiece from Running down the Road, Washington County, Arlo Guthrie, and Amigo.

Outlasting the Blues. When this album appeared in the fall of 1979, it was frequently discussed in conjunction with Bob Dylan's Slow Train Coming (1979) and Van Morrison's Into the Music (1979), albums that, like this album's first side, drew on biblical imagery. The specific reason for Guthrie's religious focus was that he was on the verge of learning whether he, like his father, would succumb to Huntington's disease. (The eventual diagnosis was that he would not.) Understandably, his own mortality was on his mind, and, rather than indulging in morbid self-pity, he composed a suite of songs that examined his life and its significance and included references to his 1960's status as a protest hero, his Jewish roots, his conversion to Catholicism, and his marriage. Side two, although less thematically coherent, consisted of songs of equally high quality, making the album one of Guthrie's strongest.

Power of Love. Compared to the serious tone of Outlasting the Blues, this 1981 follow-up, Guthrie's last album for Warner Bros., struck many as especially lightweight. At least one song, however, the T-Bone Burnett-composed title cut, continued Guthrie's recording of music with Christian themes.

Someday. This was in many ways a typical Arlo Guthrie album, replete with humor, political protest, and catchy melodies. By 1986, however, the Guthrie formula was considered passé, and Warner Bros. refused to release the album, leaving it to Guthrie to release it himself on his own Rising Son label in the early 1990's.

All Over the World. In 1991, ten years after his last Warner Bros. album, Guthrie had finally acquired the rights to enough of his catalog to assemble this thirteen-song compilation, which, except for its reinclusion of "City of New Orleans," made an ideal complement to The Best of Arlo Guthrie.

Musical Legacy

Since Guthrie emerged as a solo performer in 1967, two phrases have always appeared in discussions of his music: "Woody Guthrie's son" and "Alice's Restaurant." The former has given even the slightest of Guthrie's recordings an aura of folkloric authenticity, of being connected to the centuries-old troubadour tradition in which Woody Guthrie himself was a link. The latter serves as a reminder of the role that storytelling, wit, and cheering for society's underdogs has played in Guthrie's most enduring music.

Whether that music will live on in the repertoires of subsequent folksingers remains to be seen. Even the perennially popular "Alice's Restaurant Massacree" and "The Motorcycle Song" are so autobiographical that it is difficult to imagine anyone besides Guthrie performing them. As long as there are pretensions, however, there will be songwriters who want to puncture them so effectively that they never reinflate, inspired by the example of Guthrie's preference for the satirical slice over the sledgehammer blow.

Arsenio Orteza

Further Reading

Guthrie, Arlo. This Is the Arlo Guthrie Book. New York: Amsco, 1969. The words and music to twenty early Guthrie songs, illustrated with photographs of Guthrie's family and memorabilia.

Lee, Laura. Arlo, Alice, and Anglicans: The Lives of a New England Church. Woodstock, Vt.: The Countryman Press, 2000. A history of the Trinity Church, the setting of "Alice's Restaurant Massacree" and the current home of the interfaith Guthrie Center.

Orteza, Arsenio. "Arlo and Ma." The Christian Century, May 5, 1993. An examination of Guthrie's spiritual journey from Catholicism to Ma Jaya Sati Bhagavati.

Simon, John. "The Youth Film." In Movies into Film: Film Criticism, 1967-1970. New York: Delta, 1971. Contains a review of the film Alice's Restaurant.

Unterberger, Richie. Turn! Turn! Turn! The Sixties Folk-Rock Revolution. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2002. Traces the role of folk music in the evolution of rock and roll with Guthrie among the interviewed musicians.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Guthrie, Woody; Seeger, Pete.

Woody Guthrie

American folksinger, guitarist, and songwriter

The composer of "This Land Is Your Land," Guthrie is perhaps the most influential of modern folk musicians. He wrote thousands of songs, popularized folk music as a medium of populism and protest, and inspired such musicians as Pete Seeger and Bob Dylan.

Born: July 14, 1912; Okemah, Oklahoma
Died: October 3, 1967; Queens, New York
Also known as: Woodrow Wilson Guthrie (full name)
Member of: The Almanac Singers

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Bound for Glory, 1958; Nursery Days, 1958; Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs, Vol. 1, 1962; Dust Bowl Ballads, 1964; One of a Kind, 1964; Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs, Vol. 2, 1964; This Land Is Your Land, 1967; Struggle, 1976; Poor Boy, 1981; Songs to Grow on for Mother and Child, 1991; Worried Man Blues, 1991; Ballads of Sacco and Vanzetti, 1996.

ALBUMS (with the Almanac Singers): Deep Sea Chanteys and Whaling Ballads, 1941; Sod Buster Ballads, 1941; Songs for John Doe, 1941; Talking Union, 1941; Dear Mr. President, 1942.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Bound for Glory, 1943 (autobiography).

The Life

Woodrow Wilson Guthrie (GUH-three) was born in 1912 in Oklahoma hill country; he was named for the Democratic presidential candidate, Woodrow Wilson. His father, Charles Guthrie, was a town official and businessman; his mother, Nora Belle Tanner, was musically inclined and sang ballads to Woody and his siblings Clara, Roy, George, and Mary Josephine. When Woody was thirteen he heard an African American boy, George, playing blues music on his harmonica. Woody saved up to buy his own harmonica and was soon playing with George. When Woody was sixteen his mother was committed to an insane asylum for suspicion of setting her husband on fire. (Clara had also died from a fire.) Shortly afterward, the family moved to Texas. Already accomplished on the harmonica, Guthrie spent hours practicing the guitar.

At eighteen, Guthrie abandoned high school. With the nation falling into the Great Depression, Guthrie began a life of wandering, hitchhiking, working at odd jobs, playing in bands, and singing on radio shows. On October 28, 1933, Guthrie married seventeen-year-old Mary Jennings. Their daughter Gwendolyn was born two years later, followed by Sue in 1937, and Will in 1939. In 1937 Guthrie joined the scores of Dust Bowl migrants moving to California to find work.

Guthrie launched the Oklahoma and Woody Show radio program with his cousin Jack Guthrie on the Los Angeles's station KFVD. Soon Jack was replaced by Maxine Crissman, nicknamed "Lefty Lou" by Guthrie. After a popular two-year run of the Woody and Lefty Lou Show, Guthrie resumed his rambling. Dismayed by the impoverished conditions he witnessed in migrant workers' camps, he began attending meetings of the Communist Party of America, which touted a pro-labor platform. Traveling to New York City in 1940, Guthrie was inspired to write his most famous song, "This Land Is Your Land." He also recorded his first commercial songs in 1940 before setting off on a cross-country ramble with young folk-singer Pete Seeger.

In 1942 Guthrie returned to New York City to settle, adored as an authentic Oklahoma singer by the city's progressive folk community. He lived a bohemian lifestyle in concert with the Almanac Singers folk collective. Guthrie was sexually unrestrained; in 1943 he and Mary were divorced. He published his autobiography, Bound for Glory, befriended blues musician Huddie "Leadbelly" Ledbetter, and toured with the duo of Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee.

During World War II, Guthrie served in the U.S. Merchant Marine and U.S. Army. After the war he moved with his new wife, Marjorie Greenblatt Mazia, to Coney Island in Brooklyn, New York. They had four children, Cathy in 1943, Arlo in 1947, Joady in 1948, and Nora in 1950. (In 1947, Cathy would die in a house fire.) Guthrie wrote and performed hundreds of songs and ballads, many of which have become classics, as well as writing a stream of columns, poems, essays, and incipient novels. Folk musicians from throughout the country visited Guthrie to learn from him and pay him homage. However, Guthrie's behavior became increasingly erratic and uncontrollable; he drank and philandered. In 1952, he was diagnosed with the hereditary disorder Huntington's chorea, which was almost certainly the cause of his mother's insanity. He and Marjorie divorced in 1953. He married Anneke Van Kirk the same year; they had a child, Lorina, in 1954. A campfire accident burned Guthrie's arm, making it impossible for him to play the guitar, and shortly thereafter he and Anneke were divorced.

Woody Guthrie. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Guthrie's second wife, Marjorie, became his caregiver during his later years, as his disease began to render him increasingly unable to control his movements. He spent the last decade of his life in various hospitals, including Greystone Park Psychiatric Hospital (1956-1961), Brooklyn State Hospital (1966), and Creedmoor State Hospital in Queens, where he died in 1967. Marjorie would go on to found the Committee to Combat Huntington's Disease, which became the Huntington's Disease Society of America.

The Music

Guthrie's music and lyrics were rooted in the ballads he heard from his mother, African American blues, Oklahoma migrant songs, the Texan yodeler Jimmie Rodgers, and the many hours he spent reading in the library. He was especially influenced by the superb gospel and country recordings of the Carter Family: A. P. Carter, his wife Sara, and her cousin Maybelle. Although elfin and scrawny in person, with a droning voice, Guthrie on stage had a charismatic presence that gripped the attention of his audience. Dressed in work clothes, with a weather-beaten hat, thin and wiry, he seemed hardly removed from his days hitchhiking across the Dust Bowl. His voice was nasal, with a strong Oklahoma twang. His lyrics were wily, rambling, comic, and always in favor of the workingman; his simple guitar playing accented his performance.

Dust Bowl Ballads. Over the course of three days in March, 1940, the American folklorist Alan Lomax recorded Guthrie talking, singing, and playing guitar for his Library of Congress archives. The following month, Lomax arranged for Guthrie to make his first commercial releases for the RCA label. Titled Dust Bowl Ballads, eleven songs were issued in July on two 78-rpm records. Although the records sold only a few thousand copies, they include such hard-hitting songs about the plight of farmworkers as "Talking Dust Bowl" and "Do Re Mi."

"This Land Is Your Land." The two twentieth century songs that can be characterized as America's unofficial anthems are linked in origin. Kate Smith popularized Irving Berlin's "God Bless America" in a 1938 recording. Guthrie was annoyed by its patriotic fervor and overheated pitch. On February 23, 1940, in Time Square's Hanover House hotel, he composed six stanzas of "God Blessed America for Me" in response. He set the verses to a melody that may have been derived from the Carter family tune "Little Darling, Pal of Mine," which in turn had been adopted from the gospel hymn "Oh, My Loving Brother." By the time Guthrie recorded the song, he had changed the title and refrain to reflect his attachment to the land he had wandered. The lyrics celebrated the natural wonders of the American landscape and proclaimed, "This land is your land, this land is my land . . . This land was made for you and me."

"This Land Is Your Land" was one of the first of Guthrie's hundreds of songs recorded with Folkways Records under the supervision of Moses Asch in April, 1944. The melody stays within one octave and is easy to sing. Guthrie's guitar accompaniment consists of simple chords, and he sings with an engaging midwestern twang (for example, singing "waters" with a pinched trill).

"Car Song." Also from the first Asch/Folkway recording session is the delightful "Car Song," also known as "Riding in My Car." Free of political content, "Car Song" illustrates Guthrie's talent for children's music. He paints a charming portrait of a family on an automobile outing, playfully singing the "brrrm brm" of the engine, the "click clack" of the door, and the "oorah oogah" of the horn.

"Springfield Mountain." Guthrie's Folkway recording of the traditional American folk ballad "Springfield Mountain" is arresting. He is accompanied by his best friend, Gilbert "Cisco" Houston, on guitar, Sonny Terry on harmonica and Betty Hawes. (Leadbelly accompanies him on other recordings from these sessions.) Guthrie sputters and stutters the tale of a snake-bitten young man.

"Pass Away." Guthrie wrote prolifically throughout his life—his "Woody Sez" columns for the People's World, essays, novels, poems, and thousands of songs. He considered his lyrics as important as his music, which he often derived from existing tunes. Many of his verses remained unrecorded, to be mined by later generations of musicians. One example is his 1955 lyric for "Pass Away," which reflects Guthrie's simple religious faith. "Pass Away" was scored and recorded in a moving 2006 version by the band the Klezmatics.

"Talking Subway Blues." "Talking Subway Blues" is a ballad composed by Guthrie upon first arriving in New York City. It illustrates his distinctive form of "talking blues," with its mix of spoken lyric and singing guitar, irregular meters and rhymes, and free commentary. If Guthrie did not invent the style of "talking blues," he certainly popularized it. In homespun language, Guthrie humorously relates his first encounter with the subway and of the mass of New Yorkers "all a-runnin' down that hole in the ground." Although the song remains lighthearted, Guthrie suggests the subway as a metaphor for the plight of workers, too oppressed to emerge from their holes in the ground. He concludes with a plea to join the union, fight fascists, and contribute to victory in World War II. "Talking Subway Blues" is the direct inspiration for Bob Dylan's brilliantly comedic "Talking New York," recorded in 1962.

Musical Legacy

Woody Guthrie's music combined simple, traditional folk tunes with stirring populist and political lyrics. Folk music refers to the spontaneous, informal musical traditions of local communities. In twentieth century America, what had been local or regional folk music was rendered accessible for the first time on a national level. Nineteenth century composers such as Stephen Foster had made famous their own folk-derived songs and melodies; however, it was only with the rise of the recording industry, mass mobility, and national movements that the United States can be said to have attained an "American" folk music.

If Guthrie was not the creator of this national folk music, he was its embodiment. "This Land Is Your Land" is sung by schoolchildren throughout the United States and can be described as America's national folk anthem.

Guthrie was received by folk audiences as if he had sprung directly from the dust bowls of Oklahoma, but he shaped his music not only from the folk ballads his mother had sung to him as a child and from tunes he had picked up around campfires but also from diverse cultures, including blues performers, the gospel music of the Carter family, country songs, his incessant reading, and the anguished protests of the dispossessed.

Guthrie presaged the youth culture of the 1960's both in his life and music, and for that generation he became an icon. His identification with Oklahoma migrants, his wandering life in Texas and California, and his bohemian life in New York City represented a restless searching that was romanticized in the 1960's. His childlike perspectives, his flirtations with left-wing radicalism, and his casual attitude toward marriage and sex were equally mythologized and celebrated. Most of all, Guthrie's unique form of folk music—autobiographical, tuneful, comedic, working-class, with biting social commentary—was the precursor to both the folk revival and the protest songs of the Vietnam generation. Guthrie believed that popular music could be a powerful force against oppression. "This Machine Kills Fascists" was emblazoned on his guitar. While claiming the role of a down-home country singer, he was also a brilliant innovator whose novel forms were developed by such modern folksingers as Pete Seeger, Ramblin' Jack Elliott, Phil Ochs, Joan Baez, Bob Dylan, and Guthrie's own son, Arlo. There may be no more succinct tribute to Guthrie's personal and musical legacy than Dylan's celebrated 1962 recording, "Song to Woody."

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Crawford, Richard. America's Musical Life: A History. New York: W. W. Norton, 2001. An engaging, lively survey of America's musical history, situating Guthrie in the context of the folk revival of the 1950's and 1960's.

Cray, Ed. Ramblin' Man: The Life and Times of Woody Guthrie. Foreword by Studs Terkel. New York: W. W. Norton, 2004. With a foreword of personal reminiscences by journalist and social commentator Terkel, this is a complete, absorbing biography.

Guthrie, Woody. Bound for Glory. 1943. Reprint. Foreword by Pete Seeger. New York: Plume, 1983. Guthrie's acclaimed autobiography is novelistic in tone, with a title taken from a gospel song Guthrie popularized, "This Train Is Bound for Glory." A 1976 movie of the same name was based on this book. Includes illustrations by Guthrie.

Hampton, Wade. Guerrilla Minstrels. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1986. An academic study of the culture of protest and radicalism surrounding singer-songwriters Guthrie, John Lennon, Joe Hill, and Bob Dylan. Notes Dylan's enormous debt to Guthrie.

Jackson, Mark. Prophet Singer: The Voice and Vision of Woody Guthrie. Jackson: University Press of Mississippi, 2007. A volume in the American Made Music series that examines Guthrie's lyrics for social content and populist protests.

Klein, Joe. Woody Guthrie: A Life. New York: Delta, 1999. A sympathetic biography with striking photographs and illustrations.

Longhi, Jim. Woody, Cisco, and Me: Seamen Three in the Merchant Marine. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1997. Part of the series Music in American Life, a firsthand account by a shipmate of Guthrie and his friend Cisco Houston in the Merchant Marine. The insightful anecdotes about Guthrie include an inspiring story of Guthrie racially integrating his concert in the ship's hold.

Marsh, Davie, and Harold Leventhal, eds. Pastures of Plenty: A Self Portrait. New York: HarperPerennial, 1992. Named for one of Guthrie's most famous Dust Bowl songs, a chronological sampling of his unpublished writings. Edited with a foreword by the executor of Guthrie's estate.

Santelli, Robert, and Emily Davidson. Hard Travelin': The Life and Legacy of Woody Guthrie. Hanover, N.H.: University Press of New England, 1999. Commemorating the American Music Masters' salute to Guthrie, a collection of essays on Guthrie by scholars and critics.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Guthrie, Arlo; Leadbelly; Lomax, Alan; Odetta; Paxton, Tom; Ritchie, Jean; Rodgers, Jimmie; Rush, Tom; Seeger, Pete; Terry, Sonny; Travis, Merle; Tweedy, Jeff; Waits, Tom.

Buddy Guy

American blues singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Guy provided the bridge between the electric Chicago blues sound of the late 1950's and the guitar-driven rock music of the late 1960's.

Born: July 30, 1936; Lettsworth, Louisiana
Also known as: George Guy (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: I Left My Blues in San Francisco, 1967; Blues Today, 1968; A Man and the Blues, 1968; Buddy and the Juniors, 1970 (with Junior Wells and Junior Mance); Buddy Guy and Junior Wells Play the Blues, 1972 (with Wells); Hold That Plane, 1972; Buddy and Phil Guy, 1979 (with Phil Guy); Got to Use Your Head, 1979; Pleading the Blues, 1979 (with Wells); The Dollar Done Fell, 1980; Stone Crazy!, 1981; D. J. Play My Blues, 1982; Buddy Guy, 1983; Ten Blue Fingers, 1985; Chess Masters, 1987; Breaking Out, 1988; I Ain't Got No Money, 1989; Alone and Acoustic, 1991 (with Wells); Damn Right, I've Got the Blues, 1991; My Time After Awhile, 1992; Feels Like Rain, 1993; Slippin' In, 1994; I Cry, 1995; The Treasure Untold, 1997; Try to Quit You Baby, 1997; Heavy Love, 1998; The Real Blues, 1999 (with Wells); Sweet Tea, 2001; Blue on Blues, 2002 (with Otis Rush); Everything Gonna Be Alright, 2002; Blues Singer, 2003; Bring 'Em In, 2005; Everyday We Have the Blues, 2006; Going Back to Acoustic, 2006; Messin' with the Kids, 2006 (with Wells); Skin Deep, 2008.

The Life

George "Buddy" Guy was born to a family of sharecroppers in rural Louisiana. When he was not in school, he worked on the farm, plowing with a mule or picking cotton. He began playing guitar at roadhouses with local bands in his teens, and he decided to move to Chicago, at that time the center of blues music, in 1957. Guy created showcases for live music in Chicago, when in 1972 he bought a blues bar called the Checkerboard, which remained open until 1985. In 1989 he opened Buddy Guy's Legends, a premier venue for live blues music in downtown Chicago.

He had six children with his first wife, Joanne, and two more with his second wife, Jennifer. Guy has won five Grammy Awards, more than thirty W. C. Handy Awards for blues music, and he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2005 by Eric Clapton and B. B. King.

The Music

Guy's life might stand as a model for the development of blues music in America: He began playing the blues in the rural South, he perfected his craft in Chicago, and he found belated recognition when he was "discovered" by rock musicians and introduced by them to a mainstream popular audience.

Early Works. Guy had recorded a demo at a Baton Rouge, Louisiana, radio station before coming to Chicago, and he produced a handful of singles for Cobra Records (released by Artistic Records) after winning a battle of the bands. However, he made his early reputation with Chess Records. Although Guy recorded forty-seven songs under his own name while under contract to Chess Records from 1960 to 1967, the label showed no interest in releasing an album, perceiving him primarily as a versatile session guitarist who could play behind its more established stars, such as Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf. Even when Guy was allowed to record his own music, Leonard Chess, a founder of Chess Records, insisted that Guy play traditional blues rather than the sort of unrestrained "noise" on guitar that was the trademark of his explosive live shows. An innovative guitarist, Guy was also a flamboyant showman, playing the guitar behind his back and with his teeth (techniques borrowed by Jimi Hendrix), hanging from rafters by his knees, and using long guitar cords that allowed him to walk out into the crowd as he played. When bands such as Cream, the Jimi Hendrix Experience, and Led Zeppelin began selling millions of albums featuring extended feedback-drenched guitar solos, Chess reportedly went to Guy, bent over, and said, "Kick me!" Chess offered to let Guy record his own style of music, but too late—Guy had just signed a contract with Vanguard Records that offered him artistic control, though none of the albums he recorded with Vanguard were completely successful.

While his recorded output remained frustratingly uneven, Guy made his reputation with his live performances, touring as a solo artist and with harmonica player Junior Wells (recording with Wells as Friendly Chap on the classic Hoodoo Man Blues [1965] to avoid contractual conflicts), as a lead-in act with the Rolling Stones, and in appearances with such famous disciples as Clapton and Stevie Ray Vaughan.

Stone Crazy! The first full-length recording that accurately represented Guy's style was Stone Crazy!, recorded in one session while he was on a tour of France and released in America in 1981 by Alligator Records. (Remarkably, he had recorded a full album backing up Junior Wells, Pleading the Blues [1979], on the same day.) The opening track of Stone Crazy!, Guy's "I Smell a Rat," exemplified the freedom he had always needed: The song ran more than nine minutes, and it opened with a guitar solo extending more than two minutes before the first lyrics were sung, an approach that would never have been allowed by traditional blues labels, which had always followed the Chess formula of three-minute songs suitable for radio play.

Damn Right, I've Got the Blues. Guy signed with Silvertone Records in 1990, and he finally achieved his first unalloyed successes with both critics and fans, resurrecting his career and earning him his first Grammy Award for Best Contemporary Blues Album. Now well into his fifties, he had finally begun the richest and most productive period of his career, and he would win the same Grammy Award in 1993, for Feels Like Rain, and in 1995, for Slippin' In. Guy would collect additional Grammy Awards for Best Rock Instrumental Performance (1996, for the Stevie Ray Vaughan tribute "SRV Shuffle") and for Best Traditional Blues Album (2003, for Blues Singer).

Can't Quit the Blues. This definitive career-spanning three-album boxed set, which surveys the first fifty years of Guy's music, beginning with his 1957 demo for Ace Records, was released to coincide with his seventieth birthday. Guy's sporadic and inconsistent recording history, mostly with small record companies, had made it extraordinarily difficult for fans to obtain his earlier works, and these compact discs address that need.

Musical Legacy

Guy unleashed the full potential of the electric guitar, establishing it as the distinctive lead instrument for most rock and blues music. He was twenty years younger than bluesmen such as Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf, from whom he had learned his craft, and he became an elder statesman for the rock musicians who would follow him. Guy found himself in the unusual position of being both a living symbol of the classic blues tradition and a restless innovator whose interests extended that tradition. He broadened the range and appeal of the blues while remaining true to its fundamental sound and emotional resonance. Among the notable guitarists who have acknowledged Guy's influence are Hendrix, Clapton, Vaughan, Jeff Beck, Jimmy Page, Robert Cray, and John Mayer.

William Nelles

Further Reading

Dicaire, David. Blues Singers: Biographies of Fifty Legendary Artists of the Early Twentieth Century. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1999. This resource includes a biographical sketch of Guy and partial discography of his works.

Gill, Chris. Guitar Legends. New York: HarperCollins, 1995. This book analyzes Guy's guitar techniques, equipment choices, and characteristic guitar licks.

Obrecht, Jas. Blues Guitar: The Men Who Made the Music. San Francisco: GPI Books, 1990. A wide-ranging interview covers Guy's life, his influences, and his guitar techniques.

Waterman, Dick. Between Midnight and Day: The Last Unpublished Blues Archive. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2003. One of his former managers offers anecdotes about Guy's work in the 1960's.

Wilcock, Donald E., with Buddy Guy. Damn Right I've Got the Blues: Buddy Guy and the Blues Roots of Rock and Roll. San Francisco: Woodford Press, 1993. A full-length biography of Guy, presented in the form of an oral history, with extensive interview material from family members and fellow musicians.

See also: Beck, Jeff; Clapton, Eric; Handy, W. C.; Hendrix, Jimi; Howlin' Wolf; King, B. B.; Rush, Otis; Vaughan, Stevie Ray; Waters, Muddy; Williamson, Sonny Boy, II.

H

Merle Haggard

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

The gritty realism and emotional rawness of Haggard's lyrics and vocal performances transformed country music into a major commercial art form. Many of Haggard's songs are undisputed country classics that, with simplicity and sincerity, echo the aspirations, values, and concerns of mainstream America.

Born: April 6, 1937; Bakersfield, California
Also known as: Merle Ronald Haggard (full name)
Member of: The Strangers

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Strangers, 1965; Just Between the Two of Us, 1966 (with Bonnie Owens); Swinging Doors, 1966; Branded Man, 1967; I'm a Lonesome Fugitive, 1967; The Legend of Bonnie and Clyde, 1968; Mama Tried, 1968; Sing Me Back Home, 1968; A Portrait of Merle Haggard, 1969; Pride in What I Am, 1969; Same Train, a Different Time, 1969; Introducing My Friends, the Strangers, 1970; A Tribute to the Best Damn Fiddle Player in the World, 1970; It's Not Love (but It's Not Bad), 1972; Let Me Tell You About a Song, 1972; Totally Instrumental . . . with One Exception, 1973; If We Make It Through December, 1974; Merle Haggard Presents His Thirtieth Album, 1974; It's All in the Movies, 1975; Keep Movin' On, 1975; My Love Affair with Trains, 1976; The Roots of My Raising, 1976; My Farewell to Elvis, 1977; Ramblin' Fever, 1977; A Working Man Can't Get Nowhere Today, 1977; Goin' Home for Christmas, 1978; I'm Always on a Mountain When I Fall, 1978; The Way It Was in '51, 1978; Serving 190 Proof, 1979; Back to the Barrooms, 1980; The Way I Am, 1980; Big City, 1981; Songs for the Mama That Tried, 1981; Going Where the Lonely Go, 1982; A Taste of Yesterday's Wine, 1982 (with George Jones); Heart to Heart, 1983; Pancho and Lefty, 1983 (with Willie Nelson); That's the Way Love Goes, 1983; It's All in the Game, 1984; Amber Waves of Grain, 1985; Kern River, 1985; A Friend in California, 1986; Out Among the Stars, 1986; Chill Factor, 1987; Seashores of Old Mexico, 1987 (with Nelson); Walking the Line, 1987 (with Nelson and Jones); 5:01 Blues, 1989; Blue Jungle, 1990; 1994, 1994; 1996, 1996; If I Could Only Fly, 2000; Cabin in the Hills, 2001; Two Old Friends, 2001 (with Albert E. Brumley, Jr.); Like Never Before, 2003; I Wish I Was Santa Claus, 2004; Unforgettable, 2004; Chicago Wind, 2005; The Bluegrass Sessions, 2007; Hag's Christmas, 2007.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Sing Me Back Home, 1981 (autobiography); My House of Memories, 2002 (autobiography).

The Life

The son of Oklahoma farmers Flossie Mae Harp and James Francis Haggard, who migrated to California during the Dust Bowl of the mid-1930's, Merle Ronald Haggard (HA-gurd) grew up in and around Bakersfield, California, a town overflowing with economic refugees from the Midwest. Times were difficult, and when Haggard's father died of a brain tumor, the boy, only age nine, began to rebel against his mother's authority. She sent him to a number of juvenile detention camps, but Haggard remained incorrigible. By age fourteen he was hopping freight trains around the Southwest, and by his late teens had been in and out of a string of reformatories for petty crimes and car theft. Eventually Haggard was arrested for burglary and served a three-year sentence in San Quentin.

Haggard had mastered the guitar while still a teenager, developing a strong love for the country music of such traditionalists as Hank Williams and Lefty Frizzell and the Western swing styles of such legends as Bob Wills and Tex Ritter. Paroled from prison in 1960, he spent the next two years digging ditches by day and paying dues in local country bands by night. Determined to make music his career, Haggard then moved to Las Vegas and began singing backup for local favorite Wynn Stewart. By 1963 he was recording as a solo artist for regional label Tally Records, scoring a number nineteen Billboard country single with "Sing a Sad Song." In 1965 he had a Top 10 hit, "(All My Friends Are Gonna Be) Strangers," and promptly signed with Capitol Records.

Shortly thereafter Haggard formed his band, the Strangers, and released a string of successful singles and albums for Capitol Records. Throughout the next two decades his remarkably expressive vocal delivery and poignant lyrics about poverty, despair, and the wayward lives of America's lowest social classes established Haggard as one of country's most celebrated artists. In 1972 California governor Ronald Reagan acknowledged Haggard's significant contributions to American culture by expunging his criminal record and granting him a full pardon for his past offenses.

Haggard's unique ability to write emotionally raw yet commercially viable hits merited him unprecedented commercial success during the 1970's and 1980's. Touring relentlessly throughout the United States and abroad, he also became one of country's most popular live acts. "The Hag," as most of his fans call him, continued to record and perform well into his seventies, a true legend of modern country music.

The Music

Haggard was an accomplished singer and guitarist even in his teens. However, it was not until he was released from San Quentin in 1960 that he began seriously considering music as a career. At first he worked as a musician in any local band that would let him fill in. His raw and distinctive voice and sparkling guitar licks eventually garnered him some regional attention, and his perseverance paid off in 1963, when he began recording singles for Tally Records. Within two years he had earned a pair of hits on the national country charts and had been signed by Capitol Records—a major country and pop label with the necessary resources to bring Haggard's music the broad exposure it demanded. In 1965 Haggard formed his backing band, the Strangers, and embarked upon a professional, and later personal, relationship with country star Buck Owens's ex-wife Bonnie, an accomplished musical talent in her own right. With Bonnie he recorded the breakthrough 1966 duet album Just Between the Two of Us. The duo recorded a string of hits over the next decade. In addition, Haggard cut several hit singles with the Strangers, many of which became country classics. In 1966 the band had two Top 5 hits, "Swinging Doors" and "The Bottle Let Me Down," and their first number one with "The Fugitive." Over the next two decades Haggard released more than a hundred charting country singles and had at least one Top 5 hit single each year within that period—an unprecedented feat for a country artist.

"Hungry Eyes." This highly autobiographical early song portrays the desolation of life during the Great Depression through the eyes of a child whose parents struggle to make ends meet in a labor camp for refugees during the Dust Bowl. Haggard grew up in similar circumstances in Bakersfield in the 1930's, a detail that adds dramatic poignancy to this emotionally wrenching ballad.

"Okie from Muskogee." Several of Haggard's songs, particularly those released at the height of the Vietnam War, were viewed by many listeners as a direct response to the counterculture protest songs so popular in that era. "Okie from Muskogee" is perhaps the most widely known. A diatribe against antiwar protesters, hippies, and other outspoken critics of the American establishment, the song was such a popular hit in 1969 that it penetrated the national consciousness and was regarded as the anthem of the so-called silent majority of patriotic Americans identified in president Richard Nixon's speeches.

"The Fightin' Side of Me." Another noteworthy anticounterculture Haggard hit, "The Fightin' Side of Me" forcefully—if not violently—accuses Vietnam War protesters of being cowardly, shortsighted, and unpatriotic. Its anthemic lyrics boldly advocate an unquestioning devotion to one's country—even to the point of fighting and dying for it—and strongly criticizes those unwilling to do so.

"Today I Started Loving You Again." Because of its simple, engaging chorus and heartbreaking subject matter, "Today I Started Loving You Again" remains one of Haggard's most recognizable and appreciated classics. Like Patsy Cline's "Crazy" and Williams's "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry," it is one of the most widely known and frequently covered country songs ever written. Haggard's version is generally revered as the finest rendition, and his vocal performance on the song ranks as one of his most heartfelt and outstanding.

Merle Haggard. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"If We Make It Through December." Not all of Haggard's social commentaries concern war and patriotism. "If We Make It Through December," a crossover pop hit in 1973, was especially timely because of its release at the height of a major economic recession in the United States. That year's Middle Eastern oil embargo resulted in record inflation and unemployment. The lyrics tell the story of a father breaking the news to his young daughter that he cannot afford Christmas presents because he has been laid off from his factory job—a scenario that resonated strongly with radio audiences that year.

"Are the Good Times Really Over for Good." It had been nearly a decade since Haggard had charted a socially relevant single, but the Reagan-era "Are the Good Times Really Over for Good" helped him once again win distinction as a spokesman for a new generation. The song directly questions the idea that in the mid-1980's the United States remained the most prosperous—and perhaps most well-intended—nation in the world.

Down Every Road. A lavishly packaged and impressively thorough compilation, Down Every Road, released by Capitol Records in 1996, provides the most complete homage to Haggard's career and legacy as a performer. It contains most of his hits, including many of his earliest singles, and several cuts that were not released as singles but typify Haggard's style and themes just as accurately as any of his major chart hits. Rare but quintessential gems such as "I Can't Hold Myself in Line" and "I'm Looking for My Mind" are standout tracks.

"No Time to Cry." The feature track on Haggard's strong but overlooked album 1996, this mournful ballad laments the loss of a father. Written from the often-neglected point of view of the middle aged, the song addresses the difficulties of finding time to grieve the loss of a parent when besieged with seemingly overwhelming responsibilities. Its profound message, combined with Haggard's unforgettable vocal delivery, make "No Time to Cry" one of the most memorable performances of his later career.

Musical Legacy

At his concerts, Haggard is often introduced as "the poet of the common man," an epithet bestowed on him in the 1970's as his songs began to weave themselves into the fabric of the American social conscience. The name, much deserved, remains with him. His sparse but incisive lyrics chronicle the struggles of the economically as well as the emotionally downtrodden, with a poignancy and musicality that has attracted fans across several genres. Because of their broad appeal and unflinching directness, several of Haggard's songs have become country standards that are performed just as often today as they were in any of the previous decades. Many modern musical artists, country and otherwise, cite him as a key influence on their careers. Haggard has received a string of gold and platinum albums and a number of Grammy Awards for recording excellence. His visibility as one of country's most popular performers has merited him acting roles on television shows and in movies, and he has even performed at the White House. There is scarcely a country band, amateur or professional, that does not perform at least a few of his songs. His timeless and undeniably genuine lyrics assure that listeners will still be enjoying his songs for decades to come.

Gregory D. Horn

Further Reading

Bogdanov, Vladimir, Chris Woodstra, and Stephen Thomas Erlewine. All Music Guide to Country: The Definitive Guide to Country Music. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. Definitive reference work on contemporary country music. Contains extensive biographical information on Haggard's life and career.

Haggard, Merle. Merle Haggard: The Lyrics. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2002. A true testament to Haggard's reputation as a songwriter, this book is devoted solely to his lyrics.

Haggard, Merle, and Tom Carter. Merle Haggard's My House of Memories: For the Record. New York: HarperCollins, 2002. Determined to correct what he saw as several misperceptions about his life and career, Haggard collaborated with Carter on this book. It focuses primarily on his personal life, although it does contain some insight into his creative process as well.

LaChapelle, Peter. "Fightin' Sides: 'Okie from Muskogee,' Conservative Populism, and the Uses of Migrant Identity." In Proud to Be an Okie: Cultural Politics, Country Music, and Migration to Southern California. Los Angeles: University of California Press, 2007. Insightful academic study of the Depression-era migration of thousands of Oklahoma farmers to the San Joaquin Valley of California. Because Haggard's music focuses heavily on this migration, of which his parents were a part, the book devotes a great deal of attention to how his lyrics capture the spirit of the era.

Willman, Chris. Rednecks and Bluenecks: The Politics of Country Music. New York: The New Press, 2005. Explores how Haggard's lyrics have influenced the populist and conservative ideology of many contemporary country artists, particularly Toby Keith.

See also: Buffett, Jimmy; Cash, Johnny; Cline, Patsy; Frizzell, Lefty; Jones, George; Nelson, Willie; Nono, Luigi; Ritter, Tex; Strait, George; Tubb, Ernest; Van Zandt, Townes; Williams, Hank.

Bill Haley

American rock singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Haley melded country music with rhythm and blues, leading to rock and roll. His signature song, "Rock Around the Clock," was an enthusiastic anthem to the new music genre.

Born: July 6, 1925; Highland Park, Michigan
Died: February 9, 1981; Harlingen, Texas
Also known as: William John Clifton Haley (full name)
Member of: The Downhomers; the Four Aces of Western Swing; the Saddlemen; Bill Haley and His Comets

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (with Bill Haley and His Comets): He Digs Rock 'n' Roll, 1955; Shake, Rattle and Roll, 1955; Music for the Boyfriend, 1956; Rock Around the Clock, 1956; Rock 'n' Roll Stage Show, 1956; Rock the Joint!, 1957; Rockin' the Oldies, 1957; Rockin' Around the World, 1958; Chicks, 1959; Strictly Instrumental, 1960; Bill Haley's Jukebox, 1961; Twisting Knights, 1962; Rock Around the Clock King, 1964; Rip It Up, 1968; Mister Rock 'n' Roll, 1973; Rock 'n' Roll, 1975; Rock Around the Clock, 1976; Armchair Rock 'n' Roll, 1978; Rock 'n' Roll Forever, 1981; Rock 'n' Roll Revival, 1981.

SINGLES: "She Taught Me to Yodel," 1946 (with the Downhomers); "Too Many Parties and Too Many Pals," 1948 (with the Four Aces of Western Swing); "Candy Kisses," 1949 (with the Four Aces of Western Swing); "Tennessee Border," 1949 (with the Four Aces of Western Swing); "Rocket 88," 1951 (with the Saddlemen); "Rock the Joint," 1952 (with the Saddlemen); "Crazy Man, Crazy," 1953 (with Bill Haley and His Comets); "Rock Around the Clock," 1954 (with Bill Haley and His Comets); "Shake, Rattle and Roll," 1954; "Florida Twist," 1961.

The Life

William John Clifton Haley was born in Highland Park, Michigan, and he grew up in Booth's

Corner, Pennsylvania. During his childhood, he had an operation that left him blind in his left eye. He is said to have cultivated his spit-curl hairstyle to distract from the blind eye, and admirers in the 1950's imitated the style without knowing the reason behind it. Haley joined a Pennsylvania-based Western swing band in 1946, and he made his first professional recordings with it. After that, he formed several Western-themed groups of his own.

Haley began to change his musical style in the early 1950's to a combination of country and rhythm and blues. He renamed his group as the Comets, and his 1953 recording of "Crazy Man, Crazy," which he cowrote, became the first rock-and-roll record to land on American charts.

In 1954 Bill Haley and His Comets recorded "Rock Around the Clock." This song found a huge audience, and it paved the way for the success of later performers such as Elvis Presley, whose popularity would eclipse Haley's in the United States. Nevertheless, Haley found renewed popularity in Latin America, Mexico, and Europe during the 1960's. Despite a battle with alcoholism, Haley continued as an international star (he gave a command performance in Great Britain for Queen Elizabeth II in 1979). His last performances came in 1980 in South Africa, a year before his death.

The Music

Although he is most famous for launching the music known as rock and roll, Haley began as a country-music artist. Haley also performed in other musical genres for which he is remembered much less.

"Rocket 88." This song marked Haley's change in musical styles. It was originally produced by

Bill Haley (seated) and the Comets. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Jackie Brenston and His Delta Cats, and Haley's rendition was the first time a white country singer performed a traditionally black rhythm-and-blues tune in this manner. Its reception encouraged Haley, a year later, to record "Rock the Joint," previously recorded by other bands. Both records sold almost one hundred thousand copies in the Northeast, persuading Haley that this musical style had great potential.

"Crazy Man, Crazy." Written by Haley and his bass player, Marshall Lytle, this song was the first rock-and-roll song to place significantly on American popularity charts. Soon after its release, the band's name was changed to Bill Haley and His Comets.

"Rock Around the Clock." This was released by Bill Haley and His Comets in 1954 to modest success. It had been written specifically for Haley the previous year. However, when the song was sung behind the opening credits of Blackboard Jungle (1955), a film based on Evan Hunter's novel about violence at an inner-city school that was nominated for four Academy Awards, the song's popularity soared. A year later, a film with the song title was released, a light story about young people's enthusiasm about rock and roll, a celebration of the newly popular music style. It featured Haley and other artists playing themselves. The motion picture and song were instrumental in launching a musical revolution.

"Shake, Rattle and Roll." This was Haley's follow-up to "Rock Around the Clock." It had already been a hit for Joe Turner, but that version had more of a blues approach, while Haley's was straightforward rock and roll. It was the first rock-and-roll recording to sell more than a million copies.

"Florida Twist." When Haley's popularity in rock and roll began to be surpassed by other artists, he and his bands toured outside the United States. For a time, he made Mexico his home, and he tried to learn Spanish. In 1961 he made his first recording in Spanish, "Florida Twist." It went to the top of the popularity charts, becoming the biggest-selling single record in Mexico.

Musical Legacy

Rock and roll, as performed by Bill Haley and His Comets, caught on with the younger generation with an enthusiasm that still affects commercial music. Their songs were featured in major entertainment venues, such as popular motion pictures, and Haley appeared in some films. Younger artists such as Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Little Richard followed in Haley's wake, and they eventually eclipsed his fame. However, Haley is remembered for being first. He even received recognition in outer space: In 2006, to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of Haley's death, the International Astronomical Union named an asteroid in his honor.

Paul Dellinger

Further Reading

Dawson, Jim. Rock Around the Clock: The Record That Started the Rock Revolution! San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2005. This books covers the origin of the song "Rock Around the Clock," and it traces Haley's early years as a professional musician.

DeCurtis, Anthony, ed. Present Tense: Rock and Roll and Culture. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1992. Contributors from a variety of fields look at the rock-and-roll phenomenon from different points of view, covering its creation and its audience.

Haley, John W., and John von Hoëlle. Sound and Glory: The Incredible Story of Bill Haley, the Father of Rock 'n' Roll and the Music That Shook the World. Wilmington, Del.: Dyne-American, 1990. Coauthored by one of his sons, the book offers extensive background on Haley, his career, and his influence on rock and roll.

Stuessy, Clarence, and Scott Lipscomb. Rock and Roll: Its History and Stylistic Development. Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 2008. Covers the history of rock and roll from its roots to the present, with insights into the music industry and into the key figures in the evolution of this musical style.

Swenson, John. Bill Haley: The Daddy of Rock and Roll. Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.: Stein and Day, 1983. The book concentrates on Haley's entire career, from its initial success to the reasons for its decline.

See also: Domino, Fats; John, Sir Elton; Lewis, Jerry Lee; Little Richard; Presley, Elvis; Turner, Big Joe.

Marvin Hamlisch

American musical-theater songwriter and lyricist and film-score composer

Hamlisch's compositions for film and musical theater have influenced a new generation of composers in creating dramatically important songs. His work on A Chorus Line ushered in the concept, or frame story, musical.

Born: June 2, 1944; New York, New York
Also known as: Marvin Frederick Hamlisch (full name)

Principal works

FILM SCORES: The Swimmer, 1968; Take the Money and Run, 1969; Bananas, 1971; The Way We Were, 1973; The Spy Who Loved Me, 1977; Ice Castles, 1978; Starting Over, 1979; Ordinary People, 1980; Pennies from Heaven, 1981; Sophie's Choice, 1982; D.A.R.Y.L., 1985; Three Men and a Baby, 1987; Little Nikita, 1988; Frankie and Johnny, 1991; The Mirror Has Two Faces, 1996.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): A Chorus Line, 1975 (lyrics by Edward Kleban; libretto by James Kirkwood and Nicholas Dante); They're Playing Our Song, 1979 (lyrics by Carole Bayer Sager; libretto by Neil Simon); Smile, 1986 (lyrics and libretto by Howard Ashman); The Goodbye Girl, 1993 (lyrics by David Zippel; libretto by Neil Simon); Imaginary Friends, 2002 (lyrics by Carnelia; libretto by Nora Ephron); Sweet Smell of Success, 2002 (lyrics by Craig Carnelis; libretto by John Guare).

The Life

Marvin Frederick Hamlisch (HAM-lihsh) was born in 1944 to immigrant Viennese Jewish parents, Max and Lily Schachter Hamlisch, in New York City. His father, an accordionist and bandleader, wanted him to study classical music. A child prodigy, Hamlisch began playing the piano at age five, and by age seven he was accepted into the precollege division of Juilliard, where he studied for fourteen years. Lured by the excitement of the theater and popular music, however, Hamlisch pursued a career in the entertainment industry. He began working as a rehearsal pianist and songwriter, and he graduated from Queens College with a bachelor of arts in music in 1968. He collaborated with his longtime girlfriend, lyricist Carole Bayer Sager, on many works, but when their relationship ended, he entered a period of introspection in which he recognized the emptiness of his life. In 1989 he married independent television producer Terre Blair, whom he credits with changing his life and his priorities in a positive direction. The couple resides in their hometown, New York City.

The Music

Hamlisch began his career in show business as a rehearsal pianist for Funny Girl (1964), starring Barbra Streisand, but in 1965 he enjoyed his first big hit at the age of twenty-one with a song, "Sunshine, Lollipops, and Rainbows," sung by Lesley Gore. He went on to work as vocal arranger for television's Bell Telephone Hour, and after graduating from college, he moved to Hollywood to work in films. He composed music for several motion pictures, but he made a name for himself by collaborating with Johnny Mercer on the sound track of Kotch (1971), for which he received his first Academy Award nomination. He continued to enjoy a successful career in film music, and later he created memorable shows for Broadway. He also composed a symphony, Anatomy of Peace. He served as arranger and musical director for Barbra Streisand's concert tour and television special, and he guest-conducted pop concerts for American orchestras, being appointed to the post of pops conductor for the National Symphony in 2000. In 2007 he was inducted into the Long Island Music Hall of Fame.

The Sting and The Way We Were. Hamlisch made history in 1974 by winning three Academy Awards in one evening for the motion pictures The Sting and The Way We Were. These two films exhibit the extent of Hamlisch's range as a composer. The score for The Sting contains instrumental adaptation (and, some argue, exploitation) of the early twentieth century piano rag music by Scott Joplin. The theme, "The Entertainer," made number three on the Billboard Hot 100 music chart, and it brought modern attention to Joplin's music. In contrast, Hamlisch's romantic music and title song for the Streisand-Robert Redford film The Way We Were demonstrates his ability to write memorable songs with a pop sensibility. Although his critics diminish the artistry of his songwriting talent, his music has enjoyed great popular appeal. He has composed original scores for more than forty films, including Sophie's Choice, Ordinary People, Ice Castles, and Bananas.

A Chorus Line. In 1975 director-choreographer Michael Bennett gathered a group of Broadway gypsies (the nickname given to dancers who move from one show to another), and he asked them to talk about their lives, their experiences, and why they became dancers. He gave the taped recordings of their answers to James Kirkwood and Nicholas Dante to write the book for a new musical, A Chorus Line. With Hamlisch as composer and Edward Kleban as lyricist, the resulting show was the longest-running musical in Broadway history (until Cats surpassed it in 1997), and it was nominated for twelve Tony Awards, winning nine. It also received the 1976 Pulitzer Prize for Drama, the London Evening Standard's Best Musical award, and five L.A. Drama Critics' Awards.

Two aspects of A Chorus Line made it outstanding: its format and its theme. A Chorus Line was a landmark, a groundbreaking concept, or frame story, musical. Stephen Sondheim's Company (1970) opened the door, but A Chorus Line brought the form to fruition. The concept musical presents a series of scenes, or episodes, centered around a theme. Although this is a common type of plot for plays (called episodic), it had not been used successfully in musicals. For A Chorus Line, the theme is individuality versus group conformity, explored through, ironically, the dancers who present, in their anonymity, the great chorus numbers of musical theater. The fact that the audience gets to know and care about each dancer as an individual greatly contrasts with the final glitzy number, "One," in which the dancers become anonymous automatons, dressed alike and moving in unison. Hamlisch and Kleban's songs received both praise and criticism for their role in moving the drama along and in creating a miniature biography for each character. A Chorus Line's most popular song, "What I Did for Love," has been sharply criticized for not belonging in the show, and even Hamlisch concedes it does not fit as well as the other songs. Critic Joseph Swain commented that the song does not fit the musical's form or premise, explaining that the show is not about dancing but about people who happen to be dancers.

Musical Legacy

Although he has suffered some show-business failures, Hamlisch was one of only two people (the other being Richard Rodgers) who has won all four major entertainment awards (Academy, Grammy, Emmy, and Tony) as well as the Pulitzer Prize. Hamlisch's work has earned him three Academy Awards, four Grammy Awards, four Emmy Awards, a Tony Award, three Golden Globes, and numerous other awards, including the Pulitzer Prize. In 2006 the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers (ASCAP) awarded him the Richard Rodgers Award for lifetime achievement in musical theater.

Jill Stapleton-Bergeron

Further Reading

Hamlisch, Marvin, and Gerald C. Gardner. The Way I Was. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1992. Hamlisch's autobiography details his career and includes humorous anecdotes about his work and experiences.

Laufe, Abe. Broadway's Greatest Musicals. Rev. ed. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1977. An indispensable survey of musical theater from its beginnings through most of the 1970's. The appendix outlines the authors, producers, casts, and songs for long-running musicals.

Mordden, Ethan. The Happiest Corpse I've Ever Seen. New York: Palgrave MacMillan, 2004. Mordden traces the development of the American musical from 1978 to 2003, and he covers Hamlisch's work in musical theater beyond A Chorus Line.

Swain, Joseph. "Frame Story as Musical." In The Broadway Musical: A Critical and Musical Survey. 2d ed. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2002. Swain's award-winning book examines musical drama in terms of how plot, character, and conflict are developed through the music.

Viagas, Robert, Baayork Lee, and Thommie Walsh. On the Line: The Creation of "A Chorus Line." New York: William Morrow, 1990. Written by three of the original cast members, this book is a memoir of their personal experiences in creating the landmark musical A Chorus Line.

See also: Bergman, Alan; Joplin, Scott; Mercer, Johnny; Rodgers, Richard; Simon, Carly; Streisand, Barbra.

M. C. Hammer

American rapper

Hammer was the face of pop rap in the late 1980's and early 1990's, known for his catchy hooks, his catch phrases, and his trademark "Hammer pants."

Born: March 30, 1962; Oakland, California
Also known as: Stanley Kirk Burrell (birth name); Hammer

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Feel My Power, 1987; Let's Get It Started, 1988; Please Hammer, Don't Hurt 'Em, 1990; Too Legit to Quit, 1991; The Funky Headhunter, 1994; Inside Out, 1995; Family Affair, 1998; Active Duty, 2001.

The Life

Stanley Kirk Burrell was born March 30, 1962, in Oakland, California. He was given the nickname Hammer by baseball player Reggie Jackson, who thought Burrell resembled "Hammerin'" Hank Aaron. Hammer joined the Navy after graduating from high school, and when he was discharged, he turned to music. His debut album, Feel My Power, was released on his label, Oaktown Records, and rereleased by Capitol Records in 1988 as Let's Get It Started.

Hammer's 1990 release, Please Hammer, Don't Hurt 'Em, brought him to the attention of mainstream music audiences. On the strength of singles "U Can't Touch This," "Have You Seen Her," and "Pray," it became the first hip-hop album to reach diamond certification. In 1991 Hammer dropped the M. C. and released Too Legit to Quit, which, although it sold more than three million copies, was considered a failure by Capitol Records.

For his fourth album, The Funky Headhunter, Hammer turned to gangsta rap. He also faced the first of two copyright-infringement lawsuits in the early 1990's. He signed a contract with Death Row Records in 1995, and he left the label after rapper Tupac Shakur's death in 1996. In April, 1996, Hammer filled for bankruptcy.

Although he continued to record throughout the 1990's and early 2000's, Hammer never reached the level of success of his early career. In 1997 he began ministerial training and hosting a show on the Trinity Broadcasting Network. He also appeared in the first season of VH1's televised The Surreal Life.

The Music

Hammer's music was considered pop rap, because it was sounded more like pop than hip-hop. His big hits relied heavily on sampling of other songs, an aspect of his music that drew criticism from other hip-hop artists, including LL Cool J and Ice Cube.

"U Can't Touch This." The first hit from Hammer's Please Hammer, Don't Hurt 'Em album was "U Can't Touch This," based on a sample from the Rick James song "Superfreak." The lyrics are typical rap boasting, indicating that no one can rap (or dance) as well as Hammer. "U Can't Touch This" became Hammer's musical signature, and it has been the source of numerous parodies over the years. It also introduced the catch phrase "Stop, Hammer time," which, along with the parachute pants (often referred to as "Hammer pants"), became a part of popular fashion. The song peaked at number eight on record charts, and it was Hammer's first significant hit.

"Too Legit to Quit." The title track from Hammer's album Too Legit to Quit was his response to the criticism leveled at the rapper following the success of Please Hammer, Don't Hurt 'Em. The lyrics continue the standard boasting while mixing in defiance directed at his critics. The verses use a sparse accompaniment, primarily a drum machine, synthesizer bass, and muted electric guitar fills. The chorus adds a sampled horn section, multiple male voices repeating "Too legit, too legit to quit," synthesizer punches, and a female voice intoning "hey" and "too legit" over the rest. "Too Legit to Quit" reached number six on the charts. The video also featured appearances by numerous professional athletes (including José Canseco, Jerry Rice, Ronnie Lott, Roger Craig) and the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders.

"Addams Groove." "Addams Groove" appeared on Hammer's album Too Legit to Quit and on the sound track for the motion picture The Addams Family (1991). The song features Hammer rapping a story about interacting with the characters from the film as his neighbors. The subtle message continues one of the themes of the Too Legit to Quit album, which is expressing individuality in the face of criticism. He says that even though the members of the Addams Family are unconventional, he respects them for not bowing to the pressure to conform. The musical accompaniment features a drum machine, synthesizer punches, and a sampled horn section. "Addams Groove" peaked at number seven on the charts, and it was Hammer's fifth Top 10 hit.

M. C. Hammer. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

"Pumps and a Bump." The first single from Hammer's gangsta rap album The Funky Headhunter marked a change in lyrical direction. While most of his previous hits were either bragging dance songs or pop ballads, "Pumps and a Bump" was a highly sexual song about women with large backsides. There are at least two recorded versions of the song released by Hammer, the edited radio release and the nonedited version with more explicit language. There were also two videos shot for the song. The first version was banned from MTV because of footage of the rapper in tight swimwear that was deemed obscene by the censors. The second version covers up the rapper almost entirely (long pants, long-sleeved shirts, boots, and a hat) and includes cameo appearances by Deion Sanders making arrangements with various women to appear in the video. The song, like the album, did not fare as well as his previous hits, and it reached only number twenty-six on the charts.

Musical Legacy

While Hammer's rise to fame in the late 1980's and early 1990's and its accompanying wealth led many hip-hop artists to pursue the wider popular music market, his rapid fall was a reminder that the popular music industry can be fickle. Perhaps his most lasting influence on hip-hop is expanding the use and role of sampling. He was one of the first to use larger, more recognizable samples rather than simply mixing rhythm tracks from early funk and soul records. This trend was followed by rappers such as Eminem and Sean Combs. Hammer was also a pop culture icon in the early 1990's. In addition to his influence on music and fashions, Hammer had a cartoon series called Hammerman.

Eric S. Strother

Further Reading

George, Nelson. Hip-Hop America. New York: Penguin, 2005. This book discusses the role of hip-hop in American society as an expression of African American youth.

Light, Alan. The Vibe History of Hip-Hop. Medford, N.J.: Plexus, 1999. This collection of essays traces the development of the hip-hop genre.

Ogbar, Jeffrey O. G. Hip-Hop Revolution: The Culture and Politics of Rap. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas. 2007. In this cultural history, the author explores negative perceptions and stereotypes of hip-hop.

Reeves, Marcus. Somebody Scream! Rap Music's Rise to Prominence in the Aftershock of Black Power. New York: Faber & Faber, 2008. Examines rap's rise to prominence during the 1980's and 1990's by placing significant artists within a larger social and political context.

See also: Eminem; Ice Cube; LL Cool J.

Oscar Hammerstein II

American musical-theater lyricist and librettist

As a librettist and lyricist, Hammerstein made the words of the song a natural part of the plot.

Born: July 12, 1895; New York, New York
Died: August 23, 1960; Doylestown, Pennsylvania
Also known as: Oscar Greeley Clendenning Hammerstein II (full name)

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (lyrics and libretto unless otherwise stated): Jimmie, 1920 (music by Herbert P. Stothart; lyrics with Otto Harbach; libretto with Harbach and Frank Mandel); Tickle Me, 1920 (music by Stothart; lyrics and libretto with Harbach and Mandel); Always You, 1921 (music by Stothart); Daffy Dill, 1922 (music by Stothart; libretto with Guy Bolton); Queen o' Hearts, 1922 (music by Lewis E. Gensler and Dudley Wilkinson; lyrics with Sydney Mitchell; libretto with Mandel); Mary Jane McKane, 1923 (music by Vincent Youmans and Stothart; libretto by William Carey Duncan); Wildflower, 1923 (music by Youmans and Stothart; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Rose Marie, 1924 (music by Rudolf Friml and Stothart; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Song of the Flame, 1925 (music by George Gershwin and Stothart; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Sunny, 1925 (music by Jerome Kern; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); The Desert Song, 1926 (music by Sigmund Romberg; lyrics and libretto with Harbach and Mandel); The Wild Rose, 1926 (music by Friml; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Golden Dawn, 1927 (music by Emmerich Kálmán and Stothart; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Show Boat, 1927 (music by Kern; based on Edna Ferber's novel); Good Boy, 1928 (music by Stothart; lyrics by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby; libretto with Harbach and Henry Myers); The New Moon, 1928 (music by Romberg; lyrics and libretto with Mandel and Laurence Schwab); Rainbow, 1928 (music by Youmans; libretto by Laurence Stallings); Sweet Adeline, 1929 (music by Kern); East Wind, 1931 (music by Romberg; libretto with Mandel); Free for All, 1931 (music by Richard A. Whiting; libretto with Schwab); The Gang's All Here, 1931 (music by Gensler; lyrics by Owen Murphy and Robert A. Simon; libretto with Morrie Ryskind and Russel Crouse); Music in the Air, 1932 (music by Kern); Ball at the Savoy, 1933 (music by Paul Abraham; based on Alfred Grünwald and Fritz Löhner-Beda's novel); Three Sisters, 1934 (music by Kern); May Wine, 1935 (music by Romberg; libretto by Mandel); Gentlemen Unafraid, 1938 (music by Kern; lyrics and libretto with Harbach); Very Warm for May, 1939 (music by Kern); Sunny River, 1941 (music by Romberg); Carmen Jones, 1943 (based on Georges Bizet's opera); Oklahoma!, 1943 (music by Richard Rodgers; libretto by Hammerstein; based on Lynn Riggs's play Green Grow the Lilacs); Carousel, 1945 (music by Rodgers; based on Ferenc Molnár's play Liliom); Allegro, 1947 (music by Rodgers); South Pacific, 1949 (music by Rodgers; libretto with Joshua Logan; based on James A. Michener's novel Tales of the South Pacific); The King and I, 1951 (music by Rodgers; libretto by Hammerstein); Me and Juliet, 1953 (music by Rodgers; libretto by Hammerstein); Pipe Dream, 1955 (music by Rodgers; libretto by Hammerstein); Cinderella, 1957 (music by Rodgers); Flower Drum Song, 1958 (music by Rodgers; libretto with Joseph Fields; based on C. Y. Lee's novel); The Sound of Music, 1959 (music by Rodgers; libretto by Howard Lindsay and Crouse); A Grand Night for Singing, 1993 (music by Rodgers).

SONGS (lyrics): "The Last Time I Saw Paris," 1941 (music by Kern; from the film Lady Be Good); "It Might as Well Be Spring," 1945 (music by Rodgers; from the film State Fair).

The Life

Oscar Greeley Clendenning Hammerstein (HAHM-mur-stin) II was born into a theatrical family. His father, William Hammerstein, managed the Victoria, the leading vaudeville house in New York City; his mother was Alice Nemo. His grandfather, Oscar Hammerstein, was an opera impresario who built theaters; Arthur Hammerstein, an uncle, was a Broadway producer. Hammerstein was first taken to the theater when he was four, and the lights, the colors, the music, and the actors made a lasting impression. He wrote his first story, "The Adventures of a Penny," when he was twelve. At age seventeen Hammerstein entered Columbia University, where he excelled in his English classes and was encouraged to become a writer. In 1915 Hammerstein became involved in Columbia's annual Varsity Show, as an actor playing a poet. The following year, he helped write a few routines for the libretto, in addition to playing a black-faced comedian. Bowing to pressure from his father, who did not want his son involved in the theater, Hammerstein enrolled in Columbia Law School; however, he retained his enthusiasm for the Varsity Show. While a law student, he wrote for the Varsity Show Home, James (1917) with Herman Axelrod.

During his second year at law school, Hammerstein took a job at a law firm, hoping practical experience would initiate enthusiasm for a law career. He left his job and law school in 1917, and he persuaded Uncle Arthur to give him a job as a stagehand. Soon convinced of his nephew's ability, Arthur elevated Hammerstein to production stage manager, a permanent position on the staff. Hammerstein married Myra Finn on August 22, 1917. They had two children and divorced in 1928. Hammerstein married Dorothy Blanchard Johnson on May 13, 1929; they had one child.

Hammerstein's first professional work was a song for the musical Furs and Frills (1917). Although his first play, The Light (1919), ran only five performances, his first musical, Always You, for which he wrote the libretto and lyrics, with music by Herbert Stothart, was well received by the critics. This success led to Tickle Me, with Hammerstein writing the book and lyrics with Otto Harbach, the first of Hammerstein's collaborators. Through the 1920's and 1930's, Hammerstein collaborated with composers Vincent Youmans, Sigmund Romberg, and Jerome Kern, writing operettas and musical shows.

Hammerstein's career had its ups and downs. It was at a low point when he first teamed with Richard Rodgers to turn Lynn Rigg's play Green Grow the Lilacs (1931) into the hit musical Oklahoma! Their collaboration lasted sixteen years and resulted in nine Broadway musicals, some becoming classics of the American theater. While working on The Sound of Music, Hammerstein was diagnosed with cancer. He died at his Highland Farm, Hammerstein's favorite place to work, in Doylestown, Pennsylvania. In tribute to Hammerstein, the lights of Broadway were shut off for three minutes.

The Music

Although Hammerstein was not a musician, he did play the piano and, according to Rodgers, had a "superb sense of form." Hammerstein knew about the architecture of a song and what worked musically with his words. Through the libretto, Hammerstein created a cohesive plot and believable characters. The lyrics for the songs reflected the emotions of his characters.

Early Works. When Hammerstein's first full-length play, The Light (1919), flopped, he turned to musicals. In Always You, the lyrics were good, but the libretto was weak. Hammerstein realized that all the beautiful songs, talented casts, jokes, and expensive production details depended for success solely on a well-constructed plot. He then teamed up with Harbach, a librettist, and with him Hammerstein enjoyed a series of successful shows. In the process, Hammerstein learned how to write. Hammerstein often said that he was born into the theatrical world with two gold spoons in his mouth: one was his family connections, the other was Harbach. Harbach taught Hammerstein to think a long time, rather than rush to get words down on paper. Harbach had two rules: the story must have interest, and all the elements must be integrated in the show. Songs, jokes, and dialogue had to be germane to the plot. With Harbach Hammerstein wrote Wildflower, with music by Vincent Youmans, and Rose Marie, with music by Rudolf Friml. However, Hammerstein was beginning to break away from the formula of what a musical should be. Rose Marie was a decided departure from the standard musical comedy formula of boy meets girl, complications ensue, boy gets girl, Rose Marie had a murder, and it ended with just two people on stage, rather than the full cast and chorus. Another distinction was that the musical numbers, as noted in the program, were "such an integral part of the action" that they were not listed separately.

The Desert Song. This 1926 show marked the beginning of an association with composer Romberg. With its exotic setting, its dashing hero, and its romance, The Desert Song was in the tradition of the European operetta, yet it was based on the historical uprising of the Riffs in Morocco. Hammerstein and Romberg later wrote The New Moon, generally considered the last of the great American operettas and noted for its memorable love songs.

Show Boat. Based on Edna Ferber's novel, Show Boat is considered the first modern American musical play. Although Ferber believed that it was a bad idea to attempt to turn her novel into a stage musical, Hammerstein did just that. He eliminated characters and scenes, developed other characters, and handled the racial aspects subtly and effectively. The dramatic conflict was strong enough to stand as a play without the music, but the music enhanced the story and gave it deeper meaning. As a musical play, the songs grew out of the plot. Six of the songs are regarded as standards. The song "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man" integrates elements of the plot. It is first sung in an upbeat fashion; later, the character of Julie sings it as a lament of lifelong love. The song carries the plot forward as Julie recognizes the significance of Nola, another character, singing it. Working with the novel, Hammerstein recognized that Ferber had used the Mississippi River to unify the plot. He did the same with his song "Ol' Man River." When Ferber heard the song, she said that "my hair stood on end, tears came to my eyes."

Following Show Boat, Hammerstein had other hits, but it seemed his style of musical was becoming passé. Many believed Hammerstein's career was finished, but that was only until he began collaborating with Rodgers.

Oklahoma! This show, with its fusion of story, song, and dance, is a landmark in the history of American musical theater. Initially, Hammerstein and Rodgers had problems selling the show to backers because it was so different. Previous ideas of what a musical should be were changed the moment the curtain went up on a stage with one old woman. Working from the original play, a folk comedy, Hammerstein gave the libretto more of a plot, and he added the character of Will Parker to create a comic subplot. As with other musicals with Rodgers, Hammerstein wrote the lyrics first, often agonizing over the words and images. When Hammerstein wrote, his lyrics had "dummy" melodies that he sang in a minor key. All listeners agreed the tunes were terrible, but the words were lovely. "Oh What a Beautiful Mornin'" took three weeks to write, yet the lyric, with its simplicity and imagery, drawn from the natural setting of the play, was described by Rodgers as "so right." The songs expressed the moods and situations of the play, using vocabulary appropriate to everyday speech. Hammerstein also solved the problem of how to write a fresh, new love song by having the singers describe what not to do, lest "People Will Say We're in Love." With its honesty, resolve, and enthusiasm for the future, Oklahoma! was particularly welcome during the dark days of World War II.

South Pacific. The genesis of South Pacific was two short stories by James Michener, "Our Heroine" and "Fo' Dollah," in his Tales of the South Pacific (1947). Hammerstein used characters from both stories to create the libretto. In the main plot, the developing love between the French plantation owner, Emile de Becque, and the naïve nurse, Nellie Forbush, is complicated by her prejudice over his biracial children. This complements the secondary plot of Lieutenant Cable and his love for Liat, a beautiful island girl. In Hammerstein's lyric

Oscar Hammerstein II. (Library of Congress)

"You've Got to Be Carefully Taught," Cable expresses how racial bigotry is ingrained in children. The song caused some problems in Southern cities of the United States, but Hammerstein and Rodgers refused to take it out of the show. South Pacific was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Drama in 1950.

Carousel and The King and I. Hammerstein had other successful shows with Rodgers, including Carousel, for which he took the dark play Liliom (1909) by Ferenc Molnár, relocated the action from Budapest to Maine, and provided a hopeful ending. In Allegro, Hammerstein attempted to write an Everyman musical, following the life of the main character. It was Hammerstein's first original book for his partnership with Rodgers. As a modern morality play, it shows the negative effects of a fast-moving, increasingly superficial society on personal integrity. Critically applauded, it was not an audience favorite. Later, however, The King and I was. Hammerstein was never as good at writing an original script as he was at adaptations, such as with Margaret Landon's book Anna and the King of Siam (1944). Although he followed Landon's plot, he developed the characters, particularly the king, allowing the audience to see a conflicted man behind the regal exterior.

Other Works. "The Last Time I Saw Paris" expresses Hammerstein's sadness at the German occupation of Paris in 1940 during World War II, and it won an Academy Award. In addition, "It Might as Well Be Spring," from State Fair (1945), won the Academy Award. Carmen Jones was set to Georges Bizet's music for Carmen (1875) and used the same characters, but Hammerstein's libretto and lyrics had an American flavor, and they demonstrated Hammerstein's sensitivity to racial issues. He eliminated the operatic recitatives and focused on the major arias, creating songs of poetry and power. The location was changed from Spain to the South and the characters shifted from Gypsies to blacks.

Musical Legacy

Hammerstein did not set out consciously to break conventions; rather, he wrote a play simply because he liked the subject matter or the characters. Nevertheless, Hammerstein, with his collaborators, created a new type of musical play. Although he had written successful operettas, he worked toward changing the traditional audience expectations of lively dancing, skimpy plot, and formulaic songs. Hammerstein introduced uncomfortable topics in musicals: murder in Rose Marie, racism in Show Boat, wife abuse in Carousel, prejudice in South Pacific. His musical plays were more than entertainments; they had a point to convey. Never "preachy," his shows often emphasized the importance of people of different races understanding and tolerating each other. The shows were uplifting, showing how good people experience life's hardships and eventually triumph over them.

The song "You'll Never Walk Alone" is used in Carousel initially to comfort the character of Julie and later to inspire her daughter, showing that hope and love are part of her life. Irving Berlin believed it was the greatest song Hammerstein ever wrote. With its inspirational words, the song is often sung at weddings, funerals, and graduations. It has even become the rallying cry of European Football Clubs, as thousands who might never have heard of Hammerstein sing his words at the top of their voices.

Marcia B. Dinneen

Further Reading

Citron, Stephen. The Wordsmiths: Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Alan Jay Lerner. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995. An examination of Hammerstein, with an emphasis on his work with Harbach and Kern.

Fordin, Hugh. Getting to Know Him: A Biography of Oscar Hammerstein II. New York: Random House, 1977. With an introduction by Stephen Sondheim, the biography includes background information on the creation of Hammerstein's lyrics and librettos.

Hammerstein, Oscar. Lyrics. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1949. In addition to the text of songs, the author includes a special section on writing lyrics.

Hischak, Thomas S. Boy Loses Girl: Broadway's Librettists. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2002. Chapter three shows how Hammerstein "led the American musical into maturity."

Mordden, Ethan. Beautiful Mornin': The Broadway Musical in the 1940's. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999. Includes interesting material on the creation and presentation of Oklahoma!, Carousel, and Allegro.

Taylor, Deems. Some Enchanted Evenings: The Story of Rodgers and Hammerstein. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1953. A renowned music critic provides background as well as inside information on Hammerstein and his collaborators, particularly Rodgers.

See also: Andrews, Dame Julie; Cohan, George M.; Coward, Sir Noël; Fiedler, Arthur; Gershwin, George; Hart, Lorenz; Horne, Lena; Kern, Jerome; Loewe, Frederick; Robeson, Paul; Rodgers, Richard; Romberg, Sigmund; Sondheim, Stephen.

Lionel Hampton

American jazz composer, singer, vibraphonist, drummer, and pianist

One of the first jazz vibraphonists, Hampton was prominently featured in Benny Goodman's quartet, one of the first mainstream musical groups to be racially integrated. He also led a long-lived and popular post-swing-era big band.

Born: April 20, 1908; Louisville, Kentucky
Died: August 31, 2002; New York, New York
Also known as: Lionel Leo Hampton (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: The Original Stardust, 1947; Moonglow, 1950; The Blues Ain't News to Me, 1951; Crazy Hamp, 1953; Hamp!, 1953; Hamp in Paris, 1953; Jazztime Paris, 1953; The King of the Vibes, 1953; Lionel Hampton in Paris, 1953; The Lionel Hampton Quartet, 1953; Rockin' and Groovin', 1953; Flyin' Home, 1954; Hallelujah Hamp, 1954; Hamp's Big Four, 1954; The High and the Mighty, 1954; Hot Mallets, 1954; Lionel Hampton, 1954; Lionel Hampton Plays Love Songs, 1954; The One and Only Lionel Hampton, 1954; Swingin' with Hamp, 1954; Crazy Rhythm, 1955; G. Krupa—L. Hampton—T. Wilson, 1955 (with Gene Krupa and Teddy Wilson); The Genius of Lionel Hampton, 1955; Hamp and Getz, 1955 (with Stan Getz); Hamp Roars Again, 1955; The Hampton-Tatum-Rich Trio, 1955 (with Art Tatum and Buddy Rich); Jam Session in Paris, 1955; Jazz in Paris: Lionel Hampton and His New French Sound, 1955; Lionel Hampton and His Giants, 1955; Lionel Hampton Big Band, 1955; Tatum-Hampton-Rich . . . Again, 1955 (with Tatum and Rich); Travelin' Band, 1955; Hamp in Hi Fi, 1956; Jazz Flamenco, 1956; Lionel Hampton Swings, 1956; Lionel Hampton's Jazz Giants, 1956; Look!, 1956; Paris Session 1956, 1956; Golden Vibes, 1958; Lionel . . . Plays Drums, Vibes, Piano, 1958; The Many Sides of Lionel Hampton, 1958; Hamp's Big Band, 1959; Silver Vibes, 1960; All That Twistin' Jazz, 1961; The Exciting Hamp in Europe, 1961; Soft Vibes, Soaring Strings, 1961; Many Splendored Vibes, 1962; Bossa Nova Jazz, 1963; The Great Hamp and Little T, 1963 (with Charlie Teagarden); Lionel Hampton in Japan, 1963; A Taste of Hamp, 1964; You Better Know It, 1964; Hamp Stamps, 1967; Newport Uproar, 1967; Steppin' Out, Vol. 1, 1969; Where Could I Be?, 1971; Please Sunrise, 1973; Stop! I Don't Need No Sympathy, 1974; Transition, 1974; Blackout, 1977; Blues in Toulouse, 1977; Giants of Jazz, Vol. 1, 1977; Jazzmaster, 1977; Lionel Hampton and His Jazz Giants '77, 1977; Lionel Hampton Presents Buddy Rich, 1977 (with Rich); Lionel Hampton Presents Gerry Mulligan, 1977 (with Gerry Mulligan); Who's Who in Jazz Presents Lionel Hampton, 1977; Alive and Jumping, 1978; As Time Goes By, 1978; Hamp in Haarlem, 1979; Made in Japan, 1982; Air Mail Special, 1983; Sentimental Journey, 1985; Cookin' in the Kitchen, 1988; Mostly Blues, 1988; Mostly Ballads, 1989; For the Love of Music, 1994; Lionel Hampton and His Jazz Giants, 1994; My Man, 1994; Rhythm Rhythm, 1994; Fun, 1995; Hamp's Boogie Woogie, 1995; Old Fashioned Swing, 1995; All Star Jazz Sessions, Vol. 2, 1996; Lionel Hampton and His Orchestra in Europe, 1996; Just One of Those Things, 1999; Jazz Gallery: Lionel Hampton, Vol. 2, 2000; Lionel Hampton Jazz Showcase, 2000; Open House: All-Star Session, Vol. 1, 2000; Outrageous, 2000; Ring Dem Vibes, 2001.

SINGLES: "Drum Stomp," 1937; "Down Home Jump," 1938; "Flying Home," 1942; "Hamp's Boogie Woogie," 1944; "Midnight Sun," 1947; "Mingus Fingers," 1947; "I Only Have Eyes for You," 1953; "Real Crazy," 1953.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Method for Vibraharp, Xylophone, and Marimba (1967); The New Lionel Hampton Vibraphone Method (1981); Hamp: An Autobiography (1989).

The Life

Lionel Leo Hampton was born in Louisville, Kentucky, and he was raised in Chicago by his mother after his father disappeared in World War I. As a youth, he played drums in the Chicago Defender Boys' Band, a band organized by the black newspaper that carried many jazz features. In 1928, after graduating from high school, Hampton moved to Los Angeles, where he played with several West Coast bands, including Les Hite's group. This group was hired as a backing band for Louis Armstrong's recordings in 1930 at NBC Studios. During one of these recording dates, Armstrong encouraged Hampton to take up the vibraphone, a relatively new instrument and one scarcely heard in the jazz world at that point.

Hampton took Armstrong's recommendation seriously, and he began performing on the vibraphone during those same recording sessions. Although he had some limited piano training, including a few lessons from Jelly Roll Morton, Hampton transferred easily to the vibraphone.

Hampton continued to perform in California through the mid-1930's, taking time to study music at the University of Southern California. He formed a nine-piece combo that played at the Paradise Club in Los Angeles, and it was this group that Columbia Records producer John Hammond heard one evening in 1936. The following night, Hammond returned with Benny Goodman, who was so impressed by Hampton's playing that he jumped on stage to play along. The next morning, Goodman brought Hampton to a recording studio, and along with Gene Krupa and Teddy Wilson, they recorded several pieces. Three weeks later, Goodman invited Hampton to join his band.

Hampton played with the Goodman band from 1936 to 1940. He was the second African American to join the group (the pianist Teddy Wilson was the first), though both he and Wilson performed exclusively in the small groups with Goodman and Krupa. Goodman encouraged Hampton to make his own recordings, and the vibraphonist organized a series of recordings with various sidemen for Victor between 1937 and 1940. Hampton participated in Goodman's landmark Carnegie Hall concert of 1938, performing several pieces with the quartet. The quartet performances were widely regarded as highlights of the concert. Shortly after this performance, several of Goodman's stars departed, including Krupa. Hampton briefly replaced Krupa on drums, becoming the first musician to break the color barrier in big band jazz.

In 1940 Goodman briefly dissolved his group, and Hampton took the opportunity to form his own band. He began with several musicians that had recorded with him at his last Victor session, including Marshal Royal, Karl George, Ray Perry (on saxophone and violin), and Irving Ashby. He also hired several jazz stars, such as Dexter Gordon on tenor and Milt Buckner on piano, who is credited with inventing the locked-hands (block chord) style that became popular during the bebop era. At first, Hampton and his band were not successful, especially since the first tour took them through the South. Once they reached New York, however, audiences were more receptive. Few other big bands enjoyed the remarkable success Hampton's band did when the swing era ended. Part of his success came from Hampton's embracing of musical styles other than swing, ranging from early rhythm and blues and boogie-woogie to bebop and modern jazz. Even though the band was long-lived, lasting in various forms through the 1990's, Hampton had only a single hit: 1942's "Flying Home."

The Lionel Hampton Orchestra performed at many important events, including the inaugural balls of two presidents (Harry Truman's ball in 1949 and Dwight Eisenhower's ball in 1953). By 1953 Hampton had earned nearly one million dollars, and he played more than two hundred engagements a year, including a tour of Europe. He accomplished this success in spite of the fact that the band never held a long-term engagement (such as a hotel residency, the usual mark of success for a band) and had only one hit. In the 1970's, while continuing to lead his big band, Hampton formed a smaller band called Jazz Inner Circle. He toured with his groups into the 1990's. He authored several books, including Method for Vibraharp, Xylophone, and Marimba, The New Lionel Hampton Vibraphone Method, and an autobiography called Hamp: An Autobiography.

In his private life, Hampton was quiet and contemplative. He met Gladys Neal, a dressmaker, in 1929, and he married her in 1936. Their marriage lasted until Gladys's death thirty-four years later. The couple was active in politics, in the Civil Rights movement, and in supporting humanitarian causes. Hampton was a devout Christian, and he composed a religious piece called King David Suite based on his experiences traveling in Israel in 1956. He died of heart failure in 2002.

The Music

Hampton's appeal stemmed from his rambunctious energy, and many of his solos, which often lasted many choruses, were accented with his enthusiastic grunting. This energy had a strong effect on the musicians around him. Even after swing fell out of favor, Hampton and his band members stayed successful because they were masterful entertainers. Hampton was a technical master at the vibraphone, though his energy sometimes clouded his musical ideas. Harmonically, he generally stayed within the confines of standard swing-era progressions.

Hampton also made recordings, to varying degrees of success, that featured his piano playing, his drumming, and his voice. After he picked up the vibraphone, his piano playing was done in a two-fingered percussive style. He achieves remarkable effects, using only his index fingers, though this style is essentially limited. Hampton's drumming is characterized by his trademark exuberance, which sometimes disguises technical issues. He greatly enjoyed singing, and he modeled his performances after Armstrong's.

Early Works. Hampton first recorded in 1924 on drums. He performed the first recorded vibraphone solo in 1930, during Armstrong's recording "Memories of You." He also participated in radio broadcasts from the Cotton Club in California (with Armstrong).

Victor Recordings. Hampton's recordings for Victor comprised twenty-three sessions cut between 1937 and 1940. Hampton used varying sidemen in his groups, which were almost always called Lionel Hampton and His Orchestra. His sidemen included members from the groups of Goodman, Duke Ellington, and Count Basie. Hampton's Victor recordings were intended to compete with the Teddy Wilson-Billie Holiday recordings made for Brunswick Records (begun in 1935). However, the Hampton sessions were less successful than Wilson's.

Many of the inspired moments on these recordings come from Hampton's sidemen. Ziggy Elman, section trumpeter for Goodman, is featured on many pieces, and he contributes several excellent solos. Cootie Williams and Johnny Hodges, members of Ellington's orchestra, add a distinctive sound to "The Sun Will Shine Tonight" from the January 18, 1938, session. September 11, 1939, is widely regarded as one of the best sessions, and it features a young Gillespie playing with Coleman Hawkins and Charlie Christian (on his first recording), among others.

Lionel Hampton. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In addition to his vibraphone solos, which are plentiful, Hampton is showcased in several other ways on these recordings. He plays in his two-fingered piano style on several pieces ("China Stomp" is one of the best examples). He sings several times, including on "After You've Gone" and "In the Mood That I'm In." He also performs on drums on

"Drum Stomp." Hampton had the opportunity to play some original pieces during these recordings, including "Rock Hill Special," "Down Home Jump," and "Fiddle Diddle."

"Flying Home." This piece, a Hampton original, received its first treatment in 1939 with the Goodman Sextet. Hampton and his sidemen also recorded it during the February 26 small group session for Victor. These first two versions are relaxed, almost listless, hardly foreshadowing the raucous big band rendition that would make the charts. In 1942 the pianist for Hampton's big band, Milt Buckner, arranged the piece, and the Hampton band recorded it that same year. This version features a trumpet solo by Ernie Royal that echoes the explosive power of Hampton and a tenor solo by Illinois Jacquet that was emulated by countless rhythm-and-blues and rock-and-roll tenor players in the following years. This recording, Hampton's first and only hit, was rehashed many times on records and in performances throughout the band's lifespan, sometimes under different guises (such as 1949's "Wee Albert"). The song was also popular among other big bands, and it was recorded by several bands in the years following 1940.

"Mingus Fingers." This 1947 piece represented Hampton's short foray into bebop. The piece, written by the bassist Charles Mingus when he was only twenty-five, was more complex and unorthodox music than the Hampton band was accustomed to playing. Though Mingus, who played with Hampton's band from 1947 to 1948, would move on to a fruitful career as a jazz composer, "Mingus Fingers" was a fragmented piece ill-suited for the Hampton band. It was the reaction of the band and the public to this piece that turned Hampton back toward more popular styles, including rhythm and blues and boogie-woogie.

Musical Legacy

Hampton was essentially the first and only important vibraphone player until Milt Jackson, a bop player. Though Red Norvo had experimented with the instrument in the 1920's, it was Hampton who transformed the instrument from a novelty into an exciting medium for improvisation. Hampton left behind a staggering number of recordings. His best are those with the Benny Goodman groups, in which he exhibits a fine technical command over his instrument and cohesive musical ideas.

He received numerous honorary doctorates, including his first in 1953 from Allen University in Columbia, South Carolina. In 1983, the music school at the University of Idaho in Moscow, Idaho, was renamed the Lionel Hampton School of Music in honor of the jazz musician. The school also renamed its international jazz festival for Hampton.

Sarah Caissie Provost

Further Reading

Condon, Eddie. Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1956. A chapter on Hampton gives biographical details and offers an assessment of his music.

Dance, Stanley. The World of Swing. New York: Da Capo Press, 1979. In an interview, Hampton recalls his life in jazz until 1972. Includes illustrations.

Hampton, Lionel, with James Haskins. Hamp: An Autobiography. New York: Amistad, 1989. Hampton recounts his life and musical escapades in this engaging autobiography. Includes a discography and illustrations.

Oliphant, Dave. "Other Black Bands." In The Early Swing Era, 1930 to 1941. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2002. Details on the music and the musicians who recorded on Hampton's sessions for Victor. Includes illustrations.

Schuller, Gunther. "The Great Black Bands." In The Swing Era: The Development of Jazz, 1930-1945. New York: Oxford University Press, 1968. The author offers a somewhat critical, although fair, analysis of Hampton's improvisations and his work as a bandleader. Includes discography.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Basie, Count; Brown, Clifford; Burton, Gary; Carter, Benny; Christian, Charlie; Cole, Nat King; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Ellington, Duke; Getz, Stan; Goodman, Benny; Gordon, Dexter; Hawkins, Coleman; Holiday, Billie; Jones, Quincy; Mingus, Charles; Montgomery, Wes; Navarro, Fats; Peterson, Oscar; Puente, Tito; Smith, Bessie; Washington, Dinah.

Herbie Hancock

American jazz pianist, keyboardist, synthesizer player, guitarist, and songwriter, and film-score composer

Hancock incorporates into his personal modern jazz piano style elements from blues, rhythm-and-blues, rock and roll, world, and classical music. As a composer, he wrote several significant standards for the jazz repertoire.

Born: April 12, 1940; Chicago, Illinois
Also known as: Herbert Jeffrey Hancock (full name)
Member of: The Donald Byrd-Pepper Adams Quintet; the Miles Davis Quintet; the Herbie Hancock Trio; the Herbie Hancock Quartet; V.S.O.P.

Principal works

FILM SCORES: Blow-Up, 1966; The Spook Who Sat by the Door, 1973; Death Wish, 1974; A Soldier's Story, 1984; Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling, 1986; 'Round Midnight, 1986; Colors, 1988; Action Jackson, 1988; Harlem Nights, 1989; Livin' Large, 1991; Pioneers for Peace: American Kosen Rufu, 2007.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Takin' Off, 1962; Inventions and Dimensions, 1963; My Point of View, 1963; Empyrean Isles, 1964; Succotash, 1964 (with Willie Bobo); Maiden Voyage, 1965; Hear O Israel, 1968; The Prisoner, 1968; Speak Like a Child, 1968; Fat Albert Rotunda, 1969; Mwandishi, 1970; Crossings, 1971; Sextant, 1972; Head Hunters, 1973; Death Wish, 1974; Dedication, 1974; Thrust, 1974; Love Me by Name, 1975; Man-Child, 1975; Kawaida, 1976; Secrets, 1976; The Herbie Hancock Trio, 1977 (with the Herbie Hancock Trio); Sunlight, 1977; Corea/Hancock, 1978 (with Chick Corea); Directstep, 1978; An Evening With Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea: In Concert, 1978 (with Corea); The Piano, 1978; Feets Don't Fail Me Now, 1979; Monster, 1980; Mr. Hands, 1980; Herbie Hancock Trio, 1981 (with the Herbie Hancock Trio); Magic Windows, 1981; Quartet, 1981 (with the Herbie Hancock Quartet); Lite Me Up, 1982; Future Shock, 1983; Sound System, 1984; Village Life, 1985 (with Foday Musa Suso); Jazzvisions: Jazz Africa, 1986 (with Foday Musa Suso); Third Plane, 1986 (with others); Perfect Machine, 1988; Songs for My Father, 1988; Dis Is Da Drum, 1995; The Originals, 1995; The New Standard, 1996; 1 + 1, 1997 (with Wayne Shorter); Gershwin's World, 1998; Directions in Music: Celebrating Miles Davis and John Coltrane, 2002 (with Roy Hargrove and Michael Brecker); Future 2 Future, 2001; Possibilities, 2005; Baraka, 2006 (with Albert "Tootie" Heath and Don Cherry); Piano Fiesta, 2006 (with Corea); River: The Joni Letters, 2007.

ALBUMS (with the Miles Davis Quintet): Seven Steps to Heaven, 1963; E.S.P., 1965; Miles Smiles, 1966; Nefertiti, 1967; Sorcerer, 1967; Water Babies, 1967; Filles de Kilimanjaro, 1968; Miles in the Sky, 1968; Big Fun, 1969; Bitches Brew, 1969; In a Silent Way, 1969; Live-Evil, 1970; A Tribute to Jack Johnson, 1970; Get Up with It, 1972; On the Corner, 1972.

ALBUMS (with V.S.O.P.): The Quintet, 1976; V.S.O.P., 1977; Live Under the Sky, 1979; Live Under the Sky, No. 2, 2002; Five Stars, 2007.

The Life

Herbert Jeffrey Hancock began studying piano at the age of seven. Four years later, he performed the first movement of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Piano Concerto in D Major (1788) with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. During his years at Hyde Park High School, Hancock became interested in jazz, and he formed a jazz ensemble. At Grinnell College in Iowa, where Hancock studied electrical engineering and composition from 1956 to 1960, he founded a seventeen-piece big band, he performed his works, and he had the opportunity to play with touring artists such as Coleman Hawkins and Donald Byrd.

After his return to Chicago, Hancock replaced Duke Pearson in the Donald Byrd-Pepper Adams Quintet, with which he had his first professional recording date in 1961. In the same year, at the urging of Byrd, Hancock moved to New York City, where the young pianist worked—next to Byrd and Adams—with Phil Woods and Oliver Nelson. Around the same time he signed a contract with Blue Note Records, resulting in his debut album Takin' Off.

Herbie Hancock. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In the summer of 1963, after having been contacted by Miles Davis for a test rehearsal, he was invited to join the trumpeter's quintet with Wayne Shorter, Ron Carter, and Tony Williams, and he stayed with the group until 1968. Independent of his engagement with Davis, Hancock led an active career as a leader on Blue Note Records and as a sideman on several labels under leaders such as Lee Morgan, Woody Shaw, Charles Tolliver, Sonny Rollins, Jackie McLean, Shorter, Sam Rivers, and Bobby Hutcherson. Hancock signed a contract with Warner Bros. Records, for which he recorded three albums between 1969 and 1971 with his sextet, expanding the jazz vocabulary with influences from rock, African, and Indian music.

In 1972 Hancock moved to Los Angeles, where he became increasingly interested in Buddhism. His growing involvement with electronic instruments and his participation in Davis's legendary Bitches Brew sessions resulted in one of the first jazz rock albums, the immensely successful Head Hunters. In the same year, Hancock formed V.S.O.P., a reunion band of the Miles Davis Quartet, with Freddie Hubbard substituting for Davis.

In 1983 the collaboration between Bill Laswell and Hancock began, bearing fruit with the platinum album Future Shock. The second album, Sound System, contained the Grammy Award-winning tune "Rockit." Laswell and Hancock reunited in 2001 for the hip-hop-influenced album Future 2 Future.

Through the 1990's, Hancock continued his explorations of electronic funk projects with Dis Is Da Drum. A testimonial to Hancock's increasing interest in fusing jazz with rock began with his album The New Standard, and it was reaffirmed with his tribute album to Joni Mitchell, River: The Joni Letters. Hancock's examination of the possibilities of stylistic crossovers among rock, African, and classical music was equally evident in the 1998 album Gershwin's World, which was the recipient of three Grammy Awards.

The Music

Musical Influences. Hancock became interested in jazz improvisation at the age of thirteen. Primarily self-taught in jazz, he acquired impressive knowledge of different jazz styles by transcribing solos from records. His major influences were Erroll Garner, Oscar Peterson, George Shearing, Dave Brubeck, Horace Silver, Davis, and Art Blakey and His Jazz Messengers. Hancock was captivated by the rich harmonic language of Bill Evans, by the unusual arrangements of Clare Fisher for the vocal ensemble Hi Lo, and the novel orchestra arrangements of Robert Farnon. After his move to New York, Hancock, while enrolled as a continuing student at Manhattan School of Music, discovered the music of European composers Maurice Ravel, Igor Stravinsky, Olivier Messiaen, Edgard Varèse, Karlheinz Stockhausen, and Krysztof Penderecki.

Hancock started his professional jazz career in the middle of the hard-bop movement, which was the major trademark of the Blue Note Records label. Consequently, Hancock used Byrd's funky rhythm-and-blues compositions such as "Pentecostal Feelings" from the Blue Note album Free Form, on which Hancock was a sideman, as the model for two early compositions of his own, "Watermelon Man" and "Driftin'" (both on his debut album Takin' Off). "Watermelon Man" became a hit in a cover version by Mongo Santamaria a year later, and subsequently it has been recorded by more than two hundred artists.

Hancock, however, would not limit himself to the funky rhythm-and-blues style. He explored modal jazz in his "Maiden Voyage," postbop in "Dolphin Dance" and "The Eye of the Hurricane," arranged ensemble jazz in "I Have a Dream," free forms in "Succotash" and "The Egg," and free jazz in "The Omen" (on Bobby Hutcherson's Happenings in 1963). During his Blue Note years, Hancock explored the possibilities of creating a concept album (Maiden Voyage on the topic of the sea and Speak Like a Child on the topic of childhood), a preoccupation to which he returned frequently from the 1990's onward.

Warner Bros. and Columbia. The strong influence that Davis had on the members of his quintet and the participants in his Bitches Brew project manifested itself in Hancock's output of the late 1960's and early 1970's. Hancock experimented with free forms and extensive improvisational tune structures based on ostinatos, for example, in "Ostinato (Suite for Angela)." He began to incorporate electronic instruments into his music. For his solo albums, he first used the Fender Rhodes piano (with altered sound, such as distortion and wah-wah) on Fat Albert Rotunda, Mwandishi, and Crossings, and he introduced the use of synthesizers, sequencers, Vocoder, Mellotron, and Hohner Clavinet on the first Columbia Records album, Head Hunters. A top-selling album, Head Hunters marked the beginning of Hancock's emergence into the jazz-rock movement of the 1970's, which led to a series of successful albums. Hancock produced eleven albums, which all made the charts, an unprecedented occurrence for a jazz musician.

During his success with his commercially oriented jazz-rock albums, Hancock also dedicated his efforts to acoustic jazz projects, such as the V.S.O.P. quintet and several piano-duo tours with Chick Corea (1976-1979). The former can be heard on the live recordings of an open-air concert that V.S.O.P. gave in Tokyo in 1977, and the latter on the two albums Corea/Hancock and An Evening With Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea, both recorded live in February of 1978.

Crossover. In 1983 Hancock began his collaboration with producer and bassist Laswell. Their extremely successful albums, Future Shock and Sound System, are continuations of Hancock's funk- and rhythm-and-blues-influenced jazz-rock projects of the 1970's, and they anticipate the development of popular music of the 1980's and 1990's. "Rockit" (on Sound System) produced a video that received five MTV Awards, and it has been regarded as one of the earliest examples of hip-hop and turntablism.

After Perfect Machine, Hancock and Laswell worked together again on Future 2 Future, an album that contains backbeat loops of the early 2000's and world music samples. This album can be regarded as Hancock's answer to the European electronica and nu jazz movement of the 1990's. Artists such as the British hip-hop group US3 remixed and recomposed Hancock's "Cantaloupe Island" and released it in a hip-hop, electronica version under the title "Cantaloop" in 1994. Likewise, the frequent use of the Fender Rhodes piano and analogue synthesizers in the 1990's and 2000's (for instance by the Norwegian pianist Bugge Wesseltoft) demonstrate the influence of Hancock's 1970's jazz-rock style.

Beginning in the 1990's, Hancock became increasingly interested in rock music, releasing such albums as The New Standard (interpreting rock tunes by the Beatles, Prince, Simon and Garfunkel, and Steely Dan in a jazz idiom), Possibilities (a crossover project with Carlos Santana, Angelique Kidjo, Christina Aguilera, Paul Simon, Annie Lennox and Sting), and River: The Joni Letters (a tribute album to Mitchell).

Gershwin's World marked Hancock's return to classical music. On this album, which is dedicated to Gershwin and won three Grammy Awards, Hancock improvises in a jazz style through large sections of the second movement of Maurice Ravel's Concerto for Piano in G Major.

Parallel to these crossover projects, Hancock participated in pure jazz projects, such as with his longtime collaborator Shorter (1 + 1) and in a quintet with trumpeter Roy Hargrove and saxophonist Michael Brecker (Directions in Music: Celebrating Miles Davis and John Coltrane).

Musical Legacy

Hancock—whose early piano style was influenced by funky rhythm-and-blues patterns, Bill Evans and Shearing, and the advanced functional harmonies of Claude Debussy and Ravel—explored all relevant jazz idioms during the 1960's. His duties as a sideman gave him broad stylistic experience. Of particular importance was Hancock's time with Davis. In Davis's quintet, Hancock played a major role in the rhythm group, developing a sensitive interaction with bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams. From the 1970's onward, he extended his musical interests into rock, soul, rhythm-and-blues, hip-hop, world, and classical music, demonstrating that the creation of remarkable music could be achieved through the crossbreeding of different musical styles and traditions.

The versatile talents of Hancock extend into his compositional activities. Many of his jazz tunes of the 1960's have become standards. As a film composer, he wrote two influential sound tracks, for Michelangelo Antonioni's Blow-Up (1966) and for Bertrand Tavernier's depiction of a jazz musician in Paris in the late 1950's, 'Round Midnight (1986), which won Hancock an Academy Award for Best Original Music Score.

Michael Baumgartner

Further Reading

Baker, David N., Lida M. Belt, and Herman C. Hudson, eds. "Herbert Jeffrey Hancock." In The Black Composer Speaks. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1978. This resource provides interviews with fifteen black composers, who talk about the black musical experience. In the chapter on Hancock, the artist discusses his compositional style and aethestics. Includes a list of compositions.

Lyons, Len. "Herbie Hancock." In The Great Jazz Pianists: Speaking of Their Lives and Music. New York: Da Capo Press, 1983. In this book, which provides a history of jazz piano and covers the lives and careers of twenty-seven jazz pianists, Hancock outlines his musical goals and influences.

Pond, Steven F. Head Hunters: The Making of Jazz's First Platinum Album. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 2005. A chronicle of the making of Hancock's influential and controversial Head Hunters. It was unprecedented for its fusion of jazz and rock and for its large sales, the first jazz album to go platinum.

See also: Blakey, Art; Corea, Chick; Davis, Miles; Debussy, Claude; Evans, Bill; Gordon, Dexter; Hawkins, Coleman; Jones, Quincy; McFerrin, Bobby; Metheny, Pat; Mingus, Charles; Mitchell, Joni; Nascimento, Milton; Peterson, Oscar; Ravel, Maurice; Rollins, Sonny; Shorter, Wayne.

W. C. Handy

American cornetist and songwriter

Handy's compositional work established the twelve-bar blues form and the altered notes used in blues performance.

Born: November 16, 1873; Florence, Alabama
Died: March 28, 1958; New York, New York
Also known as: William Christopher Handy (full name); Father of the Blues

Principal works

SONGS (music and lyrics by Handy unless otherwise stated): "Jogo Blues," 1913 (for piano); "Memphis Blues," 1913 (lyrics by George A. Norton); "Saint Louis Blues," 1914; "Yellow Dog Blues," 1914; "Hesitating Blues," 1915; "Joe Turner Blues," 1915; "Beale Street Blues," 1917; "The Kaiser's Got the Blues," 1918 (lyrics by Dorner C. Browne); "Aunt Hagar's Children Blues," 1920 (lyrics by J. Tim Brymn); "Long Gone John (from Bowling Green)," 1920 (lyrics by Chris Smith); "Loveless Love," 1921; "John Henry Blues," 1922; "Darktown Reveille," 1923 (music with Smith; lyrics by Walter Hirsch); "Harlem Blues," 1923; "Atlanta Blues (Make Me One Pallet on Your Floor)," 1924 (lyrics by Dave Elman); "Friendless Blues," 1926 (lyrics by Mercedes Gilbert); "Golden Brown Blues," 1927 (lyrics by Langston Hughes); "Chantez Les Bas," 1931 ("Sing 'Em Low"); "Opportunity," 1932 (lyrics by Walter Malone).

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Blues: An Anthology, 1926; Negro Authors and Composers of the United States, 1935; Book of Negro Spirituals, 1938; Father of the Blues, 1941 (autobiography); Negro Music and Musicians, 1944.

The Life

William Christopher Handy was born to former slaves Charles B. Handy and Elizabeth Brewer in the rural town of Florence, Alabama. As a minister, his father had high moral standards of behavior for his children, and he was horrified when young Handy brought home a guitar he had bought with his own money. After making him exchange the instrument for a dictionary, Handy's father relented and allowed his son to take organ and voice lessons from a local teacher, with the idea that he would eventually perform religious music.

Handy was still young when he heard a cornet player accompanying a gospel choir, and he vowed to learn to play, which he did after surreptitiously buying an instrument. In spite of his parents' objections, he applied his musical training to find work playing cornet in local dance bands and singing in minstrel shows and church choirs. By his late teens, Handy was traveling outside the Florence area and experiencing the life of a touring musician, which he embraced for thirty years.

By 1892 Handy was forming and directing his own groups. He relocated to Bessemer, where he was engaged as a teacher. Finding the salary insufficient, he got a job in an ironworks while he dreamed of attending Wilberforce University. When that plan failed, he took a job singing with the Lauzetta Quartet in 1893, and he spent the next several years traveling as far as St. Louis and Chicago (for the Columbian Exposition in 1893). During this period, Handy experienced bouts of financial desperation and homelessness, which provided material for his later compositions.

The mid-1890's found him in Evansville, Indiana, where he worked as a manual laborer while playing cornet in local groups. In 1896 he moved to Henderson, Kentucky, where he made his living outside of music, while performing on evenings and weekends. At this time, Handy was introduced to European choral music, courtesy of a German musical society directed by Professor Bach, who gave him some informal instruction. In addition, he courted and married Elizabeth Price, with whom he had six children.

Shortly after his marriage, Handy was engaged to perform with (and ultimately direct) Mahara's Minstrels, a road company of black performers, with which he toured from 1896 to 1900. This experience was crucial in forming Handy's musical outlook: It exposed him to numerous regional African American genres, and it introduced him to an active form of show business. After traveling throughout the South (including a short tour to Cuba), he left the road in 1900 to teach music at the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical School in Normal, where he remained for two years.

After a brief return to Mahara's Minstrels in 1902, Handy was engaged to direct a Knights of Pythias band in Clarksdale, Mississippi, where he was first exposed to traditional blues. While not initially impressed with its musical validity, he was quick to grasp the popularity of the genre as well as its rhythmic vitality, and he began arranging some of the folk melodies for his band. By 1909 he had settled in Memphis, Tennessee, where he led a band for municipal and private functions, and he actively composed and arranged music, with his first attempt at a blues composition, "Memphis Blues," dating from this period.

From that point, Handy had a string of successes with his band, largely because of his growing catalog of compositions. In 1914 he formed Pace and Handy with his friend, banker Harry Pace, in order to publish his works as well as those of other black composers. The publicity surrounding his songs generated interest from other bands, and Handy found a reliable source of income from royalties from recordings of his work. In 1917 his band was invited to New York to make recordings, although many in his regular group did not make the trip, and he was forced to use numerous substitutes. Nevertheless, these successes encouraged him to relocate himself and the offices of Pace and Handy to New York in 1918.

After some initial success, Pace and Handy (one of the first African American publishing companies) dissolved in 1920, when Pace left to found Black Swan Records. Handy attempted to continue publishing, but the strain became too much, and he suffered a breakdown, which included temporary blindness. Friends (including Bill "Bojangles" Robinson and Clarence Williams) came to his aid, saving him from bankruptcy.

In 1926 Handy wrote Blues: An Anthology, which was the first attempt to make a cultural presentation of the blues and to contextualize his contributions. Handy was a driving force in producing a 1928 Carnegie Hall concert celebrating the evolution of black music, and in 1929 he cowrote a treatment for a short film that became St. Louis Blues, starring Bessie Smith. In 1931 the city of Memphis named a municipal park after him.

For the rest of his life, Handy continued to be celebrated for his pioneering work. He occasionally appeared in variety shows and even on television. Handy published his autobiography in 1941, and he was recorded speaking about his life and playing his works by the Library of Congress (1938) and the Audio Archives (1952). Late in life, when Handy went completely blind and was confined to a wheelchair, he was active in starting the Foundation for the Blind in 1951. He married again in 1954 (his first wife having died in 1937), and he oversaw a 1958 film made about his life (called St. Louis Blues and starring Nat King Cole), which was released shortly after his death.

The Music

"Memphis Blues." One of Handy's popular publications and one of the first published blues, this was originally composed in 1909 as "Mr. Crump," for a mayoral candidate in Memphis. Crump commissioned Handy to write a tune to be played at rallies, although some of his detractors changed the lyrics to poke fun at the reform candidate. In 1912 Handy self-published a more fully realized version of the piece, including two blues strains and one sixteen-bar strain. Its multistrain organization, with its introduction, transition, and internal key change, align it with a modified ragtime form, but the frequent use of lowered thirds and sevenths suggest the blues idiom discovered by Handy during his travels through the South. Handy claimed he was cheated out of royalties from "Memphis Blues" by an unscrupulous white publisher, although he was never denied composer credit.

"Saint Louis Blues." Originally published in 1914, this tune is similar to "Memphis Blues" in that it consists of two blues strains separated by a sixteen-bar section. In this case, the middle section is in the parallel minor, and it is built on a tango rhythmic device that Handy had heard during his tours in the South. The last strain is adapted from his 1913 piece, "Jogo Blues," which had been published as an instrumental. Since its publication, "Saint Louis Blues" has become perhaps the best known piece of its kind, and it is often cited as the most frequently recorded song in history.

"Yellow Dog Blues." This 1914 composition was inspired by a lyrical strain about a railroad crossing in Mississippi overheard by Handy in 1903. Ironically, it was originally titled "Yellow Dog Rag," although this tune is perhaps the least ragtime-like of any of Handy's early works, containing only two twelve-bar strains. Although the sheet music has both strains in D major, performers generally modulate to G for the second.

"Loveless Love." This 1921 composition is an illustration of Handy's process of adapting existing material. By his own account (in Blues: An Anthology), Handy said that this was a "series of arrangements" of the folk tune "Careless Love," "prefaced by an original Handy blues." Indeed, the verse is a twelve-bar blues moving to the subdominant for two thirty-two-bar choruses based on the earlier tune.

Musical Legacy

Handy's musical legacy rests largely on his compositions from before 1920, although several from the 1920's (including "Loveless Love" and "Aunt Hagar's Children Blues") are ranked among his best work. His first published works, such as "Memphis Blues," "Saint Louis Blues," "Yellow Dog Blues" (originally called "Yellow Dog Rag"), and "Beale Street Blues" became standards, first in the repertoire of contemporary popular music, with numerous recordings being made by leading musicians, then in the canon of jazz and blues. Extensive sheet music sales also aided with the dissemination of Handy's music and the enhancement of his reputation.

In his publications, Handy drew on decades of experience touring through the South with minstrel shows and bands. He had witnessed a wide cross section of African American music-making, and, guided by his own training in Western musical methodology, he was able to notate what was until that time largely an oral tradition. While not the first to publish blues, Handy was among the earliest, and the consistency and quality of his work made the elements of the country blues (such as the lowered third and seventh scale degrees, the aab structure of the poetry, and the call-and-response between the singer and accompaniment) comprehensible to those not familiar with the tradition.

Recordings by bands and singers from the pre-jazz era are close stylistically to what Handy had in mind when he originally published his compositions, but subsequent versions by jazz and blues performers are today considered more definitive regarding the original style. "Saint Louis Blues," for example, was recorded dozens of times during the 1920's, but the most famous versions are probably those done by Bessie Smith and Louis Armstrong (together in 1925, Smith alone in the 1929 film St. Louis Blues, and Armstrong in 1930). These versions, while different, established stylistic and interpretive traits copied to this day.

John L. Clark, Jr.

Further Reading

Brooks, Tim, and Dick Spottswood. Lost Sounds: Blacks and the Birth of the Recording Industry, 1890-1919. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2004. This encyclopedic book of early recordings contains a chapter on Handy. The biographical information is taken largely from Handy's autobiography, but the later material is useful. Includes a discography of recordings of his music by other artists.

Handy, W. C. Father of the Blues: An Autobiography. New York: Macmillan, 1941. This wide-ranging account of his life is often vague about dates and chronology. Nevertheless, this book is well written and contains a wealth of information about black show business in the late 1800's and early 1900's. The work list compiled by the composer is a valuable resource.

Handy, W. C., with Abbe Niles, eds. Blues: An Anthology. New York: Albert and Charles Boni, 1926. This was the first large-scale attempt to present an historical overview of the blues. Handy provided sheet music for some of his best-known work as well as piano arrangements of folk material. The introductory essay by Niles on the history of the blues was based on interviews done with Handy.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Cole, Nat King; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Guy, Buddy; Hooker, John Lee; Hunter, Alberta; Jackson, Mahalia; Joplin, Scott; Roach, Max; Rodgers, Jimmie; Smith, Bessie; Still, William Grant; Tatum, Art.

Nikolaus Harnoncourt

Austrian classical conductor, cellist, and viol player

A brilliant and versatile conductor, Harnoncourt is widely recognized for his interpretations of Renaissance and Baroque music, the classical and Romantic repertoire, and works from the twentieth century. In addition, he has been instrumental in the revival of early music.

Born: December 6, 1929; Berlin, Germany
Also known as: Nikolaus de la Fontaine und d'Harnoncourt (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Bach: Brandenburg Concertos, 1964; Bach: St. John Passion, 1965; Bach: Four Orchestral Suites, 1966; Bach: Mass in B Minor, 1968; Bach: St. Matthew Passion, 1970; J. S. Bach: The Complete Sacred Cantatas, 1971-1988 (with Gustav Leonhardt); Bach: Christmas Oratorio, 1972; Monteverdi: Il ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria, 1975; Monteverdi: L'Incoronazione di poppea, 1975; Monteverdi: L'Orfeo, 1975; Beethoven: Symphonies Nos. 1-9, 1991; Telemann: Der tag des gerichts, 1993; Bach: Sacred Cantatas, 1994; Purcell: Dido and Aeneas, 1994; Haydn: Symphonies 30, 34, and 73, 1995; Handel: Water Music, 1996; Schumann: Genoveva, 1997; Johann Strauss in Berlin, 2000.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Zur Geschichte der Streichinstrumente und ihres Klanges, 1961; Das Musizieren mit alren Instrumenten: Einflüsse der Spieltechnik auf die Interpretation, 1967; Das quasi Wort-ton-verhältnis in der Instrumentalen

Barockmusik, 1969 (Baroque Music Today: Music as Speech—Ways to a New Understanding of Music, 1988); Probleme der Wiedergabe von Bachs Chor-orchester-werken, 1969; Notenschrift und Wektreue, 1971; Musik als Klangrede: Wege zu einem Neuen Musikverständnis, 1982; Monteverdi, Bach, und Mozart, 1984 (The Musical Dialogue: Thoughts on Monteverdi, Bach, and Mozart, 2003); Was ist Wahrheit?, 1995.

The Life

Austrian conductor Nikolaus de la Fontaine und d'Harnoncourt (NIH-koh-lows HAHR-nuhn-koort) was born to Eberhard de la Fontaine, Count of Harnoncourt-Unverzagt, and Ladislaja, Countess of Meran and Baroness of Brandhofen. Brought up in Graz, he studied cello with Hans Kortschak and Paul Grümmer. In 1952, upon completion of his studies at the Vienna Academy of Music with Emanuel Brabec, he joined the Vienna Symphony Orchestra as a cellist, and he held his position until 1969.

Harnoncourt's work on early music began in 1949 when he founded the Vienna Viola da Gamba Quartet. In 1953, with his wife Alice and fellow musicians, he founded the Concentus Musicus Wien ensemble, devoted to performances of Renaissance and Baroque music on period instruments. After four years of research and rehearsals, the ensemble made its debut in May, 1957. They began touring in 1960; in the same year, one of the first of their many recordings, Heinrich Ignaz Franz Biber: Georg Muffat, was released by Amadeo.

Since the 1980's, Harnoncourt has increasingly performed classical and Romantic repertoire with modern instrumental ensembles, including the Chamber Orchestra of Europe, the Concertgebouw Orchestra, and the Vienna and Berlin Philharmonic Orchestras. From 1973 to 1993, he was a professor at the Mozarteum University of Music and Dramatic Arts in Salzburg, where he became an artist in residence in 2006.

The Music

Founded in 1953, the Concentus Musicus Wien is one of the first major ensembles devoted to the performance of Renaissance and Baroque music on period instruments. Conducted by Harnoncourt from his cello or viola da gamba, the ensemble has performed and recorded the major works of Claudio Monteverdi, Georg Philipp Telemann, Georg Frideric Handel, and Johann Sebastian Bach. After his debut at the conductor's rostrum with Monteverdi's Il ritorno d'Ulisse in patria at the Piccola Scala in Milan in 1972, Harnoncourt conducted the acclaimed Monteverdi and Mozart cycles at the Zurich Opera House, from 1975 to 1987, in collaboration with Jean-Pierre Ponnelle. He has conducted at the Vienna State Opera, at the Amsterdam Opera House, at the Zurich Opera House, and at other venues, performing a wide range of works by Handel, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Ludwig van Beethoven, Franz Schubert, Carl Maria von Weber, Johann Strauss, and others.

In 1985 Harnoncourt became involved in the annual Styriarte Festival in his hometown of Graz, performing cycles of works by Joseph Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Robert Schumann, and Felix Mendelssohn with the Chamber Orchestra of Europe. He has appeared regularly with the Concertgebouw Orchestra since 1975 and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra since 1991, and he conducted the New Year's Concert of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in 2001 and 2003.

J. S. Bach: The Complete Sacred Cantatas. In 1971, in collaboration with musician Gustav Leonhardt, Harnoncourt began his pioneering recordings of Bach's complete cantatas. Besides the soloists, a number of instrumental and vocal groups took part in this groundbreaking project, including the Concentus Musicus Wien and the Leonhardt Consort playing on period instruments, the Vienna Boys' Choir, the Chorus Viennensis, the Tölz Boys' Choir, the King's College Choir Cambridge, the Hanover Boys' Choir, and the Collegium Vocale Gent. By the time the project was completed, almost two hundred sacred cantatas had been recorded, and a total of ninety albums in forty-five volumes had been issued. J. S. Bach: The Complete Sacred Cantatas was awarded the Gramophone Special Achievement Award in 1990.

Beethoven: Symphonies Nos. 1-9. Under Harnoncourt's direction, the complete cycle of Beethoven's nine symphonies played by the Chamber Orchestra of Europe was recorded at the Styriarte Festival in 1990 and 1991. For the recordings, Harnoncourt employs a mid-size orchestra, similar to those during Beethoven's time, and he mixes modern instruments played in period style with period trumpets. The five-disc recording received critical acclaim, and it was awarded the German Record Critics' Award in 1991, as well as the Emmy Award, the Gramophone Record of the Year, the Stella d'Oro, the Grand Prix du Disque, and the Belgian Caecilia Prize in 1992.

Schumann: Genoveva. Genoveva is the only complete opera by Schumann with a libretto by the composer. Harnoncourt conducted the rarely performed work at the Styriarte Festival in 1996, featuring Ruth Ziesak, Marjana Lipovsek, Deon van der Walt, Rodney Gilfry, Thomas Quasthoff, and Oliver Widmer, together with the Arnold Schoenberg Choir and the Chamber Orchestra of Europe. On two compact discs, the live recording for Teldec was awarded the BBC Music Magazine Best of 1997, the Caecilia Prize, and the Independent 50 Best of the Year CDs in 1998.

Johann Strauss in Berlin. Recorded in 1998 and 1999 on Teldec DVD-audio, Johann Strauss in Berlin contains a collection of polkas, waltzes, and marches performed by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Harnoncourt. A selection of works by Strauss in connection to his time in Berlin is featured, including the "Pigeons of St. Mark's," the "Tritsch-Tratsch Polka," and the "Emperor Waltz." The recording was given the Edison Award in 2000.

Musical Legacy

Harnoncourt has an extensive discography of almost five hundred recordings, many of which have been awarded international prizes. In 2006 he won the Echo Klassik 2006 for his recording of Handel's Messiah with the Concentus Musicus Wien and with the Arnold Schoenberg Choir. His views on music are documented in several acclaimed books, including The Musical Dialogue: Thoughts on Monteverdi, Bach and Mozart and Töne sind höhere Worte: Gespräche zur Interpretation romantischer Musik (2007, notes are superior words: conversations on the interpretation of Romantic music).

In recognition of his lifetime achievements, Harnoncourt has received numerous international awards, including the Polar Music Prize (1994), the Ernst von Siemens Music Prize (2002), and the Kyoto Prize (2005). He became an honorary member of the Vienna Concert House Society in 1989, of the Vienna Society of the Friends of Music in 1992, and of the Viennese Philharmonic Orchestra in 2004. He received an honorary doctorate from the University of Edinburgh in 1987, and he became an honorary member of the universities of music in Graz and Vienna.

Sonia Lee

Further Reading

Elste, Martin. "Nikolaus Harnoncourt: A Profile." Fanfare 13, no. 3 (January/February, 1990): 449-452. This article discusses Harnoncourt's career and the changes in his performance style over the years.

Harnoncourt, Nikolaus. Baroque Music Today: Music as Speech—Ways to a New Understanding of Music. Translated by Mary O'Neill. Edited by Reinhard G. Pauly. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1988. This is a collection of essays written by Harnoncourt that summarize his views on Baroque performance practice.

_____. The Musical Dialogue: Thoughts on Monteverdi, Bach, and Mozart. Translated by Mary O'Neill. Edited by Reinhard G. Pauly. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1988. This book by Harnoncourt contains a collection of essays, lectures, and talks relating to the music of Monteverdi, Bach, and Mozart.

See also: Casadesus, Henri; Hogwood, Christopher; Karajan, Herbert von; Leonhardt, Gustav.

Emmylou Harris

American country/rock singer, guitarist, and songwriter

A multiple Grammy Award recipient, Harris is one of the most successful female performers in modern country-music history. She has also received wide recognition for her contributions to country-rock, folk music, the bluegrass revival, and the Americana movement since the 1980's.

Born: April 2, 1947; Birmingham, Alabama
Member of: The Angel Band; the Hot Band; the Nash Ramblers

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Gliding Bird, 1968; GP, 1973 (with Gram Parsons); Grievous Angel, 1974 (with Parsons); Elite Hotel, 1975; Pieces of the Sky, 1975; Luxury Liner, 1977; Quarter Moon in a Ten-Cent Town, 1978; Light of the Stable, 1979; Blue Kentucky Girl, 1980; Roses in the Snow, 1980; Cimarron, 1981; Evangeline, 1981; Last Date, 1982; White Shoes, 1983; The Ballad of Sally Rose, 1985; Thirteen, 1986; Angel Band, 1987; Trio, 1987 (with Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt); Bluebird, 1989; Brand New Dance, 1990; At the Ryman, 1992 (with the Nash Ramblers); Cowgirl's Prayer, 1993; Songs of the West, 1994; Wrecking Ball, 1995; Spyboy, 1998; Trio II, 1999 (with Parton and Ronstadt); Western Wall: The Tuscon Sessions, 1999 (with Ronstadt); Red Dirt Girl, 2000; Nobody's Darling but Mine, 2002; Stumble into Grace, 2003; All the Roadrunning, 2006 (with Mark Knopfler); All I Intended to Be, 2008.

The Life

The younger of two children, Emmylou Harris was born to Eugenia Murchison Harris and Walter Rutland "Bucky" Harris, a Marine Corps pilot who was reported missing in action in Korea in 1952 and spent ten months as a prisoner of war. Her early childhood was spent in North Carolina and later in Woodbridge, Virginia, where she won the Miss Woodbridge beauty pageant as a teenager and graduated from Garfield Senior High School as class valedictorian in 1965. She received a scholarship to study drama at the University of North Carolina in Greensboro, where she formed a folk duo with classmate Mike Williams, performing at a local club.

Harris moved to New York City before finishing college. She performed folk songs in Greenwich Village coffeehouses and became a regular at Gerde's Folk City, where she met fellow performers Jerry Jeff Walker, David Bromberg, and Paul Siebel. In 1970, not long after the release of her debut album, Gliding Bird, her label Jubilee Records filed for bankruptcy. Her short marriage with songwriter Tom Slocum also ended. Together with her newborn daughter Hallie, Harris moved back in with her parents in the Maryland suburbs outside Washington, D.C.

In 1971, while performing as part of a trio at Clyde's in Georgetown, Harris was discovered by members of the Flying Burrito Brothers and was recommended to country-rock pioneer Gram Parsons by former Byrds member Chris Hillman. Subsequently, she toured with Parsons's band, the Fallen Angels, and sang on his two highly acclaimed solo albums, GP (1973) and Grievous Angel (1974, posthumously).

After Parsons's death from a drug overdose in 1973, Harris formed her backup groups, the Angel Band and the Hot Band, and released her major label debut album, Pieces of the Sky, in 1975 on Reprise Records. From 1977 to 1984, she was married to Canadian producer Brian Ahern, with whom she has her second daughter, Meghann. Her third marriage (1985-1993) was to English songwriter Paul Kennerley, who became her producer in 1985.

Harris relocated to Nashville, Tennessee, in the early 1980's. Besides working on her solo releases, she collaborated with Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt for the Grammy Award-winning album Trio. In 1991, soon after the dissolution of the legendary Hot Band, she formed the new acoustic Nash Ramblers, with whom she recorded a live album at the Ryman Auditorium in Nashville. Two of her later albums, Red Dirt Girl and Stumble into Grace, showcase her talent as a songwriter.

The Music

Harris's repertoire embraces a wide spectrum of styles, including country, rock, contemporary folk, and bluegrass. In a career spanning more than three decades, she has melded elements of different styles to create her own sound. Not only is she well known for her interpretation of other songwriters' works; she has also established herself as a singer-songwriter. She has performed in a wide range of venues, from colleges and universities to Carnegie Hall, and from the Bonnaroo Music Festival to bluegrass events. She has toured throughout the United States, Canada, Europe, Australia, and New Zealand.

Early Works. As seen in her first solo album, Gliding Bird, Harris's early repertoire was mainly folk music with some subtle country undertones. Through Parsons, not only did she learn about country music, but she was also introduced to artists such as the Louvin brothers. She toured with Parsons's Fallen Angels and sang vocals on his solo recordings. In 1975, she released her first country album, Pieces of the Sky, which included a number of cover songs, including her first hit single, "If I Could Only Win Your Love," by the Louvin Brothers.

Elite Hotel. Harris's second successful album, Elite Hotel, was released the same year as the highly acclaimed Pieces of the Sky. The album showcased her then newly formed backup group, the Hot Band, with Elvis Presley's guitarist James Burton, as well as Rodney Crowell and Glen D. Hardin. Her first album to hit number one on Billboard's top country albums chart, Elite Hotel features songs by Hank Williams, the Beatles, Gram Parsons, Buck Owens, and others. Two of the tracks, "Together Again" and "Sweet Dreams," became number-one country hits. The album earned Harris her first Grammy Award for Best Female Country Vocal Performance in 1976.

The Ballad of Sally Rose. Released by Warner Bros. in 1985, The Ballad of Sally Rose comprises songs written by Harris and her husband-producer Kennerley. It is a semiautobiographical conceptual work loosely based on her relationship with Parsons, telling the story of a young singer named Sally Rose whose lover and mentor is tragically killed on the road in a traffic accident. Described by Harris as a "country opera," the album follow one song with another without pauses. The album received mixed reviews and did not enjoy commercial success.

Trio. Released in 1987 by Warner Bros., Trio features Harris and two longtime friends, Parton and Ronstadt. The three vocalists first started the recording project in 1977 but, because of scheduling conflicts, did not complete the work until the mid-1980's. Produced by George Massenburg, Trio became one of Harris's best-selling albums. Several of the tracks, including "To Know Him Is to Love Him," "Telling Me Lies," and "Those Memories of You," were Top 10 country hits; the album also reached number one on the top country albums chart. Trio won the 1987 Grammy Award for Best Country Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal. The three musicians reunited in the studio in the 1990's and released their Trio II in 1999.

At the Ryman. Harris's At the Ryman is a live recording with her then newly formed acoustic backup band, the Nash Ramblers (Larry Atamanuik, Roy Huskey, Jr., Sam Bush, Al Perkins, and John Randall Stewart). Recorded in 1991 from a series of concerts at the legendary Ryman Auditorium, the original home of the Grand Ole Opry, the album brought renewed attention to the then hundred-year-old building and led to a complete restoration of the facility into a concert venue. The album won the Grammy Award for Best Country Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal in 1992.

Wrecking Ball. Released in 1995 on the Elektra label, Wrecking Ball marks a radical departure from Harris's previous albums. Highly praised by critics, the hypnotic album features songs and guest performances by Steve Earle ("Goodbye"), Daniel Lanois ("Where Will I Be?), Anna McGarrigle ("Goin' Back to Harlan"), Lucinda Williams ("Sweet Old World"), and Neil Young, who wrote the title track. Best known for his work with U2, Peter Gabriel, and Bob Dylan, producer Lanois invited guest rock musicians to perform on the album, including Tony Hall from the Neville Brothers and Larry Mullen, Jr., from U2. The recording won the 1995 Grammy Award for Best Contemporary Folk Album.

Emmylou Harris. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Red Dirt Girl. Harris's Red Dirt Girl from 2000 showcases her remarkable talent as a songwriter; she wrote or cowrote eleven of the twelve tracks in this Nonesuch Records debut. Featuring guest appearances from Patty Griffin, Julie Miller, Dave Matthews, Kate McGarrigle, Patti Scialfa, and Bruce Springsteen, the album delivers a variety of sounds from rock and world music to traditional country and folk. The album reached number five on the top country albums chart and won the 2000 Grammy Award for Best Contemporary Folk Album. She continued to emphasize her songwriting in her next album, Stumble into Grace.

Musical Legacy

Harris has recorded more than twenty-five albums on such labels as Reprise/Warner Bros., Elektra, and Nonesuch, and she has made guest appearances on numerous recordings by a diverse pool of artists, including Gram Parsons, Linda Ronstadt, Neil Young, Bob Dylan, Buck Owens, Charlie Louvin, John Denver, Roy Orbison, Johnny Cash, and Mark Knopfler. She has appeared in several documentary videos and films, including The Last Waltz (1978), Live at the Ryman (1992), In the Hank Williams Tradition (1995), Emmylou Harris: Spyboy—Live from the Legendary Exit (1999), Down from the Mountain (2000), Neil Young: Heart of Gold (2006), and Real Live Roadrunning (2006).

Harris is a recipient of many Grammy Awards, including four for Best Female Country Performance (1976, 1979, 1984, 2005), two for Best Contemporary Folk Album (1995 for Wrecking Ball and 2000 for Red Dirt Girl), and two for Best Country Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal (1987 with Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt, and 1992 with the Nash Ramblers). She also received three Country Music Association Awards, including Female Vocalist of the Year (1980), Vocal Event of the Year (1988 for Trio), and Album of the Year (for O Brother, Where Art Thou?, 2000), as well as the Billboard Century Award (1999). A past president of the Country Music Foundation, she served on the board of the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum for many years, eventually becoming a trustee emerita. She became a member of the Grand Ole Opry in 1992 and was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 2008.

Sonia Lee

Further Reading

Brown, Jim. Emmylou Harris: Angel in Disguise. Kingston, Ont.: Fox Music Books, 2004. An informative biography of Harris, covering her life, career, and music. Contains excerpts from some of her interviews.

Bufwack, Mary A., and Robert K. Oermann. "Back to Country: Emmylou Harris and the Country-Rock Fusion." In Finding Her Voice: Women in Country Music, 1800-2000. Nashville, Tenn.: The Country Music Foundation Press and Vanderbilt University Press, 2003. This book chapter discusses the blending of country and rock music by Emmylou Harris and several other women performers in the 1960's, 1970's, and 1980's.

Clark, Rick. "Recording Notes: Emmylou Harris and Brian Ahern, Together Again." Mix 32, no. 5 (May, 2008): 104, 108-110, 112. This article focuses on Harris's latest release, All I Intended to Be (2008), which features some of her favorite songs as well as her talent as a songwriter. Also discusses her working relationship with her producer/ex-husband Ahern since the production of White Shoes (1983).

Geisel, Ellen. "Emmylou Harris: Taking Chances & Soothing Souls." Dirty Linen 63 (April/May, 1996): 44-47, 49. This article reports a phone interview in which Harris speaks about her then-latest release, Wrecking Ball (1995), as well as her collaboration with Lanois and others for the album.

Nixon-John, Gloria. "Getting the Word Out: The Country of Bronwen Wallace and Emmylou Harris." In The Women of Country Music: A Reader, edited by Charles K. Wolfe and James E. Akenson. Lexington: University Press of Kentucky, 2003. Inspired by "Burn That Candle" from Harris's Quarter Moon in a Ten Cent Town (1978), the late Canadian poet and short story writer Bronwen Wallace wrote a collection of poems prior to her death in 1989 and dedicated the work to Harris. This book article centers on the country connection between Wallace's Keep That Candle Burning Bright & Other Poems: Poems for Emmylou Harris (1991, posthumously) and Harris's music.

Sandall, Robert. "The Ballad of Emmylou Harris." Sunday Times Magazine, June 1, 2008, 16. A Times Magazine writer reports an interview in which Harris reveals her struggles after Parsons's death.

Thompson, Dave. "Emmylou Harris: Thirty Years On." Goldmine 32, no. 14 (July 7, 2006): 14-18. Celebrating the release of Harris's 23d album All The Roadrunning (2006), this article looks back on Harris's career of over 30 years and discusses some of her musical influences, including Parsons, Ahern, Ronstadt, the Louvin Brothers, Lanois, and Mark Knopfler.

See also: Baez, Joan; Burke, Solomon; Earle, Steve; Nelson, Willie; Orbison, Roy; Parsons, Gram; Parton, Dolly; Ritchie, Jean; Ronstadt, Linda; Van Zandt, Townes; Williams, Lucinda.

George Harrison

English rock guitarist, singer, and songwriter

As a member of the Beatles and as a solo artist, Harrison produced popular songs of distinction, and he experimented with a variety of non-Western musical sources.

Born: February 25, 1943; Liverpool, England
Died: November 29, 2001; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: George Harold Harrison (full name)
Member of: The Beatles; the Traveling Wilburys

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Wonderwall Music, 1968; Electronic Sound, 1969; All Things Must Pass, 1970; Living in the Material World, 1973; Dark Horse, 1974; Extra Texture, 1975; Thirty Three and One Third, 1976; George Harrison, 1979; Somewhere in England, 1981; Gone Troppo, 1982; Cloud Nine, 1987; Chant and Be Happy: Indian Devotional Songs, 1991; Brainwashed, 2002.

ALBUMS (with the Beatles): Please Please Me, 1963; With the Beatles, 1963; Beatles for Sale, 1964; The Beatles' Second Album, 1964; Beatles '65, 1964; The Beatles' Story, 1964; A Hard Day's Night, 1964; Introducing the Beatles, 1964; Meet the Beatles, 1964; Something New, 1964; Beatles VI, 1965; Help!, 1965; Rubber Soul, 1965; Revolver, 1966; Yesterday . . . and Today, 1966; Magical Mystery Tour, 1967; Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, 1967; The Beatles, 1968 (The White Album); Abbey Road, 1969; Yellow Submarine, 1969; Let It Be, 1970.

ALBUMS (with the Traveling Wilburys): Traveling Wilburys, Vol. 1, 1988; Traveling Wilburys, Vol. 3, 1990.

The Life

George Harold Harrison was born in Liverpool, England, on February 25, 1943. At an early age, he exhibited a keen interest in popular music, and soon he began to study guitar. At the Liverpool Institute for Boys, he met Paul McCartney, a student who shared his passionate interest in rock and roll. At McCartney's insistence, Harrison was invited to join the Quarrymen, a musical group led by John Lennon. This group later evolved into the Beatles, and it achieved global success in the 1960's. In the group, Harrison was lead guitarist and occasional vocalist. Soon he developed a distinctive compositional style informed by his burgeoning interest in the music of India. He later collaborated with diverse artists such as Delaney and Bonnie, the Band, and Bob Dylan, and he also experimented with electronic music. By the time the Beatles disbanded in 1970, Harrison was widely recognized as a composer and musician of the first rank.

Harrison flourished in the wake of the Beatles' breakup. Although he had only been allotted one or two tracks on the group's albums, he had been steadily composing for seven years, and he had a selection of songs from which to choose for his solo debut. The album, All Things Must Pass, was a three-record set that featured the hit singles "What Is Life?" and "My Sweet Lord." In August, 1971, Harrison organized an all-star benefit concert at New York's Madison Square Garden that brought attention to the plight of refugees in Bangladesh. A recording of this event, The Concert for Bangladesh, became a million-seller, with all proceeds going to charity. His solo success continued in 1973 with Living in the Material World, an album that featured the songs "Give Me Love" and "Sue Me, Sue You Blues."

George Harrison. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Personal turmoil surfaced in 1974, when Harrison became estranged from his wife of eight years, Patti Boyd. Their breakup soured the mood of Dark Horse, an album further hindered by the poor condition of the singer's vocal cords. His troubles continued on a North American solo tour, which demonstrated that he was losing touch with the mainstream audience. He received another setback in 1976 when he lost a copyright-infringement suit brought against him regarding the song "My Sweet Lord." During a three-year hiatus from recording, Harrison married Olivia Arias and celebrated the birth of a son, Dhani. He also began a career as a film producer. His company, Handmade Films, financed the hit comedy Monty Python's Life of Brian, and it went on to produce many successful films throughout the 1980's.

He returned in 1979 with George Harrison, an album that initiated a period in which the singer worked increasingly from his home studio. This was quickly followed by Somewhere in England, which featured the hit single "All Those Years Ago." The lackluster response to his next album, Gone Troppo, caused Harrison to withdraw once again from the limelight. He returned in 1987 with Cloud Nine, a remarkable tour de force that successfully highlighted his strengths as a singer, songwriter, and guitarist. He next teamed with veteran rockers Jeff Lynne, Tom Petty, Roy Orbison, and Bob Dylan to form the Traveling Wilburys.

In the 1990's, Harrison worked sporadically, but he was heavily involved in The Beatles Anthology project with former bandmates Ringo Starr and Paul McCartney. He also prepared tracks for a new solo album. In 1999, he was assaulted by an intruder in his home, and he suffered multiple stab wounds. He recovered from this attack, but he succumbed to cancer on November 29, 2001.

The Music

As the junior composer in the Beatles, Harrison labored in the shadow of Lennon and McCartney. Gradually, he developed a distinctive compositional style characterized by a fascination with unusual modal structures. He also explored exotic instrumentation as a result of his interest in the music of India. His lyrics tended to address the spiritual aspirations that lay at the heart of the counterculture, though in a forthright fashion. He continued to develop these elements during his solo career, and he also began to incorporate harmonic structures derived from American jazz.

The Beatles. During his time with the Beatles, Harrison composed works with remarkably exotic harmonic structures. "Don't Bother Me" employs a Dorian progression that provides an appropriate setting for the song's dour lyrical content. This quality was also evident on his contributions to the albums Help! and Rubber Soul. For Revolver, Harrison incorporated gestures derived from Indian music ("Love You To," "Taxman"), and on Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, he successfully integrated Eastern and Western styles in "Within You, Without You," a song that features an authentic Indian ensemble (sitar, dilruba, tabla, swarmandal, and tambura), combined with Western classical instruments (violin, cello). On The Beatles, Harrison returned to a more traditional rock-and-roll approach ("Savoy Truffle," "While My Guitar Gently Weeps"), but the Indian influence was still evident on "Long, Long, Long." Harrison finally came into his own on the Beatles' swan song, Abbey Road, which featured "Here Comes the Sun" and the hit single "Something."

Solo Work. The backlog of songs Harrison had accrued while a member of the Beatles formed the basis of his first solo release, All Things Must Pass, a sprawling three-record set that featured the hits "What Is Life" and "My Sweet Lord." In 1973 he recorded Living in the Material World, an album that continued to explore the wall-of-sound textures of All Things Must Pass, but with an increased focus on spiritual themes. It also showcased his newly developed slide guitar technique. The breakup of his marriage to Patti dominated Dark Horse, which nonetheless contained such interesting musical hybrids as "Maya Love," and "It Is 'He' (Jai Sri Krishna)." On his next two releases, Extra Texture and Thirty Three and One Third, Harrison rebounded from his personal troubles, although with diminishing commercial success.

Later Works. The new songs from George Harrison exhibited a more relaxed approach than shown on the singer's earlier albums. In 1981 he released Somewhere in England, which contained the hit single "All Those Years Ago," an exploration of Harrison's feelings regarding the death of former bandmate Lennon. Gone Troppo was a commercial and critical disappointment, but Harrison rebounded in 1987 with Cloud Nine, an album that yielded the hits "When We Was Fab" and "Got My Mind Set on You." He subsequently joined forces with Lynne, Petty, Orbison, and Dylan to record as the Traveling Wilburys. During the 1990's, Harrison continued to record and tour sporadically. His final album, Brainwashed, was released posthumously in 2002.

Musical Legacy

As solo artists, each member of the Beatles struggled to live up to the group's early success. However, Harrison's time with the group can be viewed as an apprenticeship during which he developed his diverse influences into a highly original musical style. His songs, which once seemed exotic to Western ears, now sound increasingly like world music. In that sense, Harrison's works may have presaged the cross-cultural influences that would characterize the music that followed.

Thomas MacFarlane

Further Reading

Giuliano, Geoffrey. Dark Horse: The Life and Art of George Harrison. New York: Da Capo Press, 1997. This work provides an overview of Harrison's career.

Harrison, George. I Me Mine. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1980. This personal memoir provides valuable insights into the creation of Harrison's works with the Beatles and his development as a solo artist.

Leng, Simon. While My Guitar Gently Weeps: The Music of George Harrison. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2006. This work presents a remarkably detailed analysis of Harrison's entire catalog.

Lewisohn, Mark. The Beatles Recording Sessions. New York: Harmony Books, 1988. This seminal work provides detailed descriptions of all the Beatles' recorded works.

_____. The Complete Beatles Chronicle. New York: Harmony Books, 1992. This work expands on The Beatles Recording Sessions by including detailed descriptions for all of the group's documented activities between 1957 and 1970.

See also: Clapton, Eric; Dylan, Bob; Eddy, Duane; Lennon, John; McCartney, Sir Paul; Martin, Sir George; Notorious B.I.G.; Orbison, Roy; Perkins, Carl; Petty, Tom; Robinson, Smokey; Shankar, Ravi; Simone, Nina; Spector, Phil.

Lou Harrison

American classical and film-score composer and pianist

Harrison created large- and small-scale musical compositions in a variety of modernist classical idioms and with elements of Asian musical practices. He was an early advocate of the study and the use of the Indonesian gamelan.

Born: May 14, 1917; Portland, Oregon
Died: February 2, 2003; Lafayette, Indiana
Also known as: Lou Silver Harrison (full name)

Principal works

BALLETS: Green Mansions, 1939 (scenario and choreography by C. Beals); In Praise of Johnny Appleseed, 1942 (for flute and percussion; scenario and choreography by Beals); Solstice, 1949 (scenario and choreography by Jean Erdman).

CHAMBER WORKS: The Winter's Tale, 1937; Electra, 1938 (for chamber orchestra; incidental music for Euripides' play); The Beautiful People, 1941 (for trumpet and piano); Alleluia, 1945; Western Dance (The Open Road), 1947; The Perilous Chapel, 1948; Seven Pastorales, 1952 (for flute, oboe, bassoon, harp, and strings); The Only Jealousy of Emer, 1957 (for piano, flute, cello, bass, and percussion); Elegy to the Memory of Calvin Simmons, 1982 (for oboe, vibraphone, harp, and strings); New Moon, 1986 (for flute, clarinet, brass, strings, and percussion); Ariadne, 1987 (for flute and percussion).

CHORAL WORKS: Political Primer, 1951 (for solo voice, chorus, and orchestra); Mass to Saint Anthony, 1952 (for chorus, trumpet, harp, and strings); Four Strict Songs, 1955 (for chorus and orchestra); Nak Yang chun, 1961 (Spring in Nak Yang; for chorus and chamber orchestra); Easter Cantata, 1966 (for chorus and chamber orchestra); Haiku, 1968 (for chorus, Chinese flute, harp, and percussion); Peace Piece One, 1968 (for chorus and chamber orchestra); Orpheus, 1969 (for chorus and percussion); La Koro Sutro, 1972 (for chorus, organ, harp, and gamelan); Scenes from Cavafy, 1980 (for chorus, harp, and gamelan); Faust, 1985 (for solo voices, chorus, orchestra, harp, and gamelan); Three Songs, 1985 (for chorus, piano, and strings); Homage to Pacifica, 1991 (for chorus, bassoon, harp, percussion, and gamelan); White Ashes, 1992 (for chorus and keyboard).

FILM SCORES: Nuptiae, 1968 (for two voices, chorus, and kulintang); Beyond the Far Blue Mountains, 1982 (for gamelan); Devotions, 1983 (for gamelan).

OPERAS (music): Rapunzel, 1952 (for voice and chamber orchestra; libretto by William Morris); Young Caeser, 1971 (libretto by Robert Gordon).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Suite for Symphonic Strings, 1936; Suite No. 1, 1947 (for strings); Suite No. 2, 1948 (for strings); The Marriage at the Eiffel Tower, 1949 (for orchestral suite; incidental music for Jean Cocteau's play Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel); Suite for Cello and Harp, 1949; Nocturne, 1951; Praises for Hummingbirds and Hawks, 1951 (for small orchestra); Suite for Violin, Piano, and Small Orchestra, 1951; Symphony on G, 1952; At the Tomb of Charles Ives, 1963 (for trombone, psalteries, dulcimers, harps, tam-tam, and strings); Suite for Violin and American Gamelan, 1973; Elegiac Symphony, 1975; Praise for the Beauty of Hummingbirds, 1975 (for two violins, flute, and percussion); Bubaran Robert, 1976 (for gamelan); Third Symphony, 1982; Fourth Symphony, 1990; Suite for Four Haisho with Percussion, 1993; New First Suite, 1995 (for strings); A Parade for M.T.T., 1995; Suite for Cello and Piano, 1995.

PIANO WORKS: The Trojan Women, 1939 (incidental music for Euripides' play); Gigue and Musette, 1941 (for solo piano); Suite for Piano, 1943; Cinna, 1957 (incidental music for Pierre Corneille's play); Piano Concerto, 1985; Tandy's Tango, 1992 (for solo piano).

VOCAL WORKS: Sanctus, 1940 (for voice and piano); King David's Lament, 1941 (for voice and piano); May Rain, 1941 (for voice, piano, and percussion); Pied Beauty, 1941 (for voice, trombone or cello, flute, and percussion); Fragment from Calamus, 1946 (for voices and piano); Alma Redemptoris Mater, 1951 (for voice, violin, trombone, and piano); Peace Piece Three, 1953 (for voice, harp, and strings); Holly and Ivy, 1962 (for voice, harp, and strings); Joyous Procession and Solemn Procession, 1962 (for two voices, brass, and percussion; Peace Piece Two, 1968 (for voice and chamber orchestra); Io and Prometheus, 1973 (for voices and piano); Ketawang Wellington, 1983 (for voice and gamelan); The Foreman's Song Tune (Coyote Stories), 1987 (for voice and gamelan); A Soedjatmoko Set, 1989 (for voices and gamelan).

The Life

Lou Silver Harrison was born on May 14, 1917, in Portland, Oregon. His father, Clarence, was the son of an immigrant, Thomas Nëjsa, who had adopted the name Harrison because his Norwegian name was so often mispronounced. A second son, Arthur, was born to Clarence and his wife, Callie, in 1920.

In 1911, when Callie received an inheritance from the estate of a Midwestern relative, she had a handsome apartment building constructed in Portland. The family lived comfortably, and Callie was able to acquire Asian art and furnishings for her home as well as pay for music lessons for her older son. In 1926 the family moved to Woodland, California, and then to a succession of other cities and towns in the region, settling finally in Burlingame, where Harrison completed high school in 1934.

His early musical experiences included instrument-building and lessons in piano, violin, and voice. Harrison's first compositions date from as early as his tenth year, and he was given private lessons in composition during high school. While attending San Francisco State College for three semesters in 1935 and 1936, he continued to study and to perform instrumental and vocal music, and he had pivotal exposure to aspects of modern music, including the works of the American composer Henry Cowell, who became a lifelong friend and teacher.

In 1942 Harrison moved to Los Angeles, where he taught a form of dance notation at the University of California, and he had an opportunity to study for six months with the legendary composer Arnold Schoenberg. The following year Harrison moved to New York City to further his musical career. However, the ten years he spent there brought creative and professional growth as well as personal distress. Obliged to take on part-time work to meet his living expenses and deeply unsettled by the noise of the city, he suffered a nervous breakdown that led to his hospitalization for a period of months.

Realizing that he needed to live in a rural environment, Harrison ended his East Coast sojourn in 1953 to move back to California, settling permanently in Aptos, a small community in the hills above Santa Cruz. In 1961 Harrison made his first trip to Japan; this was soon followed by periods of study in other Asian countries that deepened his relationship to Oriental musical traditions.

In 1967 Harrison met William Colvig, an electrician and amateur musician with whom he collaborated on acoustical and musical matters over the next three decades. Colvig and Harrison were life companions until Colvig's death in March, 2000. Harrison died suddenly of heart failure at age eighty-five while en route to a music festival in his honor at the University of Ohio.

The Music

Harrison's musical career began in young adulthood in San Francisco during the mid-1930's, when he participated in vocal and in instrumental performances while studying composition and world music. Before his twentieth birthday, he had found work as a composer and an accompanist for dance groups, and in 1937 and 1938 he taught at Mills College in Oakland, California. Many of his early works were composed for the theater, and he achieved early critical notice for his percussion ensemble work. Third Symphony, begun in 1937, was not completed until 1982; Harrison had a well-known penchant for reconsidering early work in the light of subsequent musical explorations, and the chronology of his creative work is unusually complex.

Lou Harrison. (© Christopher Felver/CORBIS)

Musical Influences. The composer's moves to Los Angeles and then to New York were undertaken to enlarge his musical horizons. His education had from the beginning been unconventional. An early, intense involvement with the music of Charles Ives and a thorough engagement with the twelve-tone practices of Schoenberg placed Harrison solidly on the side of advanced modernism in the mid- and late 1940's. In 1946 Harrison conducted the premiere of Ives's Symphony No. 3 to critical acclaim, thus demonstrating both versatile musicianship and critical acumen, as he had been instrumental in preparing the work's score for performance.

Music Reviews. A notable aspect of Harrison's New York years is his work as a music reviewer. He was hired by the composer and critic Virgil Thomson to cover a range of musical events for the New York Herald Tribune, sometimes attending several performances in a single weekend. Thomson helped shape Harrison's understanding of how to address a broad audience in his critical and his analytical writing, and Harrison remained a confident, eloquent writer on music and other cultural matters throughout his career.

Mass to Saint Anthony. In these years, Harrison's compositions included a number of ballets and works for small instrumental ensembles. Work continued on a Mass to Saint Anthony that he had begun in 1939 in response to the beginning of World War II. Completed in 1952, it is a harbinger of subsequent works in which Harrison gives outspoken expression to political and social views. A Political Primer, for solo voice with chorus and orchestra, was begun in the early 1950's, but it remained unfinished.

Rapunzel. Harrison's opera Rapunzel, based on a retelling of the German fairy tale by the English writer William Morris, dates from 1952. An air from this work won a prize in Rome in 1954, when it was sung by Leontyne Price. Despite such artistic successes, the composer's financial situation required that he sometimes take on everyday employment to make ends meet. Newly resettled in California in a small house that his parents had purchased for him, Harrison worked in an animal hospital and as a firefighter. He never regretted these circumstances, later stating that composing and performing music were pleasures that he was happy to pay for by such means.

Gamelan Music. In 1960 Harrison received a grant to study in Japan, China, and Korea. His decisive turn in the following years toward Asian musical culture accorded with his long-standing interests and with the Pacific Rim orientation of his West Coast milieu. Harrison had heard gamelan recordings as early as 1935, and he was captivated by live performances of Balinese gamelan at an international exposition in San Francisco in 1939. The gamelan, a kind of percussion orchestra, offered the composer both beauty of sound and complexity of rhythm, and its status as a popular social institution in Indonesia reinforced his belief in the connection between musical performance and everyday life.

Musical Acoustics. Related to Harrison's involvement in Asian music was his growing attention to musical acoustics, in particular to the concepts of tuning and intonation. In 1949 he read Genesis of a Music, by fellow California composer Harry Partch. Partch advanced the idea of dividing the musical octave into forty-three steps. Beginning in the 1920's, Partch had forged a musical language using novel, homemade instruments to perform in this unorthodox intonation. In sympathy with Partch's notion that European-based musical language was tonally exhausted, Harrison advocated the use of tuning systems of varied historical and geographical origins. He especially promoted just intonation, a tuning that ensures that instruments produce pure, harmonic tones rather than intervals adjusted to the system of equal temperament that has for centuries been the mainstay of Western instrumental music.

La Koro Sutro. From the 1960's, Harrison produced dozens of compositions employing his alternative tuning ideas. Over the years Harrison and Colvig built several gamelans that successfully adapted basic Indonesian concepts to contemporary materials; these are heard in numerous recordings of Harrison's compositions. Among these, of particular note is La Koro Sutro; the text of this majestic composition is the Buddhist "Heart Sutra" translated into the modern, invented language called Esperanto. In some cases only gamelan influences, rather than the instruments themselves, are heard in Harrison's compositions: an acclaimed and popular Piano Concerto, composed in 1985 for the pianist-composer Keith Jarrett, blends elements of nonstandard instrument tuning and large-scale orchestral idiom with the spirit of the gamelan ensemble.

Musical Legacy

Harrison's motto, "Cherish, conserve, consider, create," illuminates the scope of his contribution to music as well as his impact on the social and cultural climate of his times. His embrace of elements of Asian music was a facet of Harrison's respectful attention to cultural traditions outside his own, and he is recognized as a pioneer in the fusion of Western music with what is known as world music. Though he was not the earliest American advocate of the gamelan, he was perhaps its most articulate and creatively persuasive modern one.

For Harrison, the commitment to "conserve" and "consider" applied equally to Western as to world traditions, and it caused him to resist the musical partisanship that characterized aspects of the twentieth century classical music scene, notwithstanding his early mastery of the twelve-tone idiom descending from Schoenberg. If his music was inherently eclectic in its sources and inspiration, it was never conceived to occupy an aesthetic middle ground, and his compositions are noted for sonorities and structures that are highly personal. Much of Harrison's work embraces a simplification and purification of musical materials that have directly influenced late twentieth century minimalism.

Harrison was as concerned with the totality of his musical life and its ethical consequences as he was with the production of a definitive body of compositions. Nonetheless, these number in the hundreds. The relatively limited number of his works that are regularly performed is balanced by a widespread appreciation for the range of his creative work and the lifetime of study that underlay it.

Clyde S. McConnell

Further Reading

Garland, Peter, ed. A Lou Harrison Reader. Santa Fe, N.Mex.: Soundings Press, 1987. A volume issued in celebration of Harrison's seventieth birthday, this book includes essays, photographs, drawings, poems, correspondence, examples of Harrison's excellent calligraphic writing, and other memorabilia.

Kostelanetz, Richard, with Lou Harrison. "A Conversation, in Eleven-Minus-One-Parts, with Lou Harrison about Music/Theater." The Musical Quarterly 76, no. 3 (Autumn, 1992): 383-409. This vivid, informal interview of Harrison by a noted poet and critic provides an indispensable view of Harrison both as a composer and as a personality. The transcription contains a few minor and inconsequential errors.

Miller, Leta E., and Fredric Lieberman. Lou Harrison. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2006. The first in a series of short, readable books in the American Composers series, this volume recapitulates the material in the authors' 1998 book, adding some important biographical details while consolidating much technical material for the general reader. It does not supersede the earlier study and is better integrated. A compact disc of musical examples is included.

_____. Lou Harrison: Composing a World. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. Published five years before the composer's death, this book documents and celebrates Harrison's life while selectively exploring the range and quality of his work. Based in part on Harrison's conversations with the authors over a period of years, it presents a well-written, integrated view of Harrison's personal and professional experiences. A compact disc with selections of representative works by Harrison is included.

Perlman, Marc. "American Gamelan in the Garden of Eden: Intonation in a Cross-Cultural Encounter." The Musical Quarterly 78, no. 3 (Autumn, 1994): 510-555. This wide-ranging scholarly article provides a cross-cultural and historical background to Harrison's investigation and use of intonation and the gamelan, with substantial attention to his predecessors and contemporaries.

Von Gunden, Heidi. The Music of Lou Harrison. Metuchen, N.J.: Scarecrow Press, 1995. The author is a musicologist with an interest in just intonation, and she pursues technical matters to a degree that will satisfy a specialist reader. Like Miller and Lieberman, she demonstrates a keen grasp of the broader cultural and issues at work in Harrison's complex body of work. While this study is parallel to Miller and Lieberman's slightly later work, its scholarly emphasis makes it equally valuable.

See also: Adams, John; Cowell, Henry; Ives, Charles; Jarrett, Keith; Partch, Harry; Price, Leontyne; Schoenberg, Arnold; Thomson, Virgil.

Deborah Harry

American rock singer and songwriter

The iconic lead singer for Blondie, a popular band on the New York punk scene in the 1970's, Harry was known for her witty lyrics, distinctive velvety voice, streetwise wardrobe, and sex appeal.

Born: July 1, 1945; Miami, Florida
Also known as: Deborah Ann Harry (full name); Debbie Harry Member of: The Wind in the Willows; Blondie; the Jazz Passengers

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): KooKoo, 1981; Rockbird, 1986; Def, Dumb and Blonde, 1989; Debravation, 1993; Necessary Evil, 2007.
ALBUMS (with Blondie): Blondie, 1976; Plastic Letters, 1977; Parallel Lines, 1978; Eat to the Beat, 1979; Autoamerican, 1980; The Hunter, 1982; No Exit, 1999; The Curse of Blondie, 2004.
ALBUMS (with the Jazz Passengers): In Love, 1994; Individually Twisted, 1996.
ALBUM (with Wind in the Willows): Wind in the Willows, 1968.
SINGLE (with Blondie): "Call Me," 1980.

The Life

Deborah Ann Harry was born in Miami, Florida, and raised by adoptive parents Catherine and Richard Harry in suburban Hawthorne, New Jersey. Initially hoping to pursue an art career, Harry moved to New York City at the age of twenty, and she supported herself with various jobs. Her first recording experience was singing with the folk-rock band the Wind in the Willows in the late 1960's, after which she left the city for a few years. Harry eased back into the New York City scene in the early 1970's with a stint in the girl group the Stillettoes, where she met guitarist Chris Stein, her longtime boyfriend and cofounder of Blondie. Drummer Clement Burke and keyboardist James Destri were also part of the initial band that formed in the mid-1970's and went on to achieve international fame.

At the height of Blondie's commercial success in the late 1970's and early 1980's, public attention focused on the photogenic lead singer so intensely that Harry's name became synonymous with Blondie, causing significant tension within the group. Blondie disbanded after Stein collapsed on tour in 1982, and he was diagnosed with the life-threatening autoimmune disease pemphigus vulgaris. Despite being at the height of her popularity, Harry stayed with Stein constantly over the next few years while he recovered his health. Their romantic relationship dissolved in the mid-1980's, although they remained friends. After Stein's recovery, in addition to her solo career, Harry pursued acting, with numerous motion-picture roles to her credit. She also performed and recorded with the Jazz Passengers in the 1990's, before Blondie regrouped to record and to tour again.

The Music

In the band's early years, Blondie built up a cult following by performing regularly in New York clubs such as CBGB. After a poorly selling self-titled debut album in 1976, the band attracted enough attention with Plastic Letters to move to Chrysalis Records, and it finally achieved mainstream success with Parallel Lines. At that time, punk and new wave music were considered too inaccessible to sell, but with the band's youthful energy and eclectic mix of styles—including more familiar pop genres—Blondie broke through the stereotype. At the pinnacle of Blondie's success, following Eat to the Beat and Autoamerican, Harry started branching out into a solo career, remaking her image for the album Koo Koo before a return to Blondie for the coolly received album The Hunter, the band's last before breaking up. Harry continued her solo career with the albums Rockbird, Def, Dumb and Blonde, and Debravation, which sold moderately at best. It would seem listeners preferred Harry and Blondie together, as verified by the success of the hit single "Maria" from the album No Exit, recorded by a reunited Blondie and a fifty-three-year-old Harry. Blondie released yet another album, The Curse of Blondie, which met with good reviews but poor sales. On her own, Harry released the pop-oriented Necessary Evil.

Parallel Lines. Blondie's third album, Parallel Lines, launched the band into superstardom, and it is a definitive album of the late 1970's. The punk-meets-disco song "Heart of Glass" was Blondie's first U.S. hit single, albeit a controversial one. "Heart of Glass" had been recorded earlier with the title "Once I Had a Love," but producer Mike Chapman brought out the disco feel that made it famous. Blondie had always experimented with various popular styles, but many accused the group of pandering to mainstream taste, which is what their fellow punk musicians were struggling against. The album's most enduring singles demonstrate Harry's range of vocal qualities, from breathy in "Heart of Glass," to tough girl with a Jersey accent in the band's cover of "Hanging on the Telephone," to aggressive and even downright funny in the relentless "One Way or Another," which Harry has said is about an ex-boyfriend who turned to stalking.

"Call Me." "Call Me," the theme song from the film American Gigolo (1980) starring Richard Gere, was the top-selling single in both the United States and England in 1980, as well as Blondie's best-selling U.S. single overall. The song represents the band's collaborative effort with producer Giorgio Moroder. Moroder provided an instrumental track that he had dubbed "Man Machine," and Harry wrote the lyrics to capture the essence of the film. The driving beat, with Harry's smooth vocals on the bold minor-key melody and the compelling chorus, helped make "Call Me" one of pop culture's most enduring songs.

Autoamerican. Blondie's fifth album, released in 1980, explored a wide variety of genres, and it produced two hit singles. A reggae-inspired cover of "The Tide Is High" charted at number one in both the United States and England. "Rapture" was the first number-one pop hit to incorporate rap-style music, and it was many listeners' first exposure to the genre. Although perhaps obvious today, the title is a clever play on words, reflecting the name of the emerging rap-music genre as well as a condition brought to mind by the song's bizarre lyrics. Perhaps what is most appealing about "Rapture" is the stark musical contrast within the song: The verses feature an ultra-smooth melody sung in Harry's most sensual voice, making her funky rap all the more unexpected.

Musical Legacy

Blondie had tremendous influence on popular music in the 1980's, and Harry played an essential role in the band's success: Her offbeat lyrics and her distinctive voice defined their sound. Equal significant to her direct musical influence was her image: Her trademark bleached-blonde hair with dark roots and streetwise style brought Hollywood glamour to rock music, coupled with an audacious punk sensibility. Certainly the band's striking visual image was to its advantage when music videos came into play. In many ways, Harry garnered a respect for women in music that paved the way for Madonna's groundbreaking success, as Madonna has often acknowledged.

Gretchen Rowe Clements

Further Reading

Bayley, Roberta. Blondie: Unseen, 1976-1980. London: Plexus, 2007. A candid and striking photographic chronicle of Blondie's rise to superstardom.

Che, Cathay. Deborah Harry: Platinum Blonde. London: André Deutsch, 2005. Authorized biography featuring interviews with Harry and Stein and a discussion of Harry's impact on popular culture.

Harry, Deborah, Chris Stein, and Victor Bockris. Making Tracks: The Rise of Blondie. New York: Da Capo Press, 1998. Fascinating look at Blondie through Harry's voice, with unique candid photographs by Stein.

Metz, Allan. Blondie, from Punk to the Present: A Pictorial History. Springfield, Mo.: Musical Legacy, 2002. Thoroughly detailed chronology for the serious Blondie fan. Includes a prologue by Stein.

Rock, Mick. Picture This: Debbie Harry and Blondie. A collection of previously unpublished photographs focusing on Harry at the pinnacle of Blondie's success.

See also: Madonna; Nicks, Stevie; Summer, Donna.

Lorenz Hart

American popular music and musical-theater composer and lyricist

Hart brought wit, sophistication, and complex emotions to the lyrics of popular songs in the 1920's and of musical theater in the 1930's and 1940's.

Born: May 2, 1895; New York, New York
Died: November 22, 1943; New York, New York
Also known as: Lorenz Milton Hart (full name); Larry Hart

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (lyrics): A Lonely Romeo, 1919 (libretto by Harry B. Smith and Lew M. Fields; music by Malvin M. Franklin and Robert Hood Bowers; lyrics with Robert B. Smith); Poor Little Ritz Girl, 1920 (libretto by Fields and George Campbell; music by Richard Rodgers and Sigmund Romberg; lyrics with Alex Gerber); Dearest Enemy, 1925 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); The Garrick Gaieties, 1925 (music by Rodgers); The Girl Friend, 1926 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); Peggy-Ann, 1926 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); Betsy, 1926 (libretto by Irving Caesar, David Freedman, and Anthony McGuire; music by Rodgers); A Connecticut Yankee, 1927 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); Chee-Chee, 1928 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); Present Arms, 1928 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); She's My Baby, 1928 (libretto by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby; music by Rodgers); Heads Up!, 1929 (libretto by John McGowan and Paul Gerard Smith; music by Rodgers); Spring Is Here, 1929 (libretto by Owen Davis; music by Rodgers); Simple Simon, 1930 (libretto by Guy Bolton and Ed Wynn; music by Rodgers); America's Sweetheart, 1931 (libretto by Fields; music by Rodgers); Jumbo, 1935 (libretto by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur; music and lyrics by Rodgers and Hart); On Your Toes, 1936 (libretto by Rodgers, George Abbott, and Hart; music by Rodgers); Babes in Arms, 1937 (libretto by Rodgers and Hart; music by Rodgers); I'd Rather Be Right, 1937 (libretto by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart; music by Rodgers); The Boys from Syracuse, 1938 (libretto by Abbott; based on William Shakespeare's play The Comedy of Errors; music by Rodgers); I Married an Angel, 1938 (libretto by Rodgers and Hart; based on a play by Johann Vaszary; music by Rodgers); Too Many Girls, 1939 (libretto by George Marion, Jr.; music by Rodgers); Higher and Higher, 1940 (libretto by Gladys Hurlbut and Joshua Logan; music by Rodgers); Pal Joey, 1940 (libretto by John O'Hara; music by Rodgers); By Jupiter, 1942 (libretto by Rodgers and Hart; based on Julian F. Thompson's The Warrior Husband; music by Rodgers); Rodgers and Hart, 1975 (libretto by Richard Lewine and John Fearnley; music by Rodgers).

The Life

Lorenz Milton Hart was born in New York City, the older of two sons of Freida and Max Hart, Jewish immigrants to the United States. Lorenz was a distant descendant of the German poet Heinrich Heine, and he was fluent in German from boyhood. He attended Columbia University, but he dropped out of college to work in the Schubert Theater organization in New York City. Known as Larry from an early age, Hart was a short man with a large head. Although he was quick-witted, articulate, and funny, women did not find him attractive as a romantic companion. As one friend observed, since he could not find love with the opposite sex, he turned to the only other sex there was.

In 1919 Hart met Richard Rodgers, an aspiring songwriter. During the next twenty-five years, they became one of the most popular songwriting teams of the era. For Hart, their professional success came at a personal price. By the early 1940's, Hart's troubles took a toll on his health. Because Hart was drinking heavily and conflicted about his sexuality, he and Rodgers found it more difficult to work together. When Rodgers decided to collaborate with Oscar Hammerstein II on what became Oklahoma!, the Rodgers and Hart partnership ended in bitterness. Hart died in November, 1943, from the effects of pneumonia and exposure brought on by excessive drinking.

The Music

Collaborating with Rodgers. When they began their partnership, Rodgers and Hart shared similar ideas about the nature of popular songs. They wanted to avoid conventional rhymes and trite images in order to explore the language of the city. In the beginning, they experienced difficulty in persuading theatrical producers to use their unconventional work. One song, "Any Old Place with You," enjoyed a brief success, but it was not enough.

Success came in 1925, when their song "Manhattan" was the big hit of The Garrick Gaieties, an annual revue composed of individual sketches and songs. On opening night, "Manhattan" stopped the show, with the audience demanding repeated renditions. Hart's engaging lyrics about summer journeys to Niagara and the fantasies of boys and girls on the sidewalks of New York captivated listeners. For the next eighteen years, Hart and Rodgers had one hit show after another. They learned that the only sure recipe for failure was to repeat what they had done before.

From Broadway to Hollywood and Back. In this working relationship, Hart proved a frustrating partner. Rodgers wrote melodies with great ease, and then he had to wait for Hart's lyrics. While he could dash off a lyric quickly, Hart often disappeared for days without an explanation. He required the stimulation of a situation within a show or a deadline to do his best work. For the punctual and meticulous Rodgers, these traits proved increasingly difficult to tolerate.

Still, Hart had an uncanny facility for writing both songs and their lyrics. The most noteworthy example occurred when the two men were in Paris, riding in a taxi with several women. A collision took place, and after the crash one of the women observed to her companions, "My heart stood still." From the taxi floor, where he had been thrown by the impact, Hart told Rodgers that the phrase would make a great title for a song, and so it did.

During the second half of the 1920's, they wrote such shows as Dearest Enemy, The Girl Friend, and A Connecticut Yankee with numerous hit songs. During the early 1930's, the team moved to Hollywood and motion pictures. Although they wrote some good songs, such as "Isn't It Romantic" and "Blue Moon," in this period, the two men were not happy with how filmmakers treated them. They returned to New York and Broadway to began their most productive time as songwriters. Hart's lyrics for shows such as Jumbo, On Your Toes, and Babes in Arms displayed his prodigious talent. Perhaps the show that best defined what Hart could accomplish was Pal Joey, with such hits as "Bewitched" and "I Could Write a Book."

Musical Legacy

Hart began his career at a time when American popular song lyrics lacked sophistication and wit. He brought a poetic sensibility to his craft, along with a determination to have the words of his songs reflect the language of everyday people. At his best in songs such as "My Romance," "My Funny Valentine," and "The Lady Is a Tramp," Hart combined intricate rhymes with emotional energy and power. He also explored complex emotions, such as the sense of knowing someone even though the couple had just met in "Where or When." Hart captured the rhythms and vernacular of the 1920's and 1930's in enduring songs such as "Thou Swell." The works of Rodgers and Hart demonstrated that popular songs could attain a significant level of artistic excellence.

Lorenz Hart (right) with Richard Rodgers. (Library of Congress)

Although Hart was largely forgotten when Rodgers joined Hammerstein to create such hit musicals such as The King and I (1951) and South Pacific (1949), his reputation rebounded as singers and musicians revived his songs and recognized what an important influence he had had on popular music.

Lewis L. Gould

Further Reading

Furia, Philip. The Poets of Tin Pan Alley: A History of America's Great Lyricists. New York: Oxford University Press, 1990. This resource provides a perceptive and informed chapter on Hart's lyrics.

Hart, Dorothy, and Robert Kimball, eds. The Complete Lyrics of Lorenz Hart. New York: Knopf, 1986. This indispensable guide to Hart's career offers a look at the innovative lyrics he provided to musical theater.

Nolan, Frederick W. Lorenz Hart: A Poet on Broadway. New York: Oxford University Press, 1994. This well-researched biography of Hart offers a look at the life and career of the lyricist. While Hart helped to revitalize the songs of Broadway, his erratic behavior cost his successful partnership with Rodgers.

Rodgers, Richard. The Rodgers and Hart Songbook. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1951. Rodgers provides a fascinating biographical essay about his partner.

Sheed, Wilfred. The House That George Built. New York: Random House, 2007. This lively history of American songwriting provides some comments on Hart's influence.

Wilk, Max. They're Playing Our Song: The Truth Behind the Words and Music of Three Generations. New York: Moyer and Bell, 1991. This history of songs has an informative and insightful chapter on Hart.

See also: Berlin, Irving; Chevalier, Maurice; Cohan, George M.; Hammerstein, Oscar, II; Jordan, Louis; Lee, Peggy; McPartland, Marian; Mercer, Johnny; Newman, Alfred; Porter, Cole; Rodgers, Richard; Romberg, Sigmund; Simone, Nina; Tormé, Mel.

Coleman Hawkins

American tenor saxophonist

Hawkins is generally recognized as the first great tenor saxophonist in jazz. He influenced virtually all subsequent players on all types of saxophones in the jazz world.

Born: November 21, 1904; St. Joseph, Missouri
Died: May 19, 1969; New York, New York
Also known as: Coleman Randolph Hawkins (full name); Hawk; Bean

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: April in Paris, Featuring Body and Soul, 1936; The King of the Tenor Sax, 1943; Coleman Hawkins/Lester Young, 1945 (with Lester Young); Hawk in Flight, 1947; The Hawk Returns, 1954; The Tenor Sax Album, 1954; Cool Groove, 1955; The Hawk in Hi Fi, 1956; The Hawk in Paris, 1956; Coleman Hawkins Encounters Ben Webster, 1957 (with Ben Webster); The Genius of Coleman Hawkins, 1957; The Hawk Flies High, 1957; Standards and Warhorses, 1957 (with Red Allen); Coleman Hawkins and His Friends at a Famous Jazz Party, 1958 (with others); Coleman Hawkins Meets the Sax Section, 1958; High and Mighty Hawk, 1958; Soul, 1958; Coleman Hawkins with the Red Garland Trio, 1959 (with the Red Garland Trio); Hawk Eyes, 1959; Stasch, 1959; At Ease with Coleman Hawkins, 1960; Coleman Hawkins All Stars, 1960; In a Mellow Tone, 1960; Night Hawk, 1960 (with Eddie Davis); Swingville, 1960 (with Coleman Hawkins All Stars); The Hawk Relaxes, 1961; Jam Session in Swingville, 1961 (with Pee Wee Russell); Jazz Reunion, 1961 (with others); Alive!, 1962 (with Roy Eldridge and Johnny Hodges); Desafinado: Bossa Nova and Jazz Samba, 1962; Duke Ellington Meets Coleman Hawkins, 1962; Good Old Broadway, 1962; No Strings, 1962; Plays Make Someone Happy, 1962; Hawk Talk, 1963; Sonny Meets Hawk, 1963; Today and Now, 1963; Wrapped Tight, 1965; Sirius, 1966; Supreme, 1966.

The Life

Coleman Randolph Hawkins was born in St. Joseph, Missouri. His parents had one other child, a girl who died one year before Coleman was born. His father was an electrical engineer; his mother taught him to play the piano at the age of five. He also learned to play the cello before taking up the instrument with which he became associated, the saxophone. He attended high school in Chicago and in Topeka, Kansas, where he also studied harmony and composition at Washburn College.

Hawkins was a music professional when only sixteen. In 1921, while playing in a theater orchestra in Kansas City, he was signed by Mamie Smith, a black singer whose Jazz Hounds was one of the first African American jazz groups to be recorded regularly. In 1924 he joined the band of one of the foremost jazz musicians, Fletcher Henderson. In ten years with Henderson, a long stint for a jazz musician at the time, he developed a highly innovative style.

By 1934 many opportunities for black American musicians were developing in Europe. From March, 1934, Hawkins worked in Britain, France, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, and the Scandinavian countries for more than five years. His associations there included the great British orchestra leader Jack Hylton, who had invited Hawkins to play with his orchestra; Django Reinhardt, the most renowned European guitarist; and another American who was also touring Europe at the time, Benny Carter. Hawkins is credited with raising the level of European jazz to a new height. By 1939, however, he, along with many other Americans abroad, returned from the wartorn European continent as World War II escalated.

At this point, Hawkins's style reached a peak, especially with his highly original yet popular recording of "Body and Soul." For two years he led his own bands and then toured with small bands. He continued to perform with important jazz figures of the 1920's and 1930's but also appeared with bebop organizations that developed in the mid-1940's, playing with Dizzy Gillespie as early as 1943. In his own band in 1944 he employed and played the compositions of pianist Thelonious Monk and helped raise Monk to prominence.

Among his later successes were a return trip to Europe in 1954, recordings with Duke Ellington in 1962, and many appearances at the Village Vanguard in Manhattan. Although he had a problem with alcohol in his last years, he worked until shortly before his death in 1969. He was survived by his wife, Delores, his son Rene, and his two daughters, Mimi and Colette.

The Music

The saxophone, with few exceptions an unpopular instrument in the performance of classical music, was not used in the ragtime era from the late 1890's until well into the 1910's. A few early jazz musicians played it in the World War I period (1914-1919), but these men did not become important figures, and they employed the tenor saxophone as a rhythmical instrument, not a melodic one. Coleman Hawkins has generally received credit from jazz historians for making the tenor saxophone a staple of jazz music. Influenced by Louis Armstrong, who revolutionized trumpet playing, Hawkins did the same thing with the saxophone. He introduced a smoother and more rhythmical tonguing of his instrument and adopted hard and heavy reeds that his contemporaries did not have the strength to use.

Coleman Hawkins. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Hawkins was a competitive man with the urge to outdo his contemporaries, but his originality involved a great capacity for listening and learning from other musicians. He could adapt to the tenor saxophone the best musical expressions that he heard on other instruments. By the late 1930's he was able to do what only Armstrong had done: interpret the songs that he played—in effect recompose them—in performances that went far beyond the intentions of the original composer. He was one of the great energizers of European jazz during his five years abroad. His unique style became the standard for almost all saxophonists, especially tenor saxophonists in the field of jazz.

"One Hour." It must be remembered that performances of jazz music, especially in recordings before the time of long-playing (LP) records and later developments such as compact discs (CDs), usually lasted about three minutes, and a new and important stage of a musician's development might be reflected in several recordings made at about the same time. Therefore, it is sometimes difficult to choose one banner performance by Hawkins. In 1929, Hawkins, while a member of the Fletcher Henderson orchestra, on occasion played with other organizations, including McKinney's Cotton Pickers and the Mound City Blue Blowers. Within a week he recorded with both these bands, and in each case the style he had been developing in this decade became obvious.

"One Hour," with the latter group, can be associated with James P. Johnson's song "If I Could Be with You One Hour Tonight," still well known many decades later. Although Johnson's melody is never heard directly, "One Hour" is clearly based on its chords. A six-measure introduction by Hawkins, in which he abandons the conventional staccato rhythm employing short notes that even he had been relying upon and instead offers a legato style with descending figures that would become one of the features of his later playing. This performance illustrates the improvisational approach to familiar songs that is taken for granted today but was unknown in jazz at that time. Critic Gary Giddins considers this eighteen-measure solo to be the first "entirely successful tenor solo."

"Body and Soul." Hawkins recorded one of the most famous of all jazz performances on October 11, 1939, in the RCA studio in New York City. The song was "Body and Soul," composed nine years earlier by John Green. The theme of this song is never stated directly, although it is recognizable in the early measures of the recording. Thereafter the performance is all an improvisation, grounded on Hawkins's grasp of the song's melodic and rhythmical possibilities. Today it sounds conventional, but that is because instrumentalists after Hawkins enthusiastically adapted his kind of jazz invention.

Like Armstrong's interpretation of "West End Blues" eleven years earlier, Hawkins "Body and Soul" was recognized as entirely original, both in way he played the tenor saxophone and in his method of recording the song. Although truly original work is often not recognized as such until long afterward, this recording proved to be enormously popular. Hawkins had been developing this style for many years, and thus his interpretation of "Body and Soul" was not a sudden breakthrough into a new style of playing the saxophone but rather a particularly pure example of a style he had been perfecting in his decades with the Fletcher Henderson orchestra.

He was immediately obliged to repeat his performance, which he sometimes did on recordings and sometimes transformed extensively. It is likely that he had performed it many times on the European tour that he had just concluded, but now his fans demanded it, and he would continue to play it throughout his career. He began to play an expanded version of the song that fall of 1939 while fronting a band he had organized. Using the harmonies of the song, he elaborated the possibilities of the earlier three-minute recording, moving from a lower range upward in the second chorus. Despite the tedium of repeating this popular number, Hawkins was able, twenty years later, to perform it with enormous success at the Chicago Playboy Jazz Festival.

"Picasso." In 1948 Norman Granz, who produced a number of important jazz performances, issued "Picasso" on his Clef Record label. Hawkins recorded this work either in that year or perhaps somewhat earlier. It was an unaccompanied saxophone solo, an innovation at the time. Hawkins mingled dramatic passages with free-form excursions in a remarkable display. The title reflects Granz's interest in artist Pablo Picasso, although for Hawkins the Pablo who beguiled him was the great cellist, Pablo Casals. Having played the piano and cello before taking up the saxophone, and continuing to play them for his own satisfaction, Hawkins was able to use his insights into the capacities of the piano and the cello in this solo recording of "Picasso" on the tenor saxophone.

"Mood Indigo." Until 1962, when Hawkins was in his late fifties and Duke Ellington in his early sixties, the two men had never recorded together, probably because Ellington's orchestra had over the years included several outstanding saxophonists, such as Ben Webster, whose style Hawkins had obviously influenced. Now, with Webster on his own, Hawkins joined with Ellington and six members of his orchestra for an album called Duke Ellington Meets Coleman Hawkins. It included several Ellington compositions, among them a six-minute version of his already famous "Mood Indigo," which became a highlight of this recording session. This is the only recorded combination of these two powerhouses of jazz late in their careers, but it took place while each was still performing at a high level.

Musical Legacy

Coleman Hawkins was essentially a gifted soloist, the first outstanding tenor saxophonist in jazz. Although he led his own musical groups at times, his temperament did not permit him to guide and discipline other musicians, who for him were essentially accompanists, and his own orchestras were not outstanding. Highly competitive, he enjoyed matching skills with other performers. It has been argued that he influenced virtually all later tenor saxophonists with the exception of Lester Young, the first man recognized as having defeated Hawkins in a jam session.

Hawkins was one of the most influential jazz musicians in style and technique. He moved away from the old "slap-tongue" style to a more powerful, fluent, legato manner of playing and characteristically projected an exciting, driving rhythm. Because he was adept at both piano and cello, Hawkins was able to bring a measure of their polyphonic capacities to a single-note instrument. His style drew adherents throughout the 1930's, and in the following decade Hawkins did what few of his contemporaries, the jazz musicians born before World War I, attempted. He encouraged younger musicians like Thelonious Monk and Miles Davis and performed with Dizzy Gillespie, Max Roach, and Sonny Rollins and other jazzmen of the bebop era, even as he continued his associations with the men who dominated jazz between the two world wars. As late as the 1960's, Hawkins, who had made the tenor saxophone a melodic instrument and performed for more than forty years, remained a major force in jazz music.

Robert P. Ellis

Further Reading

Chilton, John. The Song of the Hawk. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1990. Hawkins has not been blessed with an outstanding biography, but this work by a significant British jazz historian is the most informative work.

Giddins, Gary. Visions of Jazz: The First Century. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. The chapter on Hawkins is a good short biography, including accounts of the author's personal observations of the saxophonist's late concerts.

Hentoff, Nat. Jazz Is. New York: Random House, 1976. Hentoff's short section on Hawkins contains an account of the first time he was beaten in one of the saxophone competitions that were part of the jazz ritual known as the jam session.

Kirchner, Bill, ed. The Oxford Companion to Jazz. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000. The Hawkins chapter highlights some of his major performances, especially in the 1940's, when he collaborated with several young musicians who transformed jazz after World War II.

Schuller, Gunther. The Swing Era: The Development of Jazz, 1930-1945. New York: Oxford University Press, 1989. Schuller's chapter on Hawkins contains eight reproductions of musical examples transcribed by the author from recordings.

See also: Bechet, Sidney; Carter, Benny; Coltrane, John; Ellington, Duke; Gillespie, Dizzy;

Hampton, Lionel; Hancock, Herbie; Henderson, Fletcher; Holiday, Billie; Jones, Hank; Lewis, John; Monk, Thelonious; Navarro, Fats; Parker, Charlie; Powell, Bud; Roach, Max; Rollins, Sonny; Smith, Bessie; Smith, Mamie; Sun Ra; Webster, Ben; Young, Lester.

Isaac Hayes

American rhythm-and-blues singer, songwriter, pianist, and saxophone player

Hayes excelled in producing the Memphis sound, a style of soul music that blended gospel and blues and that inspired funk, disco, and hip-hop. In addition, he was a noted composer of motion-picture scores.

Born: August 20, 1942; Covington, Tennessee
Died: August 10, 2008; Memphis, Tennessee
Also known as: Isaac Lee Hayes, Jr. (full name); Ike Member of: The Mar-Keys

Principal works

FILM SCORES: Maidstone, 1970; Shaft, 1971; Tough Guys, 1974; Truck Turner, 1974; Ninth Street, 1999; Bui Doi, 2001.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Presenting Isaac Hayes, 1967; Hot Buttered Soul, 1969; The Isaac Hayes Movement, 1970; . . . To Be Continued, 1970; Black Moses, 1971; Shaft, 1971; In the Beginning, 1972; Joy, 1973; Tough Guys, 1974; Truck Turner, 1974; Chocolate Chip, 1975; Disco Connection, 1976; Groove-a-Thon, 1976; Juicy Fruit, 1976; A Man and a Woman, 1977 (with Dionne Warwick); New Horizon, 1977; For the Sake of Love, 1978; Hotbed, 1978; Don't Let Go, 1979; And Once Again, 1980; Royal Rappins, 1980 (with Millie Jackson); Lifetime Thing, 1981; U-Turn, 1986; Love Attack, 1988; Wonderful, 1994; Branded, 1995; Raw and Refined, 1995; Instrumentals, 2003.
ALBUM (with the Mar-Keys): The Great Memphis Sound, 1966.

The Life

Born into poverty in Covington, Tennessee, Isaac Lee Hayes, Jr., was the second child of sharecroppers Isaac Hayes, Sr., and Eula Hayes. The Hayes children were orphaned early, and they were raised by their grandparents. Hayes picked cotton and performed other menial labor to help make ends meet. Although he dropped out of Manassas High School, he returned at age twenty-one to earn a diploma.

A gospel singer as a child, Hayes learned to play saxophone and piano in his teens, performing with numerous local groups. In the early 1960's, Hayes became a session musician with Stax Records, and he contributed as a songwriter (in collaboration with David Porter), an arranger, and a producer. He produced hits for many artists, especially Sam and Dave, in the process creating what came to be known as the Memphis sound. Later, he earned a reputation in his own right as a performer and a composer. He founded his own record label, Hot Buttered Soul, in 1975, but he was forced to declare bankruptcy before making a comeback later in the decade. Beginning in the mid-1970's, he appeared frequently in films and on television shows, including a long run on the animated series South Park.

Well known for his humanitarian work—particularly in support of literacy—and a controversial figure for his association with Scientology, Hayes resided in Memphis, where he hosted a popular radio show and owned two restaurants. The father of twelve children, he lived with his fourth wife, Adjowa, who gave birth to their son Nana in 2006. On August 10, 2008, the sixty-five-year-old Hayes collapsed and died at his home in Memphis.

The Music

Hayes became a driving force in African American music during the height of the civil rights era of the early 1960's. He was a leader in creating what became known as the Memphis sound, a form of soul music that blended the spiritual feel of gospel with the secular subject matter of blues. He borrowed shouts, call-and-response, and vocal harmonic style from gospel, and then he added horns to emphasize and underscore particular vocal phrases, encouraged instrumental improvisation, and stressed strong bass lines and clear-cut rhythm with a hard-hitting backbeat. Hayes's musical production dropped off in the early 1980's as tastes and styles changed. At the same time, he devoted more energy to acting, appearing in television series such as The Rockford Files, The A-Team, Miami Vice. From 1997 to 2006, he was the voice of Chef on the animated series South Park. He also appeared in such films as Escape from New York (1981), I'm Gonna Get You Sucka (1988), and Johnny Mnemonic (1995).

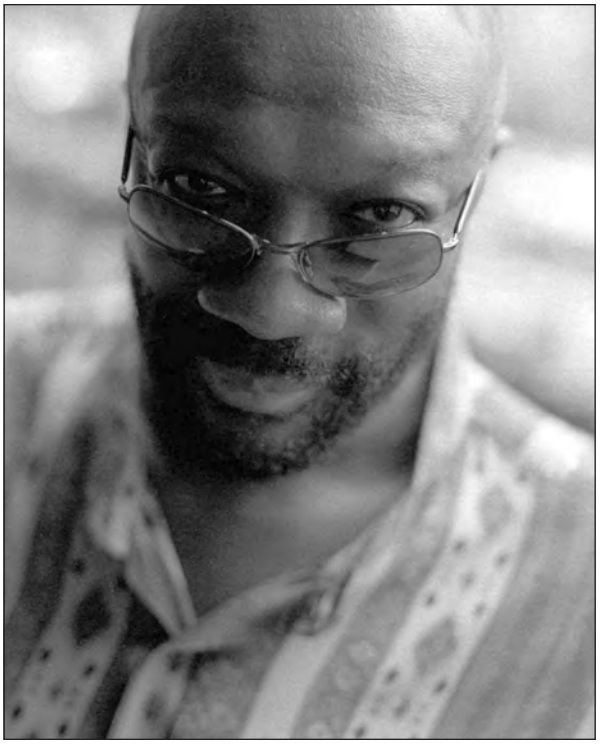
Early Works. Though other artists recorded songs composed at Stax Records by the team of Hayes and Porter, it was Sam and Dave (Samuel David Moore and Dave Prater) that had the greatest success. Between 1965 and 1970, Hayes and Porter wrote more than a dozen rhythm-and-blues/soul hits for Sam and Dave that performed well on pop charts in the United States and in England. The best-known songs included "Hold On! I'm Comin'" (1966), "When Something Is Wrong with My Baby" (1967), "Soul Man" (1967), and "I Thank You" (1968).

Hot Buttered Soul. A studio album released in 1969, this represented Hayes's second solo effort, and it was a major departure from typical soul recordings of the day. Instead of the usual series of short songs appropriate for singles, Hot Buttered Soul presented just four cuts, from the five-minute-long original about adultery, "One Woman," to an eighteen-minute version of Jimmy Webb's "By the Time I Get to Phoenix," featuring narration and full orchestration complete with horns, strings, and chorus bolstered with delayed reverb.

Shaft. Hayes may be best remembered for this double-disc release that contains highlights from the sound track of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer black private-eye film Shaft (1971), which Hayes scored. The primarily instrumental album, which reached number one on the Billboard black and jazz charts, produced "Theme from Shaft," which reached number one on the Billboard Hot 100 list, remaining on the charts for more than a year. Shaft garnered three Grammy Awards (Best Instrumental Composition for Motion Picture or Television, Best Engineered Recording, Best Instrumental Arrangement). Hayes—who had a cameo role in the film—also won an Academy Award for Best Original Composition, the first African American to earn an Oscar in a nonacting role.

New Horizon. This 1977 release was Hayes's well-received and critically acclaimed rhythm-and-blues/soul debut with a new label, Polydor. A live album, and a comeback of sorts for Hayes, it featured duets with singer Dionne Warwick, and had several tracks that proved popular with listeners, including the hit "Out of the Ghetto"; a ballad, "It's Heaven to Me"; and the erotic dance tune "Moonlight Lovin' (Menage a Trois)."



Isaac Hayes. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Branded. A 1995 release on Virgin Records, this album marked another Hayes comeback, after his long hiatus in the late 1980's and early 1990's. A mix of fast-paced, funky jams and slowed-down love ballads showcasing Hayes's distinctive voice, Branded is considered a masterpiece of vocal and instrumental arrangements. Outstanding cuts include "Thanks to the Fool," "Soulsville," "Summer in the City," "I'll Do Anything (To Turn You On)," and a reworking of Sting's "Fragile."

Musical Legacy

Hayes built an impressive body of work since he started as a keyboard player in the house band at Stax Records in the early 1960's. With partner Porter, Hayes gained fame as a songwriter and producer, helping pen a string of hits for Sam and Dave. Throughout his Grammy and Academy Award-winning solo career he broke new ground: blending black and white musical styles, mixing the sacred and the secular, merging funk with unusual orchestrations, and creating extended mini-symphonies of soul that shattered preconceptions of pop music. In the process, he pioneered a fresh, instantly recognizable form that inspired later artists, setting the stage for further expansion of African American music. A leader of innovation by example, Hayes was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2002.

Jack Ewing

Further Reading

Bowman, Rob. Soulsville, U.S.A.: The Story of Stax Records. Woodbridge, Conn.: Schirmer Trade Books, 2003. This is a history of the influential record label, where Hayes began his career, with interviews and photographs.

Goldman, Vivien. The Black Chord. New York: Universe, 1999. An overview of African American music, from ancient roots to the present, this contains an introduction by Hayes and many photographs.

Gordon, Robert. It Came From Memphis. New York: Atria, 2001. This book provides unusual insight into the hidden character of the city called the birthplace of rock and roll. Includes references to Hayes and photographs.

Guralick, Peter. Sweet Soul Music: Rhythm and Blues and the Southern Dream of Freedom. New York: Back Bay Books, 1999. This book focuses on Stax Records and its involvement in the evolution of contemporary rhythm and blues. Includes profiles of artists, among them Hayes, and criticism.

Hayes, Isaac, and Susan DiSesa. Cooking with Heart and Soul. New York: Putnam, 2000. This autobiographical cookbook offers background information on Hayes and recipes for down-home cuisine. Includes photographs.

See also: King, Albert; Pickett, Wilson; Sting; Webb, Jimmy.

Jascha Heifetz

Lithuanian American classical violinist

Heifetz was known for interpretations of violin works that emphasized fast tempi, an intense vibrato, and a powerful tone. Later in life he became a pedagogue, but his principal influence upon the world of music was as an inimitable performer.

Born: February 2, 1901; Vilna, Lithuania, Russian Empire (now in Lithuania)
Died: December 10, 1987; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: Iosef Ruvinovich Heifetz (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Bach: Sonatas and Partitas, 1952; Beethoven: Sonatas, 1952; Conus: Concerto in E Minor, 1952; Spohr: Concerto No. 8, 1954; Brahms: Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 77, 1955 (with Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra); Beethoven: Concerto, 1956; Mozart: Sinfonia Concertante, 1956; Tchaikovsky: Concerto for Violin in D Major, Op. 35, 1957 (with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra); Mendelssohn: Violin Concerto in E Minor, Op. 64, 1959 (with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra); Prokofiev: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Op. 63, 1959 (with Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra); Sibelius: Violin Concerto in D Minor, Op. 47, 1959 (with Walter Hendl and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra); Bach: Concerto for Two Violins, 1961 (with Sir Malcolm Sargent and the New Symphony Orchestra of London); Bruch: Scottish Fantasy in E-flat Major, Op. 46, 1961 (with Sargent and the New Symphony Orchestra of London); Glazunov: Concerto for Violin in A Minor, Op. 82, 1963 (with Hendl and the RCA Victor Symphony Orchestra); George Gershwin: Three Preludes, 1965 (with Brooks Smith); Bach: Chaconne from Partita No. 2 in D Minor, 1970; Tchaikovsky: Sérénade Mélancolique for Violin and Orchestra in B Minor, Op. 26, 1970.

The Life

Following early lessons on a quarter-sized violin with his father, Iosef Ruvinovich "Jascha" Heifetz

(JAH-shah HI-fehts) continued his studies at age five with Ilya Malkin, a student of Leopold Auer (the leading violin professor in Russia at the turn of the twentieth century). Later, Heifetiz studied in St. Petersburg, Russia, with Auer himself. At age ten, Heifetz embarked upon concert tours, leading to debuts around the world, repeat engagements, and recording contracts. His life was so intimately bound with his music that it is nearly impossible to separate the man from the violin. He became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1925, an act that caused the Soviet Union to label him essentially a traitor and to disparage him in the Russian press. Later in his life, the Russian musical and political establishment worked to humiliate his students (especially Erick Friedman) when they entered the international Tchaikovsky Competition held in Moscow.

Heifetz married a silent film actress named Florence Vidor in 1928, and they had two children, Josefa and Robert. The couple divorced in 1945. He married Frances Spiegelberg in 1947, and the couple had a son named Joseph (who is a photographer in Australia). The couple divorced in 1962.

In 1953 Heifetz suffered minor arm injuries when he was attacked in Jerusalem following a concert on which he had programmed the violin sonata by Richard Strauss, disdaining an Israeli ban at the time that prohibited performances of music by German composers. In the late 1950's, he curtailed his performing career, which had included more than one hundred concerts a year, adding other musical roles, such as recording and teaching, to his life and also spending more time at his home in California, where he enjoyed tennis, Ping-Pong, and sailing. He retired from performing completely following a televised broadcast of his final concert on October 23, 1972. For fifteen more years, he continued to teach, and his teaching studio, which was designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, is preserved in the Colburn School of Music in downtown Los Angeles. Heifetz died at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles on December 10, 1987.

The Music

At age six, Heifetz performed Felix Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in E Minor (1845) before an audience of a thousand people. By age eleven, he had logged a debut in St. Petersburg and in Berlin. The teacher who changed Heifetz's life was Auer, who took Heifetz as a student in 1910. Auer imparted to Heifetz the essentials of technique and of interpretation in the Russian tradition that remained with him throughout his career. These characteristics included the high right elbow and the strongly angled bow fingers (since dubbed the Russian bow grip). Another is audible portamenti and shifts between notes (since called Russian or Heifetz shifts), in which a violinist changes position using the finger that will play the note following the shift rather than the finger playing the note prior to the shift (called a French-style shift).

Jascha Heifetz. (Library of Congress)

Early Performances. Heifetz's official debut in St. Petersburg occurred on April 30, 1911, before an audience of about twenty-five thousand, and his European debut occurred on October 28, 1912, when he performed Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto (1878) with the Berlin Philharmonic. It appears, however, that it was his New York debut in 1917 (at the age of sixteen) that sparked the sensation that he maintained for more than fifty years.

From 1917, Heifetz performed with every major orchestra in the world, and in recital venues of all levels of prestige. His most frequent accompanists throughout his career were André Benoist, Samuel Chotzinoff, Isidor Achron, Emanuel Bay, and Brooks Smith. Additionally, he collaborated frequently as a chamber musician with cellists Emanuel Feuermann and Gregor Piatigorsky, pianist Artur Rubinstein, and violist William Primrose.

Rock Star Status. Between 1920 and 1940, Heifetz acquired a status that in the twenty-first century has been granted only to rock, pop, and motion picture stars. Would-be concert attendees in the 1920's who could not get tickets to a Heifetz concert exhibited unruly behavior. The violinist required police protection after at least one of his early concerts in Russia because the fervor of his adoring public was so great.

Stories floated around him, including reports that world-famous violinist Fritz Kreisler said, upon hearing Heifetz perform, "Well, now the rest of us can all go and break our violins!" Another story, reputedly at Heifetz's sensational New York debut in 1917, involved the great violinist Mischa Elman. Elman complained to his pianist friend Leopold Godowsky that it was awfully hot in the concert hall, to which Godowsky replied, "Not for pianists!"

Technique and Repertoire. Heifetz's intensity of tone and vibrato, combined with the typically blistering speeds at which he took his tempi, created a style so unique that, though it was inimitable, most violinists who were students while Heifetz was performing attempted to imitate him, hoping for similar careers. Without exception, no one succeeded in this task (though his students Erick Friedman and Eugene Fodor probably came closest), and many students incurred problems with their violin playing for trying.

Heifetz's repertoire was encyclopedic, yet most critics believed that his strength was the repertoire of the Romantic and twentieth century eras. Though he recorded and performed music by Johann Sebastian Bach and the classic composers, his interpretations of this repertoire met with mixed reviews more frequently than his interpretations of the music of Ludwig van Beethoven, Johannes Brahms, Max Bruch, Jean Sibelius, Tchaikovsky, Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Jules Conus, and Sergei Prokofiev, for example.

Violins and Bows. Heifetz played three instruments throughout his life. His early instrument was a 1736 violin fashioned by the Venetian maker Carlo Tononi, which Heifetz used till about 1937. In that year, he acquired on loan (and later purchased in 1951) the 1714 Dolphin Stradivarius. Heifetz's favorite violin was the 1742 Ferdinand David Guarnerius del Gésu (named for its former owner, the concertmaster of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, who premiered Felix Mendelssohn's violin concerto). Heifetz habitually strung these violins with gut or wound gut strings and with a gold E string. He collected a variety of bows by famous French makers, but a Nikolaus Kittel bow given to Heifetz by Auer was his prized bow. Heifetz bequeathed his Tononi to his student Sherry Kloss, and his Guarneri to the San Francisco Legion of Honor Museum, from where it is occasionally loaned for use by celebrated violinists (currently San Francisco Symphony concertmaster Alexander Barantschik). The Dolphin Stradivarius was bought by the Nippon Foundation.

The Critics. Critical reactions to Heifetz's performance style ranged across a spectrum of opinion. Positive reviews typically spoke of his "silken tone, technical perfection, and regard for the composer's slightest markings" (Harold Schonberg in The New York Times). Others called him "a modern miracle." Not all reviews were completely favorable, and those less positive tended toward descriptors such as "cold," "impersonal," or "austere."

Arrangements. Throughout his career, but principally during the World War II years, Heifetz arranged many short character pieces for his use as encores or for entertainment for the Allied troops in Europe. Most famous among these arrangements were Hora Staccato (1906) by Grigoras Dinicu, The Girl with the Flaxen Hair (1910) and Golliwog's Cake- walk (1909) by Claude Debussy, Three Preludes (1926) by George Gershwin, and Estrellita (1912) by Manuel Ponce.

Film Appearances. In 1939 Heifetz made his film debut in And They Shall Have Music (1939). Serving largely as a vehicle for Heifetz's performance, this film has a loose story line about a music school that needs his philanthropy to survive. In 1946 Heifetz, using the pseudonym Jim Hoyl, composed a successful popular song entitled When You Make Love to Me, Don't Make Believe, which was sung and recorded by Bing Crosby and Margaret Whiting. In 1949 he invented and patented a rubber mute for the violin called the Heifetz Mute, which in its day had an advanced design over the traditional three-pronged wooden mutes because it could be placed, when not in use, between the strings behind the violin bridge.

Hiatuses. On several occasions throughout his career, Heifetz took sabbaticals from concertizing (one of these lasted about twenty months), during which time he rested from his arduous schedule, and he reputedly reconsidered his interpretations. However, several sources indicate that Heifetz's interpretations changed little over the span of his career, especially after he immigrated to America. In many ways, Heifetz embodied the quintessence of musical consistency.

Retirement and After. In 1972, at his final recital, Heifetz chose a program that was similar to programs he had done during his entire life: sonatas by César Franck and Richard Strauss, selections from Bach's Partita No. 3 in E Major (1720), and several encores by Debussy, Ernest Bloch, Kreisler, Sergei Rachmaninoff, and Maurice Ravel.

Following his retirement from the concert stage in 1972, Heifetz taught violin lessons and master classes at the University of California, Los Angeles and the University of Southern California (through 1983), several of which were videotaped and are available for viewing. His most famous students included, in addition to Friedman and Fodor, Yuval Yaron, Sherry Kloss, and Ayke Agus. (Kloss and Agus each wrote a book describing Heifetz as they knew him.) As a teacher, Heifetz produced fewer star protégés than other teachers, probably because of his inimitable style and because of his generally acknowledged impatience with student performances that lacked polish.

Musical Legacy

According to The New York Times critic Tim Page, Heifetz refused a request for an interview for a biography of his life. Page concluded that Heifetz was a fiercely private man with few friends, an estranged family (following the two divorces), and a life best documented from the stage and the recording.

Heifetz's legacy rests almost entirely with his performances and with his incredible recordings. An unsurpassed virtuoso, he left behind numerous arrangements of encores, and many important twentieth century violin concerti would have remained in obscurity without his promotion of them. He held himself to the highest standards, which might best be captured in his own words: "If I don't practice one day, I know it; if I miss two days, the critics know it; if I miss three days, the public knows it."

Heifetz received three Grammy Awards for chamber music recordings, he was posthumously awarded the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award in 1989, and he was inducted into the Grammy Hall of Fame in 1999. He held an honorary doctorate from Northwestern University, and in 1957 he was granted membership in the French Legion of Honor.

Jonathan A. Sturm

Further Reading

Agus, Ayke. Heifetz as I Knew Him. New York: Amadeus Press, 2005. A portrait of Heifetz from one of his students and late-in-life violin studio accompanists.

Axelrod, Herbert. Heifetz. Neptune City, N.J.: Paganiniana, 1991. A biography of Heifetz by a noted music aficionado and violin collector.

Creighton, J. Discopaedia of the Violin: 1889-1971. Toronto, Ont.: University of Toronto Press, 1974. Covering nearly a century, a list of recordings by violinists, including Heifetz.

Flesch, Carl. Memoirs. London: Rockliff, 1960. Flesch was one of the great violin pedagogues of the early twentieth century, and his memoirs include mention of Heifetz.

Kloss, Sherry. Jascha Heifetz Through My Eyes. Muncie, Ind.: Kloss Classics, 2000. Another useful portrait of Heifetz from the eyes of a student, in this case the one to whom he gave his Tononi violin.

Weschler-Vered, Artur. Jascha Heifetz. New York: Music Sales, 1986. A biography of Heifetz that tends toward the adulatory; useful as a supplement, but not endorsed as an authoritative biography.

See also: Busch, Adolf; Crosby, Bing; Debussy, Claude; Korngold, Erich Wolfgang; Kreisler, Fritz; Oistrakh, David; Prokofiev, Sergei; Ravel, Maurice; Rózsa, Miklós; Rubinstein, Artur; Stern, Isaac; Strauss, Richard; Thomson, Virgil; Walton, Sir William.

Fletcher Henderson

American jazz composer, arranger, and pianist

Henderson's orchestra was one of the foremost in jazz throughout the 1920's and early 1930's, and he is credited with increasing the size of the standard big band. He was also a prominent arranger, contributing several of Benny Goodman's most famous arrangements.

Born: December 18, 1897; Cuthbert, Georgia
Died: December 29, 1952; New York, New York
Also known as: Fletcher Hamilton Henderson, Jr. (full name)
Member of: The Fletcher Henderson All Stars; Fletcher Henderson's Sextet

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Fletcher Henderson's Sextet, 1950 (with Fletcher Henderson's Sextet); The Big Reunion, 1957 (with Fletcher Henderson's All Stars).

SINGLES (solo): "Charleston Crazy," 1923; "Down South Blues," 1923; "Just Hot," 1923; "Naughty Man," 1924; "Sud Bustin' Blues," 1924; "Florida Stomp," 1925; "Get It Fixed," 1925; "Hey Foot Straw Horse," 1925; "King Porter Stomp," 1925; "Sugar Foot Stomp," 1925; "Dynamite," 1926; "Hard to Get Gertie," 1926; "Hi Diddle Diddle," 1926; "Honeybunch," 1926; "Snag It," 1927; "I'm Feeling Devilish," 1928; "Keep a Song in Your Soul," 1930; "Oh It Looks Like Rain," 1931; "Poor Old Joe," 1932; "Sing Sing Sing," 1932; "Down South Camp Meeting," 1934; "Happy as the Day Is Long," 1934; "Hocus Pocus," 1934; "Wrappin' It Up," 1934; "Christopher Columbus," 1936 (with Leon Berry); "Knock Knock Who's There," 1936.

The Life

Fletcher Hamilton Henderson, Jr., was raised in a musical household by his father, Fletcher Hamilton Henderson, Sr., and his mother, Ozie, a pianist and music teacher. Henderson began piano lessons at the age of six, and he was trained exclusively in European music with little exposure to the black folk tradition. He attended Atlanta University as a chemistry and mathematics major, and he moved to New York in 1920 to begin a career as a chemist. Opportunities for black chemists were few at the time, and Henderson took work as a musician.

Henderson's first position in New York City was as a song demonstrator for Pace-Handy Music Company, playing new songs on the piano to potential customers. In 1921 Harry Pace left the company and established Black Swan, the first record company owned and operated by blacks and devoted to black artists. Pace took Henderson to Black Swan, where his responsibilities included accompanying singers at the keyboard for their recordings (particularly blues singers, as blues music was growing immensely popular in black communities) and assembling and leading bands to back up the singers.

By 1923 Henderson had established a band that, in addition to accompanying singers for recordings, was performing regularly at dances and cabarets. That year Henderson's band, primarily a dance band, won an audition at Club Alabam. The group held a residency at Roseland, a ballroom club, in 1924. As music from the New Orleans and Chicago Dixieland groups gradually infiltrated New York, Henderson's orchestra began to turn to jazz.

By 1927 Henderson's orchestra was one of the most popular in the field. Henderson frequently sought out the best soloists, employing at various times players such as Louis Armstrong, Coleman Hawkins, and Rex Stewart. He also employed Don Redman, a reed player who arranged many songs for the group. In 1927 Redman left the group to arrange for McKinney's Cotton Pickers, leaving Henderson scrambling for arrangements.

In 1928 Henderson injured his head in a car accident. Prior to the accident, Henderson was known for being timid and ineffective as a leader, and the head injury possibly exacerbated these problems. His band members took advantage of Henderson's condition, showing up late to rehearsals and recording sessions, which resulted in erratic performance quality.

Henderson was too willing to turn over creative control of his group. In 1929 he accepted the firing of many of his players by a white revue conductor, which led to the breakup of the band. Henderson worked on rebuilding the band until 1931, when the group started recording again. Finding himself without an arranger, Henderson was forced to write some arrangements himself, launching a new career.

Henderson's band performed until 1934, when the members, tired of Henderson's lax leadership, turned in their notices all at once. The next year, a financially despondent Henderson sold a group of arrangements to Benny Goodman, who was in need of new music for his radio spot Let's Dance. Henderson's superb arrangements were partly responsible for Goodman's rapid rise to fame, and in 1939 Goodman hired Henderson as his arranger.

Henderson repeatedly tried to assemble bands throughout the 1930's and into the 1940's, but none was as successful or as stable as his late 1920's and early 1930's bands. In the 1940's, Henderson toured as the pianist and arranger for Ethel Waters, a singer with whom he worked at Black Swan. In 1950 Henderson suffered a stroke, and he died two years later.

The Music

Although Henderson was often ineffective at motivating his band members to perform to the best of their abilities, he excelled at finding the best soloists for his groups, often launching his band members into lengthy jazz careers. Hawkins was easily Henderson's star soloist, playing in the orchestra for ten years and becoming the most prominent tenor saxophonist in jazz until he was upstaged by Lester Young (who replaced Hawkins in Henderson's orchestra). Henderson hired the young Armstrong, who played in the band for a little more than a year, leaving because he felt he did not get enough solo time on recordings. At various times Henderson employed cornetist Stewart, alto saxophonist Benny Carter, trombonist Benny Morton, and trumpeter Cootie Williams, among many others.

Henderson's arranging style owes a large debt to Redman, his arranger until 1927. From Redman, Henderson learned to create a balance between scored passages for the band and improvised solo sections. Henderson's arrangements are clean and economical, avoiding the cumbersome complexities of Ferde Grofé's writing for Paul Whiteman's orchestra. Henderson often wrote in unusual keys for jazz, expecting a high level of musicianship from his players.

Early Works. Redman's arrangements allowed soloists unprecedented freedom, particularly compared with the most prolific band of the day, Whiteman's orchestra. Usually doctored stock arrangements, Redman's arrangements were playful, witty renderings of popular songs.

Armstrong made a significant impact on Henderson's orchestra during the early years. Though his stay in the group was brief (from September, 1924, to November, 1925), his hot soloing pushed the group members to play in a more jazzy, New Orleans style, as opposed to the dance style of the band's roots. Redman changed his arranging to accommodate the rising star, though neither he nor Henderson ever thought to put Armstrong in a vocal role, a deciding factor in Armstrong's decision to leave.

"Sugar Foot Stomp." A Redman reworking of King Oliver's "Dippermouth Blues," the Henderson orchestra's first recording showcases Armstrong, who brought the original Oliver manuscript with him from Chicago. One of Henderson's personal favorites, this recording helped to make the Henderson band famous. In the 1930's, Henderson reworked Redman's version, recording it several times. This piece was one of the arrangements that Henderson sold to Goodman in 1935, and it became a staple in Goodman's repertory. "Sugar Foot Stomp" was also recorded by numerous other groups during the swing era.

"King Porter Stomp." This piece showcases the talent of the Henderson orchestra to create head arrangements (pieces composed collectively by a band over a number of rehearsals and performances). "King Porter Stomp" began as a ragtime piece written and recorded by Jelly Roll Morton, and it was released as a stock arrangement in 1924. Henderson's band first recorded it in 1925, when Armstrong was in the group, but for reasons unknown, that recording was never released. The subsequent 1928 recording, however, was colored by Armstrong's original interpretation, and it was characterized by strings of solos mixed with ensemble riffs. The piece was reworked in 1932 and released as "New King Porter Stomp," featuring a faster tempo and elimination of the two-beat bass style of ragtime in favor of the four-beat style that characterized music of the swing era. The band released another recording in 1933, removing the "new" from the title and making changes in the solo structure. Through these years, the piece remained a head arrangement. It was not written down until Henderson sold it to Goodman for the Let's Dance program, and it consequently became one of swing's biggest hits.

"Down South Camp Meeting." Composed and arranged by Henderson in 1934, "Down South Camp Meeting" (with another Henderson original, "Wrappin' It Up") was recorded for Decca Records shortly before the Henderson band broke up. The title refers to a Southern black Pentecostal revival, reflecting Decca's developing interest in "race" records, products aimed at the black audience. This piece is similar to "King Porter Stomp" in that it features the band's sections set against one another in call-and-response figures and in phrase structure (once it leaves a phrase, it does not return to that phrase for the rest of the piece). However, it is not a head arrangement, and it features few solos (in Henderson's recording, only the trumpeter Red Allen solos). This piece was sold to Goodman with only minor changes, though the slower tempo that Goodman preferred removes the lively quality of the Henderson orchestra's original recording.

"Blue Skies." Beginning as a Tin Pan Alley song by Irving Berlin, "Blue Skies" was memorably featured in the first talking picture, The Jazz Singer (1927), sung by Al Jolson. While the song was popular, it did not become a jazz standard until Henderson's 1935 arrangement for Goodman. The introduction to this arrangement features an unusual dissonance, picturesquely representing the storm before the blue skies (as described by Henderson in a 1938 radio broadcast). The arrangement features the aaba Tin Pan Alley melody prominently, but Henderson expertly mixes the standard format with big band figures such as call-and-response and improvised solos. This piece was one of Goodman's favorites, and he included it on the 1938 Carnegie Hall concert.

Musical Legacy

Without Henderson, big band jazz may have taken a different turn. Although Whiteman helped establish the saxophone as a standard jazz instrument, it was Henderson and his orchestra that established the saxophone as a solo instrument. Henderson also expanded the big band format to include three trumpets and two trombones, while his former arranger Redman later expanded the saxophone section to include four players.

Henderson's group was one of the most popular in jazz in its time, but Henderson was mostly forgotten by the time of his death. Interest in this key figure has resurged, allowing Henderson the prominence he deserves as a jazz innovator.

Sarah Caissie Provost

Further Reading

Collier, James Lincoln. The Making of Jazz. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1978. Collier includes a chapter on Henderson's life and his innovative arrangements, connecting his personality with his musical style. Includes illustrations and discography.

Hadlock, Richard. Jazz Masters of the 1920's. New York: Da Capo Press, 1972. This book includes a chapter on Henderson and Redman, focusing on Henderson's band members and the contributions of Henderson and Redman to later big band jazz. Includes discography.

Magee, Jeffrey. The Uncrowned King of Swing: Fletcher Henderson and Big Band Jazz. New York: Oxford University Press, 2005. Magee's book offers a comprehensive look at Henderson's life and music, delving deeply into his arrangements and the influences on his musical life. Includes illustrations, musical examples, and a catalog of Henderson's arrangements for Goodman.

Oliphant, Dave. The Early Swing Era, 1930-1941. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2002. Oliphant details the history and the influence of Henderson's bands and his instrumental position in Goodman's orchestra. Includes illustrations.

Schuller, Gunther. Early Jazz: Its Roots and Musical Development. New York: Oxford University Press, 1968. Schuller details several of Henderson's arrangements and recordings. Includes discography.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Bechet, Sidney; Berlin, Irving; Blakey, Art; Carter, Benny; Goodman, Benny; Gordon, Dexter; Hawkins, Coleman; Hunter, Alberta; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Morton, Jelly Roll; Rainey, Ma; Smith, Bessie; Webster, Ben; Whiteman, Paul; Young, Lester.

Jimi Hendrix

American rock singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Hendrix is generally recognized as the most influential rock guitarist in history. His unique style and unconventional technique, his showmanship in concert, and his innovation in the recording studio are all legendary.

Born: November 27, 1942; Seattle, Washington
Died: September 18, 1970; London, England
Also known as: Johnny Allen Hendrix (full name); James Marshall Hendrix; Jimmy James Member of: The Jimi Hendrix Experience; Band of Gypsys; Gypsy Sons and Rainbows; Cry of Love

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Are You Experienced, 1967; Axis: Bold as Love, 1967; Electric Ladyland, 1968; Band of Gypsys, 1970; The Cry of Love, 1971; Rainbow Bridge, 1971; War Heroes, 1972; Crash Landing, 1975; Midnight Lightning, 1975; Nine to the Universe, 1980; Kiss the Sky, 1985; Radio One, 1989; Stages, 1992; The Ultimate Experience, 1993; Blues, 1994; Voodoo Soup, 1995; First Rays of the New Rising Sun, 1997; South Saturn Delta, 1997; BBC Sessions, 1998.

The Life

Johnny Allen Hendrix (later changed by his father to James Marshall Hendrix), of African American, Cherokee, and Irish American ancestry, was born in Seattle, Washington, to Lucille Jeter Hendrix, while his father, James Allen ("Al") Hendrix, was serving in the military. Lucille registered the child's name as Johnny Allen Hendrix. Since Lucille could not properly care for her young son, he was reared, in part, by kindly neighbors and relatives. When Al Hendrix was discharged from the Army in 1945, he reclaimed his son, changing his name to James Marshall Hendrix in 1946. Young Jimmy attended school in Seattle, and his parents divorced in 1951, with Al taking custody of Jimmy and his two younger brothers. (Lucille died in 1958.) After finding Jimmy trying to play guitar on a broom, Al bought him a cheap instrument. Jimmy dropped out of high school and played guitar (left-handed, typically playing a right-handed guitar strung upside down) in local bands. In 1961 he enlisted in the 101st Airborne Division of the U.S. Army.

After his discharge in 1962, Hendrix played guitar in bands in and around Nashville, supporting such performing artists as Sam Cooke, Curtis Mayfield, Slim Harpo, and Little Richard. He moved to New York City in 1964, and in 1964-1965 he played with the Isley Brothers, Ike and Tina Turner, King Curtis, and Curtis Knight, among others. In the summer of 1966 Hendrix formed his own band, Jimmy James and the Blue Flames, performing in Greenwich Village in New York City. Animals bassist Chas Chandler discovered him there and made arrangements to take him to London. It was at this time that Jimmy's name became Jimi.

Less than a month after his arrival in London in September, 1966, the Jimi Hendrix Experience was formed, with bassist Noel Redding and drummer John "Mitch" Mitchell, and Hendrix began his first concert tour. With Chandler's managerial acumen, many club dates soon followed. Hendrix's virtuosity attracted the attention of Britain's top music stars, including members of the Beatles and the Rolling Stones.

Hendrix's performance at the Monterey International Pop Festival in California on June 18, 1967, concluding with his setting his guitar aflame, brought him international fame. He toured in the United States and Europe and recorded his first two albums, Are You Experienced and Axis: Bold as Love. In 1968 the Jimi Hendrix Experience toured extensively and recorded Electric Ladyland. In early 1969 the band again toured Europe and the United States; in May Hendrix was arrested in Toronto on drug charges, released on bail, and eventually found not guilty.

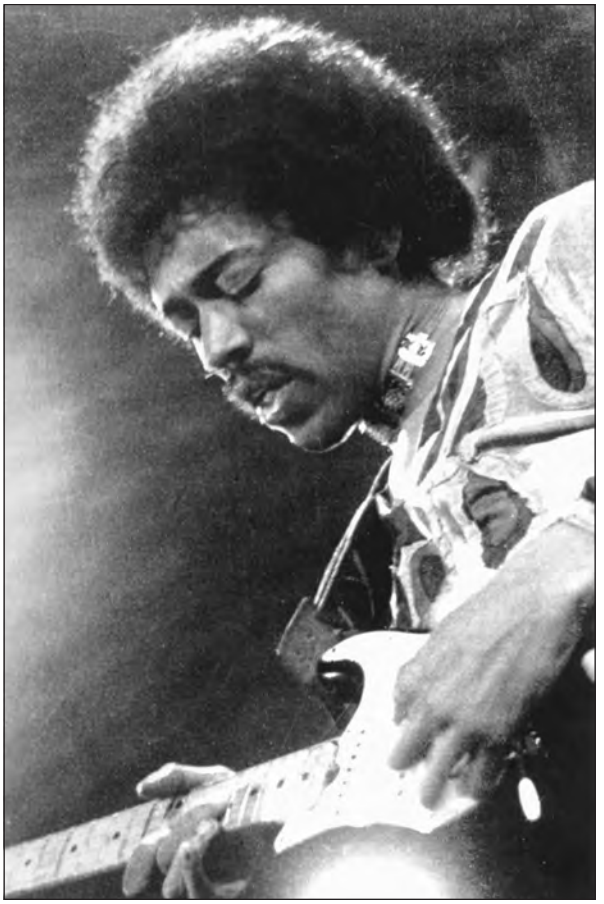
The Jimi Hendrix Experience played its final show in June, 1969. Hendrix formed a new but short-lived band, Gypsy Sons and Rainbows, expressly for the Woodstock Festival in August, 1969, where he was the headliner. At the end of 1969 Hendrix formed a new group with bassist Billy Cox and drummer Buddy Miles. A Band of Gypsys recorded a series of high-profile concerts at the Fillmore East auditorium in New York for a live album, Band of Gypsys.

In late January, 1970, that group also disbanded. In April, 1970, Hendrix formed his final band, retaining Cox on bass and bringing Mitchell back on drums. Hendrix recorded and toured with this band throughout the spring and summer.

Hendrix was found dead of asphyxiation after inhalation of his vomit in his London flat on September 18, 1970, after taking a large dose of a prescription sleep aid. Hendrix's remains were sent to Seattle, and he was buried in Renton, Washington.



Jimi Hendrix. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

From 1963 to 1966, before the formation of the Jimi Hendrix Experience, Hendrix made several live and studio recordings as a backing musician for such artists as Don Covay, Little Richard, the Isley Brothers, Lonnie Youngblood, and Curtis Knight. While some of these recordings reveal flashes of the extraordinary work to come, none represents Hendrix's finest work.

After the formation of the Jimi Hendrix Experience, the group worked quickly to release three singles. The first, a cover of "Hey Joe," was a hit, as was the second, a psychedelic original called "Purple Haze," opening with a distinctive tritone interval and featuring a dissonant seventh and ninth chord, often known as the Hendrix chord. Both songs remained part of Hendrix's live repertoire for the remainder of his career. The third single, "The Wind Cries Mary," is a beautiful ballad, showcasing Hendrix's delicate touch and evocative lyrics.

Are You Experienced. The Jimi Hendrix Experience's debut album, released in Britain in May, 1967, took different forms in the United States and Britain. Standout tracks include "Foxey Lady," which begins with gradually swelling feedback and utilizes the Hendrix chord. "Manic Depression" is one of the first rock compositions in waltz meter. An original twelve-bar blues, "Red House," showcases Jimi's lead guitar skills, and "I Don't Live Today" includes an early use of the wah-wah effect. "Fire" features Hendrix's driving, soulful rhythm guitar, along with some wild bends with the tremolo bar. An ambitious science-fiction epic, "Third Stone from the Sun" incorporates speech sounds that are unintelligible unless played back at double-speed, and the title track features guitar tracks played backward (accomplished by flipping the analog tape over in the recording studio). Hendrix's adventurous studio techniques were remarkable in 1967 and remain so today.

Axis: Bold as Love. The second album, released in Britain in October, 1967, opens with a free-form sound painting called "EXP," featuring atonal feedback guitar tracks, drenched with fuzz-box distortion and manipulated with the tremolo bar. Other album highlights include such rockers as "You Got Me Floatin'" and "Spanish Castle Magic" (the latter long retained in Hendrix's stage repertoire) and such gorgeous ballads as "One Rainy Wish" and "Little Wing." Hendrix continued to explore sonic possibilities in the recording studio, experimenting with the wah-wah pedal on "Up from the Skies," the Octavia on "Little Miss Lover," and phase shifting on the title track, "Bold as Love." Hendrix continued to refine his backward-guitar technique, evident on the lovely ballad "Castles Made of Sand," and to experiment with overdubbing multiple guitar tracks on several songs, including "If Six Was Nine." The stereo mix of the album (in which Hendrix had a significant hand) incorporated innovations such as generous amounts of panning from speaker to speaker.

Electric Ladyland. Released in October of 1968, this double album is widely recognized as a masterpiece. Hendrix himself served as producer, and it is the only such album released in his lifetime. It features extensive improvisation and includes several songs breaking the boundaries of the rigid three-minute pop song format. Again, the keynote is variety: Driving rockers such as "Come On (Part One)," "Crosstown Traffic," and "Voodoo Child (Slight Return)" are set against beautiful ballads such as the title track, "Have You Ever Been (to Electric Ladyland)." Hendrix also works in the jazz idiom, playing with horns and organ on "Rainy Day, Dream Away" and "Still Raining, Still Dreaming," and jamming with Steve Winwood on "Voodoo Chile." Hendrix's cover of Bob Dylan's "All Along the Watchtower" is commonly regarded (by Dylan, among others) as the definitive version. Perhaps the most extraordinary piece is "1983 . . . (A Merman I Should Turn to Be)," a fourteen-minute science-fiction soundscape of haunting beauty, utilizing to the fullest the multitracking possibilities of the recording studio.

Later Work. Hendrix did not live to complete another studio album, but many of the songs he was working on in 1969 and 1970 are collected on such posthumous collections as First Rays of the New Rising Sun, South Saturn Delta, and Blues. Standout tracks include rocking classics such as "Freedom," "Ezy Rider," "Earth Blues," and "In from the Storm" and delicate ballads such as "Angel" and "Drifting." Three essential studio masterpieces, "Pali Gap," "Hey Baby (Land of the New Rising Sun)," and "Dolly Dagger," were all recorded at a single session in July of 1970.

Musical Legacy

Studio recordings tell only part of the Hendrix story; he also left a remarkable legacy of live recordings. The fine recordings the Jimi Hendrix Experience made for BBC radio on various dates in 1967 are collected on BBC Sessions. Professional concert recordings were also made of the Jimi Hendrix Experience at the Monterey Pop Festival in June of 1967, at a series of six shows at the Fillmore auditorium in San Francisco in October of 1968, and at London's Royal Albert Hall in February of 1969. Hendrix's performance at the Woodstock Festival in August of 1969, including his iconic cover of "The Star-Spangled Banner," was captured on tape and film. Four shows with the Band of Gypsys at New York's Fillmore East (December 31, 1969-January 1, 1970) include such extraordinary works as "Message to Love" and "Machine Gun." Hendrix's final band was well recorded in concerts in Berkeley, California (May, 1970), and Maui, Hawaii (July, 1970). Hendrix's performances at the Atlanta (July, 1970) and Isle of Wight (August, 1970) festivals were both recorded; most of these shows were also professionally filmed.

Hendrix's productivity was nothing short of amazing. Though he released only three studio albums in his lifetime (along with a live album and a greatest-hits package), his inexhaustible work in the studio and in performance left behind material for a seemingly endless supply of high-quality posthumous albums. Hendrix's principal legacy is as a virtuoso guitarist: He approached the instrument in a fundamentally new way, producing innovative, inspirational music. Virtually all blues, jazz, funk, and rock guitarists admire his work and cite him as influential; he won a number of top awards in his lifetime, and his songs and albums regularly make it to the top of current polls. However, it is not just as a guitarist that his work endures. His singing and songwriting are celebrated in the innumerable covers of his work that continue to appear, and his innovative work in the studio—exploring the resources of analog sound effects, multitracking, and stereo panning—have altered the sonic vocabulary of rock.

Joel J. Brattin

Further Reading

Aledort, Andy. In Deep with Jimi Hendrix: A Complete Exploration of His Innovative Guitar Style. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 1995. Valuable analysis of Hendrix's style. Aledort is responsible for many of the transcriptions of Hendrix's guitar work in the excellent series of Transcribed Scores books, also published by Hal Leonard.

De Lange, Kees, and Ben Valkhoff. Plug Your Ears: A Comprehensive Guide to Audio and Video Recordings of Jimi Hendrix. Nijmegen, The Netherlands: Up from the Skies Unlimited, 1993. Itemizes the principal elements in Hendrix's recorded legacy.

Geldeart, Gary, and Steve Rodham. From the Benjamin Franklin Studios: A Complete Guide to the Available Recordings of Jimi Hendrix and Complete Bootleg Discography. 2d ed. Warrington, Cheshire, England: Jimpress, 1998. Useful discography, listing songs alphabetically and identifying multiple versions of each—more than a hundred extant versions of songs such as "Purple Haze" and "Foxey Lady." Rodham publishes Jimpress, a Hendrix magazine focusing on discographical matters.

Glebbeek, Caesar, and Harry Shapiro. Jimi Hendrix: Electric Gypsy. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1995. Authoritative biography, with discography, time line, and information about equipment. Glebbeek publishes UniVibes, a Hendrix magazine focusing on historical matters.

McDermott, John, with Billy Cox and Eddie Kramer. Jimi Hendrix Sessions: The Complete Studio Recording Sessions, 1963-1970. Boston: Little, Brown, 1995. Describes most of Hendrix's studio recording sessions, offering valuable technical information.

Mitchell, Mitch, with John Platt. Jimi Hendrix: Inside the Experience. New York: Harmony, 1993. Hendrix's main drummer provides stories and photographs.

Murray, Charles Shaar. Crosstown Traffic: Jimi Hendrix and Post-war Pop. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2001. Places Hendrix's music in its cultural context, considering the sources on which Hendrix drew, and his prodigious influence on blues, rock, soul, funk, and jazz music.

Shadwick, Keith. Jimi Hendrix: Musician. London: San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. An excellent overview of Hendrix's career, focusing on his work rather than his life.

Willix, Mary. Jimi Hendrix: Voices from Home. San Diego: Creative Forces, 1995. Good source of biographical information about Hendrix's life in Seattle, in the years before his fame.

See also: Clapton, Eric; Cooke, Sam; Diddley, Bo; Domino, Fats; Eddy, Duane; Fleck, Béla; Guy, Buddy; Jagger, Sir Mick; James, Elmore; King, Albert; Little Richard; Mayfield, Curtis; Nicks, Stevie; Page, Jimmy; Pickett, Wilson; Redding, Otis; Shankar, Ravi; Slick, Grace; Stills, Stephen; Stone, Sly; Townshend, Pete; Van Halen, Eddie; Vaughan, Stevie Ray.

Victor Herbert

American cellist, popular music and musical-theater composer

Herbert composed more than forty operettas, two operas, and many instrumental and vocal works. Although best remembered for his stage productions, Herbert was an accomplished cello soloist, chamber musician, conductor, and advocate for musicians' rights.

Born: February 1, 1859; Dublin, Ireland
Died: May 26, 1924; New York, New York
Also known as: Victor August Herbert (full name)

Principal works

FILM SCORE: Fall of a Nation, 1916.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): The Wizard of the Nile, 1895 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Serenade, 1897 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Fortune Teller, 1898 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Ameer, 1899 (lyrics and libretto by Kirke La Shelle and Frederic M. Ranken); Cyrano de Bergerac, 1899 (lyrics by Harry B. Smith; libretto by Stuart Reed); The Singing Girl, 1899 (lyrics by Harry B.

Smith; libretto by Hugh Stanislaus Stange); The Viceroy, 1900 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); Babes in Toyland, 1903 (lyrics and libretto by Glen MacDonough); Babette, 1903 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); It Happened in Norland, 1904 (lyrics and libretto by MacDonough); Miss Dolly Dollars, 1905 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); Mlle. Modiste, 1905 (lyrics and libretto by Henry Blossom); Wonderland, 1905 (lyrics and libretto by MacDonough); Dream City, 1906 (lyrics and libretto by Edgar Smith); The Magic Knight, 1906 (lyrics and libretto by Edgar Smith); The Tattooed Man, 1907 (lyrics by Harry B. Smith; libretto by Harry B. Smith and A. N. C. Fowler); Algeria, 1908 (lyrics and libretto by MacDonough); Little Nemo, 1908 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Prima Donna, 1908 (lyrics and libretto by Blossom); Old Dutch, 1909 (lyrics by George V. Hobart; libretto by Edgar Smith); The Rose of Algeria, 1909 (lyrics and libretto by MacDonough); Naughty Marietta, 1910 (lyrics and libretto by Rida Johnson Young); The Duchess, 1911 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith and Joseph Herbert); The Enchantress, 1911 (lyrics by Harry B. Smith; libretto by Harry B. Smith and Fred De Gresac); When Sweet Sixteen, 1911 (lyrics and libretto by Hobart); The Lady of the Slipper, 1912 (lyrics by James O'Dea; libretto by Anne Caldwell and Lawrence McCarty); The Madcap Duchess, 1913 (lyrics and libretto by David Stevens and Justin Huntly McCarthy); Sweethearts, 1913 (lyrics by Robert B. Smith; libretto by Harry B. Smith and De Gresac); The Debutante, 1914 (lyrics by Robert B. Smith; libretto by Robert B. Smith and Harry B. Smith); The Only Girl, 1914 (lyrics and libretto by Blossom); The Princess Pat, 1915 (lyrics and libretto by Blossom); The Century Girl, 1916 (music with Irving Berlin; lyrics by Berlin and Blossom; libretto by Sydney Rosenfeld); Eileen, 1917 (lyrics and libretto by Blossom); Her Regiment, 1917 (lyrics and libretto by William Le Baron); Miss 1917, 1917 (music with Jerome Kern; lyrics and libretto by Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse); Angel Face, 1919 (lyrics by Robert B. Smith; libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Velvet Lady, 1919 (lyrics by Blossom; libretto by Fred Jackson); The Girl in the Spotlight, 1920 (lyrics and libretto by Richard Bruce); My Golden Girl, 1920 (lyrics and libretto by Frederic Arnold Kummer); Sally, 1920 (music with Kern; lyrics by Clifford Grey; libretto by Bolton); Orange Blossoms, 1922 (lyrics by B. G. DeSilva; libretto by De Gresac); The Dream Girl, 1924 (lyrics by Young; libretto by Young and Harold Atteridge); The Fortune Teller, 1929 (lyrics and libretto by Harry B. Smith); The Red Mill, 1945 (lyrics and libretto by Blossom); Gypsy Lady, 1946 (lyrics by George Forrester and Robert Wright; libretto by Henry Myers).

OPERA: Natoma, 1911 (libretto by Joseph D. Redding).

OPERETTA (music): Prince Ananias, 1894 (libretto by Francis Neilson).

ORCHESTRAL WORK: Suite for Cello and Orchestra, 1883.

The Life

Victor August Herbert was born February 1, 1859, in Dublin Ireland, to Fannie Lover and Edward Herbert. His father died, in circumstances that are unclear, when Herbert was a child. Upon his father's death, Herbert moved with his mother to the home of his maternal grandfather, the poet, painter, and novelist Samuel Lover. After a short courtship, Fannie married Wilhelm Schmid, a German doctor she had met in London. The family moved to Stuttgart, Germany, in the spring of 1866.

As a child, Herbert played piano, flute, and piccolo. Later he decided to pursue the cello and to seek a career in music, studying cello with Bernhard Cossman at the Stuttgart Gymnasium from 1874 to 1876. He then left Stuttgart, touring Europe in several orchestras. In 1879 Herbert joined the orchestra of a Russian baron. After one season with the court orchestra, he moved to Vienna and joined the orchestra of Eduard Strauss, brother of the "waltz king," Johann Strauss.

Herbert returned to Stuttgart, and he joined the Court Orchestra of Stuttgart in 1881. Believing he had focused on performance to the detriment of his musical understanding, Herbert enrolled in the Stuttgart Conservatory, where he studied composition with Max Seifriz. Herbert's first appearance as soloist with the Court Orchestra came in 1881. In 1883 he performed his own Suite for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 3, with the orchestra, and in 1885 he played the premiere of his first (unpublished) cello concerto.

In 1885 Herbert met Therese Forester, the Viennese soprano. He was infatuated with her, establishing a musical relationship (he volunteered to serve as her accompanist) and later a romantic one. In 1886 Forester was offered a position in the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York City, and Herbert was hired to play cello in the orchestra. The two were married in Vienna on August 14, 1886, just prior to sailing for the United States.

In 1889 Herbert joined the faculty of the National Conservatory of Music in New York. His career took an unexpected turn in 1893, when he became director of the Twenty-second Regiment Band. The band had been made famous by its founder, Patrick Gilmore, and it had struggled after his death in 1892. Despite public fears to the contrary, Herbert remained an active cello soloist while focusing on composing and conducting. In 1898 Herbert became the conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, a post he retained until 1904. In that year, Herbert returned to New York to form the Victor Herbert Orchestra.

Victor Herbert. (© Bettmann/CORBIS)

Herbert was one of the founding members of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers (ASCAP), and he served as its vice president and director from 1914 until 1924. In 1917 Herbert was involved in a suit resulting in a Supreme Court ruling that granted composers and other copyright owners the rights to receive royalties from public performances.

In his later years, Herbert was best known as a songwriter and composer of music for the stage. He composed operas, operettas, incidental music, and the score to the 1916 film Fall of a Nation, the sequel to D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation (1915). Herbert's score is one of the earliest full-length orchestral film scores in existence. Herbert was working on music for the Ziegfeld Follies and negotiating the composition of music for a motion picture when he died of a heart attack in his doctor's office on May 26, 1924.

The Music

Herbert began his compositional career writing instrumental music, a path not surprising considering his early renown as an instrumentalist. After moving to the United States, however, Herbert became best known for his vocal works for the stage. Herbert was well regarded for his sensitive orchestration and for his ability to write for the voice. While he excelled in these aspects of composition, he was often hindered by the weakness of the librettos chosen for his works. Herbert's musical stage productions represented the end of an era, as radio, jazz, and motion pictures became prominent forces in American musical culture near the end of his life.

Suite for Cello and Orchestra. Herbert's earliest known large-scale composition, this suite was first performed by the composer in October of 1883, as part of the Stuttgart Orchestra's subscription series. The serenade from this work achieved considerable popularity as an independent concert piece, and the work did much to establish Herbert as both a composer and a performer.

Prince Ananias. Herbert's first extant operetta (an earlier work was never performed and is now lost) premiered in New York in November of 1894.

In a pattern that would continue throughout his career, critics praised Herbert's music while condemning the libretto. Prince Ananias is an operetta in two acts, set in France in the sixteenth century. It was originally performed by the Bostonians, a well-regarded touring company.

Babes in Toyland. Early in 1903, producers Fred Hamlin and Julian Mitchell had great success with the musical The Wizard of Oz. While the text of The Wizard of Oz was highly acclaimed, the music was lacking. Hamlin and Mitchell believed a similar production with better music would eclipse even the great success of The Wizard of Oz, and they approached Herbert to compose the music for Babes in Toyland. The libretto, written by Glen MacDonough, was largely a vehicle for spectacular scenery and effects. Consisting of a prologue and three acts, Babes in Toyland tells the story of orphaned siblings Alan and Jane and their attempts to escape their malevolent Uncle Barnaby. Babes in Toyland opened in New York on October 13, 1903, and it ran for 192 performances. It has since been revived and adapted many times, and it remains a popular Christmas spectacle.

Natoma. Herbert's first attempt at full-scale opera, Natoma, was born of a collaboration among Herbert, impresario Oscar Hammerstein, and librettist Joseph Redding. Hammerstein approached Herbert in 1907 to compose an opera, offering to pay one thousand dollars for a suitable American libretto. In 1909 Herbert entered into a contract with Redding, a lawyer, playwright, and accomplished composer in his own right, to produce Natoma, an opera set in California in the early nineteenth century.

Natoma finally premiered in Philadelphia on February 25, 1911, with Mary Garden singing the title role, and it was staged in New York at the Metropolitan Opera three days later. The critical response to Natoma was harsh, and, as for many of Herbert's productions, it was focused on the weakness of the libretto. Though Redding's text was nearly universally derided, Herbert's music was well received. Herbert's musical structure was heavily influenced by German Romantic opera (Herbert was an ardent supporter of Richard Wagner), and it incorporated elements designed to imply Native American and Spanish music, although Herbert admitted that he did not use authentic Native American or Spanish melodies in the score. Although Natoma was neither a critical nor a box office success, the anticipation and critical interest generated by the production did much to further public and critical interest in American opera.

The Fall of a Nation. This sequel to the landmark 1915 film The Birth of a Nation was released in 1916. Unlike The Birth of a Nation, which had been directed by D. W. Griffith, The Fall of a Nation was written and directed by Thomas Dixon, who had written both books. Prior to this film, it was standard practice to accompany motion pictures with familiar pieces from the standard art music repertory. Herbert, however, announced that he would create the first thoroughly original American film score. Herbert composed more than two hours of music for The Fall of a Nation, though he was forced to make significant cuts because of extensive editing of the film.

Like many of the projects Herbert chose, The Fall of a Nation suffered from an inferior text. Herbert's score was generally admired, but the film was not. It ran for less than two months in New York, and its nationwide release was hampered by the inability of many local theaters to assemble orchestras capable of performing Herbert's score. The Fall of a Nation is now considered lost, although the extant pieces of Herbert's score are housed at the Library of Congress, and a recording of fifteen selections from the score has been released.

Musical Legacy

Herbert lived to see many of his own compositions go out of style, and by the end of his career he considered himself a relic of a bygone era. Although he made an effort to adapt to changing popular tastes by writing music for motion pictures and the variety stage, America had largely moved away from the type of musical theater popularized by Herbert and others early in the century. By the 1920's, popular musical tastes were also shifting toward jazz, an idiom to which Herbert was not accustomed.

Although Herbert did not establish an American school of opera, his celebrity generated enough publicity for and discussion of Natoma that, despite the opera's lack of success, public and critical attention turned to the idea of American opera. Herbert was also responsible for the resurrection of Gilmore's Band, and his association with the band advanced the wind band as an outlet for art music in America. Though the popularity of his instrumental music was short-lived, Herbert counted many prominent performers and conductors among his friends. Antonín Dvořák cited Herbert's Second Cello Concerto as the inspiration for his own Concerto for Cello and Orchestra in B Minor, Op. 104.

Paige Clark Lush

Further Reading

Kaye, Joseph. Victor Herbert: The Biography of America's Greatest Composer of Romantic Music. New York: G. H. Watt, 1931. This biography focuses on the sensational aspects of Herbert's life and musical career. Written in a novel-like fashion, it is similar to the later motion picture The Great Victor Herbert (1939).

Purdy, Claire Lee. Victor Herbert, American Music-Master. New York: J. Messner, 1945. A biography suitable for juvenile readers and those unfamiliar with Herbert and his work.

Traubner, Richard. Operetta: A Theatrical History. Rev. ed. New York: Routledge, 2003. Contains a thorough biography of Herbert, including in-depth discussions of many of his operettas. This volume also addresses Herbert's musical legacy and his posthumous success in new media such as film and radio.

Waters, Edward N. "American Musical History and Victor Herbert." Notes 13, no. 1 (1955): 33-40. Waters, author of a definitive biography of Herbert, reflects on his research in this article. The article provides a concise biography of Herbert, and it discusses how a study of the career of a composer such as Herbert can contribute to a heightened understanding of American music and of music historiography.

_____. Victor Herbert: A Life in Music. New York: Macmillan, 1955. A thorough and factually accurate Herbert biography, this contains more than five hundred pages of biographical information and musical discussion. It also lists all of Herbert's known compositions and phonograph recordings, and it contains extensive notes on sources used for the book.

See also: Berlin, Irving; Björling, Jussi; Romberg, Sigmund; Whiteman, Paul.

Bernard Herrmann

American classical and film-score composer and conductor

Herrmann composed film music scores that not only enhanced the action on the screen but also conveyed the emotions of the characters. His trend-setting scores ranged from playful to shocking, in some of the best-known pictures of directors such as Orson Welles, Alfred Hitchcock, Ray Harryhausen, and François Truffaut.

Born: June 29, 1911; New York, New York
Died: December 24, 1975; North Hollywood, California

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Aria for Flute and Harp, 1932; Marche Militaire, 1932; Echoes, 1965 (for string quartet); Souvenirs de voyage, 1967 (for clarinet and string quartet).

CHORAL WORKS: Moby Dick, 1938 (for solo voices, male chorus, and orchestra; based on Herman Melville's novel); Johnny Appleseed, 1940 (for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra); The Fantasticks, 1942 (song cycle for mixed voices, chorus, and orchestra; lyrics by Nicholas Breton).

FILM SCORES: Citizen Kane, 1941; The Devil and Daniel Webster, 1941; The Magnificent Ambersons, 1942; Jane Eyre, 1944; Hangover Square, 1945; Anna and the King of Siam, 1946; The Ghost and Mrs. Muir, 1947; Portrait of Jennie, 1948; The Day the Earth Stood Still, 1951; Five Fingers, 1952; On Dangerous Ground, 1952; The Snows of Kilimanjaro, 1952; Beneath the Twelve-Mile Reef, 1953; King of the Khyber Rifles, 1953; White Witch Doctor, 1953; The Egyptian, 1954; Garden of Evil, 1954; Prince of Players, 1954; The Kentuckian, 1955; The Trouble with Harry, 1955; The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit, 1956; The Man Who Knew Too Much, 1956; The Wrong Man, 1956; A Hatful of Rain, 1957; Williamsburg: The Story of a Patriot, 1957; The Naked and the Dead, 1958; The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad, 1958; Vertigo, 1958; Blue Denim, 1959; Journey to the Center of the Earth, 1959; North by Northwest, 1959; Psycho, 1960; The

Three Worlds of Gulliver, 1960; Mysterious Island, 1961; Cape Fear, 1962; Tender Is the Night, 1962; Jason and the Argonauts, 1963; Marnie, 1964; Joy in the Morning, 1965; Fahrenheit 451, 1966; The Bride Wore Black, 1967; Twisted Nerve, 1968; The Battle of Neretva, 1969; Endless Night, 1971; The Night Digger, 1971; Sisters, 1973; It's Alive, 1974; Obsession, 1976; Taxi Driver, 1976.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Aubade, 1933; Prelude to Anathema, 1933; Variations on "Deep River" and "Water Boy," 1933; Currier and Ives Suite, 1935; Nocturne and Scherzo, 1935; Sinfonietta for Strings, 1935; Symphony No. 1, 1940; For the Fallen, 1943; Welles Raises Kane, 1943 (suite); Wuthering Heights, composed 1951, first performed 1965.

The Life

Bernard Herrmann (HUR-muhn) was born in 1911, the son of Russian Jewish immigrants. He developed an early interest in the arts through his father, Abraham, an optometrist, who took Herrmann to opera and symphony performances, exposed him to symphonic music on records, and supplied him with musical instruments. In addition, Herrmann was drawn to writers who were passionate about their craft. At age twelve, he won a prize for a song he composed. At thirteen, Herrmann read an 1844 treatise on orchestration by French composer Hector Berlioz, which he later said pointed him to his own musical career.

Herrmann began studying music formally in 1927 as a student at DeWitt Clinton High School. He audited composition classes at New York University and the Juilliard School, and in 1929 he enrolled in New York University, where he studied composition and conducting. Within four years, he was conducting performances of his own work and that of others by the New Chamber Orchestra, and he was hired in 1934 to be an assistant to Johnny Green, CBS Radio's music director. He also started composing a number of concert pieces.

He started composing and conducting for CBS's Columbia Workshop radio series in 1937, and a year later he was providing music for Orson Welles's Mercury Theatre on the Air, including its updated adaptation of H. G. Wells's 1898 novel The War of the Worlds, which convinced a number of listeners that an invasion from Mars was under way. The association with Welles led to Herrmann's first film score, for Citizen Kane. Their association came to an end after their next collaboration, The Magnificent Ambersons, when the studio altered Herrmann's original score, foreshadowing future times when Herrmann would challenge those who would change his work. In between, he won his only Academy Award, for The Devil and Daniel Webster.

Herrmann returned to the CBS Symphony, remaining there until 1951, when it was disbanded. He scored other films at Twentieth Century-Fox through the 1940's, including Jane Eyre, Hangover Square, Anna and the King of Siam, and The Ghost and Mrs. Muir. In the 1950's, he scored seven of the most popular of director Alfred Hitchcock's films: The Trouble with Harry, The Man Who Knew Too Much, The Wrong Man, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, and Marnie. He supervised the electronic sound effects for The Birds, which had no music, and he wrote a score for Torn Curtain, which differed from the pop score Hitchcock had ordered. Hitchcock abandoned Herrmann's score, a bitter end to their collaborations.

Herrmann moved to England, and he scored films by other directors. On December 23, 1975, despite not feeling well, Herrmann finished recording music he composed for Taxi Driver to meet the deadline. He died in his sleep just past midnight the next day.

The Music

Herrmann's musical contributions to more than forty films evoked psychological nuances that differed with each production. His work ranged from the romantic (The Ghost and Mrs. Muir and Obsession) and the fantastic (The Day the Earth Stood Still, Fahrenheit 451, and Jason and the Argonauts) to the folk (The Devil and Daniel Webster) and the frightening (Psycho).

Although he won only one Academy Award, for scoring a dramatic picture (The Devil and Daniel Webster), his music received nominations for original score in 1976 (Taxi Driver), best musical scoring of a drama or comedy in 1946 (Anna and the King of Siam), and best dramatic score for 1941 (Citizen Kane).

A demanding and often argumentative perfectionist, Herrmann had no hesitancy about ignoring instructions from directors. He ignored Hitchcock's request for a jazz score for a Psycho scene, and Hitchcock ended up agreeing with him. The opposite, however, occurred with Torn Curtain.

Citizen Kane. Welles brought actors from his radio show to Hollywood in 1941, for a film about the rise and fall of a newspaper magnate, based loosely on the career of publisher William Randolph Hearst. He also invited Herrmann, who had scored music for the radio program, to compose and conduct music for the motion picture. This first film for both Welles and Herrmann introduced groundbreaking techniques at all levels (Herrmann, for example, found it more effective to have music for key scenes rather than to follow the then-current practice of nonstop music throughout the picture).

Herrmann chose somewhat eerie music for the opening, segued into a livelier score to underlie the growth of Kane's newspaper ventures, and concluded on a somber note, using the tuba, bass clarinets, and low trombones to achieve a dark tone (the technique has been imitated to the present day).

The Welles-Herrmann collaboration might have continued to greater success, but it ended after Welles's second picture (as director). The studio became nervous about Welles's approach to The Magnificent Ambersons and took over production, recutting and reshooting parts of it. As a result, Herrmann's music was chopped up and additional music added without his consent. Herrmann, who had a volatile temper, had his name removed from the credits. He did score another film in which Welles acted, Jane Eyre, but he never scored another Welles project.

The Day the Earth Stood Still. Hitchcock sought Herrmann to score Spellbound, which used a theremin to provide high-pitched, ethereal music. (The picture ended up being scored by Miklós Rósza.) In 1951 Herrmann made extensive use of two of the instruments for director Robert Wise's science-fiction classic about an alien emissary bringing a warning about the consequences of the planet's warlike ways. The instrument afterward became widely used, and almost a trademark, for science-fiction films of the 1950's. Herrmann also made effective use of electrical violins, pianos, and harps.

Herrmann would later score other science-fiction films, such as François Truffaut's Fahrenheit 451, based on a Ray Bradbury novel, and Journey to the Center of the Earth and Mysterious Island, based on Jules Verne's novels.

The Man Who Knew Too Much. Although Hitchcock had done this film in 1934, he directed a new version in 1956. It involves a vacationing couple who become aware of an assassination plot and have their young son kidnapped to keep them quiet. They race against time to stop the murder, which is to take place at a symphony performance. Hitchcock used Arthur Benjamin's Storm Clouds Cantata (1934) from the original film, with its clash of cymbals to hide the gunshot.

Not all the music was by Herrmann. The song "Que Sera, Sera," sung by Doris Day, who appeared in the film, and the cantata are by other composers. Herrmann appeared in a cameo in the film, as the symphony conductor in the assassination scene.

The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad. Producer Charles Schneer hired Herrmann to orchestrate a series of fantasy films, using stop-motion animation by Ray Harryhausen to create the fantasy creatures and the effects. The result was some of Herrmann's most sweeping and adventurous scores, in which he would use different instrument combinations to characterize each of Harryhausen's creatures.

The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad was the first of these in 1958. Herrmann went on to score two similar Harryhausen fantasies, The Three Worlds of Gulliver—each "world" having its own musical theme—and Jason and the Argonauts, and also the science-fiction thriller Mysterious Island.

Vertigo. Hitchcock used minimal dialogue in this 1958 film about a former policeman who falls for the woman he is hired to shadow, and, following her apparent death, becomes obsessed with shaping another woman in her image. The director, instead, allowed Herrmann's music to dominate the action, and as a result the film has more music than speech.

In 1976 Herrmann orchestrated Brian De Palma's Obsession, inspired by Vertigo. The music was nominated for an Academy Award in 1977 for Best Original Score.

Psycho. In Hitchcock's 1960 horror film about murders at a remote motel, Herrmann used only a string orchestra and jarring violins to jangle the nerves of viewers. For the shower scene of the first shocking murder, Hitchcock wanted no music whatever. Herrmann disagreed, and he wrote a screeching-violins score for it anyway. After hearing it, the director changed his mind and included it. It became one of the most recognizable film-music pieces in cinematic history.

Six years later, when the short-tempered Herrmann tried to overrule Hitchcock on a musical decision for Torn Curtain, things turned out differently. Hitchcock fired Herrmann in an acrimonious conflict that ended their film collaborations forever. Hitchcock hired a different composer, and much later Herrmann's never-used score was released on a recording that drew favorable responses.

Taxi Driver. Herrmann's brooding jazz score for director Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver proved to be his last work. It differed from most of his earlier music, and it was, for Herrmann, an experiment in another musical style. Scorsese described the score as "New York Gothic." The motion picture's last credit reads: "Our gratitude and respect, Bernard Herrmann, June 29, 1911-December 24, 1975."

Musical Legacy

Herrmann won an Academy Award and other accolades for his film and television work. He may be best known for his work on Hitchcock films, but he also composed scores for fantasies by Harryhausen and, following his relocation to England, for such directors as Truffaut, De Palma, Scorsese, and Larry Cohen. Early in his career, as chief conductor of the CBS Symphony, he introduced radio listeners to composers whose work had gotten little exposure His television work included such series as The Twilight Zone, The Alfred Hitchcock Hour, The Virginian, and Have Gun Will Travel.

Even when some of the films for which he composed were remade, some portion of his music for the originals remained. Composer Danny Elfman adapted Herrmann's music for the original Psycho for director Gus Van Sant's 1998 remake. Elmer Bernstein, who said he first thought of a career writing film music after hearing Herrmann's score for The Devil and Daniel Webster, adapted and arranged Herrmann's original score for Cape Fear for the 1991 remake. Bernstein adapted and rerecorded Herrmann's score for a new version of The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (1975).

Quentin Tarantino used part of Herrmann's score for Twisted Nerve in Kill Bill (2003). Utopia, a progressive rock group, recorded in 1977 a segment of Herrmann's sound track for the film Journey to the Center of the Earth.

Paul Dellinger

Further Reading

Bruce, Graham. Bernard Herrmann: Film Music Narrative. Ann Arbor, Mich.: UMI Research, 1985. This resource emphasizes the musicology of Herrmann's works.

Burt, George. The Art of Film Music. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1995. This book focuses on case studies of professionals composing motion picture scores, including references to Herrmann.

Davis, Richard. Complete Guide to Film Scoring. Boston: Berklee Press, 2000. Davis offers interviews with nineteen composers, including Herrmann, on their film work.

Morgan, David. Knowing the Score: Film Composers Talk About the Art, Craft, Blood, Sweat, and Tears of Writing for Cinema. New York: Harper Paperbacks, 2000. Several film composers, including Herrmann, talk about their process of composing for pictures.

Prendergast, Roy M. Film Music, a Neglected Art: A Critical Study of Music in Films. New York: W. W. Norton, 1992. The author discusses the technology and the aesthetics of film music, and he includes some of Herrmann's work.

Smith, Steven C. A Heart at Fire's Center: The Life and Music of Bernard Herrmann. Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1991. This is a well-researched biography of Herrmann, showing the relationship between his music and his often-turbulent personal life.

See also: Bernstein, Elmer; Elfman, Danny; Mancini, Henry; Martin, Sir George; Newman, Alfred; Rózsa, Miklós; Williams, John.

Paul Hindemith

German classical composer

A composer, teacher, and performing musician, Hindemith composed music with the aim of making it pedagogically useful to amateur musicians or practically useful to performing ensembles. Such Gebrauchsmusik, or music for use, demonstrated Hindemith's influential view that people should make music, not just passively hear it.

Born: November 16, 1895; Hanau, Germany
Died: December 28, 1963; Frankfurt, West Germany (now in Germany)

Principal works

BALLETS (music): Nobilissima visione, 1938 (libretto by Hindemith); Theme with Four Variations, 1940 (libretto by Hindemith); Hérodiade, 1946 (libretto by Paul Millet and Henri Grémont).

CHAMBER WORKS: Sonate für Bratscheallein, Op. 11, No. 5, 1918; Sonata for Viola Solo, Op. 11, No. 5, 1919; String Quartet No. 2 in F Minor, Op. 10, 1918; Chamber Music No. 1, 1922 (for twelve solo instruments); Chamber Music No. 2, 1924 (for piano); Chamber Music No. 3, 1925 (for cello); Chamber Music No. 4, 1925 (for violin); Chamber Music No. 5, 1927 (for viola); Chamber Music No. 6, 1928 (for viola); Chamber Music No. 7, 1928 (for organ); Konzert für Klavier, Blechbläser, und Harfen, 1930; Triosatz für drei Gitarren, 1930; Konzert für Streichorchester, und Blechbläser, 1931; Trio für Geige, Bratsche, und Cello, 1933.

CHORAL WORKS: Das Marienleben, 1922 (The Life of Mary; based Rainer Maria Rilke's poetry); Das Unaufhörliche, 1931; Twelve Madrigals, 1958.

OPERAS (music): Das Nusch-nuschi, 1920 (libretto by Franz Blei); Mörder, Hoffnung der Frauen, 1921 (Murder, Hope of Women; libretto by Oskar Kokoschka); Die Junge Magd, 1922 (The Young Maid; libretto by Hindemith; based on Georg Trakl's poetry); Sancta Susanna, 1922 (libretto by August Stramm); Cardillac, 1926, revised 1952 (libretto by Ferdinand Lion); Lehrstück, 1929 (Lesson; libretto by Bertolt Brecht); Neues vom Tage, 1929, revised 1954 (News of the Day; libretto by Hindemith); Mathis der Maler, 1938 (Matthias the Painter; libretto by Hindemith); Die Harmonie der Welt, 1957 (Harmony of the World; libretto by Hindemith); The Long Christmas Dinner, 1961 (libretto by Hindemith).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Sonata for Viola Solo, Op. 11, No. 5, 1919; String Quartet, 1921; Concert Music for Brass Orchestra, 1926; Concert Music for Viola and Large Chamber Orchestra, 1930; Sabinchen, 1930; Wir bauen eine Stadt, 1930; Philharmonic Concerto, 1932; Symphonie Mathis der Maler, 1934; Der Schwanendreher, 1935; Trauermusik, 1936; Symphonische Tänze, 1937; Violin Concerto, 1939; Cello Concerto, 1940; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, 1940; Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, 1941; Symphonie in E, 1941; Amor und Psyche, 1943; Symphonic Metamorphosis After Themes by Carl Maria von Weber, 1944; Symphonia serena, 1947; Concerto for Woodwinds, Harp, and Orchestra, 1949; Concerto for Clarinet in A, 1950; Concerto for Horn and Orchestra, 1950; Sinfonietta in E, 1950; Symphony in B-flat for Concert Band, 1951; Concerto for Trumpet, Bassoon, and String Orchestra, 1952; Pittsburgh Symphony, 1959; Marsch für Orchester über den alten "Schweizerton," 1960; Der mainzer Unzug, 1962 (The Mainz Procession); Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, 1963; Messe, 1963; Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, 1974.

PIANO WORK: Ludus Tonalis, 1942.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Unterweisung im Tonsatz, I: Theoretischer Teil, 1937 (The Craft of Musical Composition, Part 1: Theory, 1942); Unterweisung im Tonsatz, II: Übungsbuch für den zweistimmigen Satz, 1939 (The Craft of Musical Composition, Part 2: Exercises in Two-Part Writing, 1941); A Concentrated Course in Traditional Harmony, Vol. I, 1943; A Concentrated Course in Traditional Harmony, Vol. II, 1943; Elementary Training for Musicians, 1946; A Composer's World, 1952; Johann Sebastian Bach: Heritage and Obligation, 1952; Unterweisung im Tonsatz, III: Übungsbuch für den dreistimmigen Satz, 1970.

The Life

Paul Hindemith (HIHN-deh-mihth) was born to Robert Rudolph Hindemith, a house painter of limited financial means, and Marie Sophie Warneke.

An amateur musician and avid music lover, his father encouraged his children in musical pursuits, never allowing the family's poverty to interfere with the children's musical education. Aided by a scholarship and by income earned playing in local taverns, Hindemith enrolled in Frankfurt's Hoch Conservatorium when he was thirteen. In 1912 he began studying composition with Arnold Mendelssohn and eventually with Bernhard Sekles.

Hindemith secured an appointment as a first violinist in the orchestra of the Frankfurt Opera in 1915, and he also began playing with the Rebner Quartet. When Hindemith was drafted into the German army in 1917, he played bass drum in the military band, and he was first violin in a string quartet whose performances were intended to provide a momentary escape from the chaos of World War I for the regiment's commanding officer. The musical nature of Hindemith's military service still allowed him time to compose.

Following his discharge from the army in 1919, Hindemith returned to his position as concertmaster with the Frankfurt Opera. The composer organized a concert of his own works, which was so successful that Schott and Sons offered him a contract to publish his music. By 1923 Hindemith had renegotiated the contract, winning a regular monthly salary, which allowed him to resign from the Frankfurt Opera orchestra.

The success, recognition, and happiness Hindemith experienced in the 1920's—including his new contract with Schott and Sons, the founding of the well-known Amar Quartet, his marriage to Gertrud Rottenberg in 1924, and his prestigious appointments to the directorial committee of the Festival for New Music in Donauseschingen in 1923 and to the composition faculty of Berlin's Hochschule für Musik in 1927—gave way to the difficulties he encountered in the 1930's. When the National Socialist Party took control of the German government in 1933, a large amount of Hindemith's music was banned for exhibiting so-called "cultural Bolshevism." The Nazi Party also took a negative view of his continued association with Jewish musicians and of his marriage to a half-Jewish woman. The triumphant premiere of his Symphonie Mathis der Maler in 1934 only led to a ban of its further performance in Germany and to renewed attacks of Hindemith in the press. In 1935 all of Hindemith's works were banned from public performance.

During the official ban of his music, Hindemith was unable to perform or teach, leaving him time to develop a compositional theory, published in his Unterweisung im Tonsatz (1937; The Craft of Musical Composition, Part 1: Theory, 1942). By 1938 Hindemith's conciliatory gestures toward the Nazi regime, including his mission to establish a school of music in Turkey and the oath of allegiance he signed to Adolf Hitler, could not prevent his scores from being featured in an exhibit of degenerate music. Four months following the opening of the exhibit, Hindemith moved with his wife to Switzerland. The deteriorating situation in Europe led Hindemith to emigrate in 1940 to the United States, undertaking a variety of part-time positions before becoming a professor of music theory at Yale University. In addition to teaching composition and music theory, Hindemith founded Yale's Collegium Musicum, dedicated to the performance of early music.

Despite offers of employment by schools and orchestras in Germany, Hindemith remained in the

Paul Hindemith. (Library of Congress)

United States until he received an offer from the University of Zurich to join its faculty as professor of musicology in 1949. Although he returned to Germany for performances and concert tours, Hindemith was never again resident of his homeland. Scarcely a month after he conducted the premiere of his Messe, for a cappella mixed choir, Hindemith died unexpectedly of a heart attack in December, 1963.

The Music

Hindemith became noticed as a composer with his embrace of the New Objectivity in the 1920's. In their art, exponents of the New Objectivity moved away from disturbing psychological insights of Expressionism, instead seeking to appeal to broad audiences by using familiar subjects and styles. Rather than focusing on the experience of isolated individuals, Hindemith, along with composers such as Kurt Weill and Ernst Krenek as well as the playwright Bertolt Bretcht, hoped to create art that was socially useful. Often associated with Hindemith, the term Gebrauchsmusik, or music for use, indicates that such compositions were intended to teach or to serve another social function instead of being passively heard in a concert hall. Hindemith's compositions often feature linear counterpoint reminiscent of Johann Sebastian Bach combined with an advanced harmonic language that never wholly abandons tonality.

Early Works. In his earliest compositions, Hindemith demonstrates the clear influence of a variety of composers and styles. The chromatic counterpoint of the String Quartet in F Minor, Op. 10 has an affinity with the music of the late-Romantic composer Max Reger, while the Opus 11 sonatas show evidence of the harmonic language of composers such as Richard Wagner, Claude Debussy, and Richard Strauss. Two of Hindemith's earliest operas—Murder, Hope of Women and Sancta Susanna—were based on expressionist plays by Oskar Kokoschka and August Stramm, respectively. The scandalous nature of the operas' subject matter and Hindemith's use of an advanced harmonic language earned the composer a reputation as a member of the avant-garde.

Chamber Music No. 1. Throughout the 1920's, Hindemith composed pieces for small chamber ensembles, entitled Chamber Music. Although six of the seven feature solo instruments, the four-movement Chamber Music No. 1 functions more like a concerto for chamber orchestra. In addition to relatively standard instruments—a string quintet, flute, clarinet, bassoon, trumpet, and piano—Hindemith included nontraditional instruments such as an accordion and a siren. Chamber Music No. 1 manifests the composer's turn to the New Objectivity in its contrapuntal style and its use of popular elements, such as the quotation of a popular foxtrot in the raucous finale and the use of instruments commonly associated with jazz.

Mathis der Maler. In 1933, shortly after the National Socialist Party came to power, Hindemith began work on an opera about the sixteenth century painter Matthias Grünewald, who had painted the famous Isenheim Altarpiece depicting the temptation of Saint Anthony and his interview with Saint Paul. Through the story of Grünewald's brief abandonment of art to participate in an uprising of serfs in the 1520's, Hindemith explored the role of the artist in a time of political upheaval. In the end, Hindemith's Mathis realizes that his deepest obligation is to create art. Although Hindemith finished work on the opera by 1935, it did not premiere until 1938 in Zurich—the Nazi government would not allow it to be performed in Germany—where, however, it met with instant critical acclaim.

Ludus Tonalis. Hindemith's Ludus Tonalis, or play of tones, consists of twelve three-part fugues, one for each chromatic pitch, separated by eleven interludes. The entire set is bracketed by a prelude and a postlude. The order of the fugues is based on a series of pitches found in The Craft of Musical Composition; according to Hindemith, the series becomes gradually more distantly related to the first pitch. The interludes connect the fugues harmonically, but they also have varying expressive characters, including a waltz and a march. Hindemith's musical wit becomes fully clear with the postlude, which looks like the prelude turned upside down and played from end to beginning.

Symphonic Metamorphosis After Themes by Carl Maria von Weber. Following their successful collaboration on the ballet Nobilissima visione, the choreographer Léonide Massine requested that Hindemith orchestrate piano pieces by Weber for a new project. When he saw sketches, Massine criticized Hindemith for reinterpreting the music rather than merely orchestrating it. Abandoning the collaboration, Hindemith instead reused the sketches as the basis for his well-known orchestral piece, the four-movement Symphonic Metamorphosis After Themes by Carl Maria von Weber. In a masterful stroke, Hindemith uses a single brief phrase from Weber's overture for Turandot (1809) to create the entire second movement, clothing it in jazzy syncopations in the process.

Die Harmonie der Welt. Hindemith had been considering composing an opera based on the life of the astronomer Johannes Kepler since 1939. After completing the Harmonie der Welt Symphony in 1951 and the libretto in 1956, Hindemith began working on the opera in earnest in 1957. Kepler's search for universal harmony in the opera reflects in many ways Hindemith's own quest for a tonal system in The Craft of Musical Composition. In the final scene, Hindemith presents a vision in which each of the characters is associated with a planet in Kepler's heliocentric system. Although the opera was only mildly successful at its premiere in Munich in 1957 and has since fallen out of the repertory, Die Harmonie der Welt powerfully summarizes Hindemith's philosophy and his compositional method.

Twelve Madrigals. With his collection of twelve madrigals for five unaccompanied voices, Hindemith sought to encourage ensemble singing, which he thought was an integral part of musical culture and a practice that had unfortunately fallen into decline. The texts by Josef Weinheber chosen by Hindemith are consistently pessimistic, and the musical style with which he set them is harmonically strident and rhythmically complex. Reflecting his belief that music should be useful to its performers, Hindemith indicates in the foreword to the collection that ensembles should feel free to sing the pieces individually or to reorder them.

Musical Legacy

Hindemith's musical theories had a far smaller impact than those of Arnold Schoenberg, and he also failed to establish a school of composition to the extent that Schoenberg did with his students Alban Berg and Anton von Webern. However, the same conservative strand in Hindemith's musical thinking that prevented him from opening revolutionary new paths to his successors allowed him to draw attention to neglected facets of composition and musical life.

In his theoretical writings and with his music, Hindemith consistently advocated a harmonic language that included a significant amount of dissonance but never completely lost its sense of a tonal center. Hindemith demonstrated that because the tonal system could be manipulated without destroying it, new and original music could still be composed using its materials.

Such general ways of thinking about musical composition are Hindemith's most significant contribution to his successors, primarily because he encouraged his composition students to avoid imitating him and instead to find their own voice. Although they did not result in a school of composition, Hindemith's theoretical texts are still used around the world in college-level music theory classes.

Perhaps the most visible legacy left by Hindemith was his belief that music should be made and not merely consumed. By composing a large series of sonatas within the capabilities of skilled amateurs for nearly every conceivable instrument—including even double bass and tuba—he made modern music accessible to more than a professional elite. Hindemith's sonatas, like Béla Bartók's compositions for piano, expose many young musicians to modern music for the first time, and they encourage similar outreach by new composers and performing ensembles to broader audiences.

Ryan R. Kangas

Further Reading

Bruhn, Siglind. The Musical Order of the World: Kepler, Hesse, Hindemith. Hillsdale, N.Y.: Pendragon Press, 2005. An interdisciplinary study of the concept of universal harmony, this work explores the relationship of Hindemith's Die Harmonie der Welt and Herman Hesse's nearly contemporary Glass Bead Game (1943) to the ideas of Kepler.

Hindemith, Paul. A Composer's World: Horizons and Limitations. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1952. Hindemith collected in this book the six Norton lectures—in which he discusses his philosophy and aesthetics—that he gave at Harvard. This work is suitable for the lay reader.

Kater, Michael H. "Paul Hindemith: The Reluctant

Emigré." In Composers of the Nazi Era: Eight Portraits. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000. Provides an account of Hindemith's relationship with the Nazi regime and with Germany following his emigration to Switzerland and the United States.

Neumeyer, David. The Music of Paul Hindemith. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1986. Neumeyer discusses Hindemith's compositional theory, and he develops an analytical method from it. Through technically complex analyses, Neumeyer demonstrates the connection between Hindemith's theory and his compositional practice.

Skelton, Geoffrey. Paul Hindemith: The Man Behind the Music. London: Victor Gollancz, 1975. An authoritative account of Hindemith's life that includes images and a chronological list of works.

See also: Anderson, Marian; Barretto, Ray; Berg, Alban; Carter, Elliott; Chávez, Carlos; Debussy, Claude; Fischer-Dieskau, Dietrich; Golijov, Osvaldo; Goodman, Benny; Gould, Glenn; Klemperer, Otto; Martin, Frank; Oistrakh, David; Perlman, Itzhak; Schoenberg, Arnold; Schreker, Franz; Serkin, Rudolf; Stern, Isaac; Strauss, Richard; Weill, Kurt.

Christopher Hogwood

English classical conductor and pianist

As the founder of the Academy of Ancient Music, a period instrument orchestra, Hogwood helped bring early music into the mainstream.

Born: September 10, 1941; Nottingham, England
Also known as: Christopher Jarvis Haley Hogwood (full name)
Member of: The Early Music Consort; the Academy of Ancient Music

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Mozart: Symphony No. 38 "Prague"; Symphony No. 39, 1984; Bach: Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 1-6, 1990; Mozart: Clarinet Concerto; Oboe Concerto, 1990; Mozart: Requiem, 1990; Music from Pachelbel, Handel, Vivaldi, and Gluck, 1990; Vivaldi: Four Seasons, 1990; Handel: Messiah, 1991; Handel: Orlando, 1991; Mozart: La Clemenza di Tito, 1995; Bach: Brandenburg Concertos, 1997; Bach: Eight Symphonies; Three Quartets, 1997; Beethoven: Symphonies, 1997; Handel: Water Music; Music for the Royal Fireworks, 1997; Haydn: Orfeo ed Euridice, 1997; Mozart: The Symphonies, 1997; Mozart: Violin Concertos, 1997; Vivaldi: Concerto for Two Mandolins, 1997; Bach: Orchestral Suites, 1998; Emma Kirkby Sings Handel, Arne, Haydn, and Mozart, 1998; Vivaldi: L'Estro Armonico, 1998; Albinoni: Twelve Concertos, Op. 9, 1999; Mozart: Great Mass in C Minor, 1999; Mozart: Wind Concertos, 1999; Handel: Rinaldo, 2000; Haydn: Symphonies Vol. 10, 1779-1781, 2000; Mozart: Piano Concertos Nos. 5, 14, and 16, 2000; Vivaldi: Violin Concertos, Op. 6, 2000; Fairest Isle, 2001; The Baroque Experience, 2002; Vivaldi: Stabat Mater, 2003; Purcell: Theatre Music, 2004; Handel: Oratorios, 2005; Beethoven: Five Piano Concertos; Three Popular Sonatas, 2006; Vivaldi: Concertos, 2006.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Music at Court, 1977; The Trio Sonata, 1979; Haydn's Visits to England, 1980; Music in Eighteenth-Century England, 1983; Handel, 1984.

The Life

Christopher Jarvis Haley Hogwood was born in Nottingham, England, in 1941. In addition to studying music and classics at Pembroke College, Cambridge, Hogwood studied harpsichord with Gustav Leonhardt and Rafael Puyana. He studied conducting under Raymond Leppard and Thurston Dart, the latter a harpsichordist and a specialist in Johann Sebastian Bach.

From 1946 to 1965, the British Broadcasting Corporation produced a radio show called Third Programme. It offered significant broadcasts of early music, and it is considered seminal in the early-music revival. Coming of age in England during these years, Hogwood was exposed to performances by Dart on the British Broadcasting Corporation, and he began his career primarily as a harpsichordist. In that capacity, he cofounded the Early Music Consort with woodwind player David Munrow in 1973. Among the most musically accomplished of its time, this ensemble set a new standard in performance practice, and it made a somewhat radical move by commissioning new music for early instruments.

The Academy of Ancient Music was founded with a mission to perform seventeenth and eighteenth century music. The ensemble took its name from the original Academy of Ancient Music, an eighteenth century London group created to explore works from the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The repertoire of Hogwood's ensemble ranges from Henry Purcell to Igor Stravinsky. In addition, Hogwood has been a prolific conductor of live and recorded music, and he was the first conductor to record the complete symphonies of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Ludwig van Beethoven on period instruments.

Hogwood has been active as an opera conductor, a scholar, and a writer. In addition to his work as a conductor of early music, he was the music director of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra from 1987 to 1992.

The Music

Hogwood's work in music reflects his talents as conductor, writer, and editor. As a conductor, some of his most significant achievements have been the recordings of the Mozart and Beethoven symphonies, as well as the recordings of the Mozart piano concerti with fortepianist Robert Levin. Hogwood's combined talents have made him a significant part of the early-music revival, and his paleographic and editorial abilities have raised standards for historically informed performance around the world. Hogwood has continually broadened his own repertoire, and he is an expert conductor of Stravinsky (in particular the neoclassical works) as well as of earlier music. Hogwood has championed and recorded Bohuslav Martinů's music, in addition to presenting works by the so-called Entartete (degenerate) composers, whose music was banned by the Nazi Party in the 1930's. In addition to his work with twentieth century music, Hogwood has commissioned and premiered new works for period instruments. In concert programming, Hogwood often juxtaposes new and old works.

Conductor. Hogwood recorded and released Mozart's symphonies between 1978 and 1985, and these recordings were lauded for their accuracy of performance practice and for their accuracy and clarity. In addition, they were notable for adhering to the score, devoid of the interpretive elements that were common in recordings of standard repertoire. While other early-music performers and audiences expected this stylistic approach, it took the mainstream classical audience by surprise. Well-reviewed and with good sales, the recordings set a standard for orchestral performance in the early music community.

Opera. Hogwood made his opera debut in 1983 with a production of Mozart's Don Giovanni (1787) in St. Louis. Since then, he has conducted around the world, becoming a particular proponent of George Frideric Handel operas. He was the music director for Boston's Handel and Haydn Society for many years.

Writer. Hogwood has written extensively on music. His output includes a significant monograph on Handel, a book on the trio sonata form, and a Cambridge Music Handbook on Handel's The Music for Royal Fireworks (1749) and Water Music (1717). His books are notable for their fluid writing and for their combination of musicological insight and practical concerns of a performer. Hogwood has contributed articles to books on music of eighteenth century England, on the classical period, and on many other topics. In addition, he has written a significant number of liner notes for a wide variety of recordings.

Editor. Hogwood's skills as an editor have contributed to the performance and interpretation of early music. He has prepared editions of keyboard music, including the complete keyboard works of Purcell. Other projects encompass the preparation of new editions of many of Felix Mendelssohn's works, which include many of the sketches and alternative endings left by the composer. Hogwood has also edited twentieth century works, including a new edition of Edward Elgar's Enigma Variations (1899), and he sits on the board of the Martinů Complete Edition.

Musical Legacy

Hogwood's musical legacy is significant. As a conductor, he has made hundreds of recordings and performed with numerous ensembles. His recordings are seminal in the field, and many of the earlier recordings with the Academy of Ancient Music are being rereleased. His work as an impresario created two period instrument ensembles; while the Early Music Consort disbanded in the 1970's, the Academy of Ancient Music continues to tour internationally. Hogwood's topics as a writer span hundreds of years, offering insight into both the source materials and the process of bringing the music to life. In addition to being a conductor, writer, and editor, Hogwood has held several teaching positions, and he was appointed international professor of early-music performance at the Royal Academy of Music in 1992. As a pedagogue, he influences young musicians, and he continues to develop the practice of historically informed performance. He was appointed a Commander of the British Empire in 1989.

Andrea Moore

Further Reading

Haskell, Harry. "Early Music." The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by Stanley Sadie. New York: Grove's Dictionaries, 2000. A valuable overview of the early-music movement, especially since World War II, that places Hogwood's work in historical context.

Hogwood, Christopher. Handel. Thames & Hudson, 2007. A significant biography of Handel, with a valuable chapter on the oratorios.

Pratt, George. "Christopher Hogwood." The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by Stanley Sadie. New York: Grove's Dictionaries, 2000. A brief biography of Hogwood, with a list of his writings.

Van Tassel, Eric. "Mozart Symphonies." Early Music 12, no. 1 (February, 1984): 125-129. A review of Hogwood's recordings of the Mozart symphonies from the early-music perspective.

See also: Casadesus, Henri; Elgar, Sir Edward; Leonhardt, Gustav; Martinů, Bohuslav; Stravinsky, Igor.

Billie Holiday

American jazz singer

A great jazz singer, Holiday developed a unique style that avoided athletic vocal techniques in favor of subtlety and dramatic irony. While eloquently expressing a full emotional range from personal despair to triumph, she was one of the first jazz artists to address social concerns and racial injustice.

Born: April 7, 1915; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Died: July 17, 1959; New York, New York
Also known as: Eleanora Fagan (birth name); Lady Day

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Billie Holiday Sings, 1950; Billie Holiday, Vol. 1, 1950; Billie Holiday, Vol. 2, 1950; An Evening with Billie Holiday, 1953; Billie Holiday, Vol. 3, 1954; Lady Sings the Blues, 1954; Music for Torching, 1955; Jazz Recital, 1956; A Recital by Billie Holiday, 1956; Velvet Moods, 1956; Body and Soul, 1957; Songs for Distingué Lovers, 1957; Blues Are Brewin', 1958; Lady in Satin, 1958; Billie Holiday, 1959; Stay with Me, 1959.

SINGLES: "Miss Brown to You," 1935; "What a Little Moonlight Can Do," 1935; "Billie's Blues," 1936; "Did I Remember?," 1936; "No Regrets," 1936; "He's Funny That Way," 1937; "Me, Myself and I," 1937; "Mean to Me," 1937; "Fine and Mellow," 1939; "Strange Fruit," 1939; "Gloomy Sunday," 1941; "God Bless the Child," 1941; "Loveless Love," 1941; "Lover Man," 1944.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Lady Sings the Blues, 1956 (with William Dufty).

The Life

Although born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Billie Holiday grew up in Baltimore, Maryland, raised by her mother, Sadie Fagan (Harris), and her aunt, Eva Miller. She had only occasional contact with her father, Clarence Holiday, a jazz guitarist and banjo player. Her impoverished environment provided little hope for a life beyond menial labor, but she loved music. She frequented after-hours clubs to sing with Baltimore's best jazz musicians, and she sang along with recordings by her favorites, Louis Armstrong and Bessie Smith.

Soon after moving to New York in 1929, she sang for tips in jazz clubs and attended jam sessions. In 1930 she discarded her birth name, Eleanora Fagan, and took her father's last name and the actor Billie Dove's first name to create her stage name. In 1933, after record producer John Hammond heard her sing in Harlem, he arranged for Holiday to record with Benny Goodman, and she started performing and recording with other famous jazz musicians. In 1935 she recorded "What a Little Moonlight Can Do" and "Miss Brown to You." These became so popular that she was able to perform and record under her own name. She went on the road with two big bands: Count Basie's in 1937 and Artie Shaw's in 1938. While working with Shaw, she bravely met the challenge of being one of the first African American women to tour with a white orchestra. However, she was angered by the segregation she encountered as they traveled.

She returned to New York, and in 1939 she began singing at the Café Society, an integrated club, where she introduced many of her most famous songs in a generally supportive environment. She recorded on the Columbia Records label until 1942, and later she recorded for Decca Records. In 1947 Holiday appeared with Armstrong and Kid Ory in the film New Orleans. An arrest for a narcotics charge interfered with her New York career, but she continued to record and to perform at other locations, including a European tour in 1954. From 1952 to 1959, she recorded with Verve Records. On May 25, 1959, Holiday gave her final public concert at the Phoenix Theatre in New York. She died from liver disease at New York's Metropolitan Hospital on July 17, 1959.

Billie Holiday. (Library of Congress)

The Music

Holiday's music can be divided into three style periods. The early years through 1938 can be characterized as energetic and playful, with faster tempi, light rhythms, and often humorous material with commercial appeal. During the middle period, from 1939 through the 1940's, Holiday utilized slower tempi to introduce an unprecedented level of dramatic, poetic expression and understatement to jazz song, while retaining rhythmic and melodic flexibility. Finally, in the 1950's, with a voice deteriorated and raspy, partly because of health problems and drug addiction, she was at the peak of her mature artistic expression, giving profound meaning to every note and word.

Early Works. The recordings Holiday made before 1939 could be characterized as energetic and playful. These pieces included "He's Funny That Way," "Me, Myself, and I," "Mean to Me," and many others. Pianist Teddy Wilson arranged and performed on most of these recordings. Among the talented instrumentalists who worked with Holiday during this period was Lester Young, who became one of her dearest friends. He dubbed her Lady Day, and she in turned named him Pres (for president).

Like many of the jazz artists of her time, Holiday was self-taught and did not learn standard music notation. Instead, she relied on her incredible ear and musical memory. One of Holiday's most important vocal influences was Armstrong. Although she did not use the scat singing (improvisational use of nonlexical syllables) that Armstrong had popularized, she did utilize a similar approach to phrasing, with subtle pitch inflections and placing notes a bit behind or ahead of the beat and then resolving them rhythmically. The success of this depended on Holiday's high level of metronomic precision, which rivaled that of the great musicians of her time. Another important influence was Smith, who primarily sang blues. Holiday did not have Smith's dynamic range, but she deeply appreciated the older singer's emotional honesty and courage. Vocally, Holiday developed the ability to enhance, redirect, or even subvert a song's lyrics, adding an element of ambiguity and mystery to even the most commonplace pieces.

"Strange Fruit." Ironically, it was a song protesting racial injustice that broadened Holiday's audience beyond the jazz community. Her earlier collaborations with white musicians, such as Goodman and Shaw, did not generate the same level of interest as her recording in 1939 of "Strange Fruit" on the Commodore label. This song described the aftermath of a lynching of two black men. Lynching was all too frequent in the 1930's, but it was not a common topic in commercial music. Based on a poem written by schoolteacher Abel Meeropol, under the pen name Lewis Allan, "Strange Fruit" was the first recorded protest song to be widely heard. While most popular songs of the day were sentimental love ballads or humorous novelty tunes, this piece contained vividly gruesome imagery introduced with a bitter sense of ironic contrast. For instance, the song described a pastoral setting with the "strange fruit" of hanging bodies and blood everywhere. The sweet fragrance of magnolias competed with the smell of burning flesh. Holiday's singing turned Meeropol's poem into an indictment of an entire society.

"God Bless the Child." Arthur Herzog, Jr., wrote the music and Holiday wrote the lyrics for another of her famous songs,"God Bless the Child," based on a proverb. The song's message of self-reliance and strength in the face of adversity followed in the tradition of Smith's rendition of "Nobody Knows You When You're Down and Out" (1929). It is believed that Holiday wrote "God Bless the Child" after she and her mother had argued about money. Holiday first performed this masterpiece in 1939 and recorded it in 1941. Other artists who recorded or performed the song include Aretha Franklin, Stevie Wonder, Sonny Rollins, and Blood, Sweat, and Tears. Diana Ross performed it in Lady Sings the Blues, the 1972 movie based on Holiday's life. In 2004 a picture book titled "God Bless the Child" was published, listing Holiday and Herzog as the authors, and it was illustrated by artist Jerry Pinkney, who graphically interpreted the song with images of a family moving to the North during the Great Migration of the 1930's. The song was an overwhelmingly popular choice for many contestants on television's American Idol.

"Fine and Mellow." Although not primarily thought of as a blues singer, Holiday sang "Fine and Mellow" for CBS television's The Sound of Jazz, the classic hour-length program, in 1957. One of her last recordings, this revealed her complete mastery of the blues form. Using her own composition (first recorded in 1939) as a starting point, she alternated her verses with improvised solos by the great musicians assembled for the session, including Coleman Hawkins, Mal Waldron, Ben Webster, Gerry Mulligan, Roy Eldridge, Doc Cheatham, Vic Dickenson, Danny Barker, and Milt Hinton. This was also a beautiful musical reunion of Lady Day and Pres after many years. The recording exemplified her later style, in which her athletic skills had diminished, but her ability to achieve emotional transformation of syllables through nuances of inflection had increased.

Musical Legacy

A legendary singer who struggled against personal and social obstacles, Holiday had a profound impact on both her contemporaries and future generations of musicians. Stylistically, Holiday's practice of recomposition, in which she freely altered the melodic shapes of songs, was a form of improvisation that differed from the practice of instrumental improvisers, who did not have to contend with lyrics and therefore could utilize varied rhythmic patterns in their solos. Instead, Holiday often added rhythmic tension, by anticipating or delaying a note, adding further pitch inflections, and increasing emotional intensity. This had a significant impact on instrumentalists and singers alike. Instrumentalists noted that she listened to and understood what they played, and then she related her virtuoso improvisations to their musical statements. Such renowned vocalists such as Frank Sinatra and Carmen McRae acknowledged Holiday as a great inspiration.

Holiday also expanded the social dimension of music. Her friendship with a select group of musicians was matched by her toughness and willingness to confront the hostility of the outside world, as she challenged gender as well as ethnic stereotypes. Along with other prominent jazz musicians of the late 1930's, Holiday helped to end the practice of segregation, long before sports, education, and the military services became integrated.

Posthumous honors showed her lasting influence. In 1959 poet Frank O'Hara wrote a tribute, "The Day Lady Died." In 1987 Holiday was awarded the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award, and in 1988 the rock band U2 released the tribute song "Angel of Harlem." In 1994 the U.S. Postal Service introduced a Holiday postage stamp, and in 2000 Holiday was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Alice Myers

Further Reading

Blackburn, Julia. With Billie. New York: Pantheon Books, 2005. Personal stories from and interviews with people who knew the singer well: childhood friends, musicians, dancers, comedians, drug dealers, narcotics agents, lovers, and others. Bibliography and index.

Chilton, John. Billie's Blues: The Billie Holiday Story, 1933-1959. New York: Stein & Day, 1975. Written by a jazz historian, this was the first significant book about Holiday's career and recordings. Illustrated, with bibliography, discography, and index.

Clarke, Donald. Wishing on the Moon: The Life and Times of Billie Holiday. New York: Viking, 1994. Comprehensive biography based on interviews and extensive research of archival materials. Twenty-four pages of photographs. Index.

Davis, Angela. Blues Legacies and Black Feminism: Gertrude "Ma" Rainey, Bessie Smith, and Billie Holiday. New York: Pantheon Books, 1998. The chapter "When a Woman Loves a Man" discusses the social implications of Holiday's love songs. The chapter "Strange Fruit" examines music and social consciousness. Illustrated, with index and extensive bibliography.

Gourse, Leslie. The Billie Holiday Companion: Seven Decades of Commentary. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. An essential resource, including essays, news stories, reviews, and interviews with Holiday and Hammond. Index and discography.

Griffin, Farah Jasmine. If You Can't Be Free, Be a Mystery: In Search of Billie Holiday. New York: Free Press, 2001. Dispelling the myths and stereotypes surrounding Holiday, the author reveals the singer to be a true musical genius. Illustrated, with bibliography, chronology, and index.

Holiday, Billie. Billie Holiday Anthology: "Lady Day" Had a Right to Sing the Blues. Ojai, Calif.: Creative Concepts, 2000. Includes biographical information and musical scores for forty-three songs, including "The Birth of the Blues," "I Can't Give You Anything but Love," "St. Louis Blues," and "Stormy Weather." Illustrated.

Holiday, Billie, and William Dufty. Lady Sings the Blues. New York: Harlem Moon, 2006. Fiftieth-anniversary edition of Holiday's candid and revealing autobiography, which inspired the motion picture starring Ross. Illustrated, with index, discography, and sound disc.

Margolick, David. "Strange Fruit": The Biography of a Song. New York: Ecco Press, 2001. Well-researched and insightful account of one of the most significant songs in history. Illustrated, with discography.

O'Meally, Robert. Lady Day: The Many Faces of Billie Holiday. New York: Arcade, 1991. A biography beautifully illustrated with photographs. Includes discography and bibliography.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Basie, Count; Cooke, Sam; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Fitzgerald, Ella; Goodman, Benny; Hampton, Lionel; James, Etta; Legrand, Michel; Robinson, Smokey; Rollins, Sonny; Ross, Diana; Shaw, Artie; Simone, Nina; Smith, Bessie; Vaughan, Sarah; Young, Lester.

Eddie and Brian Holland

American rhythm-and-blues songwriters

During the 1960's, Brian Holland, Lamont Dozier, and Eddie Holland (better known as Holland-Dozier-Holland, or H-D-H) formed a songwriting and production partnership that went on to produce some of the most memorable "Motown sound" hits in the history of popular music.

Eddie Holland

Born: October 30, 1939; Detroit, Michigan
Also known as: Edward Holland, Jr. (full name)

Brian Holland

Born: February 15, 1941; Detroit, Michigan

Members of: Holland-Dozier-Holland (H-D-H)

Principal works

SONG (with Georgia Dobbins, William Garrett, Robert Bateman, and Freddie Gorman): "Please, Mr. Postman," 1961 (performed by the Marvellettes).

SONGS (with Lamont Dozier): "Can I Get a Witness," 1963 (performed by Marvin Gaye); "Come and Get These Memories," 1963 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Heat Wave," 1963 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Mickey's Monkey," 1963 (performed by the Miracles); "Quicksand," 1963 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Baby I Need Your Loving," 1964 (performed by the Four Tops); "Baby Love," 1964 (performed by the Supremes); "Come See About Me," 1964 (performed by the Supremes); "How Sweet It Is (to Be Loved by You)," 1964 (performed by Gaye); "Locking Up My Heart," 1964 (performed by the Marvelletes); "When the Lovelight Starts Shining in His Eyes," 1964 (performed by the Supremes); "Where Did Our Love Go?," 1964 (performed by the Supremes); "Back in My Arms Again," 1965 (performed by the Supremes); "I Can't Help Myself (Sugar Pie, Honey Bunch)," 1965 (performed by the Four Tops); "(It's the) Same Old Song," 1965 (performed by the Four Tops); "Nowhere to Run," 1965 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Stop! In the Name of Love," 1965 (performed by the Supremes); "Take Me in Your Arms (Rock Me a Little While)," 1965 (performed by Kim Weston); "I'm Ready for Love," 1966 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Little Darling (I Need You)," 1966 (performed by Gaye); "Reach Out I'll Be There," 1966 (performed by the Four Tops); "This Old Heart of Mine (Is Weak for You)," 1966 (performed by the Isley Brothers); "You Can't Hurry Love," 1966 (performed by the Supremes); "You Keep Me Hangin' On," 1966 (performed by the Supremes); "Bernadette," 1967 (performed by the Four Tops); "The Happening," 1967 (performed by the Supremes); "Jimmy Mack," 1967 (performed by Martha and the Vandellas); "Love Is Here and Now You're Gone," 1967 (performed by the Supremes); "Reflections," 1967 (performed by Diana Ross and the Supremes); "Give Me Just a Little More Time," 1970 (performed by Chairmen of the Board).

The Lives

Edward Holland, Jr., was born on October 30, 1939, in Detroit, Michigan. His younger brother, Brian Holland, was born on February 15, 1941, also in Detroit. Their future songwriting partner, Lamont Dozier, also was born in Detroit. Growing up in an urban environment, the Holland brothers learned to appreciate the music that surrounded them. As children, they attended church on a regular basis. Their grandmother was a strong force in both their lives. She refused to let the young brothers listen to any other kind of music in the home except gospel music and classical music. The brothers attended local Detroit schools, including Davison Elementary School, Cleveland Intermediate School, and Wilbur Wright High School. While popular music was banned from the home, they would get a chance to hear secular music when they were out with their friends at local skating rinks, clubs, or ballrooms. Music became a strong force in their lives.

Eddie met the future founder of Motown Records, Berry Gordy, Jr., in 1958. Out of the relationship established between the two, Eddie dropped out of college in order to work for Gordy. With Gordy as his producer, Eddie released several singles as a solo artist between 1958 and 1960, including "You" for Mercury, "Because I Love Her" for United Artists, and "The Last Laugh," also for United Artists. In the fall of 1961, Eddie released the single "Jamie" for Motown. By the next year, it had reached number thirty on the Billboard pop singles chart and number six on the rhythm-and-blues singles chart. Although Eddie would release several more singles for Motown, none of them would be as successful as "Jamie."

While Eddie was busily establishing himself in the music business, Brian also was working as a vocalist. In 1958, he released his first solo single under the name Briant Holland. Eventually, he became the lead vocalist for the group the Satintones. In 1960, Brian worked as the piano player for Barrett Strong. Out of this relationship, he would join Motown Records in 1961. After joining Motown, Brian would co-write the Marvelettes' hit single "Please, Mr. Postman." In 1962, Brian began working with Freddy Gorman and Dozier. This arrangement would last only until 1963, when older brother Eddie replaced Gorman. The legendary team of Holland-Dozier-Holland was now established, and they soon would be making music history, producing a string of hits for Motown engines such as Martha and the Vandellas, Diana Ross and the Supremes, the Four Tops, and Marvin Gaye.

By the early 1970's, the Holland-Dozier-Holland partnership was becoming somewhat frayed around the edges. Dozier decided that it was time to go back to being a solo artist and began releasing solo albums. Although the Holland brothers did not remain as active in the music business as Dozier after their dissolution, the partnership was revived in 1984, when the three revived Music Merchant Records in order to take control of their back catalog and to groom new artists.

The Music

During their collaboration, H-D-H believed that they were inventing the way songs should be written. There was no precedent for their form of songwriting. While Brian and Dozier concentrated on the melody and production of a song, Eddie was the primary lyricist of the team, and, more times than not, the music inspired his lyrics. During many recording sessions, they would experiment with what could be considered unorthodox chords, in the end finding the perfect combination. They established an effective way to communicate with one another that allowed for flexibility and the free flow of ideas. It could happen that at the opening stages of putting a song together they would imagine one particular vocalist singing it, but by the end of the process they would realize that the octave needed to be changed and that another vocalist would do a better job with the finished song. In their prime, Holland-Dozier-Holland knew how to keep their ideas flowing and how to keep their options open. Since none of the team could write music, it was necessary for them to call in someone to right down the chords. Ideas for songs often came from real-life experiences, or at least there was a real-life experience that got the song started. Since each member brought a diversity of musical experience to the process, it was possible for each to focus on one particular aspect during a recording session. On most occasions, Dozier would work with the rhythm section and the background vocals, Eddie would concentrate on coaching the lead vocal, and Brian would function as the team's sound engineer.

Motown Hits. Beginning in 1963, Holland-Dozier-Holland began having fantastic success writing songs for Berry Gordy's Motown Records. During this memorable year, they wrote such classic songs as "Come and Get These Memories," "Heat Wave," and "Quicksand" for Martha and the Vandellas; "Locking Up My Heart" for the Marvelettes; "Mickey's Monkey" for the Miracles; and "Can I Get a Witness" for Marvin Gaye. All of these vibrant and upbeat singles charted on the Billboard pop charts. "Heat Wave" would rise to number four, and "Quicksand" to number eight. Because of the creative efforts of Holland-Dozier-Holland, Martha and the Vandellas would have several more hit singles during the mid-1960's, including the single "Nowhere to Run," which went to number eight on the pop singles chart in 1965; the single "I'm Ready for Love," which went to number nine in 1966; and the single "Jimmy Mack," which went to number ten in 1967. During this same period, H-D-H wrote the 1964 number six hit "How Sweet It Is (to Be Loved by You)" for Gaye and the 1966 number-twelve hit "This Old Heart of Mine (Is Weak for You)" for the Isley Brothers. With upbeat melodies and catchy lyrics, these hit songs firmly established Holland-Dozier-Holland as one of the premier songwriting partnerships in America.

The Supremes. H-D-H produced an amazing string of hits for the Supremes and the Four Tops. Although the first single they wrote for the Supremes, "When the Lovelight Starts Shining Through His Eyes," was something of a disappointment since it rose only to number twenty-three on the pop singles chart, many of the songs to come would make music history. The Supremes had three number-one H-D-H hits in 1964 with "Where Did Our Love Go?," "Baby Love," and "Come See About Me." From 1965 to 1967, the Supremes would have seven number-one H-D-H singles, including such remarkable songs as "Stop! In the Name of Love," "Back in My Arms Again," "You Can't Hurry Love," "You Keep Me Hangin' On," and "The Happening." Through the brilliance of Holland-Dozier-Holland, Diana Ross and the Supremes became superstars.

The Four Tops. During this time period, Holland-Dozier-Holland also wrote spectacular hits for the Four Tops, including the single "Baby I Need Your Loving," which went to number eleven; the single "(It's the) Same Old Song," which went to number one; the single "Reach Out I'll Be There," which also went to number one; the single "Standing in the Shadows of Love," which went to number six; and the single "Bernadette," which went to number four.

End of the Motown Years. By 1968, the working relationship between Gordy and Holland-Dozier-Holland had become extremely difficult. They were dissatisfied with their royalty agreement with Motown, and since no quick resolution was forthcoming, they decided that it was time to leave Motown. After cutting their ties with Gordy's label, they started Hot Wax and Invictus Records. Because of legal entanglements with Gordy, however, they were unable to release any recordings under their new labels until 1970. From 1970 to 1971, they released hits by such recording artists as Chairmen of the Board, Freda Payne, and Honey Cone. They also started Music Merchant Records in 1972, but it folded in 1973.

Musical Legacy

During the 1960's, the Motown songwriting and production partnership of Holland-Dozier-Holland produced an amazing number of hit singles for such legendary recording artists as the Supremes, the Four Tops, the Marvelettes, the Miracles, Martha and the Vandellas, and Marvin Gaye. From 1963 to 1967, they wrote twenty-five Top 10 hits. Remarkably, twelve of these songs went to number one on the pop singles chart. They also charted songs on the rhythm-and-blues singles charts, several of which rose to the Top 10.

Because of their ability to write songs that combined the best elements of pop, soul, country, and rhythm and blues, they were able to appeal to a large cross-section of Americans. Their songs became synonymous with the "Motown sound" and entered the American songbook as all-time classics. In 1988, Lamont Dozier, Brian Holland, and Eddie Holland were inducted into the Songwriters Hall of Fame. They were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1990.

Jeffry Jensen

Further Reading

Abbott, Kingsley, ed. Calling Out Around the World: A Motown Reader. London: Helter Skelter, 2001. An extraordinary collection of essays that delves into the many sides of Motown.

Bianco, David. Heat Wave: The Motown Fact Book. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Pieran Press, 1988. A fascinating portrait of Motown Records, including perceptive insights into how Holland-Dozier-Holland worked with the Motown recording artists.

Egan, Sean. The Guys Who Wrote 'Em: Songwriting Geniuses of Rock and Pop. London: Askill, 2004. Includes a fine tribute to Holland-Dozier-Holland.

George, Nelson. Where Did Our Love Go? The Rise and Fall of the Motown Sound. Rev. ed. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2007. A hard-hitting chronicle of the rise and fall of Motown Records.

Posner, Gerald. Motown: Music, Money, Sex, and Power. New York: Random House, 2002. This is a powerful study of what Motown achieved and how power, sex, and money tore at its very foundation. What Holland-Dozier-Holland were able to achieve during their tenure at Motown represents one of the company's most remarkable positive legacies.

Smith, Suzanne E. Dancing in the Street: Motown and the Cultural Politics of Detroit. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1999. An extraordinary portrait of the crucial role Motown played in the socially charged African American community.

Waller, Don. The Motown Story. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1985. Gives the reader a behind-the-scenes look at how Motown produced such extraordinarily popular music.

See also: Cooke, Sam; Costello, Elvis; Dozier, Lamont; Fogerty, John; Gabriel, Peter; Gaye, Marvin; Jackson, Janet; Jackson, Michael; Jamerson, James; Latifah, Queen; Odetta; Pickett, Wilson; Plant, Robert; Robinson, Smokey; Ross, Diana; Seger, Bob; Taylor, James; Van Halen, Eddie; Webb, Jimmy; Wilson, Jackie; Wonder, Stevie.

Buddy Holly

American singer, guitarist, and songwriter

A talented innovator and one of the originators of rock and roll, Holly excelled as a musician, composer, performer, and arranger. The makeup of his band—lead guitar, rhythm guitar, bass, and drums—became the standard in the 1960's and is emulated by groups to this day.

Born: September 7, 1936; Lubbock, Texas
Died: February 3, 1959; Near Clear Lake, Iowa
Also known as: Charles Hardin Holley (birth name)
Member of: Buddy Holly and the Crickets; Buddy Holly and the Three Tunes

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: The "Chirping" Crickets, 1957 (with the Crickets); Buddy Holly, 1958; That'll Be the Day, 1958 (with the Three Tunes); The Buddy Holly Story, 1959; The Buddy Holly Story, Vol. 2, 1960; Reminiscing, 1963; Showcase, 1964; Holly in the Hills, 1965; Giant, 1969.

The Life

Buddy Holly was born in the west Texas town of Lubbock in 1936, the fourth and final child of Lawrence and Ella Holley. Buddy was gifted in music and won a talent show at the age of five. By the end of his teenage years he had largely taught himself to play a variety of instruments, including the violin, guitar, piano, and drums. While still in junior high school, he formed his first music group with a friend named Bob Montgomery, and they played locally wherever a willing audience could be found. Holly's musical tastes were eclectic, but he was particularly a fan of country singer Hank Williams and bluegrass and gospel music.

Holly saw Elvis Presley perform live at Lubbock twice in 1955, and they shared a friendly conversation backstage. Presley was impressed with the young Texan and gave Holly the chance to open for him during his second Lubbock concert, an opportunity Holly immediately seized. He now knew that being a professional musician would be his life's work.

Holly (who by then had dropped the "e" in his surname) formed a new band which he named the Crickets. Other members of the band were Jerry Allison (drums), Joe Mauldin (bass), and Niki Sullivan (rhythm guitar). After an unsatisfactory recording session in Nashville, Holly and the Crickets recorded a series of hits at producer Norman Petty's studio in nearby Clovis, New Mexico. After a string of successes, Buddy hit a dry spell and his newer recordings did poorly on the charts. His relationship with Petty ended in an acrimonious dispute over royalties. By late 1958 Sullivan had quit the group, but Allison and Mauldin remained loyal to Petty. In August, 1958, Buddy married Maria Elena Santiago, a woman he met in New York, and they settled in Greenwich Village, where Holly hoped to restart his stalled career. By the following year the newlyweds were strapped for money because Holly's earnings were tied up with Petty in New Mexico. He reluctantly agreed to leave the pregnant Maria and tour with a show called the Winter Dance Party. While on the tour, Holly and fellow performers Ritchie Valens and the Big Bopper were tragically killed in a plane crash.

The Music

"That'll Be the Day." This song's title was lifted from a phrase in a John Wayne movie and hit the number-one spot on the record charts in September, 1957. Earlier recordings of this song in Nashville had failed to excite anyone, but when it was rerecorded at Petty's studio, Holly sang in a different octave and changed the tempo, producing an all-time classic song.

Buddy Holly. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"Peggy Sue." Originally "Cindy Lou," the title was changed to honor drummer Allison's girlfriend. This song features Holly's unique lyrical styling, extensive studio experimentation, and a driving beat. Released in the fall of 1957, this song topped out at number three on the charts.

"Not Fade Away." Although significant, this song did not enjoy the commercial success of other Holly tunes. A cover version by the Rolling Stones would be that group's first release in the United States. The song demonstrated again Holly's penchant for improvisation, as he had drummer Allison beat on an empty cardboard box rather than his drums.

"Everyday." Underappreciated at the time, this tune, recorded in 1957, displayed the artist's creativity by featuring a celesta, an instrument similar to a harpsichord. Allison, not originally scheduled to be on the recording, can be heard keeping rhythm by slapping his hands on his legs, a sound Holly liked and kept in the record.

"Maybe Baby." Holly's mother helped write this song, suggesting the title and a few lyrics. It was recorded at Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma City and is a great example of 1950's rock and roll.

"It's So Easy." This jubilant song about the power and ease of falling in love was one of Holly's most successful commercially. It has been rerecorded by many artists since its 1958 composition.

"True Love Ways." Recorded in 1958, this song indicates Buddy's musical curiosity was alive and well. He had been in something of a sales slump and wanted to experiment with strings, so this original composition was recorded using an orchestra. Beautiful and haunting, this love song has maintained its appeal for more than five decades.

"It Doesn't Matter Anymore." This song was recorded at the same session that produced "True Love Ways" and also features the backing orchestra. It was written by Paul Anka with Holly in mind. Although the song is generally upbeat, its title seemed sadly prophetic when Holly was killed shortly after its release.

Musical Legacy

Holly had a tremendous influence on popular music, with his creative talents as a singer, musician, composer, and arranger. He was one of the first pop singers to record his own compositions, and his masterful playing helped popularize the Fender Stratocaster guitar. The instrumental makeup of his group the Crickets became the standard for countless future groups. Holly sang in various vocal styles, and his recordings appealed to fans across musical genre lines. He defied the musical customs of his time by experimenting with different instruments and sounds, yet his songs were instantly recognizable. Both the Beatles and the Rolling Stones acknowledged a debt to Holly, and his songs have been recorded by artists as diverse as Chad and Jeremy, Waylon Jennings, and Linda Ronstadt. Although he died a half century ago, his musical impact shows no indication of fading away.

Thomas W. Buchanan

Further Reading

Amburn, Ellis. Buddy Holly. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1995. Thorough source, covering Holly's life from cradle to grave. Well researched and containing many interviews of those who knew him best, Amburn's work provides encyclopedic information.

Brown, Pete, and H. P. Newquist. Legends of Rock Guitar: The Essential Reference of Rock's Greatest Guitarists. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 1997. An outstanding reference, this book covers hundreds of guitar players from the beginning of the rock era. There is an informative section about Holly's technical ability, stressing his open chord playing and reliance on powerful downstrokes.

Goldrosen, John. The Buddy Holly Story. New York: Quick Fox, 1979. Satisfactory telling of the main events in the artist's life, covering in some detail the historical inaccuracies found in the 1978 motion picture starring Gary Busey as Holly. It also provides the history of every Holly recording session.

Lehmer, Larry. The Day the Music Died. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. The tragic 1959 Winter Dance Party is the focus, with voluminous information about the stars, the itinerary, and the plane crash.

Norman, Philip. Rave On: The Biography of Buddy Holly. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1996. Another comprehensive biography with an insightful look at Holly's family history and his widow, Maria Elena.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Jagger, Sir Mick; Jennings, Waylon; Nelson, Ricky; Orbison, Roy; Presley, Elvis; Valens, Ritchie; Vincent, Gene; Williams, Hank.

Gustav Holst

English classical composer, ethnomusicologist

Holst was a prolific composer, best known for his seven-movement orchestral suite The Planets. He also was significant for preserving British folk music and composing serious music for bands.

Born: September 21, 1874; Cheltenham, England
Died: May 25, 1934; London, England

Also known as: Gustavus Theodore von Holst (full name)

Principal works

BALLETS (music): The Lure, 1921; The Golden Goose, Op. 45, No. 1, 1926 (choral ballet; scenario by Jane Marian Joseph); The Morning of the Year, Op. 45, No. 2, 1927 (choral ballet).

CHAMBER WORKS: String Trio in G Minor, composed 1894, first performed 1984; Fantasiestücke, Op. 2, 1896 (for oboe and string quartet); Quintet in A Minor, Op. 3, 1896 (for piano and wind instruments); Wind Quintet in A-Flat, Op. 14, composed 1903, first performed 1982; Two Songs Without Words, Op. 22, 1906; Seven Scottish Airs, 1907 (for strings and piano); Terzetto, 1926 (for flute, oboe, and viola); Lyric Movement, 1934 (for viola and chamber orchestra); Fantasia on Hampshire Folksongs, 1970 (for string orchestra; arranged by Imogen Holst; based on Gustav Holst's Phantasy).

CHORAL WORKS: Short Partsongs, 1896 (for female chorus); Clear and Cool, Op. 5, 1897; Autumn Song, 1899 (for female chorus); Five Partsongs, Op. 9a, 1900; Ave Maria, Op. 9b, 1901 (for female chorus); Five Partsongs, Op. 12, 1903; King Estmere, Op. 17, 1903; Thou Didst Delight My Eyes, 1904; Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead, 1905 (for female chorus); Songs from "The Princess," Op. 20a, 1905 (for female chorus; based on Alfred, Lord Tennyson's poem); Four Old English Carols, Op. 20b, 1907 (for chorus and piano); In Youth Is Pleasure, 1908 (based on Robert Wever's poem); Pastoral, 1908 (for female chorus); A Welcome Song, 1908 (for chorus, oboe, and cello); O England My Country, 1909; The Cloud Messenger, Op. 30, 1910; Four Partsongs, 1910 (for female chorus and piano; lyrics by John Greenleaf Whittier); Hecuba's Lament, Op. 31, No. 1, 1911; Incidental Music to a London Pageant, 1911 (for military band and chorus); Two Eastern Pictures, 1911 (for female chorus and harp); Two Psalms, 1912 (for chorus, strings, and organ); The Homecoming, 1913 (for male chorus; lyrics by Thomas Hardy); Hymn to Dionysus, Op. 31, No. 2, 1913; The Swallow Leaves Her Nest, 1913; Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda, Op. 26, 1914; Nunc dimittis, 1915 (for chorus and eight voices); Bring Us in Good Ale, Op. 34, No. 4, 1916; Lullay My Liking, Op. 34, No. 2, 1916 (for soprano and chorus); Of One That Is So Fair, Op. 34, No. 3, 1916 (for chorus and four voices); Terly Terlow, 1916 (for chorus, oboe, and cello); This Have I Done for My True Love, Op. 34, No. 1, 1916; Three Festival Choruses, Op. 36a, 1916; Two Carols, 1916 (for chorus, oboe, and cello); Diverus and Lazarus, 1917; A Dream of Christmas, 1917 (for female chorus and strings or piano); The Hymn of Jesus, Op. 37, 1917 (for two choruses, female semichorus, and orchestra); Two Partsongs, 1917 (for female chorus, two voices, and piano; lyrics by Whittier); Ode to Death, Op. 38, 1919; Short Festival Te Deum, 1919; Seven Choruses from Alcestis, 1920 (for chorus, harp, and three flutes; based on Euripides' play); First Choral Symphony, Op. 41, 1924; The Evening-Watch, Op. 43, No. 1, 1925 (lyrics by Henry Vaughan); Sing Me the Men, Op. 43, No. 2, 1925 (lyrics by Digby Mackworth Dolben); Two Motets, Op. 43, 1925; Seven Partsongs, Op. 44, 1926; Two Anthems, 1927 (for chorus, organ, and bells); Twelve Songs, Op. 48, 1929 (for chorus and piano); A Choral Fantasia, Op. 51, 1930; Wassail Song, 1930; Eight Canons, 1931 (for chorus and piano); Twelve Welsh Folk Songs, 1931.

OPERAS (music): The Revoke, 1895 (libretto by Fritz B. Hart); The Idea, 1898 (children's operetta; libretto by Hart); The Youth's Choice, 1902 (libretto by Holst); Sita, Op. 23, 1906 (based on the poem "The Rāmāyaṇa"); The Vision of Dame Christian, Op. 27a, 1909 (masque); Savitri, Op. 25, 1916 (based on the epic The Mahabharata); The Perfect Fool, Op. 39, 1923; At the Boar's Head, Op. 42, 1925 (based on William Shakespeare's play Henry IV); The Wandering Scholar, Op. 50, 1934 (libretto by Clifford Bax).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: A Winter Idyll, composed 1897, first performed 1983; Walt Whitman Overture, Op. 7, composed 1899, first performed 1982; Symphony in F Major, Op. 8, 1900 (The Cotswolds); Indra, Op. 13, 1903 (symphonic poem); A Song of the Night, Op. 19, No. 1, composed 1905, first performed 1984; Songs of the West, Op. 21, No. 1, 1907; Stepney Children's Pageant, Op. 27b, 1909; Suite in E-flat Major, Op. 28, No. 1, 1909 (for military band); A Somerset Rhapsody, Op. 21, No. 2, 1910; Invocation, Op. 19, No. 2, 1911 (for cello and orchestra); Suite in F Major, Op. 28, No. 2, composed 1911, first performed 1922 (for military band); Beni Mora, Op. 29, No. 1, 1912 (oriental suite); Saint Paul's Suite, Op. 29, No. 2, 1913 (for strings); Japanese Suite, Op. 33, 1916; The Planets, Op. 32, 1918; A Fugal Concerto, Op. 40, No. 2, 1923 (for flute, oboe, and strings); A Fugal Overture, Op. 40, No. 1, 1923; Egdon Heath, Op. 47, 1928; Fugue à la Gigue, 1928 (for brass band); A Moorside Suite, 1928 (for brass band); Hammersmith, 1930 (for brass band); Double Concerto, Op. 49, 1930 (for two violins and orchestra); Brook Green Suite, 1934 (for strings); Scherzo, 1935.

PIANO WORKS: Toccata, 1924; Chrissemas Day in the Morning, Op. 46, No. 1, 1926 (for solo piano); Two Folk Song Fragments, Op. 46, No. 2, 1927; Nocturne, 1930; Jig, 1932.

VOCAL WORKS: Örnulf's Drapa, Op. 6, 1898 (for baritone and orchestra); The Mystic Trumpeter, Op. 18, 1905 (scena for soprano and orchestra; based on Walt Whitman's poem From Noon to Starry Night); The Heart Worships, 1907 (song for voice and piano); Hymns from the Rig Veda, Op. 24, 1908 (for voice and piano); Four Songs, Op. 35, 1917 (for soprano or tenor and violin).

The Life

Gustavus Theodore von Holst (GEW-stahv holst) was the first of two children born to Adolph von Holst, a music teacher, and his wife Clara, an amateur musician who died when Holst was eight years old. Holst suffered from neuritis, a nerve inflammation that hampered his studies of violin and piano. He began to compose while in grammar school and eventually studied at Oxford and the Royal College of Music.

In 1895 Holst met Ralph Vaughan Williams, another Royal College of Music student, who became his closest musical friend and ally. The two composers developed a lifelong tradition of playing their new scores for each other and providing earnest feedback. Still suffering from crippling neuritis, Holst switched to trombone, which he played professionally for a short time.

Holst failed in his first attempts to make a living as a composer, so he turned to teaching. In 1905 he became musical director at St. Paul's Girls' School, in Hammersmith, a post he retained for the remainder of his career, while also teaching at Morley College in London, University College, Reading, and the Royal College of Music.

Holst's compositions became better known, eliciting conducting engagements, including 1911 performances at Queen's Hall in London. As World War I began and it became popular to support British composers, Holst was completing his masterpiece, the large orchestral suite The Planets. At the same time, in response to anti-German sentiment, Holst dropped the "von" that had been spuriously added to the family name only two generations earlier. His career flourished in the second half of the decade.

In 1923 a fall from a conductor's podium weakened Holst's fragile constitution. In 1932, despite his poor health, Holst accepted an invitation to lecture at Harvard University, and he never recovered from his exhausting schedule in the United States. In 1934, just short of his sixtieth birthday, Holst, weakened by ulcer surgery, died of a heart attack. His ashes rest at the cathedral in Chichester.

The Music

Holst was a prolific composer, though few of his works remain in the repertoire. His operas, for example, are rarely revisited, except for a ballet suite from The Perfect Fool. While his early works were influenced by the music of Maurice Ravel, Richard Strauss, and Richard Wagner, Holst gradually developed a more individual style as he became increasingly interested in setting folk melodies and incorporating folk modality. His harmonic language and asymmetrical meters, while not as challenging as those of Igor Stravinsky or Anton von Webern, were bold for a British composer, and he often found resistance in domestic audiences.

Early Works. Several of Holst's student compositions won prizes, and when he was seventeen, his father arranged for three of his works to receive public performances. In 1905 Holst completed The Mystic Trumpeter for soprano and orchestra, mostly Wagnerian in its chromaticism, with hints of the polytonality that Holst would employ more extensively in later works. His interest in folk songs brought the use of modes into his composing, and his awareness of current trends on the Continent brought him additional compositional resources. Holst had studied Sanskrit in London, and several of his early works reflected the influence of Hindu philosophy and religion, in particular the series of Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda that he set between 1907 and 1912.

Saint Paul's Suite. Holst composed the four-movement Saint Paul's Suite to fit the abilities of the young string players in St. Paul's school. The work evinces the influence of folk melody on his music of this period. Holst would later produce other educational works, including Brook Green Suite, composed for the school orchestra in 1933.

Band Music. In 1909 Holst composed his Suite in E-flat Major for military band. This three-movement suite, based on a single theme, gave the band its first serious composition that was not an opera or orchestral transcription, beginning a lifelong relationship between Holst and band musicians. The Suite in F Major that followed two years later challenged the musicians with mixed-meter syncopation. Two more band works entered the repertoire in 1928: A Moorside Suite and Fugue à la Gigue. In 1930 the BBC Military Band commissioned Holst to write Hammersmith, which, like his other band works, is still in the standard repertoire of bands around the world.

The Planets. Always interested in astrology, Holst began in 1914 to compose his seven-movement astrological suite, The Planets. What is considered Holst's masterpiece reflects the influence of the important and controversial composers of the time, Stravinsky and Arnold Schoenberg. Familiar sections of The Planets range from the relentless militaristic march of "Mars, Bringer of War," with its asymmetrical five-beat meter, to the famous hymn from "Jupiter, Bringer of Jollity." The huge orchestration of The Planets (even requiring double timpanists) was capped by the use of an offstage wordless chorus fade-out at the end of "Neptune, the Mystic." As famous as The Planets has become, however, it was never Holst's favorite.

Egdon Heath. In May, 1927, Holst received a commission from the New York Symphony Orchestra, and he chose to dedicate the new piece to the author Thomas Hardy. After visiting Hardy, Holst was inspired to write what he considered his best composition. At the time, audience and critical opinion of the tone poem did not match Holst's high opinion, and the piece languished.

Musical Legacy

While Holst's musical legacy is perpetuated primarily by the quality of his compositions, he was also significant for preserving British folk song and composing serious band music. He also helped perpetuate the memory of earlier great British composers, arranging, in 1911, for the first performance since 1697 of Henry Purcell's The Fairy Queen (1692). Holst's work as a music educator affected generations of young students of all abilities, notably American composer Elliott Carter, with whom he worked at Harvard University. Holst was awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Philharmonic Society and was a fellow of the Royal College of Music. Along with these honors and accomplishments, Holst is remembered for his most famous orchestral composition, The Planets.

William S. Carson

Further Reading

Holmes, Paul. Illustrated Lives of the Great Composers—Holst: His Life and Times. London: Omnibus Press, 1997. Holmes's volume includes portions of Imogen Holst's biography of her father, as well as materials from Michael Short's Holst biography. Illustrations, bibliography, discography.

Holst, Imogen. Gustav Holst: A Biography. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 1988. Holst's only child, Imogen, was also a composer and conductor. She served as Benjamin Britten's assistant before retiring to devote her time to cataloging her father's music.

Short, Michael. Gustav Holst: The Man and His Music. London: Oxford University Press, 1990. Short studied Holst's diaries and letters and worked with his daughter Imogen to create a definitive picture of her father. Analysis, references.

See also: Carter, Elliott; Debussy, Claude; Ravel, Maurice; Strauss, Richard; Vaughan Williams, Ralph.

Arthur Honegger

French classical composer

Honegger composed more than two hundred works in a variety of genres, including music for the theater, concert hall, and cinema. His unique approach to form and his integration of French and German musical traditions are hallmarks of his innovative style.

Born: March 10, 1892; Le Havre, France
Died: November 27, 1955; Paris, France
Also known as: Oscar Arthur Honegger (full name)

Principal works

BALLETS (music): Le Dit des jeux du monde, 1918 (libretto by Paul Méral); Vérité? Mensonge?, 1920 (Truth? Lies?; libretto by André Hellé); Danse de la chévre, 1921 (Dance of the Goat; libretto by Sacha Derek); La Noce massacrée, 1921 (The Ruined Wedding; libretto by Jean Cocteau); Skating Rink, 1922 (libretto by Ricciotto Canudo); Sous-marine, 1925 (libretto by Carina Ari); Horace victorieux, 1928 (libretto by Guy-Pierre Fauconnet; based on Titus Livius's poem); Les Noces d'Amour et de Psyché, 1928 (The Wedding of Cupid and Psyche; libretto by Ida Rubenstein); Roses de métal, 1928 (libretto by Elisabeth de Gramont); Amphion, 1931 (libretto by Paul Valéry); Sémiramis, 1934 (libretto by Valéry); Icare, 1935 (libretto by Serge Lifar); Un Oiseau blanc s'est envolé, 1937 (libretto by Sacha Guitry); Le Cantique des cantiques, 1938 (The Song of Songs; libretto by Gabriel Boissy and Lifar); Le Mangeur de rêves, 1941 (The Dream Eater; libretto by Henri-René Lenormand); L'Appel de la montagne, 1945 (The Call of the Mountain; libretto by Robert Favre le Bret); Chota roustaveli, 1946 (libretto by Nicolas Evreinoff and Lifar); La Naissance des couleurs, 1949 (The Birth of Colors; libretto by Ernest Klausz and René Morax).

CHORAL WORKS: Le Roi David, psaume symphonique, 1921, revised 1923; Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher, 1938 (libretto by Paul Claudel); Une Cantate de Noël, 1953.

FILM SCORES: La Roue, 1923; Napoléon, 1927; La Fin du monde, 1931; L'Idée, 1932; Cessez le feu, 1934; Der Dämon der berge, 1934; Les Misérables, 1934; Rapt, 1934; Crime et châtiment, 1935; L'Équipage, 1935; Les Mutinés de l'elseneur, 1936; Mademoiselle Docteur, 1937; Miarka, la fille à l'ourse, 1937; Passeurs d'hommes, 1937; Regain, 1937; The Woman I Love, 1937; Pygmalion, 1938; Cavalcade d'amour, 1940; Le Captaine Fracasse, 1943; Les Démons de l'aube, 1946; Un Ami viendra ce soir, 1946; Un Revenant, 1946; Storm over Tibet, 1952; Giovanna d'Arco al rogo, 1954.

OPERAS: Judith, 1926 (libretto by René Morax); Antigone, 1927 (libretto by Jean Cocteau; based Sophocles' play); Les Aventures du roi pausole, 1930 (The Adventures of King Pausole; libretto by Albert Willemetz; based on Pierre Louÿs's novel); La Belle de moudon, 1931 (libretto by Morax); L'Aiglon, 1937 (libretto by Henri Cain; based on a play by Edmond Rostand); Les Petites Cardinal, 1938 (libretto by Willemetz and Paul Brach; based on Ludovic Halévy's novel).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Le Chant de Nigamon, 1917; Mouvement Symphonique No. 1, 1924 (Pacific 231); Symphonic Poem for Chamber Orchestra, 1924 (Pastorale d'été); Mouvement Symphonique No. 2, 1929 (Rugby, Tone Poem); Symphony No. 2 in D Major, 1942 (for strings and trumpet); Symphony No. 3, 1946 (Liturgique); Symphony No. 4, 1946; Symphony No. 5 in D Major, 1951 (Di Tre Re).

The Life

Oscar Arthur Honegger (HOH-nehg-gur) was born to Swiss parents in Le Havre, France, where he spent his youth. After two years at the Zurich Conservatory, Honegger enrolled at the prestigious Paris Conservatory, where he studied from 1911 to 1918. In 1920 he became a member of Les Six, the collective of six young Parisian composers whose fashionable, lighthearted style and audacious stage works epitomized the French avant-garde's obsession with youth and novelty following World War I.

Honegger came to international prominence with his 1921 Le Roi David, psaume symphonique, and the same year saw an increase in activity by Les Six, including their only collaborative stage work, Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel. His increasing fame led to further collaborations with Jean Cocteau, René Morax, Paul Claudel, and Paul Valéry. In 1926 Honegger married the talented pianist Andrée Vaurabourg, with whom he spent the rest of his life.

During the 1930's Honegger composed a great amount of music for radio, film, and the theater, geared to both public audiences and musical sophisticates. Throughout his career he maintained close ties with Switzerland, notably through conductor Paul Sacher, who premiered many of Honegger's most substantial works, including Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher; Symphony No. 2 in D Major; Symphony No. 4; and his last work, Une Cantate de Noël.

During the occupation of Paris, Honegger taught at the École Normale de Musique. In 1947 he suffered a heart attack, and his declining health diminished his compositional activity. His autobiography, I Am a Composer (1966), conveys a pessimistic view of the future of music. Honegger, who made Paris his lifelong home, became Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor in 1954, and he died in his home on November 27, 1955.

The Music

Honegger's early appreciation of Ludwig van Beethoven, Richard Strauss, and Richard Wagner instilled in the composer a commitment to ideals of musical beauty based on thematic unity and formal structure. His studies in Paris led him to pursue the contrapuntal techniques, expanded harmonic idiom, and emphasis on classical form espoused by the Paris Conservatory. Honegger's adherence to these principles is evident from his lighthearted works of the 1920's through his mature symphonic works of the 1940's and 1950's, and it lends his music an aesthetic of high seriousness. His idiosyncratic approach to tonality, based more on pitch-centricity than common practice harmony, manifests itself as patterns of tension and release, corresponding to relative harmonic dissonance and consonance. Honegger's music often uses driving rhythms, coloristic harmonies, and extremes in melodic amplitude and timbre. His lyric and colorful passages point to the influences of Debussy, Gabriel Fauré, and Jules Massenet. Honegger's five symphonies, written at a time when the genre was under relative neglect, are testaments to the composer's alliance with tradition.

Early Works. Honegger's earliest compositions were chamber music, small works for orchestra, and music for the stage and ballet. His student works show experimentation with different aspects of his voice, at turns immensely complex and lyrically elegant. Le Chant de Nigamon, a symphonic poem, is based on a morbid tale of an Iroquois chief who is burned at the stake, and it utilizes authentic American Indian melodies which compete in a sonata form. Le Dit des jeux du monde caused a riotous scandal at its premiere because of Honegger's agitated, highly dissonant music and radical stage effects. His 1920 Symphonic Poem for Chamber Orchestra, Pastorale d'été, shows a light, relaxed, and Romantic style that is also evident in his chamber pieces and operettas.

Le Roi David. In 1921 Honegger accepted a commission to write the incidental music for René Morax's biblical drama Le Roi David. Written in two months, the music was originally scored for three vocal soloists with choir and a small pit band. After its initial towering success, Honegger, who became known as "le roi Arthur," reworked the piece for large orchestra, the form heard most often today. The piece presents a series of short scenes from the life of the biblical king David, linked by tonal and thematic correspondences to the dramatic action. Drawing on styles reminiscent of Igor Stravinsky, Massenet, Maurice Ravel, and Honegger's idol, Johann Sebastian Bach, the extreme eclecticism of the music reveals Honegger's Expressionist style, juxtaposing and blending a great variety of musical idioms. Honegger contrasts simplicity and complexity through his use of austere chorale tunes and lyrical melodies placed against massively wrought passages and abrupt tonal shifts. The music is exciting, majestic, and at times grotesque, and it played a major role in solidifying Honegger's status as one of the most innovative and serious composers of his generation.

Mouvement Symphonique No. 1. Honegger's passion for trains inspired him to write the short Mouvement Symphonique No. 1, also known as Pacific 231, named after the powerful steam locomotive. The work has been viewed as a musical depiction of a train, although Honegger insisted the title was an afterthought. Using the form of an extended chorale, Honegger sought to portray the visual and experiential qualities of trains with a novel, conceptual treatment of rhythm, pitting tempo and rhythmic momentum against one another, creating the effect of rhythmically speeding up while the tempo gradually slows down.

Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher. Honegger had great success with his dramatic oratorio Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher. Paul Claudel's masterful libretto presents Joan of Arc as she is burned at the stake, telling her story through a series of flashbacks. The music draws on realistic pictorialisms, through the use of folk music, trumpet calls, psalmody, hymns, laments, and chiming bells, interspersed with passages conveying the mystical ecstasy associated with the French saint. The innovative orchestration includes parts for saxophone, tempered piano, and ondes Martenot (an electronic musical instrument). Honegger's trademark style of French prosody, in which the first syllable of text begins on the downbeat as opposed to the conventional anacrusis, lends an air of dignity and power to the vocal setting.

Musical Legacy

For composers of the subsequent generation, Honegger was regarded as a monumental figure who composed innovative, novel music while engaging with the traditions of the past, contributing some of the most important dramatic and symphonic works of the first half of the twentieth century. Pierre Boulez, Olivier Messaien, Hans Werner Henze, and Luigi Dallapiccola memorialized Honegger after his death, pointing to his critical influence on contemporary music. Honegger's music stands apart for its craftsmanlike rigor and ingenuity without abandoning the tonal system or relying on contemporary technical models. He is notable for his prolific work in film, his interest in recording his music for a wide public audience, and his professed desire to write accessible music appealing to both the average musical listener and the connoisseur.

Jonathan W. Boschetto

Further Reading

Halbreich, Harry. Arthur Honegger. Translated by Roger Nichols. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1999. This authoritative biography provides a meticulously detailed account of Honegger's life and works, and it includes a series of topical essays on the composer.

Honegger, Arthur. I Am a Composer. Translated by Wilson O. Clough and Allan Arthur Willman. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1966. An exposition of the composer's life, music, and philosophy in his own words, offering a provocative, if deeply pessimistic, view of the future of music, art, and civilization.

Spratt, Geoffrey K. The Music of Arthur Honegger. Cork, Ireland: Cork University Press, 1987. An exhaustive study of Honegger's music, focusing primarily on major dramatic works and the development of his musical language.

Waters, Keith. Rhythmic and Contrapuntal Structures in the Music of Arthur Honegger. Aldershot, England: Ashgate Publishing, 2002. This concise volume offers a heavily analytical look at rhythm and counterpoint in Honegger's music.

See also: Boulez, Pierre; Debussy, Claude; Kodály, Zoltán; Koussevitzky, Serge; Messiaen, Olivier; Milhaud, Darius; Poulenc, Francis; Ravel, Maurice; Rózsa, Miklós; Strauss, Richard; Stravinsky, Igor; Szigeti, Joseph; Tiomkin, Dimitri; Xenakis, Iannis.

John Lee Hooker

American blues singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Covering traditional blues songs as well as writing distinctive songs with memorable diction, Hooker used his husky baritone voice, stomping foot, and repetitive chords on an open-tuned guitar to define the blues in twentieth century America.

Born: August 22, 1917; Clarksdale, Mississippi
Died: June 21, 2001; Los Altos, California
Also known as: Delta John; John Lee Booker; John Lee Cooker; Johnny Lee; Birmingham Sam; Boogie Man; Texas Slim

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Everybody's Blues, 1950; The Folk Blues of John Lee Hooker, 1959; How Long Blues, 1959; I'm John Lee Hooker, 1959; The Blues, 1960; Blues Man, 1960; The Country Blues of John Lee Hooker, 1959; House of the Blues, 1960; That's My Story, 1960; Travelin', 1960; The Folk Lore of John Lee Hooker, 1961; John Lee Hooker Plays and Sings the Blues, 1961; John Lee Hooker Sings the Blues, 1961; Burnin', 1962; Drifting thru the Blues, 1962; Tupelo Blues, 1962; Don't Turn Me from Your Door: John Lee Hooker Sings His Blues, 1963; John Lee Hooker, 1963; Living with the Blues, 1963; The Big Soul of John Lee Hooker, 1964; Burning Hell, 1964; Great Blues Sounds, 1964; The Great John Lee Hooker, 1964; I Want to Shout the Blues, 1964; . . . and Seven Nights, 1965; Hooker and the Hogs, 1965; It Serves You Right to Suffer, 1966; The Real Folk Blues, 1966; Urban Blues, 1967; Hooked on Blues, 1968; Big Maceo Merriweather and John Lee Hooker, 1969; Big Red Blues, 1969; Get Back Home, 1969; Highway of Blues, 1969; In the Mood, 1969; Simply the Truth, 1969; That's Where It's At, 1969; Endless Boogie, 1970; If You Miss 'Im I Got 'Im, 1970; John Lee Hooker on the Waterfront, 1970; Moanin' and Stompin' Blues, 1970; No Friend Around, 1970; Coast to Coast Blues Band, 1971; Goin' down Highway 51, 1971; Guitar Loving Man, 1971; Half a Stranger, 1971; Hooker 'n' Heat, 1971 (with Canned Heat); I Feel Good, 1971; Boogie Chillun, 1972; Detroit Special, 1972; Never Get out of These Blues Alive, 1972; Born in Mississippi, Raised Up in Tennessee, 1973; Free Beer and Chicken, 1974; Mad Man Blues, 1974; Black R and B, 1975; In Person, 1976; Black Snake, 1977; Dimples, 1977; Dusty Road, 1977; The Cream, 1978; King of Folk Blues, 1978; Sad and Lonesome, 1979; Slims Stomp, 1979; Everybody Rockin', 1980; Sittin' Here Thinkin', 1980; This Is Hip, 1980; World's Greatest Blues Singer, 1980; Tantalizing the Blues, 1982; Hookered on Blues, 1983; Blues Before Sunrise, 1984; Do the Boogie, 1984; Solid Sender, 1984; Detroit Blues, 1987; House Rent Boogie, 1987; Jealous, 1987; The Blueway Sessions, 1988; Want Ad Blues, 1988; The Healer, 1989; Let's Make It, 1989; Trouble Blues, 1989; Don't You Remember Me, 1990; Hobo Blues, 1990; More Real Folk Blues, 1991; Mr. Lucky, 1991; Walking the Blues, 1991; Boom Boom, 1992; Graveyard Blues, 1992; Turn Up the Heat!, 1992; Nothing but the Blues, 1993; King of the Boogie, 1994; Blues for My Baby, 1995; Chill Out, 1995; Helpless Blues, 1995; Electric, 1996; Don't Look Back, 1997; The Best of Friends, 1998; Black Man

Blues, 1998; Anywhere, Anytime, Anyplace, 2000; Down at the Landing, 2000; Lonesome Road, 2000; On Campus, 2000; Boogie Man, 2001; I'm Ready, 2002; Shake, Holler, and Run, 2002; Too Much Boogie, 2002.

The Life

Born in Clarksdale, Mississippi, on August 22, 1917, John Lee Hooker was the youngest of eleven children of William Hooker and Minnie Ramsey. Since William Hooker was a Baptist minister as well as a sharecropper, his children were allowed to sing only religious songs. The Reverend Hooker died when John Lee was six, and Minnie married Will Moore, a blues singer who taught John Lee his distinctive way of playing guitar. During the 1920's, blues legends Blind Lemon Jefferson, Blind Blake, and Charley Patton stayed at the Moore-Hooker residence, providing a musical education for the boy.

John Lee Hooker. (© Michael Ochs Archives/CORBIS)

Hooker left home to live with an aunt in Memphis, Tennessee, in 1932, where he worked as an usher at the W. C. Handy Theatre, played at house parties, and occasionally attended school, completing only the fifth grade. Hooker moved farther north to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1936, living with another aunt, until World War II started, and the lure of a regular factory job took him to wartime Detroit in 1943. Hooker worked at several factory jobs over the next two decades; his longest stint was as a janitor at the Ford Motor Company Rouge Factory complex. In postwar Detroit Hooker quickly became known on Hastings Street in Paradise Valley on the near east side, playing at the Rainbow Lounge, the Congo Club, and the Apex Bar, among other venues, with such local blues legends as Willie D. Warren, Detroit Piano Fats, and Harmonica Shah. One evening at the Apex Bar, Hooker was discovered by Bernie Besman, who wanted to record Hooker's tribute to a favored aunt, "Sally Mae." For the flip side of the record Besman asked Hooker to riff out an extemporaneous blues number, and the result was "Boogie Chillun." The disc sold more than a million copies for Modern Records, climbing to number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts in 1949.

Over the next decade, Hooker developed a reputation in the ghetto blues bars of the Lower Great Lakes—Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, Chicago—but his crossover to a wider national and international audience occurred with his first appearance at Rhode Island's Newport Folk Festival in 1960. After that Hooker began to play East Coast nightclubs and college campuses and started to tour Europe. For the next four decades, he maintained a consistent touring schedule, usually with a four-piece group (second guitar, bass, drums, piano) backing him up.

Hooker's popularity and influence not only in the blues but also in the rock and folk-rock arenas can be seen in his collaborations with Canned Heat, John Mayall, Ten Years After, and the Rolling Stones. The Healer remains the best-selling blues album in recording history and includes Hooker collaborations with Carlos Santana, Bonnie Raitt, and Robert Cray. With homage to one of his earliest hit records, Hooker opened the Boom Boom Room in San Francisco in 1997. He continued to perform until four days before his death in 2001.

The Music

What some critics have termed the harmonic simplicity of Hooker's style can be attributed to his preference to open-tune his six-string guitar, usually to open-G (DGDGBD). Add to that Hooker's large foot stomping the floor and his Mississippi baritone voice growling out memorable lines such as the opening of the song "I'm Bad, Like Jesse James."

Hooker 'n' Heat. This is one of the best examples of matching a blues musician with a rock band. Canned Heat performed seamlessly as Hooker's backup in the 1971 album, with the band's Bob Hite selflessly deferring to Hooker on vocals. There are some remarkable musical exchanges between harp (harmonica) player Alan Wilson and Hooker, made all the more memorable because of Wilson's untimely death soon after the release of the album.

The Healer. Hooker jump-started his career with this critically acclaimed and commercially successful album. The title track is a tight duet with Santana, and the duet with Raitt, "I'm in the Mood," remains one of the most popular songs in the Hooker corpus. The album justifiably earned a Grammy Award.

Mr. Lucky. Continuing the model of blues singer paired with crossover rock, folk, and other blues musicians, this release was nominated for a Grammy Award and includes Cray on the title track; a memorable vocal duet with Van Morrison, "I Cover the Waterfront"; another collaboration with Santana, "Stripped Me Naked"; a new arrangement of "This Is Hip" with Ry Cooder; and a duet with Albert Collins, "Backstabbers" (elsewhere titled "Backbiters and Syndicators").

Musical Legacy

Hooker's collaborations with notable artists from other musical categories often produced work that gave value to both traditions, though fans and music critics generally seem to prefer Hooker solo onstage. His improvisations were often too eclectic and unpredictable for backup bands that expected an even, measured beat. In addition to his prolific and lengthy recording career, Hooker pioneered a tradition of performing under a series of aliases that allowed him to do backup and foreground work for different record labels without explicitly violating the terms of a record contract. In 1980 Hooker was inducted into the Blues Hall of Fame; in 1991 he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame; he received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in 1997; and he received a Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award in 2000.

Richard Sax

Further Reading

Cohn, Lawrence, ed. Nothing but the Blues: The Music and the Musicians. New York: Abbeville Press, 1993. With more than four hundred pages, more than three hundred black-and-white photographs, and an extensive discography and bibliography, this is a comprehensive written and pictorial history of the blues.

Kennedy, Timothy. Midnight Sun: A Tribute to John Lee Hooker. Tampa, Fla.: University of Tampa Press, 2006. Museum-quality photographs taken by the author during a summer-solstice performance by Hooker in Alaska in the 1970's.

Murray, Charles Shaar. Boogie Man: The Adventures of John Lee Hooker in the American Twentieth Century. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2002. Drawing on interviews with Hooker's contemporaries, Murray places Hooker's career and achievements within relevant cultural and sociological contexts.

Obrecht, James. "John Lee Hooker." Guitar Player (November, 1989): 50ff. Review article on Hooker as a guitar player, specifically his two-finger picking.

Russell, Tony. The Blues: From Robert Johnson to Robert Cray. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. Russell provides profiles of twenty-four blues legends and summarizes the blues in twentieth century America through nine chronological stages. Includes more than a hundred color and black-and-white photographs.

See also: Diddley, Bo; Hopkins, Lightnin'; James, Etta; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Morrison, Van; Patton, Charley; Raitt, Bonnie; Reed, Jimmy; Santana, Carlos; Williamson, Sonny Boy, I.

Lightnin' Hopkins

American blues songwriter and guitarist

Hopkins played guitar with the "Texas pinch," a right-hand thumb-and-forefinger interaction characteristic of country blues-based Texas guitarists.

Born: March 15, 1912; Centerville, Texas
Died: January 30, 1982; Houston, Texas
Also known as: Sam Hopkins (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Lightnin' Hopkins, 1959; Autobiography in Blues, 1960; Country Blues, 1960; Lightnin' and the Blues, 1960; Last Night Blues, 1961; Lightnin', 1961; Walkin' This Road by Myself, 1961; How Many More Years I Got, 1962; Lightnin' Hopkins and the Blues, 1962; Lightnin' Strikes, 1962; Mojo Hand, 1962; Blues in My Bottle, 1963; Goin' Away, 1963; Lightnin' and Co., 1963; Smokes Like Lightnin', 1963; Down Home Blues, 1964; Hopkins Brothers: Lightnin', Joel, and John Henry, 1964 (with the Hopkins Brothers); Swarthmore Concert, 1964; Blue Lightnin', 1965; First Meeting, 1965; Hootin' the Blues, 1965; My Life in the Blues, 1965; The Roots of Lightnin' Hopkins, 1966; Soul Blues, 1966; Gotta Move Your Baby, 1968; The Great Electric Show and Dance, 1968; California Mudslide, 1969; Texas Blues Man, 1969; Blues Is My Business, 1971; Double Blues, 1973; Low Down Dirty Blues, 1975; Lightnin' Strikes Back, 1981.

SINGLES: "Going Home Blues," 1946; "Katie Mae Blues," 1946; "Grosebeck Blues," 1947; "Tim Moore's Farm," 1949.

The Life

Sam "Lightnin'" Hopkins was playing guitar by age eight, when he reportedly received encouragement from the legendary Blind Lemon Jefferson. After becoming confident enough to play for dances in his community, Hopkins left home to travel across Texas, where in Dallas he again encountered Jefferson. Another primary influence was his reputed cousin, Alger "Texas" Alexander, who played no instrument but whose powerful voice sang topical verses in the style of the work songs that predated blues. Hopkins often accompanied Alexander, and this apprenticeship helped him develop his strengths as a lyrical improviser.

In the late 1930's, Hopkins served time on a Houston County prison farm, an experience he would later recall in such songs as "Prison Farm Blues." By 1946 he was back accompanying Alexander on Houston's Dowling Street, where a talent scout heard him and hired him to accompany a pianist, "Thunder" Smith, at a recording session in Los Angeles. The record company thought "Thunder and Lightnin'" would look good on a label, so Hopkins acquired a nickname and made his first recordings. His "Katie Mae Blues" became a hit.

For the better part of a decade, Hopkins recorded prolifically for a variety of labels, but by the mid-1950's recording offers dried up. After a few lean years in Houston, the appearance of Hopkins's first album on the Folkways label ended his recording slump and introduced him to a new audience.

A 1960 trip to New York was a watershed: Hopkins appeared on CBS television's A Pattern of Words and Music, he recorded fifty songs for four labels (among them Nat Hentoff's Candid), and he even performed at Carnegie Hall on a folk bill with Pete Seeger and Joan Baez.

In 1962 Hopkins won the Down Beat International Jazz Critics Poll as New Star, Male Singer. Two years later, he traveled to Europe and to England as part of the American Folk Blues Festival Tour. With little change in his style, Hopkins continued to tour and record until he died of cancer in 1982.

The Music

Hopkins epitomized the lone blues singer with guitar, his songs at once deeply personal and expressive of universal emotions. Thanks to his mentors Jefferson and Alexander, he drew on deep wells of tradition, yet nothing he sang or played was merely derivative of those who came before him. He created his own musical world, alternately harsh and poetic, and he had a rare knack for drawing listeners into it. For all his music's intimacy, Hopkins was an expert performer who understood musical dynamics and getting an audience on his side. Whether that audience was one person listening to a record or a packed festival crowd, Hopkins knew how to connect. He did it with his expressive guitar, which was a voice all its own. He did it with his lyrics, more tightly focused than the often rambling verses strung together by many blues singers. He did it with a raw voice that adeptly conveyed the rough pleasures and sorrows of his life.

"Katie Mae Blues." Hopkins's 1946 recording debut shows his musical talent fully formed. The lyrics praise a woman with some humorous blues poetry, comparing her to various makes of cars, while the guitar playing is assured and speaks of long experience. The success of this recording launched a brief renaissance of so-called country blues recorded for black audiences, at a time when rhythm and blues was moving in a more urbane direction.

"Short Haired Woman." Hopkins's 1947 hit, with its rueful dismissal of its subject and picturesque references to hairpieces called "rats," made a deep impression on black audiences of its time. B. B. King, who worked as a deejay before his success as performer, admired the song for its topical reference to a then-popular hairstyle. He must have also noticed Hopkins's stinging, now-electrified guitar lines as well.

"Tim Moore's Farm." The harsh lot of the sharecropper is vividly depicted in this song, supposedly about a plantation overseer named Tim Moore who earned a bad reputation for his rough treatment of black workers. Hopkins reputedly cobbled this together from sundry local songs on the topic, but his cohesive result shows his knack for sharply focused storytelling. This is a rare example of a blues that plainly criticizes racial and economic conditions.

"Going Home Blues." This autobiographical song (also known as "Going Back and Talk to Mama") opens with Hopkins's birth date. It is the sort of tune that came effortlessly to Hopkins, who could yearn for his mother and his birthplace, the usual turf of hillbilly singers, but without sounding maudlin.

"Grosebeck Blues." Hopkins reported learning this from Alexander, though Hopkins follows a straight narrative thread, which was not typical of Alexander. The song does have a chantlike preblues freedom, and structurally it is not blues. It is a prison work song, representing the oldest strain of tradition in Hopkins's recorded repertoire. His guitar work is likewise noteworthy, especially for the way the guitar traces the complex vocal melodic line.

Musical Legacy

Hopkins made more than six hundred recordings; he was the subject of a documentary by Les Blank, The Blues According to Lightnin' Hopkins (1969); and he inspired Jane Phillips's novel Mojo Hand (1966). Although he enjoyed international celebrity, Hopkins was happiest in Houston, where he became something of a hero in its Third Ward. His music has lost none of its capacity to move as it depicts the world of Texas sharecroppers. Hopkins's first recordings led to other country blues singers and guitarists being recorded in the late 1940's and the early 1950's, a time when their music might otherwise have faded into obscurity. Without the success of Hopkins, we might never have heard of John Lee Hooker or Muddy Waters.

Mark Humphrey

Further Reading

Charters, Samuel B. The Country Blues. New York: Rinehart, 1959. Charters's groundbreaking book closes with a chapter on Hopkins, presenting him as the last great country blues singer.

Obrecht, Jas, ed. Rollin' and Tumblin': The Postwar Blues Guitarists. San Francsico: Miller Freeman Books, 2000. Obrecht offers a fine chapter on Hopkins's life, music, and impact on the white blues-rock guitarists who admired him.

Waterman, Dick. Between Midnight and Day: The Last Unpublished Blues Archive. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2003. Waterman offers some funny and insightful recollections of Hopkins, along with stunning photographs.

See also: Baez, Joan; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Seeger, Pete; Terry, Sonny; Van Zandt, Townes; Waters, Muddy.

Lena Horne

American pop and jazz singer

A prominent African American pop singer, Horne is noted for her cool, elegant beauty and her sultry renditions of popular standards.

Born: June 30, 1917; New York, New York

Also known as: Lena Mary Calhoun Horne (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: It's Love, 1955; Lena and Ivie, 1957 (with Ivie Anderson); Lena Horne at the Waldorf Astoria, 1957; Stormy Weather, 1957; Give the Lady What She Wants, 1958; Porgy and Bess, 1959; The Songs by Burke and Van Heusen, 1959; Lena on the Blue Side, 1962; Lena Goes Latin, 1963; Lena Horne Sings Your Requests, 1963; Lovely and Alive, 1963; Here's Lena Now!, 1964; Feelin' Good, 1965; Lena in Hollywood, 1966; Merry from Lena, 1966; Soul, 1966; Lena and Gabor, 1969 (with Gabor Szabo); Watch What Happens, 1969; Nature's Baby, 1971; Lena and Michel, 1975 (with Michel Legrand); Lena, A New Album, 1976; The Exciting . . . Lena, 1977; The Men in My Life, 1981 (with Joe Williams and Sammy Davis, Jr.); We'll Be Together Again, 1994; Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music, 1994; Being Myself, 1998.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: In Person: Lena Horne as Told to Helen Arstein and Carlton Moss, 1950; Lena, 1965.

The Life

The family of Lena Mary Calhoun Horne was a distinguished one—her grandmother was a civil rights activist and her uncle was an adviser to Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Horne sang as a teenager at the legendary Cotton Club in Harlem, but in 1937 she left show business to marry politician Louis Jordan Jones, with whom she had two children. They divorced in 1944. During this time, Horne began singing with swing bands, but her big career break came in 1943's film Stormy Weather. A glamorous woman, Horne became the first black actor to be awarded a long-term film contract, becoming the most highly paid black actor in the country.

Throughout her career Horne advanced the causes of racial integration and civil rights, participating in many rallies, marches, and fund-raising events. When entertaining American troops in Europe, she refused to sing for segregated audiences, and she would not take film parts that stereotyped black women. In 1947 she challenged social convention when she married the Jewish American arranger and conductor Lennie Hayton, who became her manager, a position he held until his death in 1971.

Horne's social activism led to her being blacklisted from television and film during the 1950's, although she continued to perform on Broadway and in nightclubs. In the wake of the deaths of her husband, son, and father in quick succession, Horne abandoned her career in the early 1970's. In 1981 she returned to show business in an acclaimed one-woman show, continuing to perform throughout the world until officially retiring in 2000 at the age of eighty-three.

The Music

Although Horne's first success as a singer was with the all-black Noble Sissle Society Orchestra, she soon joined Charlie Barnet's swing band, becoming the first African American to tour with an all-white band. Eventually Horne was known for her association with music notables both black and white, including Artie Shaw, Nelson Riddle, Billy Strayhorn, and Duke Ellington.

"Stormy Weather." The song "Stormy Weather" is a touchstone of Horne's musical career. Sung by Horne in the all-black film musical Stormy Weather (1943), this Ted Koehler-Harold Arlen song is one with which she became deeply identified. Her silky rendition of this bluesy song is also number twenty-six on the Songs of the Century list compiled by the Recording Industry Association of America. Her performance of this song brought her a racially integrated fan base, allowing her not only to cross between the black and white music worlds but also to further a musical culture enjoyed by Americans of either race. This song also identifies her with the sophisticated music that dominated American popular culture from the 1920's to 1960, and which in subsequent years became cabaret and jazz standards.

Lena Horne at the Waldorf Astoria. By the 1950's, Horne's powerful voice, with its signature mellow drawl and open-vowel enunciation, became the foundation for an even more electric singing style. In 1957 she reached a career high point with her triumphant engagement at the Waldorf Astoria nightclub, during which she delivered creative and vocally impressive interpretations of standards by such classic American songwriters as

Lena Horne. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Cole Porter, Jule Styne, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein II, Yip Harburg, and Ellington. Her repertoire for this engagement demonstrated how Horne was at home with popular songs written by composers associated with Broadway, Hollywood, and Tin Pan Alley. Her experience as a singer with the big swing bands, as well as her own distinctive song stylings, also consolidated her credentials as a jazz artist. Recorded live, Lena Horne at the Waldorf Astoria is one of her most highly regarded albums, capturing the inspired quality of her nightclub performances.

Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music. Horne's withdrawal from the music business in the 1970's led her to reconsider her identity as an African American singer. She returned to music about a decade later, free of the cultural and musical inhibitions she felt had been imposed on her in earlier decades. Taking advantage of the greater expressivity allowed by popular musical artists at that time, and feeling less restricted by a decorum expected by her white audiences, Horne enthusiastically embraced a franker and more ferocious performance and singing style. This transformation in Horne's music was powerfully demonstrated in 1981 when she presented her autobiographical one-woman show on Broadway, Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music, which chronicled Horne's early life and many years in show business. At sixty-three, Horne still boasted her powerful voice, but she performed with greater abandon and with a new, more audacious emotional range. Horne acknowledged her personal transformation by singing her signature song, "Stormy Weather," twice—first done in the genteel style of the 1940's, and later with the melismatic runs and the earthy emotional power associated with gospel music, reinventing the song as a revelatory cry of pain. Horne was given a special Tony Award for this show, and the show's album won a Grammy Award for Best Pop Vocal Performance and another for Best Cast Show Album. Having successfully become her own woman as an artist, Horne continued to perform until the year 2000, when she retired.

Musical Legacy

An exceptional interpretive musical artist who found tremendous popularity with both black and white audiences, Horne used her successful career to accelerate changes in attitudes about race in America. Her example and her social activism played a major role in the integration of black musicians and singers into the mainstream of American performing arts. As a musical artist, Horne won three Grammy Awards, including a Lifetime Achievement Award in 1989, and she has been the recipient of numerous awards, including the Kennedy Center Honors and the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers (ASCAP) Pied Piper Award, given to entertainers who have made significant contributions to words and music. Her distinctive song stylings and her legendary performances had a major impact on female jazz and pop singers of her generation as well as on singers of succeeding generations, such as Dionne Warwick, Diana Ross, Nancy Wilson, Liza Minnelli, Julie London, Dee Dee Bridgewater, Keely Smith, and Annie Ross.

Margaret Boe Birns

Further Reading

Bloom, Ken. The American Songbook: The Singers, Songwriters, and the Songs. New York: Black Dog & Leventhal, 2005. This reference includes Horne in an examination of more than two hundred prominent American singers of the twentieth century.

Bogle, Donald. Brown Sugar: Over One Hundred Years of America's Black Female Superstars. New York: Continuum, 2007. This resource includes Horne in an examination of black female superstars from Ma Rainey to Beyoncé.

Buckley, Gail Lumet. The Hornes: An American Family. New York: Applause Books, 2002. This study of six generations of the Horne family by Horne's daughter discusses her mother's struggles with race prejudice.

Vogel, Shane. "Performing 'Stormy Weather': Ethel Waters, Lena Horne, and Katherine Dunham." South Central Review (Spring, 2008). This article examines "Stormy Weather" as interpreted by three African American artists: singers Waters and Horne and dancer Dunham.

Williams, Megan E. "The Crisis Cover Girl: Lena Horne, the NAACP, and Representations of African American Femininity, 1941-1945." American Periodicals: A Journal of History, Criticism, and Bibliography 16, no. 2 (2006): 200-218. This article examines the efforts of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to utilize Horne's image to empower African American women.

See also: Arlen, Harold; Burke, Johnny; Carter, Benny; Ellington, Duke; Fitzgerald, Ella; Hammerstein, Oscar, II; Jones, Quincy; Kern, Jerome; Legrand, Michel; Porter, Cole; Rodgers, Richard; Ross, Diana; Serkin, Rudolf; Shaw, Artie; Strayhorn, Billy; Waller, Fats.

James Horner

American film-score composer

A prolific scorer for motion pictures and television, Horner began his career composing for low-budget science-fiction films. He went on to write scores for films in every genre, adding to his sound tracks new approaches, such as utilizing choirs and solo voices and mixing voices with synthesizers.

Born: August 14, 1953; Los Angeles, California

Principal works

FILM SCORES: The Watchers, 1978; The Lady in Red, 1979; Battle Beyond the Stars, 1980; Humanoids from the Deep, 1980; The Hand, 1981; Wolfen, 1981; Forty-eight Hours, 1982; Krull, 1982; Star Trek: The Wrath of Khan, 1982; Space Invaders, 1983; Star Trek III: The Search for Spock, 1984; Cocoon, 1985; Commando, 1985; Heaven Help Us, 1985; Aliens, 1986; An American Tail, 1986; Batteries Not Included, 1987; Project X, 1987; Cocoon: The Return, 1988; The Land Before Time, 1988; Red Heat, 1988; Willow, 1988; Field of Dreams, 1989; Glory, 1989; Honey, I Shrunk the Kids, 1989; Another Forty-eight Hours, 1990; I Love You to Death, 1990; An American Tail: Fievel Goes West, 1991; The Rocketeer, 1991; Patriot Games, 1992; Unlawful Entry, 1992; The Man Without a Face, 1993; The Pelican Brief, 1993; Swing Kids, 1993; Clear and Present Danger, 1994; Legends of the Fall, 1994; Braveheart, 1995; Casper, 1995; Jumanji, 1995; Ransom, 1996; The Spitfire Grill, 1996; Titanic, 1997; Deep Impact, 1998; The Mask of Zorro, 1998; Bringing Down the House, 1999; How the Grinch Stole Christmas, 2000; The Perfect Storm, 2000; A Beautiful Mind, 2001; House of Sand and Fog, 2003; Bobby Jones: Stroke of Genius, 2004; The Forgotten, 2004; Troy, 2004; The Chumscrubber, 2005; Flightplan, 2005; The Legend of Zorro, 2005; Apocalypto, 2006; The Spiderwick Chronicles, 2008.

ORCHESTRAL WORK: Spectral Shimmers, 1978.

The Life

Born in Los Angeles, James Horner is the son of Hollywood set designer and art director Harry

Horner. He began studying piano at age five. The family moved to London when James was ten, and he studied at the Royal College of Music. Returning to Los Angeles in the 1970's, he earned a degree in composition from the University of Southern California. He later earned a master's degree and a doctorate in musical composition and theory at the University of California, Los Angeles, and he taught music theory there for several years.

Horner composed a classical concert piece, Spectral Shimmers, which was performed by the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra. He began scoring student films for the American Film Institute, which brought him into contact with low-budget film producer Roger Corman. Horner scored some of Corman's films, which gave him enough exposure to land jobs on bigger-budget productions.

Horner rose in Hollywood's music echelons, scoring nearly one hundred motion pictures and becoming a composer who has to turn down more assignments than he accepts. He developed relationships with directors ranging from James Cameron to Ron Howard, and he is noted for his continued innovations in his scores, such as mixing voices and synthesizers.

The Music

Horner had his first successes with science-fiction films, with both large and low budgets, and he went on to score in nearly every motion-picture genre: cop and buddy films (Forty-eight Hours; Another Forty-eight Hours), swashbucklers (The Mask of Zorro; The Legend of Zorro), biopics (A Beautiful Mind; Bobby Jones: Stroke of Genius), children's films (How the Grinch Stole Christmas), and many more.

Battle Beyond the Stars. Horner scored two 1980 films for Corman (the other was Humanoids from the Deep), who was known as an innovative but low-budget producer of unusual films, many science fiction or horror. With Battle Beyond the Stars, an outer-space version of The Magnificent Seven (1960), Corman was trying for a bigger-budget look and sound, more in line with the Star Trek and Star Wars films, and Horner gave it to him.

Star Trek: The Wrath of Khan. The recognition from his work on the Corman films helped Horner get the assignment for the second Star Trek motion picture, the first having been a disappointment. Horner developed a rousing score for this 1982 sequel, emphasizing the kind of action and interplay among the characters that had made the Star Trek television series so popular. (Horner is seen briefly on screen in a cameo as one of the starship's crew.) He was called back to score the next film in the series, Star Trek III: The Search for Spock, two years later.

Aliens. This 1986 film, a sequel to the popular Alien (1979), marked the first teaming of Horner with director James Cameron. This sequel emphasized space-marines-style action over the horror mood of the first one. It was also Cameron's first big film, and the director agonized over every frame. For the composer, however, it was a rush job; Horner had only ten days to come up with the score. Although friction developed between the composer and director, the job got done on time, and the score received an Academy Award nomination.

Braveheart. Even critics of Mel Gibson's 1995 blockbuster about a hero from Scottish history gave its musical score credit for emphasizing the action and the background of Scotland. Another Horner-Gibson collaboration followed a year later with Ransom.

Titanic. Horner and Cameron patched up their differences after working on Aliens, and they got together again for what would prove a huge success for Horner. The 1997 film about the tragic sinking of the passenger ship Titanic in 1912, surrounded by a fictional love story dramatized through a flashback, prompted Horner to generate a score ranging from a full orchestra to a solo voice for "My Heart Will Go On," sung by Céline Dion. The sound track from the motion picture stayed at the top of the Billboard chart for sixteen weeks. The thirty million-plus copies it sold make it one of the best-selling sound tracks in motion-picture history. It won two Academy Awards, for Original Song (in collaboration with lyricist Will Jennings) and for Best Original Music, along with three Grammy Awards and two Golden Globe Awards.

The Legend of Zorro. Horner scored The Mask of Zorro in 1998, and seven years later he got the assignment to provide the music for an even more lavish take on the pulp-magazine character dating back nearly a century. Thanks to special effects, this version of the character is even more extravagant than his previous cinema incarnations. As Horner had done to achieve the Scottish flavor of Brave- heart, the composer worked up a Spanish-style sound track for the Zorro features, punching up the action scenes throughout the picture and using an almost laid-back musical sequence for the final twelve-minute climax of the picture.

Musical Legacy

Horner has won two Academy Awards, plus thirty-two other awards and thirty-three nominations. His music is heard almost every evening on television: He composed the theme for the CBS Evening News, which debuted when Katie Couric began anchoring the program on September 5, 2006. It is now used by other CBS News programs. His music can be heard in motion pictures he has not even scored. For example, his end-title music for Battle Beyond the Stars and for Glory are often heard in film trailers.

Paul Dellinger

Further Reading

Burlingame, Jon. Sound and Vision: Sixty Years of Motion Picture Sound Tracks. New York: Watson-Guptill, 2000. Covers notable sound track composers and offers a history of film sound tracks. Specifically, it recounts the Cameron-Horner dissension over Aliens, and how they smoothed over their differences to make the award-winning Titanic.

Hickman, Roger. Reel Music: Exploring One Hundred Years of Film Music. New York: W. W. Norton, 2005. A historical survey of the role of music in film, outlining its development over the past century. Includes profiles of composers, including Horner.

McArthur, Colin. Brigadoon, Braveheart, and the Scots: Distortions of Scotland in Hollywood Cinema. New York: I. B. Tauris, 2003. Critiques these film depictions of Scotland, and discusses Horner's score and its contribution to the emotional impact of Braveheart.

Morgan, David. Knowing the Score: Film Composers Talk About the Art, Craft, Blood, Sweat, and Tears of Writing Music for Cinema. New York: Harper Paperbacks, 2000. A collection of interviews with some of the top composers in Hollywood, covering how they got their start, how they developed their musical styles, and how they collaborate with their directors.

See also: Bernstein, Elmer; Morricone, Ennio; Newman, Alfred; Newman, Randy; Rota, Nino; Rózsa, Miklós; Tiomkin, Dimitri; Williams, John; Zimmer, Hans.

Vladimir Horowitz

Russian classical pianist

Horowitz's recordings embrace more than two hundred different works that include definitive performances of his own and other composers' works, all rendered with his astounding technique and unique vocal approach to piano playing.

Born: October 1, 1903; Kiev, Russia (now in Ukraine)
Died: November 5, 1989; New York, New York
Also known as: Vladimir Samoylovich Horowitz

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Moment Exotique, 1921 (for piano); Variations on a Theme for Bizet's "Carmen," 1926 (for piano); Rachmaninoff: Piano Concerto No. 3, 1930 (with London Symphony Orchestra); Liszt: Sonata in B Minor, 1932; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, 1940 (with the NBC Symphony Orchestra); Danse macabre, 1941 (for piano); Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1, 1941 (with the NBC Symphony Orchestra); By the Water, 1947 (for piano); Toccata for Piano in C Major, Op. 11, 1947; Mussorgsky: Pictures at an Exhibition, 1951; Beethoven Moonlight and Waldstein Sonatas: Vladimir Horowitz, 1956; Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 19, 1962 (for piano); Horowtiz Plays Scarlatti, 1964; Horowitz on Television, 1968; Vladimir Horowitz: A Concert at Carnegie Hall, 1968; Schumann: Kreisleriana, 1969; Great Romantic Piano Favorites, 1972; Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 3 in D Minor, Op. 30, 1978; Mozart: Piano Concerto No. 23, 1987; Horowitz at Home, 1989; Horowitz Plays Clementi, 1989; Horowitz Plays Schumann, 1989; Horowitz Plays Scriabin, 1989; Horowitz: The Last Recording, 1990; Horowitz Plays Prokofiev, Barber, and Kabalevsky Sonatas, 1990; Horowitz Plays Chopin, 2003.

The Life

Vladimir Samoylovich Horowitz (HOHR-oh-vihtz) was raised in a prosperous Jewish family in Kiev, Russia. His father, Simeon, was an electrical engineer, and his mother, Sophie Bodick, was a former piano student at the Royal Conservatory. He had two brothers, Jacob and George, and a sister, Regina, who was a fine chamber pianist. Horowitz studied piano with his mother until age nine, and then he enrolled at the Kiev Conservatory to study with Vladimir Puchalsky. During this period, Aleksandr Scriabin recognized the boy's talent. Horowitz learned much of his future concert repertoire while studying with Sergei Tarnowsky, and he attributed his astounding piano technique to his work with Felix Blumenfeld.

When the Bolsheviks took over Kiev, his family lost everything, and Horowitz quickly finished his studies to graduate in May, 1920, in order to help out with family finances. Appearing throughout Russia with violinist Nathan Milstein, Horowitz gave twenty-three concerts in one year that included more than one hundred different works. Dissatisfied with the economic and social situation in Russia, he left in 1925.

In 1926 Horowitz got a career boost when he successfully substituted at the last minute for another concerto soloist in Hamburg, Germany. Over the next two years, he gave more than 150 European performances, and he gained notoriety in America after his virtuoso technique astonished everyone in a New York performance of the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 1.

Horowitz married Wanda Toscanini (daughter of conductor Arturo Toscanini) in January, 1934. Their daughter, Sonya, was born the following year. In 1935 he gave seventy-five concerts, but medical and family problems resulted in his first retirement from the stage. In 1942 Horowtiz became a U.S. citizen, and the following year he performed with Arturo Toscanini in a war bond concert to raise money for the U.S. effort in World War II, collecting more than ten million dollars.

In 1953 the silver-anniversary concert of Horowitz's first U.S. appearance was a huge success. Nevertheless, the pianist, exhausted from years of continuous travel, decided to retire from the stage again. Carnegie Hall was filled with musical luminaries at his historic return twelve years later on May 9, 1965. Horowitz appeared in a nationally broadcast television recital (later released as Horowitz on Television), but he retired again in 1969. Therapy successfully improved a nervous condition, and he continued to concertize. A televised interview on Sixty Minutes was followed by a White House performance for President Jimmy Carter in early 1978.

Horowitz appeared in Europe and Japan in the mid-1980's, but his return to Russia in 1986, after a sixty-one-year absence, was symbolically important for relations between the Soviet Union and the United States. President Ronald Reagan presented him with the Presidential Medal of Freedom. Horowitz died of a heart attack three years later, and he was buried in the Toscanini family mausoleum in the Cimitero Monumentale, Milan, Italy.

Vladimir Horowitz. (Library of Congress)

The Music

Horowitz's performances fall into three categories: performances of his own compositions, arrangements and transcriptions of other composer's works, and performances of other composers' works. Horowitz's original compositions include early works such as the Étude-Fantaisie, Op. 4 (Les Vagues), dedicated to his teacher Tarnowsky; the Waltz in F Minor; Dance eccentrique; and his lifelong concert trademark, Variations on a Theme for Bizet's "Carmen." He made numerous arrangements and transcriptions of other composers' works, including Franz Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies Nos. 2, 15, and 19 and Danse macabre. He also arranged Felix Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" (1842), John Philip Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever" (1897), and Modest Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition (1874). Horowitz made hundreds of recordings and public performances of other composers' works.

Original Composition. Variations on a Theme from Bizet's "Carmen" is an original, unpublished composition by Horowitz that he first recorded for Welte in 1926 and again for RCA and Duo Art in 1928. He recorded new versions every ten years, and it became a trademark composition of his programs. Each variation explores technically difficult patterns, such as chromatic double thirds and sixths in one hand and big leaps and fast, repeated chromatic alternating octaves between the hands. In the six different recorded versions of the work, Horowitz shows his skill not only at flawlessly navigating the complex textures at an incredible tempo but also by composing interesting new patterns for each rendition.

The variations are based upon the opening figure from Bizet's opera overture, and each variation adds to the progress of the work until the arrival of the bravura ending. Because Horowitz composed new music for this composition over the decades, there is no fixed version of this work. He believed that it would be impossible to notate the piece accurately because of the complicated hand-over-hand technique and fast, dense passage work. However, a musical score of the 1928 piano roll version is available from the Vladimir and Wanda (Toscanini) Horowitz Collection of papers in the Irving S. Gilmore Library at Yale University as transcribed by this author. Horowitz's performances of Variations on a Theme from Bizet's "Carmen" after his 1953 retirement abandon speed in favor of compositional originality and sonority.

Arrangement. Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition was considered ineffective until the stunning performance by Sviatoslav Richter in 1956. Horowitz made a brilliant arrangement of the work in the 1940's to correct what he perceived as idiomatic weaknesses in the piano writing. Retaining Mussorgsky's original music, Horowitz added new passage work and counterpoint to Gnomus, Bydlo, Ballet of the Unhatched Chicks, Two Jews, Market Place, Catacombs, Hut of Baba Yaga, and Great Gate of Kiev. His changes to Gnomus consist mainly of octave doublings and of a redistribution of a trill figure across several octaves. He superimposes a large dynamic curve over Bydlo to create the effect of an approaching ox cart that passes by and then disappears into the distance. Simple trills are replaced by decorative alternating double thirds in the middle section of the Ballet of the Unhatched Chicks, and The Rich Jew (from Two Jews) is amplified with octave doublings to increase its declamatory effect. A surprising alteration occurs in Market Place, in which Horowitz distributes Mussorgsky's repeated notes across the entire range of the piano; he does a similar thing with the repeated notes of Catacombs. The Hut of Baba Yaga is, once again, dramatized with octave doublings. Perhaps the greatest changes come at the end of the Great Gate of Kiev, in which Horowitz adds a triplet figure in octaves borrowed from Boris Godonov. Leaping back and forth from Mussorgsky's original chords in the mid-range to Horowitz's octaves in the extremes of the instrument, this is one of the most powerful and effective codas in piano music.

Performance. Horowitz became famous as a miniaturist toward the end of his career when he performed short works, such as the Scarlatti sonatas. He had always played Scarlatti, even in his early school years, but he was motivated to place his stamp upon the entire repertory after his wife obtained a complete Alessandro Longo edition of the works. Baroque keyboard specialist Ralph Kirkpatrick listened to Horowitz play, discussed performance problems with him, and loaned him microfilms of the original manuscripts so that Horowtiz could avoid mistakes in the Longo edition. Horowitz's principal contribution to the genre was the application of classical piano touch and nineteenth century pedaling to these harpsichord pieces. His recording of Scarlatti's sonatas consists of seventeen works organized primarily on the basis of tempo (slow and fast groups) and not on the more conventional historical chronology or key relations. Sonatas in the major mode are located mainly at the beginning of the album, and those in the minor mode predominate toward the end. Horowitz effectively brings out implied effects of drums, strumming guitars, and other Spanish and Gypsy sounds wherever they are found in the music. The clarity of his scales is unmatchable, and since Horowitz said that he applied a range of about three dozen dynamic levels to his playing, his Scarlatti performances seem more colorful than those of any other pianist.

Musical Legacy

Horowitz recorded hundreds of works, covering a wide range of styles and composers, from the 1920's to the 1980's. In addition to his renderings of the works of Liszt, Mendelssohn, Bizet, Mussorgsky, and Scarlatti, he is known for recordings of the works of Franz Schubert, Robert Schumann, Frédéric Chopin (especially the "Wind over the Grave" finale of the Sonata No. 2 in B-flat Minor, Op. 35), and Scriabin (Sonata No. 9, also known as the "Black Mass," and Vers la flamme, poème). He premiered Sergei Prokofiev's Sonatas Nos. 6, 7, and 8 in America, and he produced a stunning performance of the last movement of Sonata No. 7 during his silver-anniversary concert. Horowitz's recording of Prokofiev's Toccata for Piano in C Major, Op. 11 has never been duplicated in terms of its sonority and characteristic cross accents. His recording of Samuel Barber's Sonata for Piano remains without peer, and his collaboration on the last movement illustrates the esteem with which he was held by the composer. Horowitz performed concerti by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Ludwig van Beethoven, Liszt, and Johannes Brahms, and he was recognized as the one of the greatest interpreters of the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 1 and the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 3. His recordings span the development of technology throughout the twentieth century, and they clearly demonstrate what people heard at his live performances: that he was one of the greatest piano virtuosos of the twentieth century.

Stephen Husarik

Further Reading

Dubal, David. Remembering Horowitz: 125 Pianists Recall a Legend. New York: Schirmer Books, 1993. These essays describe other pianists' reactions to Horowitz, with details on personal encounters. The volume contains some photographs of Horowitz with other musicians and a few of his programs.

Plaskin, Glenn. Horowitz: A Biography of Vladimir Horowitz. New York: William Morrow, 1983. The first authoritative account of Horowitz's life in English recounts the pianist's difficulties in launching a musical career in Bolshevik Russia, and it describes the tragic consequences of leaving his country, the loss of his parents, his life with Wanda, and other personal details. An appendix includes Robert McAlear's thorough discography of the Horowitz recordings made in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Schonberg, Harold C. Horowitz: His Life and Music. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1992. Schonberg interviewed Horowitz, and in this book the author provides an authoritative account of the pianist's private and professional life. Notable in this account is the complete story of the sad death of Sonya, Horowitz's daughter. There is a four-part overview of the recordings, but the list excludes Horowitz's private recordings and piano rolls.

See also: Barber, Samuel; Busch, Adolf; Rachmaninoff, Sergei; Scriabin, Aleksandr; Sousa, John Philip; Stern, Isaac; Toscanini, Arturo.

Son House

American blues singer-songwriter and guitarist

House was an innovative and influential early Delta blues singer, songwriter, and guitarist. His music style was accentuated by a highly rhythmic guitar and vocal style, influenced by black gospel and spiritual music, and frequently utilized slide guitar. Ultimately, House's musical contributions heavily informed the sound of the Delta blues and therefore the blues tradition as a whole.

Born: March 21, 1902; Riverton, Mississippi
Died: October 19, 1988; Detroit, Michigan

Also known as: Eddie James House, Jr. (full name); Eugene House

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Son House and J. D. Short: Blues from the Mississippi Delta, 1963; Father of the Delta Blues: The Complete 1965 Sessions, 1965; The Legendary Son House: Father of Folk Blues, 1965; Son House and Blind Lemon Jefferson, 1972; Son House: The Legendary 1941-1942 Recordings in Chronological Sequence, 1972; Son House: The Real Delta Blues, 1974; Delta Blues: The Original Library of Congress Sessions from Field Recordings, 1941-1942, 1991; Son House at Home: The Legendary 1969 Rochester Sessions, 1992.

SINGLES: "Clarksdale Moan," 1930; "Dry Spell Blues, Parts I and II," 1930; "Mississippi County Farm Blues," 1930; "My Black Mama, Parts I and II," 1930; "Preachin' the Blues, Parts I and II," 1930; "Walkin' Blues," 1930; "Shetland Pony Blues," 1941; "American Defense," 1942; "John the Revelator," 1965.

The Life

Eddie James "Son" House, Jr., was born in Riverton, Mississippi, near Clarksdale. Upon his parents' divorce, when he was about seven or eight years old, he moved with his mother to Tallulah, Louisiana, and became a preacher by fifteen. Church music, and the church's position on music, greatly influenced House in that he originally despised blues music and guitar playing. Instead, House was a self-proclaimed rambler who held several jobs (as a tree-moss gatherer, cotton-field hand, and steel-plant worker) in a variety of locations (Louisiana, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Missouri) until his mid-twenties. Then, in 1927, House was instantly inspired when he saw bluesman Willie Wilson playing guitar with a small medicine bottle on his finger, which he used as a slide. Only a few of these details regarding House's life were known until his "rediscovery" by Phil Spiro, Nick Perls, and Dick Waterman in 1964.

In 1943, House moved to Rochester, New York, to work for the rail system and gave up playing music altogether not long afterward. Two decades later—with the folk revival in full swing in the mid-1960's—Son House became an epic name and ultimately was sought out. After relearning his craft, House played the Newport Folk Festival (1964-1966), toured Britain with the American Folk Blues Festival in 1967 (when he appeared on the BBC2's Late Night Line-Up), and also enjoyed time on the coffeehouse circuit throughout the United States.

House's health declined in the early 1970's. Diagnosed with both Alzheimer's and Parkinson's disease, he gave up playing in 1976. He eventually moved to live with his family in Detroit, where he died in his sleep on October 19, 1988. His music was featured in the 2007 film Black Snake Moan.

The Music

Willie Wilson was Son House's first teacher. Initially House learned familiar tunes in "Spanish" tuning, but he soon began experimenting with other tuning systems and composing original works. In 1930, he met Willie Brown and Charley Patton, and eventually the three began playing at old plantation balls and similar events. It was at such an engagement that House met the young, eager Robert Johnson. That same year, Patton brought House to the attention of Paramount Records through his manager, Arthur Laibly, and the three bluesmen traveled to Grafton, Wisconsin, to record their respective albums. House was also recorded in Lake Cormorant, Mississippi, by ethnomusicologist Alan Lomax for the Library of Congress in 1941-1942.

After House moved to Rochester, New York, he quit playing music once "All [his] boys [were] gone." Regrettably, Patton (1934), Johnson (1938), and Brown (1952) had died prior to the folk revival.

"Shetland Pony Blues." Recorded in 1941 (and again in 1942 under the title "Pony Blues"), the basic song is borrowed from Charley Patton. House, however, crafted his own arrangement, complete with original verses and his distinctive style of playing bottleneck guitar. Open D-tuning in the guitar accompanies House's wailing but strong voice. Characteristically, he aggressively snaps his low strings and employs heavy vibrato in both his playing and singing. House uses the pony theme as a pretense to expresses advances toward a woman. The 1941 Library of Congress recording took place at Klack's Store in Lake Cormorant, Mississippi, to utilize the store's essential supply of electricity. For this reason, one version includes the background railway noise of a passing train.

Son House. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

"Walkin' Blues." An ideal example of the "standard" twelve-bar blues, the 1941 recording includes Brown on guitar, Fiddlin' Joe Martin on mandolin, and Leroy Williams on harmonica. Therefore, this recording archives the sound that Brown and House created together at their numerous plantation ball performances. House sings and shouts his lyrics while forcefully strumming his famous steel-bodied National guitar. His musicians contribute by providing brief instrumental interludes, lively commentary, and other vocalizations. In a 1942 interview with Lomax, House claimed "Walkin' Blues" to be the precursor to his composition "My Black Mama."

"American Defense." In stark contrast to most of his music, "American Defense" uses a waltz tempo while maintaining House's typical Delta blues style. House paints himself as a patriot with lines such as "There won't be enough Japs to shoot a little game of craps." However, in every chorus he warns "This war may last you for years."

"John the Revelator." House's arrangement of the traditional song is one the most frequently cited of House's recordings, and it links him to his religious background. Lyrically, the biblical subject matter is a clear connection to gospel. Musically, House abandons the use of guitar in favor of nothing but hand claps and foot stomping to accompany himself. The call-and-response chorus alternates between "Who's that writin'?" and "John the Revelator," evoking church choir undertones, both lyrically and melodically. House makes use of falsetto, near-shouting, and near-speaking vocal techniques as well as substantial melismata to complete the connection with the gospel tradition.

"Preachin' the Blues." Like many of House's songs, this selection begins at a moderate tempo, slowly escalates in intensity, and ends with a three-note, stepwise motion leading to, but not actually ending on, the tonic. His guitar accompaniment is very simple, placing emphasis on the lyrics. "Preachin' the Blues" reflects House's personal purgatory, his inability to commit completely to either the sacred or the profane. "I can't hold God in one hand and the Devil [the blues] in the other one," he laments. This dichotomy is illustrated by his curious lyrical juxtaposition of becoming a Baptist preacher to his love for women and corn liquor. House first recorded "Preachin' the Blues," an original composition, for Paramount Records.

Musical Legacy

The musical legacy of Son House resides primarily in his voice, guitar, slide techniques, and repertoire. While few recordings exist from his early, and arguably prime, period, the raw intensity, percussive and bottleneck slide guitar practice, and religious subject matter made a profound impression on many prevailing blues musicians. Notably, Robert Johnson and Muddy Waters fortuitously had personal interactions with House. Waters has been quoted as saying, "it was Son House who influenced me to play" and, in reference to bottleneck playing, that he "picked that up from Son House." Johnson observed House perform at several plantation balls as a youth. Subsequently, House's influence reached most of the blues movement and helped establish rock and roll. As late as 1999, the alternative rock band the White Stripes credited House as a major inspiration and dedicated their their first album to him. In 1980, Son House was inducted into Blues Foundation's Hall of Fame.

Janine Tiffe

Further Reading

Charters, Samuel. The Bluesmen: The Story and the Music of the Men Who Made the Blues. New York: Oak, 1967. A collection of chapters devoted to several bluesmen, including Son House, which features an interview transcription and song lyrics.

Cohn, Lawrence. "Son House." Sounds and Fury 3 (1965): 18-21. After House's "rediscovery," several articles were published devoted to his personal history. This article also includes a short discography.

Cowley, John. "Really the 'Walking Blues': Son House, Muddy Waters, Robert Johnson, and the Development of a Traditional Blues." Popular Music 1 (1981): 57-72. This article provides an in-depth analysis and discussion of House, Waters, Johnson, and the composition "Walkin' Blues."

Koda, Cub. "Son House." In All Music Guide to the Blues, edited by Michael Erlewine, Vladimir Bogdanov, Chris Woodstra, and Cub Koda. San Francisco: Miller Freeman Books, 1999. This encyclopedic guide to the blues contains entries on bands and musicians, including biographies and albums.

Oliver, Paul. "House, Son." In The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, edited by Stanley Sadie. New York: Macmillan, 2001. A substantial entry in this definitive multivolume dictionary dedicated to all styles of music and musicians. Provides a concise biography of House.

See also: Howlin' Wolf; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Johnson, Robert; Patton, Charley; Raitt, Bonnie; Waters, Muddy.

Howlin' Wolf

American blues singer, guitarist, harmonica player, and songwriter

Wolf was one of the most exciting performers in the postwar electric Chicago blues scene. Wolf's towering body—reportedly six feet, three inches and weighing 275 pounds—and low, guttural voice contributed to his dynamic performing style.

Born: June 10, 1910; West Point, Mississippi
Died: January 10, 1976; Hines, Illinois
Also known as: Chester Arthur Burnett (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Moanin' in the Moonlight, 1959; Howlin' Wolf, 1962; Howlin' Wolf Sings the Blues, 1962; Poor Boy, 1965; Big City Blues, 1966; Evil, 1967; The Original Folk Blues, 1967; The Super Super Blues Band, 1968 (with Muddy Waters and Bo Diddley); The Howlin' Wolf Album, 1969; Goin' Back Home, 1970; The London Howlin' Wolf Sessions, 1971; Message to the Young, 1971; The Back Door Wolf, 1973; Howlin' Wolf A.K.A. Chester Burnett, 1974; London Revisited, 1974; Cadillac Daddy: Memphis Recordings, 1952, 1987.

The Life

Born Chester Arthur Burnett in West Point, Mississippi, Howlin' Wolf grew up in the midst of the Delta blues culture. Wolf's nickname and his performing persona originated in the roaming wolf character in the tale of Little Red Riding Hood that was etched into his mind by his grandfather. While helping to farm on the plantation of Sam Young and Will Morrow near Ruleville, Mississippi, he met legendary blues performer Charley Patton, who lived on the nearby Dockery's farm, an important base for blues performers. Although Wolf did not learn much from Patton's subtle guitar style, he was certainly influenced by Patton's low voice and clownish performing style. Patton also taught Wolf the blues repertoire that he played throughout his career.

In 1933 the Burnett family moved to Arkansas, where Wolf met another of his main influences, Sonny Boy Williamson, who was married for a while to Wolf's sister. Williamson taught Wolf harmonica techniques, and they teamed up for street performances, which Robert Johnson, Johnny Shines, and Floyd Jones sometimes joined. Other musicians with whom Wolf played when he was an amateur musician include Son House and Willie Brown.

As soon as Wolf was discharged from his military service in 1943, he focused on public performance. In 1948 he formed his first band, the House Rockers. Although band membership was still unstable, some of the important musicians who played included guitarists Willie Johnson, Matt Murphy, and Pat Hare and harmonica players Little Junior Parker and James Cotton, all of whom were teenagers then (Wolf was almost forty years old). In the same year, Wolf started his radio show on KWEM in West Memphis, Arkansas.

In 1951 Wolf signed a recording contract with Sam Phillips, the owner of the Memphis Recording Service. Phillips leased some of Wolf's masters to Chess Records and others to RPM Records. Phillips esteemed Wolf's performance more highly than that of anyone he recorded in his lifetime, including Elvis Presley, Johnny Cash, and Jerry Lee Lewis. In 1953 the Chess brothers, Leonard and Phil, owners of Chess Records, bought Wolf's exclusive contract. Subsequently, Wolf moved his base to Chicago.

Howlin' Wolf. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

During his Memphis era, Wolf was famous for his unique performing style. His low, loud, cracking voice emanating from his huge body, he howled, moaned, growled, and shouted. Although he liked to sit on a stool while performing, he would spend a good part of his show walking, crawling, and rolling around on the stage. He had a chilling smile and often rolled his eyes while he was playing.

Until the mid-1960's Wolf's performing venues were mostly African American clubs, though his performances for a blues package tour in Europe—the American Folk Blues Festival—helped increase his popularity, especially in England. He influenced British rock artists whose musical style was based on blues. When the Rolling Stones were invited to perform for ABC's music show Shindig in 1965, the condition for their appearance was to share the bill with Wolf as a special guest. Following Brian Jones's respectful introduction, Wolf performed for more than a million viewers.

In the early 1970's Wolf's health declined drastically; he had several heart attacks and was on dialysis treatment because his kidneys had been destroyed in a car accident. In spite of his ailments, he continued to perform in Chicago clubs and make albums for Chess. Wolf's last major performance was for a blues package show at the Chicago Amphitheater in November, 1975. He died two months later.

The Music

"Moanin' at Midnight." In many ways this song represents all of Howlin' Wolf's recordings. The opening—a lower-range spine-chilling moan rising to a falsetto with the hypnotic repetition of a one-chord riff by guitar and harmonica—exemplifies the singer's violent performing persona. This recording also shows Wolf's musical roots, with guitar riffs based on Delta blues performer Tommy Johnson's "Cool Drink of Water Blues" and vocal style influenced by Wolf's mentor Patton. Throughout his career Wolf offered variations on the musical device heard in "Moanin' at Midnight": repetitive riffs on a single chord. This song, coupled with "How Many More Years," was a double-sided hit record in 1951.

"Smokestack Lightning." Another of Wolf's representative recordings is "Smokestack Lightning." Abstract and surreal, the lyrics are built around images of a train and a crying man, sung over a stripped-down one-chord riff derived from "Moanin' at Midnight." These songs are analogous to field hollers, African American songs before the Civil War, in which different images are juxtaposed and sung over one chord. The flavor of the Delta's anachronistic provincialism is an important and attractive feature of Wolf's music.

Compositions by Willie Dixon. Like his compositions for other artists on Chess Records, such as "Hoochie Coochie Man" for Muddy Waters and "My Babe" for Little Walter, house songwriter Willie Dixon's compositions for Howlin' Wolf—"Back Door Man," "Spoonful," "Little Red Rooster," and "Tail Dragger"—were important in his repertoire. While Dixon was skilled at creating songs for Wolf, Waters, and Koko Taylor that portrayed the singers as powerful figures, he also gave them didactic songs in the tradition of preaching blues. "Back Door Man," which is about stealing someone else's wife and its consequence, emphasizes Wolf's ominous character. Its musical structure rests on one chord, and the simplified riff derives from "Moanin' at Midnight." On the other hand, "Spoonful" is a sermon—about how a tiny amount of a thing can be significant for either good or bad. The musical structure of "Spoonful" is also built on a stripped-down one-chord riff. "Little Red Rooster"—adopted from Patton's "Banty Rooster Blues" and Memphis Minnie's "If You See My Rooster (Please Run Him Home)"—is a didactic song with a rustic flavor; the wisdom presented in the song is that the value of a thing is not recognized until it is lost. In "Tail Dragger" Dixon amalgamates melodramatic music and blues to personify a feral beast, and the lyrics about a wolf stealing chicks are reminiscent of Little Red Riding Hood, which was the basis for Wolf's stage name. The riff played by the horn section, sounding like music for a mobster movie, is a shortened version of the "Smokestack Lightning" riff. In all of these recordings Wolf demonstrates a soulful vocal performance, but his guitarist partner, Hubert Sumlin, is important in supporting him. Dixon compositions rise to an exciting level with the interaction between Sumlin's exquisite guitar and Wolf's voice.

"Killing Floor." Another Wolf classic, "Killing Floor," was perhaps inspired by the early Delta blues songs "Dry Spell Blues" by House and "Hard Time Killin' Floor Blues" by Skip James. Reportedly Wolf sang of his own experience. According to his biography, Wolf spent some time in the Parchman Farm Mississippi State Penitentiary for splitting open someone's head with a hoe in a fight to protect a girl who had been abused by the man. In this song Wolf's powerful vocal is supported by Sumlin's guitar with a sharp driving beat, while Buddy Guy plays the second guitar.

The Howlin' Wolf Album. In the early 1960's young white audiences began to discover the blues. To capitalize on the increasing popularity of the blues in the white community, Chess Records made efforts to sell blues records to a new audience, catering to musical trends. In 1968, in response to the psychedelic music movement, Chess Records produced Electric Mud with Waters, Wolf's chief rival. Although this was controversial, the record was Waters's first album to rank on Billboard and Cash Box charts. Following this trend, Chess Records produced another psychedelic record featuring Wolf, a project he hated. This album lacks musical dynamism, and there is no lively interaction between Wolf and the other musicians. However, "Moanin' at Midnight," in which Wolf's voice and harmonica with two electric guitars sound like ambient music, turned out to be a somewhat interesting musical experiment.

The Back Door Wolf. This was Wolf's last album, released in 1973. While he and his band successfully re-create the good old sound of Chicago blues in the 1960's, some of the lyrics have topical content that reflect the early 1970's. As the title shows, "Watergate Blues" is about the political scandal, and in "Coon on the Moon" Wolf looks back at the history and social progress of African Americans. Sumlin is still an important partner for Wolf.

Musical Legacy

Wolf was influential on the British rock scene, his songs forming an important part of the repertoire for many groups in the British invasion: "Little Red Rooster" for the Rolling Stones, "Spoonful" for Cream, "I Ain't Superstitious" for the Jeff Beck Group (with Rod Stewart), and "The Lemon Song" (adaptation of "Killing Floor") for Led Zeppelin. The album The London Howlin' Wolf Sessions captures moments of his collaboration with British rock musicians Eric Clapton, Steve Winwood, Charlie Watts and Bill Wyman of the Rolling Stones, and Ringo Starr. The album includes the rehearsal scene of Wolf teaching the band how to play "Little Red Rooster." Because Wolf was not in good shape during the sessions, the album lacks his usual power, but it was his best-selling album.

Wolf's unique performing style had some followers: Little Wolf, The Highway Man, and Tail Dragger. His vocal style was an inspiration for vocalist Tom Waits and radio disc jockey Wolfman Jack. Wolf's achievements were honored with his induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1991.

Mitsutoshi Inaba

Further Reading

Escott, Colin, with Martin Hawkins. Good Rockin' Tonight: Sun Records and the Birth of Rock 'n' Roll. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1991. The book features a description Wolf's Memphis recording with Sam Phillips.

Guralnick, Peter. Feel Like Going Home: Portraits in Blues and Rock 'n' Roll. New York: Harper & Row, 1989. A chapter on Wolf has a detailed description of one of his performances.

Segrest, James, and Mark Hoffman. Moanin' at Midnight: The Life and Times of Howlin' Wolf. New York: Pantheon Books, 2004. Highly recommended biography based on the authors' long-term research and interviews with Wolf's family members and musicians who played with him. A documentary DVD based on this book is available.

See also: Berry, Chuck; Butterfield, Paul; Clapton, Eric; Cotton, James; Dixon, Willie; Guy, Buddy; House, Son; Jagger, Sir Mick; Morrison, Jim; Patton, Charley; Raitt, Bonnie; Waters, Muddy; Williamson, Sonny Boy, I; Williamson, Sonny Boy, II; Zappa, Frank.

Alberta Hunter

American jazz/blues singer and songwriter

With a career spanning seven decades, Hunter was a blues pioneer in the 1920's and an American jazz expatriate in Europe in the 1930's and 1940's, on-stage and in cabarets. She made a remarkable comeback at the age of eighty-two, with nightly performances at New York City's famous night-club the Cookery and recordings that harked back to the days of Bessie Smith and Josephine Baker.

Born: April 1, 1895; Memphis, Tennessee
Died: October 17, 1984; New York, New York
Also known as: Alberta Prime; Josephine Beatty; May Alix

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Alberta Hunter with Lovie Austin and Her Blues Serenaders, 1961; Songs We Taught Your Mother, 1961 (with Lucille Hegamin and Victoria Spivey); Remember My Name, 1977; Amtrak Blues, 1978; The Glory of Alberta Hunter, 1981; Look for the Silver Lining, 1982; The Legendary Alberta Hunter: The London Sessions, 1934, 1989.

SINGLES: "Downhearted Blues," 1922; "Jazzin' Baby Blues," 1922; "Stingaree Blues," 1923; "Texas Moaner Blues," 1924; "Your Jelly Roll Is Good," 1925; "Beale Street Blues," 1927; "Sugar," 1927.

The Life

Alberta Hunter was born in Memphis in 1895 to Charles and Laura Hunter. Charles, a sleeping car porter, abandoned Laura and her two children soon after Alberta's birth. When she was sixteen, Hunter moved to Chicago and got her first job as a singer at Dago Frank's, a cabaret and bordello. On January 27, 1919, she married Willard Townsend, and they were separated within weeks and divorced a few years later. Meanwhile, her popularity as a singer netted her the headlining act at the famous Dreamland Café and recordings with top jazz names. In 1924 she became a star of Broadway and vaudeville and moved to Harlem. In 1927 she traveled to Europe, where African American entertainers such as Josephine Baker were the rage. Hunter became a stage hit in Paris and starred in the London production of Show Boat (1927) with Paul Robeson. With the expiration of her passport in 1940, she returned to New York. During World War II, she performed for the United Services Organization (USO). With her theatrical career waning, she received a nurse's license in 1957, working for the next twenty years at Goldwater Hospital on Welfare (now Roosevelt) Island.

In 1977 she was rediscovered and began a remarkable new career singing at the Cookery restaurant near Greenwich Village. A nationwide sensation, Hunter performed at the White House, at Carnegie Hall, at the Smithsonian (where she was captured on videotape), and on ABC's Good Morning America. She toured Europe and Brazil and recorded three albums. In ill health, Hunter retired in 1983 and died the following year.

The Music

Hunter grew up in the midst of Memphis's flourishing blues culture, centered on Beale Street. She sang in church choirs from an early age, and she was only a teenager when she moved to Chicago and her musical career began in earnest.

Alberta Hunter. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Chicago Blues. Hunter established her reputation singing in the bordellos and honky-tonks of Chicago. In the 1910's and 1920's, Chicago had an exciting mix of Southern blues and New Orleans jazz amalgamating in its nightclubs. As a blues singer, Hunter lacked the raw power and emotion of Bessie Smith, the Empress of the Blues, but Hunter was renowned for her smooth vocalizations, sophisticated diction, and world-weary ballads, and for the frank sensuality of her lyrics. Hunter sang with Joe "King" Oliver's band and recorded songs accompanied by such famous jazz musicians as Fletcher Henderson, Fats Waller, Eubie Blake, Sidney Bechet, and Louis Armstrong. She was the first to sing "Sweet Georgia Brown" for its composer Maceo Pinkard, and she showcased "St. Louis Blues" and "Beale Street Blues" for their composer W. C. Handy. A prolific songwriter, Hunter saw her composition "Downhearted Blues" become a classic when sung by Smith.

"My Castle's Rockin'." With her gift for physical expression and a more entertaining than powerful voice, Hunter gravitated to musical theater. In 1920 she sang a blues number in the revue Canary Cottage, and she performed in numerous shows in the following years. In 1924 she formed her own vaudeville troupe, and in 1925 she popularized, if not invented, the flapper dance known as the Black Bottom. Following in the footsteps of Baker, Hunter moved to Europe in 1927 and performed over the next two decades in shows in Paris, London, and Amsterdam. With Chicago blues in decline, her songs became more personal, upbeat, and showy, as reflected in her 1940 composition "My Castle's Rockin'," which would become her theme song. It was shortly after this, however, that Hunter returned to the United States and her career declined.

Cookin' at the Cookery. Incredibly, in 1977, at age eighty-two, Hunter emerged from a twenty-year hiatus to be the headline singer at the Cookery restaurant in Manhattan. For enthusiastic audiences, it was a glimpse of 1920's Chicago and 1930's Paris, as Hunter belted out classic blues numbers and sophisticated ballads, described by one critic as "joyous, sly, sensual as well as sad." Her voice, richer and more assured, had ripened with age. With her entertaining mannerisms and theatricality born of decades onstage, she formed an instant rapport with her audiences. Her trademark renditions of "Nobody Knows You When You're Down and Out," "You Can't Tell the Difference After Dark," and "I Got a Mind to Ramble" combined a blues style with an upbeat theatrical patter. Her blatant double entendres are humorously evident in the song "My Man Is Such a Handy Man," and her joie de vivre shines through in "I'm Having a Good Time."

Building on her newfound popularity, she recorded several award-winning albums for Columbia Records and the sound track for the 1978 Robert Altman film Remember My Name, and she appeared on numerous television talk shows. My Castle's Rockin'—a 1988 video documentary—captured her performances at the Cookery with all of their charm and verve. The musical Cookin' at the Cookery: The Music and Times of Alberta Hunter, written by Marion Caffey in 2003, is still popular.

Musical Legacy

Alberta Hunter was a pioneer of urban blues in 1920's Chicago and much celebrated at the time. Although she was an original and enthralling blues singer, her recordings lack the intensity and strength that characterize other great female blues singers of that era, such as Smith and Ma Rainey. In the succeeding decades, she was a success on the stages of New York and Europe but by and large in ephemeral musical numbers.

Perhaps her greatest legacy stems from her years at the Cookery. Live and in recordings, she transported new generations back to the early years of Chicago blues and swinging jazz. Her sassy and sophisticated vocal style, enhanced by a lifetime of stage performance, left a charming and indelible memory with her audiences.

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Harrison, Daphne Duval. Black Pearls: Blues Queens of the 1920's. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1990. Assesses Hunter in the context of the social and cultural phenomenon of black female blues pioneers.

Santelli, Robert. Big Book of Blues. New York: Penguin, 2001. Comprehensive reference work with more than six hundred biographical entries on individual blues musicians, including Hunter.

Shipton, Alyn. New History of Jazz. New York: Continuum International Publishing Group, 2007. Notes Hunter's theatrical style of diction and presentation.

Taylor, Frank, with Gerald Cook. Alberta Hunter: A Celebration in Blues. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1987. Based on extensive interviews with Hunter and her friends, this conversational biography, cowritten with her Cookery pianist, includes a discography and videography.

Ward, Geoffrey, and Ken Burns. Jazz: A History of America's Music. New York: Alfred Knopf, 2000. Based on Burns's award-winning documentary film, includes a historic 1923 photograph of Hunter from the days when she sang with Louis Armstrong.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Robeson, Paul; Smith, Bessie; Waller, Fats.

Mississippi John Hurt

American blues singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Storytelling balladry and touches of ragtime were strong elements in Hurt's music, which was deeply rooted in traditions that predated the blues.

Born: March 8, 1893; Teoc, Mississippi
Died: November 2, 1966; Grenada, Mississippi
Also known as: John Smith Hurt (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Avalon Blues, 1963; Folk Songs and Blues, 1963; Worried Blues, 1963; Last Session, 1966, 1966; Today!, 1966; The Immortal, 1967; Avalon Blues: The Complete 1928 OKEH Recordings, 1996 (individual songs recorded 1928); The Candy Man, 1980.

The Life

Born John Smith Hurt, Mississippi John Hurt spent most of his life in Carroll County, in Mississippi hill country. Geographically and culturally removed from the Mississippi Delta, it was an area where white and black stringband musicians interacted fairly freely and where the harder edges of the Delta's blues softened. Inspired by a guitar-playing schoolteacher, William H. Carson, Hurt got his first guitar at age nine, and he claimed to be self-taught. During his teens, he entertained locally at dances as a solo singer-guitarist and as a performer in stringbands, some of which were probably racially mixed. That would account for white fiddler Willie Narmour, a neighbor of Hurt in the town of Avalon and half of the popular Narmour and Smith duo, recommending him to record producer Tommy Rockwell of the Okeh label.

Hurt made his first recordings in Memphis, Tennessee, in February of 1928, and he was summoned to New York City for further recordings in December of that year. A half dozen 78-rpm discs by Hurt were issued by Okeh Records, but none sold spectacularly. The economic strains of the Great Depression slowed record sales in general, and Hurt would not record again for thirty-five years.

In 1952 Hurt's 1928 recording of "Frankie" appeared on Harry Smith's influential reissue, The Anthology of American Folk Music. This spurred interest in Hurt's music among both record collectors and aspiring folk guitarists. In 1963 one of these enthusiasts, Tom Hoskins, followed a clue Hurt had left regarding his whereabouts in one of his 1928 recordings, "Avalon Blues." Hurt was still there, herding cattle. He was persuaded to relocate to Washington, D.C., and over the next three years he enjoyed extraordinary popularity on the folk scene, making triumphant appearances at the Newport and Philadelphia folk festivals and at New York City's Carnegie Hall. Hurt would record extensively and appear on television's popular The Tonight Show and in the pages of such publications as Time before succumbing to a heart attack some twenty miles from his Mississippi birthplace.

The Music

Had the Okeh label not pinned the "Mississippi" moniker onto Hurt's name for his initial releases, there's a good chance listeners might have surmised he was from elsewhere, probably from the Southeast. Hurt's light touch on the guitar, sure pitch, clear diction, and relaxed, conversational singing style are all at odds with the stereotype of the intense Mississippi bluesman. Little of Hurt's music, however, was blues in the conventional sense. The term "songster" has been applied to African American artists such as Hurt, whose style and repertoire were broader than the blues and included elements of ballad traditions. Nevertheless, Hurt put an individualistic stamp on any tradition that touched him. Songs entirely his own, such as "Avalon Blues," are no less compelling than traditional ones, such as "Frankie," which were arranged to sound original. Hurt's evident isolation from his musical contemporaries was, if anything, a boon to his creating a unique musical world. The gentle good humor in his voice and the buoyancy of his guitar accompaniments provide a somewhat ironic frame for his lyrics, rife with sagas of murder and other dark doings.

"Frankie." Variously known as "Frankie and Albert" or "Frankie and Johnny," this tale of jealousy and murder was once one of the best-known American folk songs. Hurt's version, which is driven by his gently relentless guitar and the eloquent economy of his lyrics, is entirely sympathetic to the killer.

"Avalon Blues." Hurt wrote and recorded this song that, like a message in a bottle, washed ashore decades after its release and led to his rediscovery. Likely prompted by his feelings of homesickness, this tune, a response to the culture shock the New York City of 1928 dealt to Hurt, vividly shows that his talent as a songwriter was fully equal to his talent for reworking traditional material.

"Stack O'Lee." Hurt turned again to a traditional murder ballad, this one about a cold-blooded killer who valued his hat over a man's life. There are other recordings of the song from this era and later reworkings well into the time of rock and roll, yet Hurt's version emits a quietly assured authority.

"Candy Man Blues." Double-entendre songs were a staple in most blues singers' repertoires. Despite its title, the risqué "Candy Man Blues" is not structurally a blues, and while ragtime embellishments sparkle throughout Hurt's guitar accompaniment, his most complex, the song springs from a deeper well of tradition: through minstrelsy and all the way back to Africa. Whatever its arcane origins, the song is one Hurt delighted audiences with after his rediscovery.

"Spike Driver Blues." This is not a blues at all, but a work song of the sort that predated blues. There is only one chord in the entire song, a fact easily overlooked because of Hurt's bobbing, melodic guitar work, which aids Hurt's storytelling. Again, he has taken the traditional—in this case, the folk song "John Henry"—and made of it something individual and essentially archetypal.

Musical Legacy

When Hurt was rediscovered in 1963, he was revealed as a true folksinger, the genuine article, with a formidable résumé, thanks to his 1928 recordings. Despite being labeled a blues artist, as much for his race as for his repertoire, Hurt was far more accessible to young folk enthusiasts than other rediscovered bluesmen, on whom age and drink had often taken a serious toll. Hurt recorded and performed extensively during the brief years of his celebrity. Such disparate folk-based singer-guitarists as Dave Van Ronk and Doc Watson heard Hurt, and they adopted both his songs and his guitar style into their repertoire.

Mark Humphrey

Further Reading

Erlewine, Michael, et al., eds. All Music Guide to the Blues. San Francisco: Miller Freeman Books, 1999. This guide to the recorded blues world features a good entry on Hurt, along with listening recommendations.

Rucker, Leland, ed. Music Hound Blues: The Essential Album Guide. Detroit, Mich.: Visible Ink Press, 1998. Though albums go in and out of print, this listening guide has a worthwhile entry on Hurt by Bryan Powell.

Waterman, Dick. Between Midnight and Day: The Last Unpublished Blues Archive. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2003. As manager and friend, Waterman was close to a number of rediscovered bluesmen of the 1960's. Hearing Hurt was Waterman's personal gateway to their world, and his exquisite photographs illuminate touching recollections of Hurt and others.

See also: Beck; Van Ronk, Dave; Watson, Doc.

Chrissie Hynde

American rock singer, songwriter, and guitarist

With her gritty, intelligent songs and swaggering performance style, Hynde led her band the Pretenders to great success.

Born: September 7, 1951; Akron, Ohio
Also known as: Christine Ellen Hynde (full name)
Member of: The Pretenders

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Pretenders, 1980; Pretenders II, 1981; Learning to Crawl, 1984; Get Close, 1986; Packed!, 1990; Last of the Independents, 1994; Viva el Amor, 1999; Loose Screw, 2002; Pirate Radio, 2006; Break Up the Concrete, 2008.

The Life

Christine Ellen Hynde was born on September 7, 1951, to Bud and Delores ("Dee") Hynde. She was the second of two children. Her father worked for Ohio Bell Telephone Company, and her mother was a part-time secretary. Hynde was a restless child, with little interest in formal education. By the time she was attending high school, she had become totally disillusioned with what school had to offer.

At that time, Hynde was a huge fan of the British Invasion bands, such as the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, and the Kinks. After graduating from high school, Hynde attended Kent State University, majoring in fine arts. She dropped out of college in 1971, and she supported herself by working as a waitress. As a vegetarian, however, she was upset that she had to serve meat dishes to the customers.

Frustrated with American life, Hynde moved to London in 1973. She worked at various jobs, including for a short time as a rock critic for the music newspaper New Musical Express. Hynde became friends with several struggling musicians, including Mick Jones of the Clash and Sid Vicious of the Sex Pistols. After several attempts to form a band, Hynde finally found the right combination of musicians for her band in 1978. Her vision and patience resulted in the Pretenders.

In 1980 Hynde began a relationship with one of her rock heroes, Ray Davies of the Kinks. While their tempestuous relationship did not last, it did produce a daughter, Natalie Rae, who was born in 1983. Hynde married Jim Kerr, the lead singer and songwriter of the band Simple Minds, in 1984. Their daughter, Yasmin, was born in 1985, and they divorced in 1990.

During the 1990's, Hynde became a strong supporter of the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA). In 1997 she married the Colombian artist Lucho Brieva, and they separated in 2002. In 2007 Hynde opened a vegetarian restaurant in her hometown of Akron, Ohio.

The Music

As the rhythm guitarist, lead singer, and primary songwriter of the Pretenders, Hynde established herself as a distinctive female persona in rock music. Taking inspiration from her heroes of 1960's rock music and the punk scene of the 1970's, Hynde carved out a significant position for the Pretenders in the new wave movement.

Early Success. In 1978 Hynde formed the Pretenders in London. In addition to Hynde as vocalist and rhythm guitarist, the original members were Pete Farndon on bass, James Honeyman-Scott on lead guitar, and Martin Chambers on drums. The Pretenders' first single was a cover version of the Kinks' "Stop Your Sobbing." The single was a solid hit in England, and it received some airplay in the United States. In January, 1980, the Pretenders' self-titled album was released to critical acclaim, an auspicious beginning for the band. The album was a blend of punk aggression, a new wave pop sensibility, and a Rolling Stones' earthiness. With such provocative original songs as "Brass in Pocket," "Precious," "Up the Neck," "Tattooed Love Boys," "Kid," and "Mystery Achievement," Hynde established herself as a tough yet vulnerable singer-songwriter. With its bold sexual swagger, the song "Brass in Pocket" became a number-one hit in England. The album also became number one in England, and it rose to number nine on the American music charts.

Learning to Crawl. Through a combination of strong melodies and literate, blistering lyrics, the Pretenders established themselves as a band with almost unlimited potential. While their first album was nominated for three Grammy Awards, Pretenders II was not as universally praised. Nevertheless, it included several poignant and striking topical songs, including "The Adultress," "Message of Love," "I Go to Sleep," and "Talk of the Town." Some music critics characterized the second album as a misstep, unfocused and derivative. While a misstep could be corrected, the problems within the band would prove to be a greater challenge. In 1982 Hynde asked Farndon to leave the group because of his serious drug problem. Tragically, within days of Farndon being asked to leave, Honeyman-Scott died of heart failure, from an overdose of cocaine, on June 16, 1982. With the help of new musicians, Hynde recorded a touching tribute to her friend and bandmate Honeyman-Scott in the song "Back on the Chain Gang." By March of 1983, "Back on the Chain Gang" had reached number five on the American singles charts. In another shocking incident, on April 14, 1983, Farndon was found dead from a heroin overdose.

Hynde had no intention of allowing the Pretenders to collapse, so she recruited new members for the band and went into the recording studio to work on the next album. Against all the odds, the refurbished Pretenders produced a remarkable third album in 1984 with Learning to Crawl. In addition to "Back on the Chain Gang," the album includes such powerful Hynde songs as "Middle of the Road," "Thumbelina," "My City Was Gone," and "2000 Miles."

The Pretenders, in various forms, have continued to record and perform, the only constant being Hynde. In 1994 the single "I'll Stand by You" became a successful pop hit for the band. In addition to her work with the Pretenders, Hynde has worked on various outside projects. A Pretenders box set, Pirate Radio, was released in 2006. It included eighty-one tracks on four compact discs and a DVD with nineteen videos of performances.

Musical Legacy

In 2005 the Pretenders were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. As the driving force of one of the most important bands of their era, Hynde stands as an inspiration to all women rock musicians, and she influenced Courtney Love, Liz Phair, and P J Harvey. In several surveys, Hynde is listed as one of the most important rock musicians. In 2002 she (as a member of the Pretenders) was ranked by Rolling Stone as number twelve on the list of fifty essential "women in rock" for the group's debut album.

Jeffry Jensen

Further Reading

Gaar, Gillian G. She's a Rebel: The History of Women in Rock and Roll. 2d ed. New York: Seal Press, 1992. A penetrating and positive exploration of women in rock music, including an incisive portrait of Hynde's place in the pantheon of women rockers.

Juno, Andrea. Angry Women of Rock. New York: Juno Books, 1996. This resource includes a thoughtful interview with Hynde.

Rees, Dafydd, and Luke Crampton. Encyclopedia of Rock Stars. New York: DK, 1996. This reference includes an excellent chronology of the Pretenders.

Salewicz, Chris. Pretenders. London: Proteus, 1982. A solid introduction to the band's early years.

See also: Blackwell, Otis; Davies, Ray; Harry, Deborah; Jett, Joan; Madonna; Mitchell, Joni; Slick, Grace.

Ice Cube

American rapper

A seminal figure in West Coast gangsta rap, Ice Cube is a founding member of the influential group N. W. A. He is noted for the frank and controversial opinions found in his songs.

Born: June 15, 1969; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: O'Shea Jackson (birth name)
Member of: Westside Connection; N. W. A.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted, 1990 (with Da Lench Mob); Death Certificate, 1991; The Predator, 1992; Lethal Injection, 1993; War and Peace, Vol. 1 (the War Disc), 1998; War and Peace, Vol. 2 (the Peace Disc), 2000; Laugh Now, Cry Later, 2006.

ALBUMS (with N. W. A.): N. W. A. and the Posse, 1987; Straight Outta Compton, 1989; Niggaz4life, 1991.

ALBUMS (with Westside Connection): Bow Down, 1996; Terrorist Threats, 2003.

The Life

Ice Cube was born O'Shea Jackson in South Central Los Angeles to Doris and Andrew Jackson. In 1987 Jackson started a hip-hop group called the C. I. A. He also contributed the song "Boyz-n-the-Hood" to the debut album for the newly formed N. W. A. (Niggaz with Attitude), which included himself, Easy-E, and Dr. Dre. Their second album, Straight Outta Compton, was the group's landmark recording and the last one Ice Cube would record with the group because of disagreements over financial matters.

Ice Cube released his first solo album, AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted, in 1990 with his new group Da Lench Mob. The album was a hit despite (or because of) the controversy surrounding the expressions of anti-white racism and misogyny in the lyrics. These themes were extended to include what was perceived as anti-Semitic and anti-immigrant lyrics on his 1991 follow-up, Death Certificate. It was also around this time that Ice Cube converted to Islam and became loosely associated with the Nation of Islam.

His most successful album, The Predator, was released in 1992, and in 1994 he formed the group Westside Connection with rappers Mack 10 and WC. The primary purpose of the group's debut album, Bow Down, was to engage in the growing bicoastal rap feud. Following the completion of this album, Ice Cube took a hiatus from recording to focus on other projects.

Ice Cube launched his acting career in the John Singleton-directed film Boyz N the Hood (1991). He later went on to appear in films such as Anaconda (1997), Three Kings (1999), and Barbershop (2002). He also wrote and starred in the trilogy Friday (1995), Next Friday (1997), and Friday After Next (2002) along with Chris Tucker. In 2005 he collaborated on the television documentary series Black, White. In 2005 he appeared in the family film Are We There Yet?, then in its sequel, Are We Done Yet?, in 2007.

The Music

Ice Cube's music is closely connected with African American popular music from the 1960's and 1970's. Many of the music tracks for his songs sample the songs of James Brown, George Clinton and Parliament, Sly and the Family Stone, Kool and the Gang, and other soul and funk superstars.

Ice Cube's early lyrics contain some of the themes that became staples of gangsta rap, including drug use, violence, sex, cars, and neighborhood pride. In his early career, he was criticized for promoting anti-white, anti-woman, anti-Semitic, and anti-immigrant sentiments in his songs. Though his lyrics have changed little, the controversy around them has waned over the years as similar themes have become an accepted part of the gangsta image.

"Boyz-n-the-Hood." Although the song was performed by Easy-E on N. W. A.'s debut album, N. W. A. and the Posse, "Boyz-n-the-Hood" was written by Ice Cube. His lyrics, which sound immature and dated in comparison with his songs from just a year later, reference several gangsta rap themes (drug deals, sex, prison, violence against women). Sounding like a demo recording, the music track is primarily electronic, with synthesized melody and bass, drum machines, scratching, and vocal interjections from other group members. Easy-E's rapping sounds awkward and measured rather than flowing. It also contains a sample from Jean Knight's "Mr. Big Stuff."

"AmeriKKKa's Most Wanted." The title track of Ice Cube's debut album was its only hit, rising to number one on the Billboard hot rap singles chart. The title has several meanings: Ice Cube's music being wanted by the whole nation, the criminal connotations, and the KKK (Ku Klux Klan, a secret organization in the South that oppressed and lynched blacks). The lyrics involve a gangsta rap mafioso bragging about crime and how tough Ice Cube is. One of the messages of the song is that Americans do not care about black-on-black crime, that is, violence within the black community. However, if a black commits a crime against a white, the perpetrator becomes America's most wanted. The backing track is compiled from four samples: "Humpin'" by the Bar-Kays, "There It Is" by James Brown, "Let the Music Take Your Mind" by Kool and the Gang, and "Advice" by Sly and the Family Stone. There are also samples inserted from the Fox television series America's Most Wanted.

"Bop Gun (One Nation)." The fourth single from the Lethal Injection album, "Bop Gun (One Nation)," pays homage to Clinton, who created the bop gun for the 1977 song of the same name to be shot at "funkless people" to fill them with the funk, a source of energy for all life. Rapped over samples of the Parliament funkadelic song "One Nation Under a Groove," the lyrics contain multiple references to Clinton's song and are a gangsta challenge to those who would try to stop people from having a good time. "Bop Gun (One Nation)" is among several Ice Cube songs that draw on the influence of Clinton through direct reference and through sampling.

"It Was a Good Day." One of Ice Cube's best-charting singles is "It Was a Good Day" from The Predator. It rose to number one on the Billboard hot rap chart, number seven on the rhythm-and-blues chart, and number fifteen on the Hot 100. The song is about a good day in South Central Los Angeles, which includes basketball, sex, drugs, alcohol, and driving around. The backing track consists of multiple samples, including "Footsteps in the Dark" by the Isley Brothers.

Musical Legacy

Ice Cube is one of the key figures in West Coast gangsta rap. From his early work with N. W. A. to his solo albums, his music helped define the genre and has remained a steady force within it. Across his career, Ice Cube has remained largely true to his roots and influences, which has enabled him to maintain his following. While controversy over his early songs has dogged his career, it also has served to keep him and his music in the public consciousness. Along with being a significant contributor to N. W. A., Ice Cube has been instrumental in developing the careers of others, particularly his colleagues from Westside Connection and his cousin Kam.

Eric S. Strother

Further Reading

George, Nelson. Hip-Hop America. New York: Penguin, 2005. This book discusses the role of hip-hop in American society. The basic premise is that although hip-hop began as an expression of African American youth, it has become a new form of blaxploitation, which consists of stereotyping.

Light, Alan. The Vibe History of Hip-Hop. Medford, N.J.: Plexus, 1999. A collection of essays that trace the development of the genre, although many are commentaries and not historically based.

McIver, Joel. Ice Cube: Attitude. London: Sanctuary, 2002. In this biography of Ice Cube, some details seem exaggerated to emphasize his gangsta status.

Ogbar, Jeffrey O. G. Hip-Hop Revolution: The Culture and Politics of Rap. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas, 2007. A cultural history of hip-hop in which the author explores negative perceptions and stereotypes.

Quinn, Eithne. Nuthin' but a "G" Thang: The Culture and Commerce of Gangsta Rap. New York: Columbia University Press, 2004. This interdisciplinary study explores the development of gangsta rap and its relation to urban culture.

See also: Brown, James; Dr. Dre; Hammer, M. C.; Ice-T; Stone, Sly.

Ice-T

American rapper

A seminal figure in West Coast gangsta rap, Ice-T was a pioneer in fusing rap with hardcore punk and heavy metal.

Born: February 16, 1958; Newark, New Jersey
Also known as: Tracy Lauren Marrow (birth name)
Member of: Body Count

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Rhyme Pays, 1987; Power, 1988; The Iceberg/Freedom of Speech . . . Just Watch What You Say, 1989; O. G. Original Gangster, 1991; Home Invasion, 1993; VI: Return of the Real, 1996; Below Utopia: The Lost Score, 1998; 7th Deadly Sin, 1999; Gang Culture, 2004; Ice T Presents Westside, 2004; Gangsta Rap, 2006.

ALBUMS (with Body Count): Body Count, 1992; Born Dead, 1994; Violent Demise: Last Days, 1997; Murder 4 Hire, 2006.

The Life

Ice-T was born Tracy Lauren Marrow in New Jersey, and as a teenager after the deaths of his parents, he moved to the Crenshaw district of South Central Los Angeles. He graduated from Crenshaw High School, where he became obsessed with rap, and he joined the U.S. Army in 1976. After leaving the Army in 1982, he began recording under his street name, Ice-T. He signed with Sire Records and released his first album, Rhyme Pays, in 1987. He formed his own label, Rhyme $yndicate Records, in 1989, and in 1991 he recorded O. G.: Original Gangster.

In addition to his raps, O. G.: Original Gangster introduced Ice-T's heavy metal band Body Count. Body Count was never as successful as Ice-T the solo artist, but it did provide another musical direction. The original members recorded three albums between 1992 and 1997. A fourth album, Murder 4 Hire, was released in 2006 with a new lineup.

While Ice-T also released three solo albums through the 1990's, much of the decade was dedicated to establishing himself as an actor. In addition to film appearances in New Jack City (1991), Johnny Mnemonic (1995), and Tank Girl (1995), Ice-T had a recurring role as a drug dealer in the television series New York Undercover. In 2000 Ice-T was added to the cast of Law and Order: Special Victims Unit as Detective Fin Tutuola. He has also voiced characters in several video games.

The Music

Ice-T's music was instrumental in the formation of the genre known as gangsta rap. While the songs on his debut album, Rhyme Pays, are largely party-oriented, later releases contain more political and social content. Ice-T's views are in many ways radically different from his peers'. For instance, he speaks out against anti-white and anti-immigrant racism and homophobia, which are prevalent in the songs of Ice Cube and other West Coast rappers. He also stands out from these performers by depicting ghetto life as something to escape rather than embrace. More controversial views include his belief that the Central Intelligence Agency and local police forces are involved in drug trafficking and that corporate America profits excessively from building prisons.

Musically, Ice-T mixes influences from hip-hop, soul, funk, rock, punk, and heavy metal in his songs. He believes that all these styles derive from African Americans and that one should limit oneself to only one style of music.

"Cop Killer." The song "Cop Killer" was written in 1990 as a protest song against police brutality, and it was performed live several times before being recorded for Body Count's self-titled release. The song was immediately condemned by law enforcement organizations and politicians as encouraging violence against police officers. After the album was released, Ice-T requested that it be pulled from the shelves and rereleased without "Cop Killer" because he believed the controversy surrounding the song was overshadowing the band and the rest of its music.

The spoken introduction dedicates the song to the Los Angeles Police Department on behalf of everyone who has been a target of profiling and brutality, and the lyrics are sung from the perspective of a person who is fed up with corruption and brutality among police officers and decides to get even. The music is fairly typical of the hardcore punk metal of the time, in which the bass and guitar melodies essentially double each other and a guitar solo appears near the end of the song. The snare drum is used (along with sound effects) to emulate gunshots leading into the refrain.

"6 'n the Mornin'." One of the defining songs of early gangsta rap, "6 'n the Mornin'" was released as a B-side in 1986 and rereleased a year later on Rhyme Pays. In first person, the lyrics recount a story filled with sex, crime, violence, and boasting, all of which would become staple images of gangsta rap. The accompaniment, just electronic drumbeats and synthesizer punches, is sparse. The song "Midnight" from O. G.: Original Gangster is interpreted by some to be a prequel to "6 'n the Mornin'" because it tells a similar tale that ends at six in the morning with police officers at the door, which is where this song begins.

"Escape from the Killing Fields." "Escape from the Killing Fields," from O. G.: Original Gangster, is Ice-T's advice to African Americans to reject the notion that they should embrace poverty and ghetto life, which he characterizes as brainwashing perpetrated by the American government to keep African Americans (and other racial and ethnic minority groups) under control. He even compares their treatment in modern America to the treatment of the American Indians in early America. The accompaniment is based on samples of James Brown's "Get Up Offa That Thing" and Marva Whitney's "What Do I Have to Do to Prove My Love to You." The upbeat tempo emphasizes the urgency of the message.

Ice-T. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Although Ice-T is one of the defining figures in the development of gangsta rap, his legacy goes beyond the lyrical gratuitous sex and violence to include an intellectual element. While songs such as "Mic Contract," "6 'n the Mornin'," and "The Tower" show that Ice-T can work within the standard rap themes, songs such as "Escape from the Killing Fields" and the final commentary from O. G.: Original Gangster, "You Should Have Killed Me Last Year," which touches on the Gulf War, prison conditions, and the plight of young African Americans, show that he is a thinking revolutionary. Ice-T is also credited with bridging the gap between rock and rap. Through his work with Body Count, merging hip-hop and hardcore genres, he indirectly influenced rap-core and nu-metal bands such as Limp Bizkit and Korn.

Eric S. Strother

Further Reading

George, Nelson. Hip-Hop America. New York: Penguin, 2005. This book covers music from the post-soul of the 1980's to rap and its latest innovators.

Light, Alan. The Vibe History of Hip-Hop. Medford, N.J.: Plexus, 1999. This chronicle of hip-hop has references to the major players and regional rivalries that contributed to the genre's culture.

Marrow, Tracy, and Heidi Siegmund. The Ice Opinion: Who Gives a Fuck? New York: St. Martin's Press, 1994. This collection of essays offers Ice-T's philosophies on a number of subjects.

Ogbar, Jeffrey O. G. Hip-Hop Revolution: The Culture and Politics of Rap. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas, 2007. This cultural history refutes many popular perceptions of hip-hop culture.

See also: Brown, James; D. M. C.; Dr. Dre; Ice Cube; Jones, Quincy; Simmons, Joseph "Run"; Stone, Sly.

Julio Iglesias

Spanish singer and songwriter

An international superstar and symbol of romance, Iglesias sings in a passionate and soothing voice, in many languages, and his seductive stage presence draws overcapacity crowds to his concerts.

Born: September 23, 1943; Madrid, Spain
Also known as: Julio José Iglesias de la Cueva (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Gwendolyne, 1970; Julio Iglesias, 1972; Un Canto à Galicia, 1973; À flor de piel, 1974; À México, 1974; El amor, 1975; À mis 33 años, 1977; Yo canto, 1977; Sono un pirata, sono un signore, 1978; Soy, 1978; À vous les femmes, 1979; Aimer la vie . . ., 1979; America, 1979; Emociones, 1979; Innamorarsi alla mia eta, 1979; Amanti, 1980; Hey!, 1980; Sentimental, 1980; Fidèl, 1981; From a Child to a Woman, 1981; Amor, Amor, Amor, 1983; Et l'amour créa la femme, 1982; Momenti, 1982; Moments, 1982; Julio, 1983; Pelo amor de uma mulher, 1983; 1100 Bel Air Place, 1984 (with others); Libra, 1985; Tutto l'amore che ti manca, 1987; Un hombre solo, 1987; Non Stop, 1988; Latinamente, 1989; Raices, 1989; In Italian, 1990; Starry Night, 1990; Calor, 1992; Ein Weinachtsabend mit Julio Iglesias, 1992; Schenk mir deine Liebe, 1992; Crazy, 1994; La carretera, 1995; Tango, 1996; Noche de cuatro lunas, 2000; Ao meu Brasil, 2001; Una donna puo cambiar la vita, 2001; Divorcio, 2003; En français, 2004; La vida sigue igual, 2004; L'Homme que je suis, 2005; Romantic Classics, 2006; En directo desde el Olympia, 2007; Hautnah: Die Geschichten meiner Stars, 2007; Je n'ai pas changé, 2007; Quelque chose de France, 2007.

SINGLES: "To All the Girls I've Loved Before," 1984 (with Willie Nelson); "My Love," 1988 (with Stevie Wonder).

The Life

Julio José Iglesias de la Cueva (HOO-lee-oh ih-GLAY-see-uhs) was born to Julio Iglesias Puga, a prominent physician, and Maria del Rosario de la Cueva y Perign. Although he studied law at Complutense University of Madrid, he enjoyed sports. A goalkeeper for the junior Real Madrid soccer team, Iglesias hoped to become a professional soccer player someday.

However, Iglesias's soccer ambitions ended on September 22, 1963, when he and three friends were involved in a near-fatal auto accident, which left him paralyzed with little hope of ever walking again. However, with intense physical therapy and with the support of his family, Iglesias fought to overcome the severe effects of his accident. During his recuperation, his nurse, Eladio Magdaleno, gave him a guitar, which he learned to play, and he also began singing and writing poems and songs.

Miraculously, in less than two years, Iglesias recovered completely, and he could walk again. He went to England to study English at Ramsgate and then at Bell's Language School in Cambridge. After returning to Spain, he performed his song "La vida sigue igual" (life goes on) at the famous Benidorm Music Festival in Madrid on July 17, 1968. He won first prize, and he signed a contract with Columbia Discos. In 1969 Iglesias recorded his first album at the Decca Studios in London, and he made his first film, La vida sigue igual, a biographical drama. In 1970, at the Eurovision Festival, Iglesias sang one of his most famous songs, "Gwendolyne," which was inspired by a girlfriend in Cambridge. Also that year he set a record with his tour of Spain: forty-one concerts in forty-one different cities in thirty days. In 1971 he sold his first million albums.

On January 20, 1971, Iglesias married Isabel Preysler Arrastia, and they had three children: "Chabeli" María Isabel, born in 1971; Julio José, born in 1973; and Enrique Miguel, born in 1975. The couple divorced in 1979.

During the 1970's and 1980's Iglesias performed at sold-out concerts worldwide, and he became an international superstar, with number-one hits in various countries. By 1973 he had sold ten million albums, and in 1980 his album sales surpassed seventy-five million worldwide.

In 1984 he released his first album in English, 1100 Bel Air Place. In 1987 Iglesias won a Grammy Award for Un hombre solo, and he was named goodwill ambassador to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in 1989.

In 1990 Iglesias met Dutch model Miranda Rijnsburger, and they later had five children: Miguel Alejandro, born in 1997; Rodrigo, born in 1999; twin daughters Victoria and Cristina, born in 2001; and Guillermo, born in 2007.

By the 1990's Iglesias had established himself as one of the world's top ten best-selling recording artists in any genre. On December 21, 2007, Iglesias received France's Legion of Honor award.

The Music

Iglesias began his career singing in Spanish in 1968; by 1983 he had recorded in many foreign languages: Spanish, German, Japanese, English, Italian, Portuguese, French, and English. Although he started singing some songs in English on Julio and on Amor, Amor, Amor, Iglesias's successful crossover English album was 1100 Bel Air Place in 1984. He perfected a unique soulful style of singing popular music that gained fans, especially women, throughout the world. With his brilliant musicianship and low-key, trilling voice, he became known as the singer of romance. He filled concert halls worldwide, he appeared on television and before royalty, and he earned several gold and platinum records.

"To All the Girls I've Loved Before." Cowritten by Hal David and Albert Hammond, "To All the Girls I've Loved Before" was Iglesias's breakthrough song in the English-language market, and particularly in the U.S. market. His Spanish version of Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine" had reached number one in England, so Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) International, with whom Iglesias had signed a contract, planned to release English versions. Popular American country singer Willie Nelson heard the song, and he invited Iglesias to sing with him at the Country Music Festival in Nashville.

The incongruous duo—a Latin idol in suit and bow tie singing with an American icon in bandanna and T-shirt—turned out to be a immediate hit. The remarkable combination of their contrasting vocal timbres, reflecting their distinct musical personalities and traditions, underscored the universal and romantic theme of the song. They dedicated the song to all the women who had shared their lives, had helped them grow, and had given them so much pleasure.

Released as a single, "To All the Girls I've Loved Before" soon reached number one on the country-music charts, number five on the Billboard Hot 100, and number seventeen on the U.K. singles chart. The song won the Country Music Association Award for Single of the Year in 1984, and it became Iglesias's signature English-language piece.

1100 Bel Air Place. In 1984 Iglesias released 1100 Bel Air Place, his first English-language album, which was designed to be his breakthrough in the U.S. market. It had been planned for years, and it took about sixteen months to produce. Iglesias was meticulous in every detail during the creation of this record. Named for the Los Angeles address where he stayed during the production, 1100 Bel Air Place showcased Iglesias's multigenre emphasis and his smooth, emotional vocals.

The album proved that Iglesias could sing with American artists and produce a commercial sound while staying true to his own style. The sophisticated instrumentation and sound were also engineered within the conventions of mid-1980's soft rock, which helped make it a commercial success. The album included "To All the Girls I've Loved Before," which had already sold more than a million copies, a huge success for both Iglesias and Nelson. Also on the album were "All of You," a duet with superstar Diana Ross, and "The Air that I Breathe," sung with the Beach Boys. Legendary saxophonist Stan Getz played on the track with "When I Fall in Love." Within a week of release, 1100 Bel Air Place sold more than a million copies in the United States, and it established Iglesias as a successful crossover artist, combining Latin and U.S. music.

Julio Iglesias. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Crazy. In 1994 Iglesias released another English-language album, Crazy. Like 1100 Bel Air Place, the recording featured beautiful ballads and celebrated guest artists. "Let It Be Me" included Art Garfunkel, "Fragile" featured Sting, and the "Song of Joy" was recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra and the Ambrosian Singers. "When You Tell Me That You Love Me" was a duet with Dolly Parton. The album quickly sold fifteen million copies in the United States, and it went platinum in England and other countries.

Romantic Classics. In September, 2006, Iglesias released another English-language album. For Romantic Classics, he selected eleven popular love songs from the 1960's, 1970's, and 1980's that he believed, with their memorable lyrics and melodies, would become standards or classics. In his sensual voice with soft dynamic range and rapid vibrato, Iglesias reinterpreted songs from pop, rock, and country music that were originally recorded by other artists. He included a range of songs to cover various stages of a romance: infatuation, desire, betrayal, and heartbreak. Tracks include "Everybody's Talking," first recorded by Harry Nilsson; the Bee Gees' song "How Can You Mend a Broken Heart?"; "I Want to Know What Love Is" by the British American rock band Foreigner; "It's Impossible," originally recorded by Perry Como; and Nelson's "Always on My Mind." Saxophonist Dave Koz was the guest artist on George Michael's "Careless Whisper" track, and Grammy Award-winner Chris Botti played trumpet on Herb Alpert's "This Guy's in Love With You." Also remarkable was that the multilingual Iglesias recorded for the first time in Mandarin Chinese, Bahasa Indonesian, and Filipino on an additional track twelve ("Crazy") for the compact-disc editions for distribution in China, Indonesia, and the Philippines.

Musical Legacy

In 1983 the Guinness World Book of Records awarded Iglesias its first Diamond Record Award, for selling more records in more languages than any other musician in history. During the 1970's and 1980's Iglesias reinterpreted traditional romantic ballads and the Latin bolero, and he revitalized the Latin recording industry. By 2007, he had sold more than 250 million records in fourteen languages, released seventy-seven albums, performed in more than five thousand concerts, and earned more than 2,500 gold and platinum records.

In crossing musical and language barriers, Iglesias became a legendary international superstar. He has used this universal voice and his popularity to help raise funds for various charities and humanitarian causes. Named a UNICEF Special Representative for the Performing Arts in 1989, Iglesias has continued through the years to support UNICEF with benefit concerts and personal appearances. In 2001, on behalf of the world's underprivileged children, he gave the first benefit for UNICEF in the former Soviet Union. Iglesias has also performed at fund-raisers for victims of earthquakes, floods, and other disasters. In the United States, he has donated his time to many different causes, including Farm Aid, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, the American Foundation for AIDS Research, and the Grammy Foundation's Grammy in the Schools program.

Beyond his considerable artistic influence on the musical artists with whom he has recorded and performed, and on the popular music industry in general, Iglesias has inspired a new generation of musicians, including his own sons Enrique and Julio, Jr., who have become musical superstars in their own right.

Alice Myers

Further Reading

Daly, Marsha. Julio Iglesias. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1986. One of the few biographies in English, this detailed account describes the disappointments and achievements of Iglesias's life. Illustrated with many photographs. Index.

Dews, Charles, and David Everett. "Julio Iglesias, the Forgotten Soccer Star: 2,650 Gold and Platinum Records and Seventy-seven Albums with 260 Million Copies Sold." Latino Leaders: The National Magazine of the Successful American Latino (December, 2003): 40. Biographical and career information on Iglesias.

Garcia, Elizabeth. Julio. New York: Ballantine Books, 1985. A candid early biography that chronicles Iglesias's personal life and his rise to international stardom. Illustrated. Discography of albums released in English, Spanish, French, Italian, German, and Portuguese.

Gett, Steve. Julio Iglesias: The New Valentino. Port Chester, N.Y.: Cherry Lane Books, 1985. A short biography describes the rise of Iglesias's career and his romantic style of music. Illustrated.

Lockyer, Daphne. Julio: The Unsung Story. Secaucus, N.J.: Carol, 1997. A comprehensive biography based on extensive archival research and interviews with Iglesias's father, ex-wife Preysler, manager Alfredo Fraile, childhood friends, and others. Illustrated. Index.

McAleer, Dave. Hit Singles: Top 20 Charts from 1954 to the Present Day. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2004. Rock and pop charts of the United States and England, with artists' information, record labels, and monthly chart entry dates from 1954 through 2003. Includes information on Iglesias's numerous hit songs. Illustrated. Index.

Morales, Ed. The Latin Beat: The Rhythms and Roots of Latin Music, from Bossa Nova to Salsa and Beyond. Cambridge, Mass.: Da Capo Press, 2003. Includes analyses of Iglesias's significance to the Latin recording industry and of his use of and reinterpretation of traditional Spanish and Latin American styles of music, such as the bolero and flamenco. Bibliography and index.

Whitburn, Joel, ed. The Billboard Book of Top 40 Country Hits. New York: Watson-Guptill Billboard Books, 2006. The official guide and complete history of Top 40 country hits since 1942. Includes information on Iglesias and Nelson's extraordinarily successful song, "To All the Girls I've Loved Before." Illustrated.

See also: Alpert, Herb; David, Hal; Garfunkel, Art; Getz, Stan; Nelson, Willie; Parton, Dolly; Piaf, Édith; Ross, Diana; Sting.

Burl Ives

American folksinger

A distinguished folksinger called America's favorite balladeer, Ives worked to keep historical folk music a permanent part of American culture, bringing folk music to the pop charts.

Born: June 14, 1909; Hunt, Illinois
Died: April 14, 1995; Anacortes, Washington
Also known as: Buele Icle Ivanhow "Burl" Ives (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Burl Ives, 1949; More Folksongs by Burl Ives, 1949; Ballads and Folk Songs, Vol. 1, 1950; Ballads and Folk Songs, Vol. 2, 1950; Ballads, Folk, and Country Songs, 1950; The Lonesome Train: A Musical Legend About Abraham Lincoln, 1950; Christmas Day in the Morning, 1952; Folk Songs Dramatic and Dangerous, 1953; Women: Folk Songs About the Fair, 1954; Burl Ives Sings for Fun, 1956; Down to the Sea in Ships, 1956; In the Quiet of Night, 1956; Men, 1956; Women, 1956; Christmas Eve with Burl Ives, 1957; Australian Folk Songs, 1958; Captain Burl Ives' Ark, 1958; Songs of Ireland, 1958; Ballads with Guitar, 1959; The Wayfaring Stranger, 1959; It's Just My Funny Way of Laughin', 1962; The Versatile Burl Ives, 1962; Scouting Along with Burl Ives, 1963; Chim Chim Cheree and Other Children's Choices, 1964; Have a Holly Jolly Christmas, 1964; Sings the Great Country Hits, 1968; Songbook, 1973; Santa Claus Is Coming to Town, 1987; Burl Ives Sings, 1995; How Great Thou Art, 2001; Songs I Sang in Sunday School, 2001.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Wayfaring Stranger, 1948.

The Life

Buele Icle Ivanhow "Burl" Ives (ivz) was one of seven children born to Levi and Cordelia White Ives. His musical talent was noticed by his uncle while Ives was a young boy. After playing football in high school, he attended Eastern Illinois State Teachers College from 1927 to 1930, where he studied history, with the goal of becoming a teacher. Convinced that his music would provide a better direction for his life, he left college and traveled the country, singing his favorite songs and collecting stories and other songs for his performances.

In 1937 Ives moved to New York City to receive formal voice instruction and to break into show business. From 1940 to 1942 he hosted his own radio show, The Wayfaring Stranger, and popularized folksinging. In 1946 he made his first film appearance, as a singing cowboy, in Smoky. Ives was identified as an entertainer with supposed Communist Party ties in 1950, but he was later removed from the list. His most notable Broadway performance was as Big Daddy in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1955), which ran from 1955 to 1956. He also played the same role in the motion-picture version in 1958. Ives won an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor for his performance in The Big Country in 1958.

In 1962 he recorded three country hits, "A Little Bitty Tear," "Call Me Mr. In-Between," and "Funny Way of Laughin'." For the last song, he won a Grammy Award for Best Country-Western Recording. All three songs reached the Top 10 on the pop charts.

Ives and his first wife, Helen Peck Ehrlich, had one child, and they divorced in 1971. He married Dorothy Koster Paul later that same year. They had three children. He retired in 1989 and died of mouth cancer in 1995.

The Music

Ives promoted the traditional songs sung on the front porch or in the living room by ordinary people for their own pleasure. He brought authentic folk music into the mainstream of popular music, keeping that part of American heritage alive. His heartfelt music was a celebration of the American people and their way of life. His easy, casual style and his smooth-flowing tunes evoked warm memories. His finely honed, deep folk voice delivered a soothing, moving sound. For most of his songs, Ives was content to accompany himself with a guitar, not relying on other musical support. His songs appealed to children and adults of all ages.

The Wayfaring Stranger. This album, recorded in 1959, set the standard for folk-music albums. The classic folk songs are mostly performed by Ives and his acoustic guitar. The songs are short, simple, and arranged in folk tradition. Using his deep, folksy voice, Ives allows listeners to savor the music, as if he were performing just for them.

Songs from the Big Rock Candy Mountain. This collection, released in 2007, contains more than thirty of Ives's greatest folk songs that span his career from the late 1930's to the late 1970's. The songs are delivered by Ives with his customary comfortable, easy approach, and his joyful voice takes the rough edges off many ragged folk melodies. Songs such as "Big Rock Candy Mountain," "Blue Tail Fly" (with the Andrews Sisters), "Call Me Mr. In-Between," and "Lavender Blue" generate fond memories for listeners.

Burl Ives's Greatest Hits. In this compilation most of the songs are pop versions of the ones that made Ives an American legend. Some of his great renditions include "A Little Bitty Tear," "Funny Way of Laughin'," "True Love Goes On and On," "Pearly Shells," and "On Top of Old Smoky" performed with the Percy Faith Orchestra. His pleasing tunes are meant to be enjoyed by people of all ages.

Very Best of Burl Ives Christmas. This 1999 album contains fifteen Christmas standards, ranging from Ives's trademark Christmas song "A Holly Jolly Christmas" to "Silver Bells" and "What Child Is This?" His deep, warm voice and Santa Claus countenance are perfectly suited to the merriment of the season. In some of the carols, Ives is accompanied by backup vocalists and instruments, including strings, harp, bass, and flute, in unison with Ives's acoustic guitar. The way he playfully delivers the songs, in his sweet voice, cements his place in the genre of Christmas music.

Musical Legacy

Ives recorded more than seventy albums and performed on radio throughout the 1940's and 1950's. He was lauded for telling stories, in a grandfatherly croon, through American folk songs. His recordings and anthologies of folk songs kept folk music vital in the American tradition. His Christmas classic "A Holly Jolly Christmas" was a radio staple during the Christmas season. He was the voice of Sam the Snowman on the television special Rudolph, the Red-Nosed Reindeer (1964). A long-running holiday special, it featured some of Ives's most popular Christmas tunes.

Alvin K. Benson

Further Reading

Ives, Burl. The Burl Ives Sing-Along Song Book: A Treasury of American Folk Songs and Ballads. New York: Franklin Watts, 1963. Ives discusses America's musical heritage, presenting the background and lyrics to important folk songs and ballads.

Ives, Burl. Wayfaring Stranger. Whitefish, Mont.: Kessinger, 2007. Ives recounts his travels across America in pursuit of success as a singer, and he discusses some of the folk songs and stories that he collected along the way.

Parish, James Robert. Hollywood Songsters: Singers Who Act and Actors Who Sing. London: Routledge, 2003. Contains a biographical sketch of Ives that recounts his success as a singer, actor, and author.

See also: Baez, Joan; Belafonte, Harry; Denver, John; Guthrie, Woody; Leadbelly; Lomax, Alan; Paxton, Tom.

Charles Ives

American classical composer

An original voice in American classical music, Ives composed complex and innovative works that earned him an international reputation.

Born: October 20, 1874; Danbury, Connecticut
Died: May 19, 1954; New York, New York
Also known as: Charles Edward Ives (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: From the Steeples and the Mountains, 1901 (for one or two trumpets, trombone, bells, and two pianos); String Quartet No. 1, composed 1909, first performed 1943 (From the Salvation Army); String Quartet No. 2, composed 1915, first performed 1954; Sonata No. 4 for Violin and Piano, composed 1916, first performed 1940 (Children's Day at the Camp Meet); Sonata No. 1 for Violin and Piano, composed 1917, first performed 1953; Sonata No. 2 for Violin and Piano, composed 1917, first performed 1924; Sonata No. 3 for Violin and Piano, 1917.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Symphony No. 1 in D Minor, composed 1901, first performed 1953; Central Park in the Dark, 1907; The Unanswered Question, composed 1908, first performed 1946 (for trumpet, winds, and string orchestra); Symphony No. 2, composed 1909, first performed 1951; Symphony No. 3, composed 1911, first performed 1946 (The Camp Meeting); Robert Browning Overture, 1912; Three Places in New England, 1914; Symphony No. 4, composed 1918, first performed 1965; New England Holidays, composed 1919, first performed 1954; Prelude No. 1, 1923; Prelude No. 2, 1927; Universe Symphony, composed 1928, first performed 1993.

ORGAN WORK: Variations on "America," 1891.

PIANO WORKS: Piano Sonata No. 1, 1916; Piano Sonata No. 2, 1920 (Concord, Massachusetts, 1840-1860).

VOCAL WORKS: "General William Booth Enters into Heaven," 1914 (music; poem of Vachel Lindsay); "The Things Our Fathers Loved," 1917; 114 Songs, 1922.

The Life

Charles Edward Ives (ivz) was born into a civic-minded New England family. His father, George Edward Ives, had a successful career as a musician—trained in harmony, counterpoint, and several instruments—in the Union Army during the Civil War and later as the director of bands and choirs in and around Danbury, Connecticut. As a result of his father's musical activities, as well as an openness to new musical ideas in the household, Ives was raised in an environment that profoundly influenced him as a composer.

During his youth, Ives studied piano and organ; he was exposed to American vernacular music, Protestant church music, and European art music. His first success as a composer came in his early teens, followed by professional success as a church organist. Ives received instrumental lessons from various teachers, although his most significant musical training came in the form of harmony, counterpoint, and composition lessons from his father. At the age of twenty, having already established himself as a superb organist, as well as a composer of both popular and church music, Ives entered Yale University, where he studied with composer and teacher Horatio Parker. During his university studies with Parker, Ives explored the European art music tradition, and that shifted his compositional focus to American art music.

Charles Ives. (© Bettmann/CORBIS)

Despite his successful graduation from Yale with studies in music, Ives did not pursue music as his primary occupation. He chose a career in the insurance profession, and his financial success provided comfortable support for him and his wife. This decision corresponded with his father's belief that a man's interest in music could be freer and stronger if he did not have to rely on it for his living. This philosophy allowed Ives to pursue his increasingly innovative compositional career unimpeded by outside influences. At the same time, however, since he composed largely in isolation, he began to gain musical recognition only after he stopped composing in 1927. Ives spent the last several decades of his life revising earlier works and gaining notoriety as a composer through the efforts of such advocates as Nicolas Slonimsky, Aaron Copland, and Leonard Bernstein. After several decades of poor health, Ives died of a stroke following surgery in 1954.

The Music

Although not the most popular or best-known American composer, Ives is an innovative figure in twentieth century classical music. Immediately striking is his confident use of such advanced compositional techniques as free dissonance, quarter tones, tone clusters, polytonality, and polyrhythm at a time when the late Romanticism of Gustav Mahler and Richard Strauss was in vogue and before the radical musical developments of Arnold Schoenberg, Igor Stravinsky, and Béla Bartók. As important as his avant-garde musical language is Ives's seminal position as a composer of nationalistic American works. In addition to writing pieces based on American subject matter, especially relating to his native New England, Ives frequently incorporated—in a fragmentary or collage-like manner—vernacular, patriotic, and Protestant-hymn tunes and ragtime elements into his compositions. Notable to Ives's style is a focus on the Transcendental philosophies (known as Transcendentalism) of such American writers as Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau.

Early Works. Written for organ, Variations on "America" may be considered Ives's first major composition. Its significance lies not in its traditional formal structure but in its virtuosic demands and notable, though sparing, bitonality. Although Ives had written and published a number of short works, including a song for William McKinley's 1896 presidential campaign, before graduating from Yale University, his first major orchestral work was Symphony No. 1 in D Minor. This traditional four-movement work was written under Parker's tutelage and reflects Ives's university studies of the late-Romantic symphonies of Johannes Brahms, Antonín Dvořák, and Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky.

The Unanswered Question. Perhaps Ives's most famous composition, The Unanswered Question, described by the composer as a "cosmic drama," explores the spiritual question of existence through the use of three individual, though complementary, planes of sound that combine to create extreme dissonance. The first layer, which Ives referred to as "the silences of the Druids, who know, see, and hear nothing," is assigned to the strings. Above this foundation, a recurring trumpet line asks "the perennial question of existence," while the winds furiously, though unsuccessfully, attempt to pose an answer. As a result, the work closes as eerily as it opens, with quiet, slowly shifting harmonies in the strings. Although this work was originally scored for string quartet, woodwind quartet, and solo trumpet, Ives also produced arrangements of the work for chamber orchestra and full orchestra. The Unanswered Question is sometimes paired, as Ives originally intended, with the more extroverted orchestral work Central Park in the Dark under the title Two Contemplations.

Symphony No. 3. Subtitled The Camp Meeting, Ives's Symphony No. 3 garnered the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 1947, the year after its premiere performance, because of its folklike character. The three-movement work, scored for chamber orchestra and derived from earlier organ works, is largely programmatic, meant to depict a Protestant revival meeting around the turn of the nineteenth century. Throughout the work's three movements ("Old Folks Gatherin'," "Children's Day," and "Communion"), Ives incorporates a number of hymn tunes, including "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," "O, for a Thousand Tongues to Sing," "There Is a Fountain Filled with Blood," and "Just as I Am." Musically, Symphony No. 3 displays Ives's use of counterpoint, chromaticism, dissonance, altered formal structures, and layering effects in which two or more unrelated melodies are presented simultaneously.

Three Places in New England. As is the case with many of his orchestral scores, Ives's Three Places in New England is programmatic in nature. Further, the score exemplifies the composer's interest in the relationship between time and space by placing the listener in three specific musical settings, by layering borrowed tunes and by using extreme dissonances. The first movement, "The 'St. Gaudens' in Boston Common (Col. Shaw and His Colored Regiment)," portrays emotions evoked by a Civil War monument dedicated to the first all-black regiment to serve in the Union Army. The third movement, "The Housatonic at Stockbridge," captures the atmosphere of a morning walk along the Housatonic River near Stockbridge, Massachusetts. Central to Three Places in New England, both musically and popularly, is the second movement, "Putnam's Camp, Redding, Connecticut." Incorporating quotations from numerous patriotic tunes, most notably "Yankee Doodle" and "Hail, Columbia," the movement depicts the events of a Fourth of July picnic, including a Revolutionary War battle scene, from the perspective of a young boy.

Piano Sonata No. 2. Ives's Piano Sonata No. 2, or Concord, Massachusetts, 1840-1860, is the most direct musical statement concerning his interest in Transcendentalism. The four-movement work presents musical impressions of major figures, as well as their literary and philosophical views, connected with the Transcendental movement centered in Concord, Massachusetts, during the mid-nineteenth century. Ives's sonata is cyclical in that all four movements ("Emerson," "Hawthorne," "The Alcotts," and "Thoreau") include multiple quotations of the famous four-note motif from Ludwig van Beethoven's Symphony No. 5. In addition, several other borrowed tunes are incorporated in the work, including the hymn "Martyn," the patriotic song "Columbia, Gem of the Ocean," the Celtic folk song "Loch Lomond," the minstrel song "Massa's in de Cold Ground" by Stephen Foster, and the wedding march from Richard Wagner's Lohengrin (1850). Other notable compositional techniques are dense textures, the frequent use of tone clusters (one spanning more than two octaves, requiring the use of a board to depress the necessary piano keys), and the occasional abandonment of key signatures, notated meters, and bar lines.

Musical Legacy

Ives's The Unanswered Question and Piano Sonata No. 2 may define the composer as one of the most significant of the twentieth century. In these two works were found a synthesis of his unique and innovative musical language. The fact that so many of the composer's works were published, performed, and recorded demonstrated his monumental importance. His compositions enhanced the repertoire of the American orchestra, the piano literature, and the chamber ensemble. Important in establishing American vocal music are such art songs as "The Circus Band," "General William Booth Enters into Heaven," "The Things Our Fathers Loved," and "The Housatonic at Stockbridge."

Though isolated as a composer, Ives created a musical language that was strikingly original and at the same time strangely familiar, that was deeply spiritual and at the same time overtly nationalistic. Ives's innovative compositional techniques, his frequent use of musical quotation, and his general lack of concern for musical tradition paved the way for future developments in American and European art music.

Frederick Key Smith

Further Reading

Burkholder, J. Peter, ed. Charles Ives and His World. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1996. A collection of essays by leading scholars of Ives's life and music. Includes selected correspondence of the composer, numerous reviews of his music, and profiles by several of his contemporaries.

Crawford, Richard. America's Musical Life: A History. New York: W. W. Norton, 2001. An accessible history of all facets of American music. Includes a chapter on Ives, placing him in the context of twentieth century American music.

Ives, Charles. Essays Before a Sonata: The Majority and Other Writings. New York: W. W. Norton, 1961. The composer reflects on his politics and musical philosophy.

Lambert, Philip, ed. Ives Studies. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1997. A collection of essays by leading scholars of Ives's life and music.

Magee, Gayle Sherwood. Charles Ives Reconsidered. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2008. Reexamines the life and music of Ives, as well as his influence on modern music.

Perlis, Vivian. Charles Ives Remembered: An Oral History. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1974. A collection of writings on Ives's life and music by people close to the composer throughout his career.

Ross, Alex. The Rest Is Noise: Listening to the Twentieth Century. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2007. A narrative view of modern music, including a chapter focused on Ives and his American contemporaries.

Swafford, Jan. Charles Ives: A Life with Music. New York: W. W. Norton, 1996. A detailed biography of the composer, focusing on his personality and his musical output. Includes musical examples, extensive notes, and a useful bibliography.

See also: Adams, John; Bernstein, Leonard; Carter, Elliott; Coleman, Ornette; Copland, Aaron; Harrison, Lou; Mahler, Gustav; Mingus, Charles; Nancarrow, Conlon; Schnittke, Alfred; Schreker, Franz; Stokowski, Leopold; Strauss, Richard; Thomas, Michael Tilson; Tippett, Sir Michael.

J

Janet Jackson

American rhythm-and-blues singer and songwriter

As an influential artist in pop, rock, hip-hop, and rhythm and blues, Jackson has influenced her audiences through her music's messages of self-awareness, determination, and success.

Born: May 16, 1966; Gary, Indiana
Also known as: Janet Damita Jo Jackson (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Janet Jackson, 1982; Dream Street, 1984; Control, 1986; Rhythm Nation 1814, 1989; janet., 1993; The Velvet Rope, 1997; All for You, 2001; Damita Jo, 2004; 20 Y.O., 2006; Discipline, 2008.
SINGLES: "What Have You Done for Me Lately," 1986; "Control," 1989; "Rhythm Nation," 1989; "The Best Things in Life Are Free," 1992 (with Luther Vandross); "If," 1993; "That's the Way Love Goes," 1993.

The Life

Janet Damita Jo Jackson was born in Gary, Indiana, on May 16, 1966, the youngest of Katherine and Joseph Jackson's nine children. Although the family was lower middle class, the success of her brothers' group, the Jackson Five, allowed Jackson and her family to move to Encino, California, in 1971.

In 1974 Jackson began performing at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas with her older siblings. Jackson's witty impressions of Mae West and Cher caught the attention of CBS producers, and in 1976 the Jackson family hosted a television variety show, The Jacksons. After The Jacksons ended, Jackson continued her career in television. From 1977 to 1979, Jackson played Penny in the comedy series Good Times. In 1982 the producers of Diff'rent Strokes cast her as Charlene Dupree. Jackson also made appearances on Fame. Despite her rigorous schedule, Jackson attended day school. She attended the Lanai Road Elementary School in Encino, Portola Middle School in Tarzana, and the San Fernando Valley Professional School.

Although Jackson succeeded as an actress, her father wanted his daughter to pursue her music career. Jackson began her career as a serious musician in 1982. In 1984 Jackson married James DeBarge; however, the marriage was annulled in 1985. In 1986 Jackson began to secretly date René Elizondo, Jr. They married in 1991; however, in 1999 Jackson and Elizondo filed for a divorce. He sued Jackson for twenty-five million dollars. In 2003 the divorce was finalized, and Elizondo was granted half his request. After these heartaches, Jackson began dating producer Jermaine Dupri, and they had a caring relationship. Jackson remained with Virgin Records until 2007, when she signed with Island Records. She has continued her film career with parts in Nutty Professor II: The Klumps (2000) and Why Did I Get Married? (2007).

The Music

Although Jackson was raised on the music of the Jackson Five and other Motown artists, she developed her own style and lyricism. During most of her career, Jackson recorded for two record labels, A&M Records and Virgin Records. Ten number-one singles have appeared on the Hot 100 Billboard chart, and sixteen singles have reached the number-one rhythm-and-blues singles Billboard chart.

Early Works. Jackson's first recording was with her brother Randy, "Love Song for Kids," in 1978. In 1982, with her father as her manager, she signed a four-album contract with A&M Records. Soon after, she released her debut, self-titled album Janet Jackson. Record sales were not successful; Janet Jackson sold only three hundred thousand copies. In 1984 Jackson released her second album, Dream Street, and it sold about two hundred thousand copies. Her first two albums received a lot of criticism, with many saying that Jackson had used her family's fame to gain a record deal. These early works show Jackson's timidity and youth as an artist, and her music career started on a rocky path.

Control. Released in 1986, Control marks the beginning of Jackson's success as a musician. After the poor sales of Jackson's first two albums, A&M Records asked Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis to work with Jackson on her musical style. She accepted their help, and in effort to gain further independence she released her father as her manager. Control proved a great success; it sold more than five million copies, and the single, "When I Think of You," topped the Billboard charts.

Jackson's direct involvement in the production of Control emphasizes the album's importance in Jackson's career. She played keyboard, coproduced, and wrote several songs on the album. The initiative Jackson took on this album is reflected in the music. She had control of the album's production, and the tentativeness in her voice and lyrics (apparent in previous albums) did not appear in Control. Control symbolizes Jackson's independence as an artist; in 2007 it was included as one of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame's 200 Definitive Albums of All Time.

The Velvet Rope. In 1991 Jackson expanded her career internationally by signing with Virgin Records, and in 1996 Jackson renewed her contract with Virgin Records for eighty million dollars. In 1997 Jackson released her second album with Virgin Records, The Velvet Rope. Prior to the album's release, Virgin Records released her top singles, including "Together Again," "I Get Lonely," "Go Deep," "Got 'Til It's Gone," and "Every Time." During her U.S. tour to promote The Velvet Rope, Jackson taped an HBO special in Madison Square Garden.

The Velvet Rope demonstrates how Jackson uses her music as a vehicle for social commentary. Prior to this album, Jackson reportedly suffered from clinical depression, and The Velvet Rope was a response to her personal struggles. Many of the songs consider issues of self-esteem, loneliness, and relationships. In her willingness to address her audience in a candid manner, Jackson shows her maturity as an artist. "Together Again," a song from the album in commemoration of a friend Jackson lost to AIDS, topped the Billboard charts.

Musical Legacy

Throughout her career Jackson has asserted herself as an individual, becoming more than the youngest Jackson. In a 1990 interview she stated, "I wanted to do this; I chose to because there is a responsibility I feel as a young entertainer. I started to realize that I had become a role model for young people." Her socially conscious music in Control and The Velvet Rope educated her audiences about self-worth, relationships, and success by revealing Jackson's inner thoughts.

Jackson has proved influential in the recording industry through her business choices. She never left a record label at a low point in her career. Jackson's substantial career has gained her fame and fortune. In 2007 Forbes magazine announced that Jackson was the seventh richest woman in the entertainment business (amassing more than 150 million dollars). Her discipline as an artist and as an entrepreneur has allowed Jackson to place on the Billboard Top 100 charts for more than two decades.

Joy M. Doan

Further Reading

Andrews, Bart. Out of the Madness: The Strictly Unauthorized Biography of Janet Jackson. New York: HarperCollins, 1994. This biography focuses on Jackson's early career, along with personal information on the singer and the Jackson family.

Cornwall, Jane. Janet Jackson. London: Carlton Books, 2002. A biographical study, this work covers Jackson's career in its early days and in its subsequent successes. Particular attention is given to her personal life. Includes photographs from throughout her career.

Jackson, Janet. Too Many Miles, Not Enough Love. Philadelphia: Xlibris, 2005. The singer describes in her own words her personal struggles, and she details the important events of her career.

McMillan, Constance Van Brunt. Randy and Janet Jackson: Ready and Right! St. Paul, Minn.: EMC, 1977. This biography chronicles the lives and musical careers of the two youngest Jackson children.

Nathan, David. The Soulful Divas. New York: Billboard Books, 2002. Nathan presents a biographical outlook on the maturation of Jackson's music as it relates to other musical divas of the 1980's and 1990's.

See also: Alpert, Herb; Carey, Mariah; Elliott, Missy; Jackson, Michael; Turner, Tina.

Mahalia Jackson

American gospel singer

The Queen of Gospel, Jackson developed a style that originated in Baptist church choirs and incorporated elements of blues and jazz. The combined effect was deeply spiritual, yet sensual music.

Born: October 26, 1911; New Orleans, Louisiana
Died: January 27, 1972; Evergreen Park, Illinois

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Silent Night, Holy Night, 1950; Bless This House, 1956; Just as I Am, 1960; The Power and the Glory, 1960; Sweet Little Jesus Boy, 1961; Mahalia, 1965; A Mighty Fortress, 1968; Mahalia Jackson Sings the Best-Loved Hymns of Dr. M. L. King, 1968; How I Got Over, 1976.

SINGLES: "God's Gonna Separate the Wheat from the Tares," 1934; "Move on up a Little Higher," 1948; "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," 1958.

The Life

A granddaughter of slaves, Mahalia Jackson (mah-HAYL-yah JAK-suhn) was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, into poverty and into a society divided by racial segregation. Jackson, nicknamed Halie, was the third of six children born to John Jackson, a stevedore, minister, and barber, and Charity Clark, a domestic servant. By age four, Jackson had memorized Negro spirituals, and she soon joined the Mount Moriah Baptist Church Choir. Not long after Mahalia's baptism in the Mississippi River, her mother, at the age of twenty-five, died of undetermined causes. Jackson's father sent her and her older brother Peter to live with their mother's sister, Aunt Duke Paul.

Aunt Duke was a stern disciplinarian and ruthless taskmaster; Mahalia worked long hours doing household and yard chores. Though her aunt was keenly aware of Jackson's singing talent, she wanted the child to acquire the domestic skills needed to make a living in the segregated South, where most blacks worked at menial jobs serving whites. Each evening, though, was reserved for attending prayer services. Listening to the music coming out of the homes as she walked to church, Jackson heard songs by successful black artists such as Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, and W. C. Handy. Though Jackson had no plans to sing secular music, she did admire and imitate the soulful styles and rhythmic beat of the blues and jazz songs she heard on the way to church.

Because money was scarce, when Jackson was seven, she added employment as a domestic to her schedule of schooling and church services. She cleaned, did laundry, and took care of children for a white family, receiving as compensation two dollars a week, leftover food, and hand-me-down clothing. In spite of many obligations at such a young age, Jackson did well in school, and her goal was to become a nurse. She quit school after eighth grade, however, in order to earn more money.

In 1927, at age sixteen, Jackson left Louisiana for Chicago, Illinois, to live with another aunt, Hannah, who had persuaded her that the North provided a better life for blacks. At first, Jackson worked as a domestic, but she soon found employment as a gospel soloist for churches, funerals, and other religious events. She joined forces with a Chicago-based professional gospel group, the Johnson Gospel Singers, and later she met composer Thomas Dorsey. Jackson toured the country, including the Deep South, with Dorsey and his musicians. Their collaboration endured for several years, and it gave Jackson the widespread exposure that in later years would form the base of her devoted audience. Jackson, Dorsey, and their musicians frequently traveled with their own food, gas, and oil, because they were often denied entrance to restaurants, restrooms, and service stations that did not serve blacks.

Jackson married in 1936 at age twenty-five. Her husband, Isaac Hockenhull, an educated and engaging older man, pushed Jackson to earn big money by performing secular music, which she adamantly refused to do. The friction culminated in divorce in 1941.

Jackson's goals expanded from singing to include business entrepreneurship. Though she never became a nurse, she attended beauty school, eventually opening both a beauty shop and a flower shop, and buying real estate. With these financially successful ventures, Jackson assured herself of the income she needed to continue to sing gospel without resorting to the more lucrative but secular jazz and blues.

Mahalia Jackson. (Library of Congress)

In 1937 Jackson made her first studio recording for Decca Records, "God's Gonna Separate the Wheat from the Tares." The song did not sell well, and Jackson did not receive another recording contract for a decade. Her career, however, continued to blossom as she received invitations for live performances in various churches and religious venues across the country.

For Apollo Records, Jackson recorded "Move on up a Little Higher," which was released in 1948. It became a best-selling gospel record, making Jackson the first gospel superstar. In the early 1950's, Jackson recorded and released more vastly popular gospel songs, and she was catapulted onto the world stage. This degree of demand and popularity for a gospel singer was unprecedented, and Jackson's style became a prototype for those aspiring to sing gospel.

In 1954 Jackson hosted a television show, marking the first time in musical history that pure gospel was nationally televised. Jackson engaged a supporting cast that performed a more secular style, pleasing mainstream white audiences but disappointing gospel purists.

Jackson continued an escalating rise to popularity and wealth. She appeared in a few big-screen motion pictures, and she sang at the inauguration of President John F. Kennedy in 1961. During this politically and racially dynamic era, Jackson also made many fund-raising appearances and gave financial support to the efforts of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in the hope of eradicating segregation and racial violence in the United States, and particularly in her homeland of the Deep South. After the assassinations of Kennedy and King, however, Jackson became so discouraged that she withdrew from political activism. Because of her heavy touring schedule and another unpleasant marriage and divorce, Jackson developed heart problems, becoming intermittently ill. In the meantime, she was a worldwide musical and financial success, performing in many important and glamorous venues, including at a much-acclaimed performance at Carnegie Hall in New York City. Jackson died of a heart attack at age sixty on January 27, 1972, in Chicago, where she had lived and become successful over the course of forty-five years. She was buried in her birthplace of New Orleans.

The Music

Jackson's style of gospel singing radicalized the concept of religious music throughout the United States and the world. From childhood, Jackson wanted to sing only gospel music, eschewing secular songs. She was, however, greatly influenced by the jazz and blues singers to whom she was exposed during her early years and throughout her life.

Jackson was considered the Queen of Gospel, and she helped make religious music internationally popular during the mid-twentieth century. Combining Negro spirituals sung with naked emotion and the sensual elements displayed in jazz and blues, Jackson created a volatile and rhythmic gospel sound. Her habit of swaying to the musical beat while singing deeply spiritual songs added greatly to her appeal to the general public.

Early Works. Jackson's earliest works were Christian spirituals performed as a soloist in church choirs. Raised in one of the most musically diverse cities in the country, New Orleans, Jackson focused on gospel, but she was surrounded and influenced by the emerging trends of jazz and blues. As a result, the preteen Jackson developed an innovative style that integrated sensuality of voice and physical movement with exceedingly devout fervor and overtly genuine and spiritually moving pleas to her Lord.

"God's Gonna Separate the Wheat from the Tares." Recorded on the Decca Records label in 1934, this song was not a critical or a financial success. Jackson recorded a few other songs on the same label, but she was dropped when none of the recordings made money. Lyrics of the song came from the Bible, and they reflected the need of a farmer to harvest weeds (tares) to get to the harvesting of his wheat crop. Considered a "race" record, or music aimed to sell to blacks, "God's Gonna Separate the Wheat from the Tares" was a simple and soulful spiritual classic made stirring by Jackson's powerful voice and sensual delivery.

"Move on up a Little Higher." Written by William Herbert Brewster and recorded on the Apollo label in 1947, this song sold one hundred thousand copies overnight, and it soon sold more than a million. Gospel music catapulted from the preference of a few to the many, becoming a huge business in the process. Fans told Jackson that the song inspired them to try harder to succeed in the white world, and it eventually became an anthem for the Civil Rights movement in the 1950's and 1960's. This recording eventually sold more than two million copies, and it made Jackson a critical, financial, and popular success. It was the demand for Jackson's records and public appearances following "Move on up a Little Higher" which led Jackson to be called Queen of Gospel.

"He's Got the Whole World in His Hands." Released by Columbia Records in 1958, this song entered Billboard's Top 100 singles chart, an unusual achievement for a gospel song. Also recorded separately by male singer Laurie London, the song was a welcome antidote to widespread dissatisfaction with race riots in the American Deep South and with general social unrest around the world.

"I Been 'Buked and I Been Scorned." At the peak of her success, Jackson sang "I Been 'Buked and I Been Scorned" as a prelude to King's March on Washington on August 28, 1963. The date was the centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation by President Abraham Lincoln in 1863, marking the end of slavery. The March on Washington and King's speech attracted 250,000 supporters. Jackson faced the huge crowd and the radio and television audiences, singing softly, and then her voice lifted into a full, deep contralto. She swayed and clapped her hands along with the huge crowd, and the whole assemblage began to resemble an evangelical revival meeting. Jackson's song was followed by King's famous "I have a dream" speech.

Musical Legacy

Jackson was a musical pioneer, integrating the soulfulness of blues and the rhythm of jazz into her gospel songs. Her groundbreaking style generated mass interest in the concept of soul singing, inspiring many new artists to follow her example.

Jackson's stirring renditions and unusual performing style spawned a new way of interpreting and performing gospel music. Her rich, grainy voice, fervent delivery, and rhythmic movements inspired a new generation of gospel, jazz, and blues singers. Her influence was not limited to those genres, however. Youthful imitators of her free-spirited, passionate style of performing caused Jackson to remark that "rock and roll [music] was stolen from the sanctified church." Jackson mentored young artists such as Aretha Franklin, Della Reese, and Billy Preston, all of whom started in gospel and went on to succeed variously as "crossover" artists of blues, jazz, soul, and rock-and-roll music.

There was a sensuality and personal expression to Jackson's gospel renditions previously unheard in religious music. Jackson was the first gospel superstar at a time when it was extremely difficult for African Americans to cross the racial divide into mainstream success in any field.

Twyla R. Wells

Further Reading

Goreau, Laurraine. Just Mahalia, Baby: The Mahalia Jackson Story. Los Angeles: Pelican, 1985. The biographer, a personal friend of Jackson, chronicles the gospel singer's rise from poverty to international success.

Harris, Michael W. The Rise of Gospel Blues: The Mu- sic of Thomas Andrew Dorsey in the Urban Church. New York: Oxford University Press, 1994. A comprehensive look at the evolution of gospel music through the life of a master gospel composer, Dorsey, one of Jackson's collaborators. Dorsey went from composing risqué songs to some of the great modern gospel masterpieces.

Jackson, Jesse. Make a Joyful Noise unto the Lord. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1974. For young readers, this is a simple biographical sketch of Jackson.

McNeil, W. K. Encyclopedia of American Gospel Music. New York: Routledge, 2005. A reference on gospel origins that lists hundreds of gospel artists and biographical information, including an entry on Jackson. This is an excellent source for lay readers as well as musical history scholars.

Reagon, Bernice Johnson, ed. We'll Understand It Better By and By: Pioneering African American Gospel Composers. Washington, D.C.: Smithsonian Institution Press, 1992. A Smithsonian curator presents essays by gospel performers and gospel producers that discuss major figures in African American gospel music. Included is an essay from Dorsey, with whom Jackson performed for many years.

See also: Blackwell, Otis; Blakey, Art; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Franklin, Aretha; Handy, W. C.; Little Richard; Morrison, Van; Rainey, Ma; Smith, Bessie; Ward, Clara.

Michael Jackson

American pop/soul singer and songwriter

A multifaceted artist, Jackson redefined the worlds of pop, soul, rock, and dance.

Born: August 29, 1958; Gary, Indiana
Also known as: Michael Joseph Jackson (full name); King of Pop
Member of: The Jackson Five; the Jacksons

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Ben, 1972; Got to Be There, 1972; Music and Me, 1973; Forever, Michael, 1975; Off the Wall, 1979; Thriller, 1982; Ain't No Sunshine, 1984; Bad, 1987; Dangerous, 1991; HIStory: Past, Present and Future—Book I, 1995; Blood on the Dance Floor: HIStory in the Mix, 1997; Invincible, 2001.

ALBUMS (with the Jackson Five): Diana Ross Presents the Jackson Five, 1969; ABC, 1970; The Jackson Five Christmas Album, 1970; Third Album, 1970; Goin' Back to Indiana, 1971; Maybe Tomorrow, 1971; Lookin' Through the Windows, 1972; Get It Together, 1973; Skywriter, 1973; Dancing Machine, 1974; Moving Violation, 1975.

ALBUMS (with the Jacksons): The Jacksons, 1976; Goin' Places, 1977; Destiny, 1978; Triumph, 1980; Victory, 1984; 2300 Jackson Street, 1989.

The Life

Michael Joseph Jackson was the born the eighth of ten children to Joseph and Katherine Jackson. Jackson's mother was a Jehovah's Witness, and she raised her children under the tenets of that religion. The family's home in Gary, Indiana, was filled with music, and Jackson's father, in addition working in the steel industry to support his family, had a role in a local musical group called the Falcons. Jackson's father encouraged music in his sons, training them to sing, perform, and dance in a group originally called the Jackson Brothers and eventually renamed the Jackson Five. Jackson, though still a boy, was subject to the strict practice sessions and firm discipline of his father.

Jackson became one of the group's lead vocalists, and he fronted the group with dance movements he mimicked from watching videotapes of James Brown. In 1968 the Jackson Five, comprising Jackson and his brothers Jackie, Tito, Jermaine, and Marlon, signed with Motown Records. The Jackson Five remained in the public eye well into the 1970's, though Jackson frequently recorded solo albums, finding his first success with Off the Wall. In the 1980's, the group maintained its popularity, and Jackson had large sales for his solo recordings, especially Thriller. In the late 1980's, Jackson earned notoriety for his repeated plastic surgeries and for his increasingly reclusive and eccentric lifestyle.

In 1993 Jackson was accused of child molestation, though he settled out of court, claiming innocence. The following year he married Lisa Marie

Michael Jackson. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Presley, the daughter of Elvis Presley. After they divorced, he married Deborah Jeanne Rowe, his dermatologist's nurse, and they had two children, Michael Joseph Jackson, Jr. (called Prince) and Paris Michael Katherine Jackson. They divorced in 1999. Jackson had a third child in 2002, named Prince Michael Jackson II, though the mother was never publicly identified.

In late 2003, the entertainer was charged again with child molestation, and this time the case went to trial. The court proceedings lasted the first half of 2005, ending with a not-guilty verdict. Jackson put his recording career on hold, in the wake of the trial and the financial problems involved with his Neverland Ranch in Los Olivos, California, which has been threatened with foreclosure.

The Music

The Jackson Five. The Jackson Five provided the stage for Jackson to exhibit his talents as a vocalist, a songwriter, and a dancer. The group toured actively and was prolific in the studio during its early stages, starting with Diana Ross Presents the Jackson Five in 1969 (after the group performed with her group, the Supremes). The lead single, "I Want You Back," showcased the group's harmonies. Soon, the Jackson Five had its own identity, releasing ABC, known for its title cut and "The Love You Save."

The group was productive throughout the first half of the 1970's, at the same time allowing Jackson to record albums and singles on his own, including the smashes "Got to Be There" and "Ben." As the 1970's ended, the group was struggling, trying a funk style on Dancing Machine and a pre-disco style on Moving Violation. The group left Motown to debut on Epic Records in 1976.

With the new record deal, the group shortened its name to the Jacksons, and it embraced the disco style in Destiny, which launched the club favorites "Blame It on the Boogie" and "Shake Your Body (Down to the Ground)." At that time, Jackson reunited with Ross to star in the film The Wiz (1978).

Off the Wall. Jackson's solo breakthrough came with Off the Wall, which sold twenty million albums. The project was noted for its effective fusing of soul, rhythm and blues, pop, and disco, ranging from the dance tunes "Don't Stop 'Til You Get Enough" and "Rock with You" to the ballad "She's out of My Life." The album also scored Jackson a 1980 Grammy Award for Best Male Rhythm and Blues Vocal Performance.

Thriller. Jackson balanced his work with the Jacksons with studio work for Triumph (featuring "Can You Feel It" and "This Place Hotel"), followed by a tour. When he returned, Jackson went back to the studio to record Thriller, which sold an astounding 104 million albums and which earned a spot in the The Guinness Book of Records as the biggest-selling album in history. The album received eight Grammy Awards, and it made Jackson an MTV sensation, with a video of the title cut becoming a critically acclaimed short film. "Beat It" featured unconventional choreography, and "Billie Jean," when performed on the Motown Twenty-five: Yesterday, Today, Forever television special, featured Jackson's signature moonwalk dance move and his single sequined glove.

Jackson returned to the group for the Victory album and tour, setting records for ticket sales and incorporating state-of-the-art production elements onstage. In 1985 Jackson cowrote "We Are the World" with Lionel Richie (and performed it with a celebrity choir) to benefit African famine relief. In addition, he purchased shares in ATV Music Publishing (which owned several of the Beatles' most famous songs), outraging his friend and duet partner, Beatle Paul McCartney.

Bad. In 1988 Jackson presented his long-awaited follow-up to Thriller, Bad, which sold thirty-two million copies, although it produced an unprecedented five chart-topping singles. In order to tour in support of the project, Jackson mostly sat out of the Jacksons' 1989 sessions for 2300 Jackson Street. Dangerous bowed in 1991 to great fanfare, and it produced nine hit singles and an extensive world tour, which was chronicled on the video Live in Bucharest: The Dangerous Tour (2005).

HIStory. In 1995 Jackson made HIStory: Past, Present and Future—Book I. The double-disc project comprised fifteen of Jackson's solo hits and fifteen new songs (including "Scream," a duet with his sister Janet Jackson). Two years later, Jackson was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as a member of the Jackson Five, and he released the remix record Blood on the Dance Floor: HIStory in the Mix.

Invincible. In 2001 Jackson released Invincible, and he was inducted as a solo performer into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. There was a concert commemorating his thirtieth anniversary in show business, with performances by the Jacksons, Whitney Houston, Liza Minnelli, and Slash. Nevertheless, Invincible was a commercial and critical disappointment. Its release shortly after the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States did not help sales, and a bitter feud with the record label fueled by Jackson's claim that Invicible was poorly promoted made this album his last recording for Epic Records.

Musical Legacy

Among his many accolades, Jackson was named the Best-Selling Pop Male Artist of the Millennium by the World Music Awards and the Artist of the Century by the American Music Awards. In 2006 The Guinness Book of World Records named him the Most Successful Entertainer of All Time. Jackson's innovative music videos, especially the one for Thriller, have been emulated by artists and directors, and they have become MTV staples. Known for his artistic diversity, Jackson, whether performing with the Jackson Five or solo, created songs that climbed the pop, soul, and rock charts. He has produced remixes, collaborated with hip-hop artists, and engaged other artists in support of worldwide charitable causes (most notably "We Are the World"). With strong record sales and continued radio play, Jackson reaches new generations of listeners.

Andy Argyrakis

Further Reading

Andersen, Christopher. Michael Jackson Unauthorized. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1994. This unauthorized biography, which mixes factual accounts with gossip and tabloid stories, is a compelling, sometimes stilted view of Jackson.

Campbell, Lisa. Michael Jackson: The King of Pop. Boston: Branden Books, 1993. Exhaustively researched, this source assesses Jackson's pop milestones, his recordings, and his concert tours.

Diamond, Diane. Be Careful Who You Love: Inside the Michael Jackson Case. New York: Atria Books, 2005. The reporter for Hard Copy and Court TV provides a somewhat one-sided view of Jackson's various court cases, presenting the entertainer in a mostly negative light.

Jackson, Michael. Moon Walk. New York: Doubleday, 1988. This autobiography was written during the height of popularity of Jackson's Bad album. Though the text lacks personal details, Jackson presents a good account of the early years of his career.

Jones, Aphrodite. Michael Jackson Conspiracy. New York: iUniverse, 2007. After a foreword by Jackson's lead attorney Thomas Mesereau, the text traces conspiracy theories surrounding the singer's second round of sexual allegations.

Jones, Bob, with Stacy Brown. Michael Jackson: The Man Behind the Mask. New York: SelectBooks, 2005. With the subtitle "An Insider's Story of the King of Pop," Jones provides details on his experiences at Motown Records and serving as head of Jackson's MJJ Communications.

Taraborrelli, J. Randy. Michael Jackson: The Magic and the Madness. New York: Birch Lane Press, 1991. Using interviews with more than one hundred sources close to Jackson, this source offers a thorough look at Jackson's personal and professional life. This exhaustive biography has more than six hundred pages.

See also: Brown, James; Crouch, Andraé; Davis, Sammy, Jr.; Jones, Quincy; McCartney, Sir Paul; Ross, Diana; Van Halen, Eddie; Wilson, Jackie; Wonder, Stevie.

Sir Mick Jagger

English rock singer and songwriter

Jagger is the lead singer for the Rolling Stones, known for his strutting, dancing, and jumping around the stage.

Born: July 26, 1943; Dartford, Kent, England
Also known as: Michael Philip Jagger (full name)
Member of: The Rolling Stones

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): She's the Boss, 1985; Primitive Cool, 1987; Wandering Spirit, 1993; Goddess in the Doorway, 2001.

ALBUMS (with the Rolling Stones): The Rolling Stones (England's Newest Hitmakers), 1964; 12 x 5, 1964; December's Children (and Everybody's), 1965; Out of Our Heads, 1965; The Rolling Stones No. 2, 1965; The Rolling Stones Now, 1965; Aftermath, 1966; Between the Buttons, 1967; Flowers, 1967; Their Satanic Majesties Request, 1967; Beggars Banquet, 1968; Let It Bleed, 1969; Sticky Fingers, 1971; Exile on Main Street, 1972; Jamming with Edward, 1972; Goats' Head Soup, 1973; It's Only Rock 'n' Roll, 1974; Black and Blue, 1976; Some Girls, 1978; Emotional Rescue, 1980; Tattoo You, 1981; Undercover, 1983; Dirty Work, 1986; Steel Wheels, 1989; Voodoo Lounge, 1994; Bridges to Babylon, 1997; A Bigger Bang, 2005.

The Life

Michael Philip Jagger was born July 26, 1943, in Dartford, Kent, England, to Eva and Joe Jagger. His father was a physical education instructor at St. Mary's Training College, now part of the University of Surrey. To his father's chagrin, Jagger grew up loving the blues and rock and roll. After graduating from Dartford Grammar School in 1960, Jagger went to the London School of Economics on a government grant to study accounting. He then met former Dartford acquaintance Keith Richards, a student at Sidcup Art School.

Jagger was playing guitar in the blues band Little Boy Blue and the Blue Boys, which Richards soon joined as a guitarist. A year later they met Brian Jones, a blues guitarist, who asked Jagger, then with Blues, Inc., and Richards to form a new band. In the summer of 1962, with Dick Taylor on guitar, Mick Avory on drums, and Ian Stewart on piano, they performed at the Marquee, a small jazz club, as the Rolling Stones, taking their name from Muddy Waters's 1950 blues tune "Rollin' Stone." Bill Wyman soon replaced Taylor as bass guitarist, and Charlie Watts, from Blues, Inc., became the drummer.

Playing at the Crawdaddy Club in 1963, the band attracted the attention of promoter Andrew Loog Oldham. Because he wanted to promote the musicians as bad boys, Oldham's first act as the group's manager was to fire the straitlaced Stewart. This image led British politicians to decry the group as a corrupter of youth.

The Rolling Stones signed with Decca Records in 1963, releasing a version of Chuck Berry's "Come On" as their first single. The band's first original song, "Tell Me," written by Jagger and Richards, was released in June, 1964. In 1965 "Satisfaction" became their biggest hit to that point.

The band quickly became known for its energetic stage shows. Jagger strummed a guitar or played another instrument, usually the harmonica, and he sang. With his full, pouty lips, Jagger was an overtly sexual performer, thrusting a microphone between his legs, creating a sensation like Elvis Presley during his hip-shaking period. When the group appeared on The Ed Sullivan Show in 1967, Jagger was forced to alter the lyrics to "Let's Spend the Night Together," substituting "some time" for "the night." The singer's facial expressions mocked this censorship.

Jagger and Richards were arrested for drug possession in February, 1967, and Jones was arrested three months later. Jagger was initially sentenced to three months in jail for having drugs without a prescription. Because the drugs had been legally purchased in Italy, another judge reduced Jagger's sentence to a year's probation.

Despite its title, Their Satanic Majesties Request reflected a brief retreat from the group's bad-boy image, but the trendy psychedelic songs struck many as pretentious and bland. Firing Oldham in 1968, the Rolling Stones returned to their roots with Beggars Banquet, which included hard-driving rock, blues, and tongue-in-cheek country music. Resenting the group's dominance by Jagger and Richards, Jones left in 1969; he drowned in the swimming pool at his home a few weeks later. Later that year a spectator was beaten to death by members of the Hell's Angels motorcycle gang, whom the Stones had hired as security for a concert at the Altamont Speedway in California. Some blamed Jagger for inciting the incident with his stage antics. Gimme Shelter (1970), a documentary by Albert and David Maysles, captures the concert's chaos.

Sir Mick Jagger. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Around this time, Jagger tried to launch a career as a film actor. He appeared as a legendary Australian outlaw in Tony Richardson's Ned Kelly (1970) and as a reclusive former rock star in Donald Cammell and Nicolas Roeg's Performance (1970). Neither film did well at the box office, with Performance widely condemned as decadent and sadistic (although the film eventually developed a cult status). Jagger's love scenes with Anita Pallenberg reportedly upset Richards, her boyfriend.

Jagger had a daughter with British actress Marsha Hunt, for whom the song "Brown Sugar" was written. In 1971 Jagger married Bianca Pérez-Mora Macias, a socialite from Nicaragua. They had a daughter, Jade.

By 1974 Jagger and Richards had begun to take more control over their music, producing, under the name the Glimmer Twins, their recordings. After the two disagreed over the musical direction of the Rolling Stones, the singer did not tour with the band from 1981 to 1989, even when Dirty Work was released. During this period, Jagger released She's the Boss, the first of several solo albums, and he toured as a single act. After the Rolling Stones were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1989, Jagger and Richard worked out their differences. The Voodoo Lounge tour of 1994 began a hectic concert schedule, with performances featuring enormous video screens and other high technology.

Jagger returned to films with Running Out of Luck (1987), as a rock star kidnapped in Brazil. His other acting can be seen in Freejack (1992), as a time-traveling bounty hunter; in the Holocaust drama Bent (1997), as a transvestite; and in The Man from Elysian Fields (2001), as a male prostitute, an affecting performance. Contemplating retirement, his character asks a longtime client, played by Anjelica Huston, to marry him, and he is answered by her laughter. After briefly displaying pained disappointment, Jagger quickly assumes a sly grin as he accepts his lonely fate. Jagger also produced the World War II espionage thriller Enigma (2001).

Divorced from Bianca in 1980, the singer married American model Jerry Hall in 1990. The couple had four children before their 1999 divorce. Jagger became a grandfather in 1993 with the birth of Jade's first child, and he became a father for the seventh time in 1999 when Brazilian model Luciana Gimenez gave birth to his son.

For his contributions to music, Jagger was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II in 2002. Richards complained to the press that his friend was becoming part of the establishment at which they once sneered.

Though Jagger once famously said he would rather be dead than still be performing "Satisfaction" when he was forty-five, he has continued performing this song and other Rolling Stones hits into his sixties. The two-year Bigger Bang tour of 2005-2007 proved that the Rolling Stones could still attract massive audiences all over the world, grossing $558 million.

The Music

Jagger's voice has greater range and expression than most rock performers, and he is adept at high-speed rockers as well as slow-tempo songs. He easily shifts from a screech to a forceful shout to a melancholy whine, sometimes within the same song. He often adopts a Southern twang reminiscent of blues and country-music performers. The twang also accentuates the irony in many songs. As a musician, Jagger is mediocre on the guitar, but he can soar on the harmonica, which he plays, as in "Midnight Rambler," in the honking manner of bluesman Little Walter.

Early Stones. The early Rolling Stones recordings are packed with stylish versions of blues, rock, and rhythm-and-blues songs originally recorded by Berry, Solomon Burke, Sam Cooke, Bo Diddley, Marvin Gaye, Buddy Holly, Howlin' Wolf, Otis Redding, Jimmy Reed, Rufus Thomas, Bobby Womack, and others. Like those of their models, the songs written by Jagger and Richards offered simple lyrics, but the music is complex, with shifting tempi. The best of their early collaborations is 1965's "Satisfaction." Mixing the speaker's need for female attention with disgust at being manipulated by the media, "Satisfaction" quickly became a rock anthem, showing the songwriters' talent for sardonic lyrics.

Aftermath. Aftermath was the first album to feature all original Jagger-Richards songs. The songwriters made lyrical social criticism by attacking adults' reliance on prescription drugs in "Mother's Little Helper," showing the influence of Bob Dylan and the Kinks. "Paint It Black," featuring Jones on the sitar, is one of the group's most powerful songs. The singer's relentless anger has led some to call it the first punk song.

"Under My Thumb." Many of the Jagger-Richards songs present misogynistic views. "Under My Thumb" celebrates the singer's ability to control an otherwise unruly woman. In "Stray Cat Blues" (about having sex with a fifteen-year-old runaway) and "Honky Tonk Women," the songwriters capitalized on the new freedom given radio stations beginning in the late 1960's to play more risqué lyrics.

"As Tears Go By." Jagger and Richards were also capable of tender songs, as with the plaintive ballad "As Tears Go By," originally written for Jagger's girlfriend Marianne Faithfull. She also inspired "Wild Horses," often considered the Rolling Stones' best ballad, a haunting account of a pained, tempestuous relationship.

Peak Period. Jagger and Richards were never afraid of experimentation. "You Can't Always Get What You Want" opens with the London Bach Choir before shifting into the rock style of the songwriters' most productive period. Between 1968 and 1978 the pair produced such lasting rock classics as "Street Fightin' Man," "Can't You Hear Me Knocking," "Tumbling Dice," "It's Only Rock 'n' Roll," and "Beast of Burden."

Political Songs. Early in their careers, Jagger and Richards made only tangential references to politics. Beginning in the 1980's, they became more directly political. "Undercover of the Night" opens with a vivid description of political prisoners being tortured in South America. "Highwire" criticizes Western nations that sell weapons to Middle Eastern countries. "Sweet Neo Con" attacks the policies of George W. Bush.

Solo Career. She's the Boss sold well, helped by the frequent appearance of its music videos on MTV. "Just Another Night" and "Lucky in Love" were moderate hits, but many considered the dance-inflected rhythms of She's the Boss too mainstream and a step backward for Jagger creatively. Jagger's next solo album, Primitive Cool, was better received by critics, but only one single, "Let's Work," was a hit.

Wandering Spirit was a successful Jagger solo album, offering a greater diversity of musical styles. "Out of Focus," for example, is a gospel-tinged rocker. While several Rolling Stones songs mock country-music conventions, as with "Dead Flowers," "Evening Gown" is an irony-free, heartfelt ballad. Jagger's fondness for the song can be heard in his duet on Jerry Lee Lewis's Last Man Standing (2006). "Wandering Spirit" is a combination of country and gospel influences. "I've Been Lonely for So Long" is a throwback to the blues-influenced rock of Jagger's youth.

Goddess in the Doorway represented a return to the bland mainstream style of She's the Boss, and it was poorly received. Jagger succeeded with his contributions to the sound track for Alfie (2004), especially the bittersweet "Old Habits Die Hard," and for the project he was nominated for a Golden Globe.

Musical Legacy

When Rolling Stone named the five hundred greatest songs of all time in 2004, fourteen Jagger-Richards compositions made the list, with "Satisfaction" placing second after Dylan's "Like a Rolling Stone." The length, quality, and diversity of the band's career, despite several personnel changes, have encouraged thousands of other performers and songwriters. Jagger and the Rolling Stones have influenced such bands as Aerosmith and Bon Jovi.

Michael Adams

Further Reading

Davis, Stephen. Old Gods Almost Dead: The Forty-Year Odyssey of the Rolling Stones. New York: Broadway Books, 2001. An authoritative and readable account of the Rolling Stones covers their musical influences, their creative talents, and their excesses of drugs.

Faithfull, Marianne. Faithfull: An Autobiography. New York: Cooper Square Press, 2000. The singer offers an often disturbing account of her drug-addicted life and her affair with Jagger.

Greenfield, Robert. Exile on Main St.: A Season in Hell with the Rolling Stones. New York: Da Capo, 2006. This is a colorful portrait of the recording of Exile on Main Street in 1971, describing personal and professional conflicts between Jagger and Richards.

Jagger, Mick, and others. According to the Rolling Stones. San Francisco: Chronicle Books, 2003. Photographic record of the history of the Rolling Stones, with comments by band members and thirteen essays by fans and friends.

Sanford, Christopher. Mick Jagger: Rebel Knight. London: Omnibus Press, 2004. This informative biography emphasizes Jagger's love affairs and his discord with the other Rolling Stones.

Wyman, Bill, and Ray Coleman. Stone Alone: The Story of a Rock 'n' Roll Band. New York: Viking, 1990. History of the band through Jones's death, combined with an autobiography of Wyman, who left the group in 1993.

See also: Berry, Chuck; Burke, Solomon; Cooke, Sam; Diddley, Bo; Gaye, Marvin; James, Etta; Jennings, Waylon; Lewis, Jerry Lee; Presley, Elvis; Redding, Otis; Richards, Keith; Tosh, Peter; Turner, Tina; Waters, Muddy; Webb, Jimmy.

James Jamerson

American rhythm-and-blues bassist

A longtime member of the Motown house band known as the Funk Brothers, Jamerson was the primary bass player on the majority of Motown's hit records of the 1960's and 1970's. He was noted for making unusual melodic note choices and combining syncopated rhythmic lines.

Born: January 29, 1936; Charleston, South Carolina
Died: August 2, 1983; Los Angeles, California
Member of: The Funk Brothers

Principal recordings

SONGS (bass): "Dancing in the Street," 1964 (by Martha and the Vandellas); "Going to a Go-Go," 1965 (by the Miracles); "My Girl," 1965 (by the Temptations); "Shotgun," 1965 (by Jr. Walker and the All Stars); "Reach out I'll Be There," 1966 (by the Four Tops); "You Can't Hurry Love," 1966 (by the Supremes); "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," 1967 (by Gladys Knight and the Pips); "For Once in My Life," 1968 (by Stevie Wonder); "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," 1968 (by Marvin Gaye); "Rock the Boat," 1974 (by Hues Corporation); "Boogie Fever," 1976 (by the Sylvers); "You Don't Have to Be a Star (To Be in My Show)," 1976 (by Marilyn McCoo and Billy Davis, Jr.).

The Life

James Lee Jamerson was born in Charleston, South Carolina, to James Jamerson, Sr., who worked at the local shipyards, and Elizabeth, a homemaker. His parents divorced when he was young, so Jamerson spent the majority of his time with his aunt and grandmother, who encouraged his early interest in gospel, jazz, and blues music.

At the age of ten, Jamerson was severely injured in a bicycle accident, which kept him wheelchair bound. When he recovered, his mother sent for him, and he relocated with her to Detroit in 1954. There he met Annie Wells, and, though still in their teens, they were married. Jamerson entered Northwestern High School, joined the school orchestra, and chose the acoustic bass as his instrument. Influenced by jazz greats Ray Brown and Paul Chambers, Jamerson was offered the opportunity to study jazz bass at the collegiate level, but he decided to pursue a career as a professional musician. Local sessions and gigs with Jackie Wilson led to his recruitment by Motown founder Berry Gordy to become a member of the Funk Brothers, the legendary Motown house band for which Jamerson recorded on acoustic and electric bass.

After nearly fifteen years with the Funk Brothers in Detroit, Jamerson followed Motown Records to Los Angeles, where he made additional recordings as a freelance bassist. His long-standing struggles with alcoholism caused gradual deterioration of his health, and Jamerson died on August 2, 1983, in Los Angeles.

The Music

Jamerson began constructing influential bass tracks as soon as Motown began producing records in 1959. He appeared on hundreds of popular Motown recordings as the primary bass player in the Funk Brothers, the Motown backing band comprising roughly one hundred musicians who performed on all Motown recordings. Although other prominent, talented bassists worked with Funk Brothers and appeared on Motown tracks (notably Bob Babbitt and Eddie Watkins), the bass player on nearly all of the number-one Motown songs was Jamerson.

The construction and implementation of the Funk Brothers sound allowed Jamerson to turn out distinctive, historic bass grooves. While the general role of the bass player in jazz music is to provide a stable rhythmic pulse, there is always room for each player of a jazz rhythm section to improvise and share rhythmic and harmonic duties. In the Funk Brothers' formula, however, the drums, guitar, piano, and percussion had fixed, specific rhythmic roles essential to the interlocking Motown grooves. The Funk Brothers' bass player, however, had some musical independence. Jamerson's bass lines, from the earliest Motown grooves, syncopate (or play against) the other rhythm-section players, providing a feeling of musical momentum through the freely moving and shifting bass lines. In Jamerson's skillful hands, this technique was not purely rhythmic in effect. He made interesting melodic note choices, while moving up and down the bass, to provide colorful accents to the chord changes, vocal melodies, and horn lines. In many respects, Jamerson's bass lines were the glue that held the Funk Brothers together and ultimately created the Motown sound.

The Early Motown Recordings. The list of Jamerson's most influential tracks parallels the history of Motown hits. He played on the Miracles' "Shop Around" (1960), which was the first Motown track to reach number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts, and the Marvelettes' "Please Mr. Postman" (1961), which was Motown's first number-one record on the pop charts. Two tracks that reached number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts quickly followed: "Do You Love Me?" (the Contours, 1962) and "(Love Is Like a) Heat Wave" (Martha and the Vandellas, 1963). In 1965 Jamerson recorded one of his most famous and most recognizable grooves, returning to the acoustic bass on Mary Wells's "My Guy," which reached number one on the pop charts.

The Classic Motown Performances. By the mid-1960's, Motown had hit its stride and released an unprecedented series of number-one hits, nearly all of which featured Jamerson with his instantly recognizable bass performances. He performed on tracks by Diana Ross and the Supremes ("Stop in the Name of Love," "You Can't Hurry Love," "Where Did Our Love Go?"), Stevie Wonder ("Uptight," "For Once in My Life," "My Cherie Amour," "Fingertips, Part 2"), Marvin Gaye ("I Heard It Through the Grapevine," "Ain't No Mountain High Enough," "How Sweet It Is," "What's Going On?"), Smokey Robinson and the Miracles ("Ooh Baby Baby," "You've Really Got a Hold on Me," "I Second That Emotion," "Tracks of My Tears"), the Temptations ("My Girl," "The Way You Do the Things You Do," "Ain't Too Proud to Beg," "Beauty Is Only Skin Deep"), and the Four Tops ("Standing in the Shadows of Love," "I Can't Help Myself," "Reach out I'll Be There," "Baby I Need Your Loving"). A few other famous tracks include the famous bass line on the Jackson 5's "I Want You Back," Jr. Walker and the All-Stars' "Shotgun," and the famous non-Motown Jackie Wilson track, "Higher and Higher."

Musical Legacy

The Motown sound was a major influence on the enormously popular hip-hop, rap, neo-soul, and contemporary rhythm-and-blues styles that emerged in the 1980's and 1990's. Jamerson played a vital role in establishing that Motown sound. Additionally, Jamerson influenced bass players and songwriters in the rock-and-roll genre; Paul McCartney cited Jamerson as a major influence. Jamerson's melodic, thoughtful, supportive, and syncopated bass lines influenced bass players who performed popular music after 1960. Jamerson was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1990.

Eric Novod

Further Reading

Early, Gerald Lyn. Motown and American Culture. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 2004. A cultural study of the popularization of African American music through Motown. Brief references to Jamerson.

Posner, Gerald. L. Motown: Music, Money, Sex, and Power. New York: Random House, 2002. A cultural history of Motown.

Rubin, Dave. Motown Bass. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2000. An instructional book with recording that highlights Jamerson's work and musical style. Includes full transcriptions of many Jamerson bass tracks.

Slutsky, Allan. Standing in the Shadows of Motown: The Life and Music of Legendary Bassist James Jamerson. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 1989. A thorough biography of Jamerson, with popular bass players discussing their reverence for Jamerson's work. Includes discography.

See also: Costello, Elvis; McCartney, Sir Paul; Wilson, Jackie.

Elmore James

American blues singer-songwriter, bandleader, and guitarist

James is a vital link between the pre-World War II acoustic country blues of the Mississippi Delta and the postwar electric blues of Chicago. A master of the electric slide guitar, he brought the idiom, intensity, and even guitar licks of such Delta blues legends as Robert Johnson into the urban rhythm-and-blues era.

Born: January 27, 1918; Richland, Mississippi
Died: May 24, 1963; Chicago, Illinois
Also known as: Elmore Brooks (birth name)
Member of: The Broomdusters

Principal recordings

ALBUM: Blues After Hours, 1961.

SINGLES: "Dust My Broom (I Believe My Time Ain't Long)," 1951; "I Believe," 1952; "Please Find My Baby," 1952; "Country Boogie," 1953; "Early in the Morning," 1953; "Dark and Dreary," 1954; "Hand in Hand," 1954; "Blues Before Sunrise," 1955; "Dust My Blues," 1955; "I Believe My Time Ain't Long," 1955; "Cry for Me Baby," 1957; "It Hurts Me Too," 1957; "Make My Dreams Come True," 1959; "I Can't Hold Out," 1960; "Knocking at Your Door," 1960; "Rockin' and Tumblin'," 1960; "The Sky Is Crying," 1960; "Look on Yonder Wall," 1961; "Everyday I Have the Blues," 1965; "My Bleeding Heart," 1965; "Standing at the Crossroads," 1965; "Shake Your Money Maker," 1966.

The Life

Elmore Brooks was born in the Mississippi Delta in 1918. He was the illegitimate son of fifteen-year-old Leola Brooks and took the surname of his stepfather, Joe Willie "Frost" James. He was raised on a sharecropping farm but early decided to become a musician. Without money and with only a fourth-grade education, he gravitated toward blues music. He constructed a one-string instrument using old broom wire and a lard can (a "diddley bow") and practiced assiduously. By the time he was able to buy his first guitar, he had already become a skilled musician. By the age of fourteen, he was performing in juke joints, in roadhouses, and at catfish suppers, supporting himself during the week as a radio repairman.

Around 1936, James met the legendary bluesman Robert Johnson, who may have taught him the rudiments of slide guitar. James married Minnie Mae around 1942, Georgianna Crump in 1947, and a woman named Janice (her surname is unknown) around 1954. The legal status of his three marriages is uncertain but produced, it is believed, seven children, including musician Elmore James, Jr. From 1943 to 1945, James was in the U.S. Navy, stationed in Guam during World War II and rising to the rank of coxswain. When he returned to the Delta after the war, he adopted the newly popular electric guitar. In 1946 he was diagnosed with a weak heart.

James's career took off with the release of his classic recording of "Dust My Broom." He moved to Memphis and then to Chicago, the center of the burgeoning electric blues music, and formed his band, the Broomdusters, which became one of the top Chicago bands. Although performing regularly, James suffered recurring heart problems that slowed his career. His medical condition was aggravated by heavy drinking and a tempestuous lifestyle. Then, because of unpaid dues and contractual difficulties, he was blacklisted by the Chicago Musicians' Union for three years. In 1963, while James was staying with his older cousin, "Homesick" James Williamson, and preparing to join the American Folk Blues Festival tour in Europe, he died of a heart attack.

The Music

As he was growing up in the Delta, James played in Delta juke joints with such legendary musicians as Sonny Boy Williamson II (Rice Miller), Robert Lockwood, and Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup. It is also possible that he performed with the bluesman most influential on his music, Robert Johnson, before Johnson's untimely death in 1938. Shortly thereafter, James formed a partnership with his stepbrother, guitarist Robert Earl Holston, and began leading his own band, with Holston on second guitar, Precious White on saxophone, Frock O'Dell on drums, and Tutney Moore on trumpet.

By the early 1940's James was already known for his electric slide guitar—the most important contribution he would make to modern blues. Delta musicians such as Johnson played acoustic slide or bottleneck guitar, with the neck of a broken bottle or a metal ring gliding across the guitar frets, producing sustained, bended notes. James was one of the first musicians to add electric amplification to the slide guitar. A radio repairman by trade, he experimented with various amplifier hookups, making his guitar not only louder but also capable of tonal distortion and echo effects. Even on his early release "Please Find My Baby" (1952), James can be heard playing a raucous, powerful synthesis of slide guitar and electric amplification.

Elmore James. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

"Dust My Broom." Perhaps no blues musician is as heavily identified with a single song as James is with "Dust My Broom (I Believe My Time Ain't Long)." The legendary Johnson was the first to release a recording of "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom" in 1937, which he had adapted from various sources. James recorded his own version on August 5, 1951, on the Trumpet label with O'Dell on drums, Leonard Warren on electric bass, and Sonny Boy Williamson on harmonica. When it was released in early 1952 it hit the Top 10 on Billboard's rhythm-and-blues chart. James sings with a raw quality reminiscent of the Delta holler

> I'm gonna get up in the morning,
> I believe I'll dust my broom
> I'm gonna get up in the morning,
> I believe I'll dust my broom
> I'll quit the best gal I'm lovin', > now my friends can get my room.

On his 1937 recording of "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," Johnson had played four sets, and a truncated fifth set, of high-velocity, high-note triplets. Johnson had repeated the triplet figures on "Ramblin' Blues" but with slide guitar. James begins "Dust My Broom" with these high-note triplets over Williamson's blues harp, but now playing electric slide guitar.

This riff has become one of the signature sounds of the electric blues guitar. Thousands of blues guitarists have since played some version of these repeated triplet notes and motifs at the twelfth fret of the guitar. When combined with boogie lines on bass and piano, this sound would become one of the building blocks of rhythm and blues. James's biographer Steve Franz gives his own reason for the prevalence of the "Dust My Broom" riff in modern blues. The blues was based on the call-and-response of both religious music and the field holler. In modern blues, according to Franz, the sung verse serves as a two-measure call and the high-pitch triplet riff represents a one-measure response, echoing the traditional call-and-response.

"I Believe." With the success of "Dust My Broom," James formed his electric blues group the Broomdusters at the end of 1952. The Broomdusters would become one of the best known of the Chicago blues bands, rivaling the groups put together by Muddy Waters. Although the band personnel would vary, the heart of the group consisted of James on lead electric guitar, with his cousin "Homesick" James Williamson on electric bass (and sometimes second lead guitar), Odie Payne, Jr., playing drums, Johnny Jones at the piano, and J. T. Brown on tenor saxophone. One of the Broomdusters' first releases in 1952 was "I Believe."

A James composition, "I Believe" picks up where "Dust My Broom" left off, featuring variations of the high-pitch triplets run: "I believe, I believe, my time ain't long/ Dust my broom this mornin', I know I treat my baby wrong." In early rhythm and blues, the guitar and saxophone competed for the lead, and here Brown's saxophone has replaced Williamson's harmonica in the introduction. The rhythm section follows the introduction with tightly crafted and energetic support. James's singing is raw and energetic. James concludes with a linear, single-note slide solo that soars over the rhythm section.

"Hawaiian Boogie." In 1953, the Broomdusters released "Hawaiian Boogie." This instrumental shows the cohesiveness and precision of the Broomdusters, as well as their versatility. James begins with an explosive guitar lick. Brown's saxophone honkings, Jones's barrelhouse piano, and the insistent bass playing of Ransom Knowling add a jazzlike groove. Both Jones on piano and Brown on saxophone play succinctly and impressively, while James fills the song with intricate guitar runs.

"The Sky Is Crying." "The Sky Is Crying" was James's most popular song in the 1960's. It made the rhythm-and-blues charts and sold 600,000 copies. This slow, haunting blues piece features an evocative title and refrain:

> The sky is cryin', look at the tears roll down the street
> The sky is cryin', look at the tears roll down the street
> I'm wadin' in tears lookin' for my baby, > and I wonder where she can be?

James's slide guitar sounds especially lyrical. His singing is dramatic and decorated with glissandi notes.

"Madison Blues." "Madison Blues" was the last recording by the Broomdusters, capping a collaboration of more than seven years. Inspired by a then current dance, "Madison Blues" is a rollicking rhythm-and-blues number. It illustrates how the electric amplification, the boogie bass line of the rhythm section, the lead guitar riffs, and the squawking saxophone transformed the Delta blues sound of the 1930's and 1940's into 1950's and 1960's rhythm and blues.

"Shake Your Money Maker." "Shake Your Money Maker" would be one of James's most popular and most often covered songs. While retaining his intensity on vocals, James leads his band in an up-tempo, danceable rhythm-and-blues number. Except for twanging a few well-placed blue notes, James's slide guitar is submerged into the rhythm section.

Musical Legacy

Elmore James is one of the foremost architects of the electric blues and rhythm-and-blues music emerging from postwar Chicago, and he may well be the most influential electric slide guitarist in blues history. He played with great virtuosity, embellished by his fierce, heartfelt vocals. He was sought after on the blues circuit for his renditions of "Dust My Broom." He was also an accomplished bandleader. His Broomdusters band was perhaps second only to the Muddy Waters bands among Chicago electric blues groups.

Without diminishing his unique contributions, it is fair to note James's place as a transitional figure. He was profoundly influenced by the prewar Delta bluesmen, especially Robert Johnson. When Johnson had fallen into obscurity in the 1940's, James continued to pay homage to such Johnson recordings as "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," "Crossroad Blues," and "Ramblin' on My Mind." James would make use of Johnson's "turnaround" guitar technique between verses. After a verse, Johnson would often play a dominant seventh rather than resting on a tonic chord like most blues guitarists. This technique added tension and propulsion to the song's movement.

Most notably, James electrified Johnson's slide triplet riffs on lead guitar. James also took the boogie bass lines that Johnson played on the lower strings and assigned them to the piano, drum, and bass guitar rhythm sections. With the bass guitar now driving a one-two beat and the lead guitar playing various riffs, James's electric band helped pioneer the precursors to rhythm and blues. Moreover, when polished and smoothed out, this basic vocabulary would help form both soul music and early rock and roll. James's experiments with guitar amplifications demonstrated not only that electric blues could be loud enough to reach the back of any crowded juke joint or concert hall but also that he could distort and twist the aural sound—effects that would be heard again in psychedelic rock. James's slashing, single-note guitar technique, amplified sounds, and high-intensity vocals influenced Chicago blues guitarists such as B. B. King and Albert King and rock guitarists such as Jimi Hendrix, Frank Zappa, Duane Allman, Eric Clapton, and Johnny Winter. James's influence can also be heard in such blues-rock bands as the Butterfield Blues Band, Canned Heat, and Fleetwood Mac.

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Dixon, Willie, and Don Snowden. I Am the Blues: The Willie Dixon Story. London: Quartet Books, 1989. The Chicago blues leader's autobiography.

Franz, Steve. The Amazing Secret History of Elmore James. Saint Louis, Mo.: BlueSource, 2003. The definitive biography of James, with an exhaustive discography, bibliography, and musical references. An entire chapter is devoted to the phenomenon, covers, and musical structure of the song "Dust My Broom" and its signature riff.

George-Warren, Holly, and Patricia Romanowski, eds. The Rolling Stones Encyclopedia of Rock and Roll. 3d ed. New York: Fireside, 2005. This A through Z reference work archives James's influence as a precursor to rock and roll.

Kimora, Edward. The Road to Robert Johnson. Milwaukee: Hal Leonard, 2007. A musical discussion of Johnson's blues that examines his influence on James's electric guitar.

Palmer, Robert. Deep Blues: A Musical and Cultural History of the Mississippi Delta. London: Viking Penguin, 1982. A seminal history of the Delta blues, by the late New York Times pop and rock critic. Emphasizes James's transitional role.

Rowe, Michael. Chicago Breakdown. London: Eddison Press, 1973. This history of Chicago blues includes firsthand accounts of James's life and death.

Wald, Elijah. Escaping the Delta: Robert Johnson and the Invention of the Blues. New York: Amistad, 2005. An excellent musical biography of Robert Johnson, explaining how Johnson's innovative guitar work laid the ground for James and other urban blues and rhythm-and-blues musicians.

See also: Berry, Chuck; Cotton, James; Fuller, Blind Boy; House, Son; Howlin' Wolf; Johnson, Robert; King, Albert; Patton, Charley; Raitt, Bonnie; Rodgers, Jimmie; Turner, Big Joe; Waters, Muddy; Williamson, Sonny Boy, II.

Etta James

American rhythm-and-blues singer and songwriter

For a blues singer, James had a voice of remarkable range. She was adept at shouting the pain of love as well as at crooning tenderly about love's disappointments.

Born: January 25, 1938; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: Jamesetta Hawkins (birth name); Peaches

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: At Last!, 1961; The Second Time Around, 1961; Sings for Lovers, 1962; Top Ten, 1963; The Queen of Soul, 1965; Call My Name, 1966; Tell Mama, 1968; Funk, 1970; Losers Weepers, 1971; Peaches, 1973; Come a Little Closer, 1974; Deep in the Night, 1978; Etta Is Betta than Evah, 1978; Changes, 1980; Chess Masters, 1981; Good Rockin' Mama, 1981; Tuff Love, 1983; R & B Queen, 1986; Etta James on Chess, 1988; The Sweetest Peaches, Pt. 2, 1988; The Gospel Soul of Etta James, 1989; Seven Year Itch, 1989; Stickin' to My Guns, 1990; The Sweetest Peaches, Pt. 1, 1990; Tell Mama, Vol. 1, 1991; Back in Blues, 1992; I'd Rather Go Blind, 1992; The Right Time, 1992; Mystery Lady: Songs of Billie Holiday, 1994; Time After Time, 1995; Love's Been Rough on Me, 1997; Respect Yourself, 1997; Life, Love, and the Blues, 1998; Twelve Songs of Christmas, 1998; The Heart of a Woman, 1999; Matriarch of the Blues, 2000; Blue Gardenia, 2001; Let's Roll, 2003; Blues to the Bone, 2004; All the Way, 2006; To Go: Stick It in Your Ear, 2006.

SINGLES: "Good Rockin' Daddy," 1955; "The Wallflower (Dance with Me, Henry)," 1955; "All I Could Do Was Cry," 1960; "If I Can't Have You," 1960 (with Harvey Fuqua); "At Last," 1961; "Something's Got a Hold on Me," 1962; "In the Basement," 1966 (with Sugar Pie De Santo).

Etta James. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Life

Etta James was born Jamesetta Hawkins in Los Angeles on January 25, 1938, when her mother, Dorothy, was fourteen. James grew up not knowing her father's identity; later, she discovered he was believed to have been Rudolf Wanderone, Jr., the famous pool player known as Minnesota Fats. James did not meet Wanderone until 1987. Because her mother was unable to care for her, James was raised by Dorothy's landlady, Lula Rogers. James began singing in a church choir, and she performed on radio broadcasts when she was five. After Rogers died in 1950, James moved to San Francisco to live with her mother. There James formed the singing group the Creolettes, and in 1954 rhythm-and-blues performer Johnny Otis changed the group's name to the Peaches and the lead singer's name to Etta James.

She and Otis wrote "The Wallflower (Dance with Me, Henry)," recorded by Modern Records as a response to Hank Ballard's popular "Work with Me, Annie," and it reached number two on the rhythm-and-blues charts, with a sanitized version by Georgia Gibbs becoming a number-one pop hit. James soon became a solo act, with such songs as "Good Rockin' Daddy" serving as a prototype for early rock and roll. James extended her range when she moved to Chicago and signed with Chess Records in 1960. Influenced by Billie Holiday, Dinah Washington, and Johnny "Guitar" Watson, James had ten rhythm-and-blues hits during the 1960's, including "At Last," "All I Could Do Was Cry," "I'd Rather Go Blind," and "Tell Mama," songs that would remain in her repertoire during the following decades.

As is documented in her autobiography, James began using heroin in 1959. When she tried to end the addiction through methadone treatment in the late 1960's, she became addicted to this drug as well. After being arrested for writing bad checks, James began rehabilitation in 1973.

When James resumed recording for Chess Records later that year, she assumed more artistic control, and her voice had become grittier, more soulful. Her first album in this period, Etta James, was nominated for a Best Rhythm and Blues Vocal Grammy Award. After Chess Records declared bankruptcy, James began recording for other labels. In 1978 she was the opening act for the Rolling Stones' American tour at the request of Keith Richards, who would later select James to perform in the documentary Chuck Berry: Hail! Hail! Rock and Roll (1987). A highlight of director Taylor Hackford's film is the scene of irascible Berry, unable to remember that the teenaged James was one of his backup singers on "Almost Grown" and "Back in the U.S.A.," being astounded floored by her passionate bellowing of Berry's "Rock and Roll Music."

In the 1990's James's sons joined her recording and touring group. Donto James played drums and percussions and sang backup, while Sametto James played bass. James settled in Riverside, California, with her husband, Artis Mills. A longtime problem with obesity led to knee problems, forcing the singer to perform while seated. After gastric bypass surgery in 2003, she lost two hundred pounds.

James won Grammy Awards for Best Jazz Vocal Performance for Mystery Lady: Songs of Billie Holiday in 1994, Best Contemporary Blues Album for Let's Roll in 2003, and Best Traditional Blues Album for Blues to the Bone in 2004. James was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993 and into the Blues Hall of Fame in 2001. She received a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) Image Award in 1990, a Rhythm and Blues Foundation Pioneer Award in 1989, a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in 2003, and a Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award in 2004.

The Music

As with many blues performers, the influence of gospel music is evident in James's vibrant singing. She moves easily from blues to rhythm-and-blues, to rock, to jazz, and even to country music.

"At Last." The most famous of James's early songs is "At Last." Written by Mack Gordon and Harry Warren, the song was a hit for big band leader Glenn Miller in 1941, but it never became part of the standards repertoire until James's rousing 1961 rendition, a definitive power ballad. James draws out the lyrics to accentuate the joy of love fulfilled. Her chilling version of "At Last" has frequently appeared in television commercials and films, including Rain Man (1988).

Mixing Genres. James began moving more earnestly toward traditional blues with Seven Year Itch, nominated for a Best Contemporary Blues Grammy Award. Her commitment to the hard-driving rhythms she described as "gutbucket" continued with Stickin' to My Guns, which mixed rock, soul, and funk with the blues, an indication of James's musical curiosity and restlessness, her resistance to being pinned down to a single genre. James asked the legendary music producer Jerry Wexler to leave retirement to produce The Right Time, a similar mix of genres, with the highlight being her forceful rendition of Ray Charles's "Nighttime Is the Right Time," making it more sexually suggestive than the original, a quality she has accentuated in her live performances, especially with such songs as "I Want to Ta-Ta You, Baby." She long wanted to do a country album, but after Love's Been Rough on Me was remixed to sound jazzier, James disowned it.

Mystery Lady. She made the biggest departure of her career and she had one of her greatest successes with Mystery Lady: The Songs of Billie Holiday. Singing such ballads as "Don't Explain" and "Lover Man," James does not imitate Holiday's voice or her phrasing (as a young woman James briefly met Holiday), but she gives the songs a distinctive spin of her own. Her husky, throaty voice on "Body and Soul" erases the thin line between jazz and blues. More standards albums followed, including Time after Time and Blue Gardenia, in which her mother, a longtime jazz fan, joined her on the title song.

Blues to the Bone. Blues to the Bone is a counterpart to her ballad albums, with such blues classics as Jimmy Reed's "Hush Hush," Willie Dixon's "Little Red Rooster," John Lee Hooker's "Crawlin' King Snake," and Robert Johnson's "Dust My Broom." Although such songs present a male perspective on love and sex, James makes them applicable to women as well through the theatricality of her voice, which shifts effortlessly from a roar to a purr.

Musical Legacy

James's powerhouse vocals have influenced numerous performers, particularly Mick Jagger and Janis Joplin (who was thirteen years old when she met James). Singers such as Norah Jones and Joss Stone have also cited James as a model for their singing styles. Since the mid-1950's, James has presented a persistently female perspective in her songs, paving the way for such singer-songwriters as Maria Muldaur, Bonnie Raitt, and Susan Tedeschi. Songs such as "Only Women Bleed" and "Sugar on the Floor" emphasize how women suffer for love.

Michael Adams

Further Reading

Dieckman, Katherine. "Etta James." Rolling Stone (November 13, 1997): 152-153. In this article, James discusses the feminist and sexual sides of her music.

James, Etta, and David Ritz. Rage to Survive: The Etta James Story. New York: Villard, 1995. James provides an honest and often painful account of her personal and professional life.

Ritz, David. "Etta James, Soul Mama." In Bluesland: Portraits of Twelve Major American Blues Masters, edited by Toby Byron. New York: Dutton, 1991. This chapter presents an overview of James's contribution to the development of the modern blues.

Waller, Don. "The Billboard Interview: Etta James." Billboard 113 (August 11, 2001): 20-22. James discusses her favorite singers and songwriters, and she explains how she selects the songs she records.

See also: Berry, Chuck; Charles, Ray; Dixon, Willie; Jagger, Sir Mick; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Joplin, Janis; King, B. B.; Otis, Johnny; Pickett, Wilson; Reed, Jimmy; Washington, Dinah.

Leoš Janáček

Czech classical composer

Janáček spent most of his professional life as a teacher and conductor in Moravia. As a composer, he sought inspiration in real motives encountered in nature, particularly the intonations and rhythms of human speech. He contributed to preserving and elaborating on regional folk musics.

Born: July 3, 1854; Hukvaldy, Moravia, Austrian Empire (now in Austria)
Died: August 12, 1928; Ostrava, Czechoslovakia (now in Czech Republic)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Pohádka, 1910, revised 1912 (Fairy Tale; for cello and piano); Violin Sonata, 1922; String Quartet No. 27, 1924 (Kreutzer); Mládí, 1925 (Youth); Capriccio: Vzdor, 1926 (Defiance); Concertino, 1926; String Quartet No. 2, 1928 (Listy důvěrné; Intimate Letters).

CHORAL WORKS: Válečná, 1873 (War Song); Osud neujdeš, 1876 (You Cannot Escape Your Fate); Naše píseň, 1890 (Our Song); Už je slúnko z tej hory ven, 1894 (The Sun Has Risen Above That Hill); Zápisník zmizelého, 1921 (Diary of One Who Disappeared); Mša glagolskaja, 1927 (Glagolitic Mass); Osamělá bez těchy, 1978 (Alone Without Comfort).

OPERAS (music): Jenůfa, 1904 (libretto by Janáček; based on Gabriela Preissova's play Její pastorkyóa); Osud, 1904 (Fate; libretto by Janáček and Fedora Bartošová); Výlety páně Broučkovy, 1920 (The Adventures of Mr. Brouček; libretto by František Sarafínský Procházka; based on Svatopluk Čech's novel); Káťa kabanová, 1921 (libretto by Janáček; based on Alexander Ostrovsky's novel The Storm); Příhody lišky bystroušky, 1924 (The Cunning Little Vixen; libretto by Janáček; based on Ostrovsky's play The Thunderstorm); Věc Makropulos, 1926 (The Makropulos Case; libretto by Janáček; based on Karel Čapek's play); Z mrtvého domu, 1930 (From the House of the Dead; libretto by Janáček; based on Fyodor Dostoevski's novel).

Leoš Janáček and his wife.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Suite for String Orchestra, 1877; Taras Bulba, Rhapsody, 1921; Sinfonietta, 1926; Lašské tance, 1928 (Lachian Dances).

PIANO WORKS: Zdenči-menuetto, 1880 (Zdenka's Minuet); Z ulce dne 1. října 1905, 1906 (From the Street, October 1, 1905; piano sonata); V mlhách, 1912 (In the Mists); Ej, duby, duby, 1922 (O, the Oaks, the Oaks); Moravské lidové písně, 1922 (Moravian Folksongs); Po zarostlém chodníčku, 1942 (On the Overgrown Path).

The Life

Leoš Janáček (LAY-ohsh yah-NAY-chehk or YAY-nah-chehk) was born in the village of Hukvaldy in Moravia, then part of the Austrian Empire. His father, a village teacher and musician, brought the eleven-year-old Janáček to an old friend and former pupil, Pavel Křížkovský, who was director of a monastery foundation in Brno. The foundation provided scholarships for promising young students in exchange for singing in their choir. Janáček boarded as a chorister at the monastery, and he enrolled in a German-language day school. The contrast between life and culture at the monastery and at the day school was stark. At the day school, he was treated as a second-class individual, which had a major impact on his developing self-identity and on the Czech pride that later emerged in his character. His early interest in psychology, which would prove a strong influence on his ideas and music, also dates from this period.

Expecting to follow the same career as his father (who had died in 1866), Janáček attended the Teachers' Training Institute in Brno from 1869 to 1872. From 1872 to 1874, he served there as a teacher of music, and he became active as a choirmaster. In the fall of 1874, he enrolled at the Organ School in Prague. His enthusiasm and drive led him to compress the normal three-year course into two years. During this time, he began his lifelong friendship with Antonín Dvořák, at the time a relatively unknown musician and composer. By 1874, Janáček was committed to his desire to become a composer. although he spent most of his career employed as a teacher, an administrator, and a conductor. His compositions did not gain widespread notoriety until late in his life, even more so posthumously.

He married Zdenka Schulzová in 1881. They had two children: their son, Vladimir, died in 1890 at the age of two; their daughter, Olga, died at the age of twenty in 1903. These losses, especially the latter, had a deleterious impact on the already shaky relationship between him and his wife.

Janáček left behind a mass of writings, published and private, which are now housed in archives in Brno. He filled the margins of his books with notes, and he carried on numerous lengthy correspondences. His seventy-five notebooks, his essays on speech melodies, his calendars, and his various jottings, spanning nearly fifty years, further enrich the understanding of his thought processes, motivations, and interests.

The Music

Janáček's compositions include solo piano works, chamber music, and orchestral compositions. He is most noted for his vocal works, including many choruses, chamber song cycles, and numerous operas. He was committed to realism in his dramatic works, and he openly reveals strongly held political and social convictions in his choice of texts. In addition to working on original compositions, he spent many years gathering and elaborating on native folk musics.

Lachian Dances. Lachian Dances stand as testament to Janáček's friendship with and emulation of Dvořák, a symbol of his dedication to the folk arts. Inspired by Dvořák's Slavonic Dances (1878), Janáček produced a series of dances reflective of the culture of his homeland. These works were composed separately beginning in the late 1880's. During this time he had traveled frequently with his friend, the linguist František Bartoš, who was known especially for seminal efforts to describe regional dialects. Together they collected and published many folk songs. It was likely that on these excursions Janáček cultivated an interest not only in the varieties of folk music encountered but also in the melodies and rhythms of dialectic speech and everyday life. Some of his notebooks preserve the impressions of roosters, hens, and other birds and the soundscapes of wind and waves, beehives and cows.

Jenůfa. Completed in early 1903, and premiered on the stage in Brno a year later, Jenůfa would not be performed in Prague for another dozen years. Sadly for Janáček, the deciding conductor at the National Theater in Prague was Karel Kovařovic, who apparently had not forgotten a harsh critique of one of his compositions penned by Janáček more than a decade earlier. Kovařovic's biting initial rejection evinced his revenge, though he would eventually relent, allowing a Prague premiere in 1916. Significantly, Jenůfa was the first of Janáček's operas to fully incorporate his brand of realism based on what he considered the natural melodies of speech. The composer had been producing transcriptions of speech melodies from as early as 1897. He continued this practice for the rest of his life, eventually filling nearly fifty notebooks with his observations.

From the Street, October 1, 1905. This sparse piano sonata was a personal reaction to a peaceful street protest seeking the establishment of a Czech-language university in Brno in which the composer may have participated. The protest was brutally suppressed by soldiers, culminating in the unfortunate death by bayonet goring of an unarmed young carpenter named František Pavlík. This work portrays a somber and reflective mood, and at times it is angry, stark, and unadorned. It was first performed publicly in January, 1906. The work was originally composed of three movements, but the composer inexplicably destroyed the third movement before the performance, eventually discarding the other two as well. Decades later, the first two movements were recovered, when the performer from the premiere concert produced her copy of the manuscript.

Diary of One Who Disappeared. The Diary of One Who Disappeared is difficult to classify as a composition. Its twenty-one sections are set mostly for tenor solo and piano, with two including other voices, and another set for piano alone. The text had appeared as poems published anonymously in the popular newspaper Lidové noviny. They tell the story of a boy, with the name of Janáček, who falls in love with a mysterious Romany girl. His affection blossoms, and he finally departs from the world he has known to join his lover and their son. Completing the cycle in 1919, its style shows a remarkable independence of mind. The work presents a ripening of his speech melody technique, short independent motives, and little development in a traditional musical sense. The piano emerges both to support and to comment on the action. The text itself—the illicit love affair and the fantasy of disappearance—clearly spoke to the hidden world of the composer, whose relationship with his wife was strained and his affections for others well known.

Sinfonietta. Janáček's Sinfonietta, dating from 1926, provides a glimpse into the mature and the finally confident composer. The first movement presents an enduring, celebratory, brassy, and percussive fanfare. The second movement has a folksy, dance air, with a continuous melodic weaving similar to his contemporary, Giacomo Puccini. The third movement leads through a dreamy, peaceful nostalgia, toward a Slavic-flavored fanfare, reminiscent of Hector Berlioz's symphonic experiments of the previous generation. The fourth movement, with its simple, driving motivation, evokes the sort of country village portrayed in many of his operas. The fifth movement ties this all together, from a Felix Mendelssohn-like entrance, with a fantasy of wood nymphs, through the triumphalism of his dramatic close. Overall, there is a freedom of rhythmic movement and a continuous flow of melody, at times almost directionless. Janáček's blending of the cutting edge and the traditional speak of his mastery of both new and old in the styles that surrounded him. His relative isolation, his long wait for broader recognition, and his stubborn personality allowed the development of a voice, clearly influenced by the cultures of his milieu and by some of the musical experimentalism of his day, yet unique in its execution.

Musical Legacy

Janáček's legacy is both direct and indirect. Much of his career involved his role as pedagogue. In 1881 he was appointed founding director of the new Brno Organ School (later Conservatory), in whose establishment he had played a prominent role. He taught not only composition but also violin, piano, voice, and theory, having written several texts in these areas. His many students included prominent Czech composers and performers of the subsequent generation: Rudolf Firkušny, Vilém Tauský, and Pavel Haas.

While the incorporation of speech melodies and folk elements in twentieth century compositions has often been linked with work by other composers (Modest Mussorgsky, Béla Bartók), Janáček's contributions went well beyond the curiosity of a musician's sketchbook. His study of sound perception and the emotional content encoded in the prosody of speech remain of interest to scholars decades after his death. Janáček's often sparse and disjunct style of composition; his approach to the role of music and drama in relation to local cultures, especially the sound culture of spoken languages; his exploration of the musical aspects of the environment, predating the musings of John Cage; and his reflections on cultural as well as universal differences mark him as a singular figure in music history. Further study by scholars of Janáček's notebooks and published articles reveals nuances in his sometimes opaque writing, and his musical compositions continue their rise in popularity.

Jonathan G. Secora Pearl

Further Reading

Beckerman, Michael. Janáček as Theorist. Stuyvesant, N.Y.: Pendragon Press, 1994. This volume presents a view of Janáček's theoretical output and his sometimes questionable application of his theories within his own compositions. The discussion is placed firmly within historical context, providing evidence and commentary alongside technical considerations.

_____, ed. Janáček and His World. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 2003. Essays from established and new Janáček scholars, followed by a selection of the composer's own writings, newly translated with commentary. This volume was published in the wake of the Bard Music Festival presentation of the same name, held in preparation for the sesquicentennial of the composer's birth.

Drlíková, Eva, ed. Leoš Janáček: Chronology of His Life and Work. Brno, Czechoslovakia: Opus Musicum, 2004. A concise chronology of the composer's life, including major events and works, along with numerous photographs. Edition is in Czech and English.

Tyrrell, John. Janáček: Years of a Life, Vol. 1 (1854-1914). London: Faber & Faber, 2006. The first in a two-volume work of nearly eighteen hundred pages represents the culmination of its author's lifetime study of Janáček's life and work.

_____. Janáček: Years of a Life, Vol. 2 (1914-1928). London: Faber & Faber, 2007. The second in a two-volume work looks at the latter part of Janáček's life. A thoroughly scholarly edition that is extensively supported by documents, citations, and references.

Wingfield, Paul, ed. Janáček Studies. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1999. This collection of articles by leading Janáček scholars represented the first major effort to gather and present English-language critical scholarship regarding Janáček's compositional output.

Zemanová, Mirka. Janáček: A Composer's Life. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 2002. This is a popular, well-researched biography of the composer's life. By design, the focus is more on the life of the composer than on his compositions.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Cage, John; Klemperer, Otto; Martinů, Bohuslav; Puccini, Giacomo.

Bert Jansch

Scottish folk guitarist, singer, and songwriter

Strongly influenced by folk music during his early years, Jansch evolved into a folk-rock musician, using popular, jazz, and blues elements for his compositions and performances.

Born: November 3, 1943; Glasgow, Scotland
Also known as: Herbert Jansch (full name)
Member of: Pentangle

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Bert Jansch, 1965; It Don't Bother Me, 1965; Bert and John, 1966 (with John Renbourn); Jack Orion, 1966; Needle of Death, 1966; Nicola, 1967; Birthday Blues, 1969; Lucky Thirteen, 1969; Sampler, 1969; Stepping Stone, 1969; Rosemary Lane, 1971; Box of Love, 1972; Moonshine, 1973; L.A. Turnaround, 1974; Santa Barbara Honeymoon, 1975; A Rare Conundrum, 1977; Avocet, 1979; Thirteen Down, 1980; Heartbreak, 1982; From the Outside, 1985; Leather Laundrette, 1988 (with Rod Clements); Ornament Tree, 1990; Sketches, 1990; When the Circus Comes to Town, 1995; Conundrum, 1998; Toy Balloon, 1998; Crimson Moon, 2000; Edge of a Dream, 2002; River Sessions, 2004; The Black Swan, 2006.

ALBUMS (with Pentangle): The Pentangle, 1968; Sweet Child, 1968; Basket of Light, 1969; Cruel Sister, 1970; Reflection, 1971; Solomon's Seal, 1972; Pentangling, 1973; Open the Door, 1985; In the Round, 1986; So Early in the Spring, 1990; Think of Tomorrow, 1991; One More Road, 1993; On Air, 1997; Passe Avant, 1999.

The Life

Herbert Jansch (jansh) was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on November 3, 1943, of Austrian-Scottish parentage, but he lived in Edinburgh for most of his childhood. During his mid-teens, Jansch studied the guitar with Jill Doyle, whose stepbrother Davy (later spelled Davey) Graham, in 1961, wrote "Angi," a piece that Jansch recorded in 1965. In the early 1960's he spent time in London, where he became acquainted with the music of Jackson C. Frank, Bob Dylan, and Paul Simon. He recorded his first album, Bert Jansch, under primitive circumstances in the home of Bill Leader, his London-based producer, over several months in 1964 and 1965.

Jansch solicited the talents of his flatmate, guitarist John Renbourn, on his next two albums. In September of 1966, Jansch gave Renbourn equal billing on Bert and John. During this fertile period, Jansch and Renbourn were overseeing a London folk club, and they became associated with London-born folksinger Jacqui McShee, percussionist Terry Cox, and bassist Danny Thompson to form the acclaimed folk-rock group Pentangle in 1967. Pentangle reflected Jansch's diverse stylistic creativity until 1973, when the group disbanded. Jansch maintained a steady output of solo albums while he was associated with Pentangle. Later group connections, notably with Conundrum and the Second Pentangle, were short-lived.

The Music

Jansch's premier skill was his guitar playing. The aggressive, percussive approach of his fingerpicking style begged attention, even from the casual listener. Beginning with his first home-produced recording in 1964, Jansch's performing conformed to a high standard of excellence. Jansch's voice presented an untrained but easygoing sound; he reached for his notes and wrapped his voice around the pitch, keeping the listener attentive. His early compositions reflected a debt to Bob Dylan's poetic rendition of original material demonstrated through voice and guitar.

Early Works. Jansch honed his guitar skills in the folk clubs of Edinburgh and London during the early 1960's. His first album, Bert Jansch, features Jansch as singer and guitarist. "Needle of Death" is a moving, if brutally honest, eulogy to a friend, who had died of a heroin overdose. The heavily blues-influenced "Strolling Down the Highway" is a masterful showcase for Jansch's mature acoustic guitar skills. Included in a rerelease of these early recordings is an eight-and-a-half-minute piece, "Instrumental Medley 1964." Despite the flaws of recording (interference of a handheld mike, a door creaking, and Jansch humming), the work testifies to Jansch's high level of improvisational skill.

"Jack Orion." The traditional song "Jack Orion" makes two notably different appearances. Its initial manifestation, on the album Jack Orion in 1966, with Renbourn on the second guitar, is a nine-and-a-half-minute murder-suicide ballad, constructed on an F minor chord alternating with an E-flat major chord. Jansch uses the higher octave of the tonic note like a recitation tone, eventually falling to the lower octave at the cadence of each quatrain. He includes spontaneous-sounding blues responses on the lead guitar as the song progresses. The 1970 version on Pentangle's Cruel Sister lasts eighteen and a half minutes, with Jansch alternating the lead vocal line with McShee. The first seven minutes recall the early Jansch recording style, but then Jansch and Renbourn take recorders in hand (with Thompson on a bowed upright bass) and produce an antiquated stylistic effect for the next four minutes. Then the group turns to a purely jazz style in an instrumental segment, featuring some astonishing guitar solo work, before finishing the story in the recording's opening style.

"The Black Swan." As a composed song from 2006, "The Black Swan," from The Black Swan, is a fine example of Jansch's orchestration abilities. His guitar playing provides a stabilizing foundation for cello, percussion, and keyboard to support his singing. The space-age lyrics consider life from a universal perspective. Although the swan of this song bears no musical relation to other musical swans, Orlando Gibbons's "The Silver Swan" (1612) and Camille Saint-Saëns's "The Swan" from Carnival of Animals (1886), the finality of life in the Gibbons madrigal text and the lonely elegance of the cello in the Saint-Saëns work do come to mind during the Jansch creation. The guitar part is based primarily on a B minor ninth chord moving to an A major chord, as the voice travels leisurely downward from the ninth (C-sharp) to the notes of the A major chord. After two repetitions of these chord progressions, the motion is echoed in the closing of each stanza with an E major chord moving to a B minor chord. An instrumental coda presents more melodic freedom in the cello part.

Musical Legacy

Although Jansch's music did not earn massive popular recognition, the artist was revered by many musicians and followers, who appreciated his energetic approach to a fingerpicking guitar style. He experimented with various tunings, which was emulated by many guitarists. In addition to his usual instrument, the six-string acoustic guitar, he occasionally used the twelve-string guitar, the electric guitar, the banjo, the dulcimer, the piano, and the recorder, adding to the colorful variety of music evident in his many albums. He served as an inspiration for Jimmy Page (of Led Zeppelin fame), Neil Young, and fellow Scotsman Donovan.

Dennis E. Ferguson

Further Reading

Harper, Colin. Dazzling Stranger: Bert Jansch and the British Folk and Blues Revival. London: Bloomsbury, 2006. Harper, an Irish music journalist, presents a thorough biography of Jansch.

Hodgkinson, Will. Guitar Man. London: Bloomsbury, 2006. On a quest to learn how to play the guitar in six months well enough to perform a gig in public, the author seeks the help of several guitarists, including Jansch, who figures most prominently in the chapter "The Cosmic Guitarist."

Stambler, Irwin, and Lyndon Stambler. Folk and Blues: The Encyclopedia. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2001. The article on Jansch covers important contacts during his early life and quotes extensively from journal interviews.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Page, Jimmy; Simon, Paul.

Keith Jarrett

American jazz composer, pianist, singer, and keyboard player

A versatile jazz pianist, Jarrett has performed extended solo improvisation concerts around the world, and he has recorded several well-regarded piano works by classical composers.

Born: May 8, 1945; Allentown, Pennsylvania
Also known as: Keith Daniel Jarrett (full name)
Member of: The Charles Lloyd Quartet; the Standards Trio

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Life Between the Exit Signs, 1967; Restoration Ruin, 1968; Somewhere Before, 1968; With Gary Burton, 1968 (with Gary Burton); Birth, 1971; ECM Works, 1971; Expectations, 1971; Facing You, 1971; The Mourning of a Star, 1971; Ruta and Daitya, 1972 (with Jack DeJohnette); Fort Yawuh, 1973; In the Light, 1973; Backhand, 1974; Belonging, 1974; Luminessence, 1974 (with Jan Garbarek); Personal Mountains, 1974; Treasure Island, 1974; Arbour Zena, 1975; The Köln Concert, 1975; Death and the Flower, 1975; Mysteries, 1975; Shades, 1975; El juicio (The Judgement), 1976; Hymns/Spheres, 1976; Spheres, 1976; Staircase, 1976; The Survivor's Suite, 1976; Bop-Be, 1977; Byablue, 1977; My Song, 1977; Ritual, 1977; Silence, 1977; Nude Ants, 1979; The Celestial Hawk, 1980; Sacred Hymns, 1980; Invocations/The Moth and the Flame, 1981; Changes, 1983; Standards, Vol. 1, 1983; Standards, Vol. 2, 1983; Spirits 1 and 2, 1985; The Well-Tempered Clavier: Book 1 (J. S. Bach), 1988; Standards in Norway, 1989; Works by Lou Harrison, 1989; Bye Bye Blackbird, 1991; J. S. Bach: Three Sonatas for Viola da Gamba and Harpsichord, 1991; Shostakovich: The Twenty-four Preludes and Fugues, Op. 87, 1991; The Well-Tempered Clavier: Book 2 (J. S. Bach), 1991; At the Deer Head Inn, 1992; Bridge of Light, 1993; Handel: Suites for Keyboard, 1995; The Melody at Night with You, 1999; Whisper Not, 2000; Radiance, 2005; The Carnegie Hall Concert, 2006; Works, 2006; Setting Standards: New York Sessions, 2007.

ALBUMS (with the Charles Lloyd Quartet): Dream Weaver, 1966; The Flowering, 1966; Nirvana, 1968; Soundtrack, 1969.

The Life

Keith Daniel Jarrett (JAHR-reht) was born on May 8, 1945, to Daniel and Irma Jarrett in Allentown, Pennsylvania. A child prodigy, Jarrett was playing melodies on the piano by ear by the age of two. Jarrett began taking piano lessons at the age of three, and at the age of seven he presented an entire solo recital that included classical works as well as his own compositions.

Jarrett's parents separated when he was eleven, leaving his mother to raise him and his four brothers. At age fifteen, he turned to playing jazz and popular music, and he began playing in local jazz bands. Contacts through summer music camps led to scholarships to the Berklee School of Music in Boston, but he attended only one year before moving to New York, where Art Blakey asked him to join his band, the Jazz Messengers, after hearing Jarrett at a jam session at the Village Vanguard.

After the year at the Berklee School of Music, Jarrett married Margot Erney in Boston. Once he became successful, the family moved to a house on several acres of land in New Jersey, where they raised two sons. Jarrett's extensive touring and other disagreements led to their separation in 1979. He later married long-term girlfriend Rose Anne Colavito. In the 1970's he contended with severe back pain while touring, and in 1996 he was forced to stop performing for more than two years because of chronic fatigue syndrome. He returned to performing and recording, but on a limited basis.

Keith Jarrett. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

Jarrett's eclectic style was forged through the influences of his training in classical piano, listening to jazz artists such as Bill Evans, McCoy Tyner, Ahmad Jamal, and Paul Bley, and performing in his early twenties with such prominent jazz musicians as Miles Davis, Art Blakey, and Charles Lloyd. Many of his recordings (more than one hundred) feature the various jazz trios and quartets with whom he has performed, but he is perhaps best known for recordings of solo concerts in the 1970's, which consisted of extended improvisations that defy categorization by genre. He has also recorded piano works by composers such as Johann Sebastian Bach, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Dmitri Shostakovich, and Lou Harrison.

Early Works. After only a few months performing with Blakey, and still only twenty years old, Jarrett joined a quartet headed by Charles Lloyd in 1965 that toured Europe and the United States extensively. Several live and studio recordings of the group were made in the late 1960's, such as Forest Flower, and included several songs composed by Jarrett for the group. Jarrett also performed for two years with Davis's group on several important recordings that highlight Jarrett's talents at piano improvisation.

Expectations. The fusion of styles on this 1971 studio recording highlights the proficiency of Jarrett as a composer, arranger, and improviser. Romantic strings in the title ballad "Expectations" add a richness and glow not typically heard playing with a jazz trio of piano, bass, and drums. Perhaps the most representative and engaging track is "There Is a Road (God's River)," which begins with an improvisational flight of fancy by Jarrett on piano, settles into a gospel groove with funk overtones in the guitar, and effortlessly melts into and out of slow sections, featuring a lush string ensemble that has the reverence of a hymn. The varied styles do not seem out of place, showing an inevitable quality that flows from one to another.

The Köln Concert. Recorded live in Cologne, Germany, in 1975, this may be Jarrett's most popular album, selling more than three million copies. It consists of three improvisatory sections for piano, lasting twenty-six, thirty-four, and seven minutes each. Its popularity can be attributed to its accessibility, with sections of infectious rhythms and repeating, simple harmonies that push the listener forward on a joyful journey. While the repetition can create a hypnotic effect, there is always an internal logic and depth of influence that make this music more substantial and satisfying than works by imitators in the later genre of New Age music.

Standards, Vol. 1. This 1983 recording is the first of what would become an ongoing collaboration of twenty-five years among Jarrett on piano, Gary Peacock on double bass, and Jack DeJohnette on drums. Standards, or well-respected pieces in the jazz repertory, are the mainstay of most jazz improvisation. The quality of playing and the unconventional interpretations on this recording, and the many subsequent recordings by this group, though, make these renditions of standards notable. The final track, "God Bless the Child," starts with a bluesy, gospel feel that smolders for several minutes before solos by all three musicians find new directions to impel the work forward. It then returns to the opening feel and a satisfying fadeout.

Handel: Suites for Keyboard. Issued in 1995, this recording presents a completely different side to Jarrett's abilities as a pianist. He demonstrates the control and precision needed to correctly play this music from the Baroque period, but he gives these groups of dances a lightness of touch that makes his interpretations compelling.

Musical Legacy

The recording Radiance from 2005 and The Carnegie Hall Concert issued in 2006 demonstrate Jarrett's ability as a solo improviser. He tours with the Standards Trio, playing both traditional and free jazz. Jarrett is often criticized for the vocal grunts, sighs, and partial singing that accompany his jazz and solo improvisations, along with his tendency to thrust and move his body while playing. While these sounds and movements can be a distraction to listeners, they seem to indicate his total immersion into his performance that makes so much of his music engaging. Jarrett has been a strong advocate for the use of acoustic, rather than electronic, musical instruments, and his innovations in improvised and composed music on traditional instruments prove that electronics are not necessary for musicians to find new ways of expression.

R. Todd Rober

Further Reading

Carr, Ian. Keith Jarrett: The Man and His Music. London: Grafton Books, 1991. This solid, although at times bland, account of Jarrett's life places his vast number of recordings into perspective.

Moreno, Jairo. "Body 'n' Soul? Voice and Movement in Keith Jarrett's Pianism." The Musical Quarterly 83, no. 1 (Spring, 1999): 75-92. A dense, academic justification of Jarrett's vocalizing and body movements.

Ouellette, Dan. "Out of Thin Air." Down Beat 72, no. 8 (August, 2005): 36-41. An interview with Jarrett focuses on his return to solo improvisation concerts and the recording Radiance.

Strickland, Edward. American Composers: Dialogues on Contemporary Music. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1991. Jarrett is one of eleven composers interviewed, and he provides insight into the influence of minimalism in his work.

Yamashita, Kimihiko. "Ferociously Harmonizing with Reality." In Keeping Time: Readings in Jazz History, edited by Robert Walser. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999. Yamashita's interview focuses on Jarrett's views of playing with Davis.

See also: Blakey, Art; Burton, Gary; Corea, Chick; Davis, Miles; Evans, Bill; Harrison, Lou; Shostakovich, Dmitri.

Jay-Z

American rapper

Jay-Z helped shape hip-hop music in the wake of the East Coast-West Coast gangsta rap rivalry. Through his role as a record executive, both at Roc-A-Fella Records and Def Jam Records, Jay-Z has discovered and fostered a number of successful artists.

Born: December 4, 1969; Brooklyn, New York
Also known as: Shawn Corey Carter (birth name)
Member of: Original Flavor

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Reasonable Doubt, 1996; In My Lifetime, Vol. 1, 1997; Vol. 2: Hard Knock Life, 1998; Vol. 3: Life and Times of S. Carter, 1999; The Dynasty Roc la Familia, 2000; The Blueprint, 2001; Unplugged, 2001; The Blueprint²: The Gift and the Curse, 2002; The Black Album, 2003; The Blueprint 2.1, 2003; Collision Course, 2004 (with Linkin Park); Kingdom Come, 2006; American Gangster, 2007; Brooklyn Gangster, 2008 (with Tapemasters Inc.).

ALBUMS (with Original Flavor): This Is How It Is, 1992; Beyond Flavor, 1993.

The Life

Born and raised in the Marcy projects of Brooklyn, Jay-Z (jay zee) spent the early portion of his career involved with drugs and establishing himself as a rapper in New York. Unable to secure a major label record deal, Jay-Z formed Roc-A-Fella Records with Damon Dash and Kareem "Biggs" Burke. The label initially pressed and sold records on its own, but it teamed with distributor Priority Records for the release of Jay-Z's first album, Reasonable Doubt, in 1996. After reaching a new distribution deal with Def Jam, In My Lifetime, Vol. 1 was released in 1997, followed the next year by Jay-Z's commercially successful album Vol. 2: Hard Knock Life. Jay-Z continued to release new studio albums until 2003, when he announced his retirement from recording and performing in order to focus on business ventures. Though retired, Jay-Z continued to work on side projects, such as his 2004 collaboration with rock group Linkin Park, Collision Course. In addition, in 2004 Jay-Z was named president and chief executive officer of Def Jam Records, which finalized his split from Dash and Burke. Jay-Z officially ended his retirement in 2005, and he released his next album the following year. In addition to his activities as an artist and record executive, Jay-Z has his own clothing line, Rocawear, which specializes in hip-hop fashion, and he is co-owner of the New Jersey Nets basketball team. In April, 2008, Jay-Z married singer Beyoncé Knowles.

The Music

While his musical style has evolved throughout his career, Jay-Z is generally known for accessible narratives that present his gritty life story to a mainstream audience. His music also contains a great deal of posturing. He frequently sings his own praises in songs and lyrically retaliates against rivals. Jay-Z is also known for his musical collaborations and utilization of numerous guest artists and producers for his albums.

Reasonable Doubt. Jay-Z's first solo album, Reasonable Doubt, was moderately successful. However, it was a critical success, and positive reviews drew attention to the emerging rapper. The songs on this album frequently refer to Jay-Z's past criminal lifestyle and utilize samples drawn from soul, funk, and jazz artists. Of the four singles released from this album "Ain't No Nigga" was the most successful. The song features female rapper Foxy Brown, and it details a relationship between Jay-Z and Brown. The album's second most successful single, "Can't Knock the Hustle," features rhythm-and-blues singer Mary J. Blige and samples "Much Too Much" by Marcus Miller and "Fool's Paradise" by Meli'sa Morgan. Lyrically the song addresses Jay-Z's past life on the streets and celebrates his extravagant lifestyle.

Vol. 2: Hard Knock Life. Jay-Z's Vol. 2: Hard Knock Life was a huge commercial success, and it propelled him to the forefront of the music industry. The success of the album, which received a Grammy Award for Best Rap Album, rests on its numerous popular singles. The first single, "Can I Get A . . .," helped popularize the rappers Amil and Ja Rule, while the second single, "Hard Knock Life (Ghetto Anthem)," samples the song of the same name from the musical Annie (1976). The third single, "Money, Cash, Hoes," features the rapper DMX and heavily utilizes descending synthesizers, and the fourth single, "Nigga What, Nigga Who," features a subdivided beat and quickly delivered lyrics.

The Blueprint. Released in 2001, The Blueprint was received well both critically and commercially, and it managed to maintain street credibility while appealing to mainstream audiences, partly because it sampled vintage soul music. Unlike other Jay-Z albums, The Blueprint has only one featured guest artist, Eminem, although it features a number of producers, including Kanye West, Timbaland, Just Blaze, and Bink. Included on the album is the song "Takeover," which samples the Doors' "Five to One," and KRS-ONE's "Sound of da Police." During the verses of the song Jay-Z attacks Prodigy of the hip-hop group Mobb Deep and the rapper Nas, which led to a rap battle between Jay-Z and Nas. "Izzo (H.O.V.A.)" was the first, and most successful, single released from the album, and it features a sample of "I Want You Back" by the Jackson Five. The song addresses, among other topics, his struggles with the music industry.

Musical Legacy

By filling the void left in the New York rap world after the death of the Notorious B.I.G. in 1997, Jay-Z helped shape the future direction of rap. He demonstrated how a rap artist could appeal to a mainstream audience while maintaining street credibility, sustaining his core base of fans while appealing to new ones. Jay-Z has also helped propel the careers of numerous artists both through collaborations on his solo albums and through his activities as a record executive. Last, Jay-Z has demonstrated how a rap artist can be a successful entrepreneur and serve as a trend-setter for hip-hop culture and fashion.

Matthew Mihalka

Further Reading

Brown, Jake. Jay-Z and the Roc-A-Fella Dynasty. New York: Colossus Books, 2005. This biography of Jay-Z is divided into three parts: his early years before Roc-A-Fella, his life and works from 1996 to 1999, and his work from 2000 to 2005. Includes black-and-white photographs and a timeline that documents the success of his music.

Bryan, Carmen. It's No Secret: From Nas to Jay-Z, from Seduction to Scandal, a Hip-Hop Helen of Troy Tells All. New York: VH1 Books, 2006. Written by Nas's ex-girlfriend, this memoir describes her relationships with various hip-hop icons, including Jay-Z.

Clements, Car. "Musical Interchange Between Indian Music and Hip-Hop." In Critical Minded: New Approaches to Hip-Hop Studies, edited by Ellie M. Hisama and Ruth Crawford. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Institute for Studies in American Music, 2005. This essay looks at Jay-Z's use of the bhangra song "Mundian to bach ke," by Punjabi MC, in his song, "Beware of the Boys."

Oliver, Richard, and Tim Leffel. Hip-Hop, Inc.: Success Strategies of the Rap Moguls. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2006. A chapter in this book focuses on the business ventures of the founders of Roc-A-Fella Records: Damon Dash, Kareem "Biggs" Burke, and Shawn "Jay-Z" Carter.

Wang, Oliver, ed. Classic Material: The Hip-Hop Album Guide. Toronto, Ont.: ECW Press, 2003. A chapter in this book investigates three of Jay-Z's albums: Reasonable Doubt, Vol. 3: Life and Times of S. Carter, and The Blueprint.

See also: Babyface; Blige, Mary J.; Combs, Sean; Dr. Dre; Eminem; 50 Cent; LL Cool J; Morrison, Jim; Notorious B.I.G.; Shakur, Tupac.

Blind Lemon Jefferson

American blues singer and songwriter

Jefferson was the first self-accompanied country-blues musician to be a commercial recording success, transforming an industry that had previously been dominated by large bands fronted by female singers. His brief recording career offers a glimpse into the origins of the blues.

Born: July 11, 1897; Couchman, Texas
Died: December, 1929; Chicago, Illinois
Also known as: Deacon L. J. Bates

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Immortal Blind Lemon Jefferson, Vol. 1, 1961; The Folk Blues of Blind Lemon Jefferson, 1967; One Dime Blues, 1980; Immortal Blind Lemon Jefferson, Vol. 2, 1990.

SINGLES: "Corrina Blues," 1926; "Easy Rider Blues," 1927; "He Arose from the Dead," 1927; "Matchbox Blues," 1927; "Prison Cell Blues," 1928; "See That My Grave Is Kept Clean," 1928; "Big Night Blues," 1929; "Cheater's Spell," 1929; "Pneumonia Blues," 1929; "That Crawling Baby Blues," 1929; "Tin Cup Blues," 1929.

The Life

Lemon Jefferson was born to Alec and Classy Jefferson in Couchman, Texas, a small farming community sixty miles south of Dallas. Born either blind or visually impaired, Jefferson turned to music in order to make a living. After gaining popularity performing at churches, picnics, parties, and street corners near his rural home, he moved to Dallas, where there was a vibrant music scene. After a few years he was able to support himself and later a wife and son, playing the street corners and bars of Dallas and traveling throughout the South.

In 1925 Sam Price, a local record store employee and pianist, contacted Paramount Records about Jefferson. The label brought him to Chicago to record that same year. His early recordings, released in 1926, sold well not only in the rural South but also in Northern cities. Jefferson returned to Chicago frequently, recording nearly a hundred sides for Paramount Records as well as two sides for Okeh Records.

Four years into his recording career, Jefferson was found dead on the streets of Chicago after a snowstorm. Although many legends surround his death (including that he, like Robert Johnson, was poisoned by a jealous girlfriend), the date and exact circumstances are unclear and no death certificate was issued. Despite his popularity he was buried in an unmarked grave that was neglected until 1967, when the Texas State Historical Association placed a plaque nearby.

The Music

Prior to the release of Jefferson's first records in 1926, blues was primarily recorded by women singers with large ensembles. As a self-accompanied male singer and guitarist, Jefferson was a huge departure from this model. Unlike these female singers, who mostly performed other people's compositions, Jefferson came to the studio with a full repertoire of both traditional and original music. His unexpected success changed the way record companies perceived the blues and opened the doors for a generation of country-blues musicians that followed.

"Corrina Blues." Because Jefferson was a solo artist, he was able to take more improvisational liberties with the blues form than the large ensembles. This flexibility is evident in his treatment of "See See Rider," a song first recorded in 1924 by Ma Rainey. Rainey, backed by an ensemble featuring Louis Armstrong and Fletcher Henderson, sings a standard twelve-bar blues, which consists of three four-bar phrases. (A bar, or measure, is a regularly repeating group of beats, four in this case. This consistent rhythmic structure ensures that the ensemble stays together.)

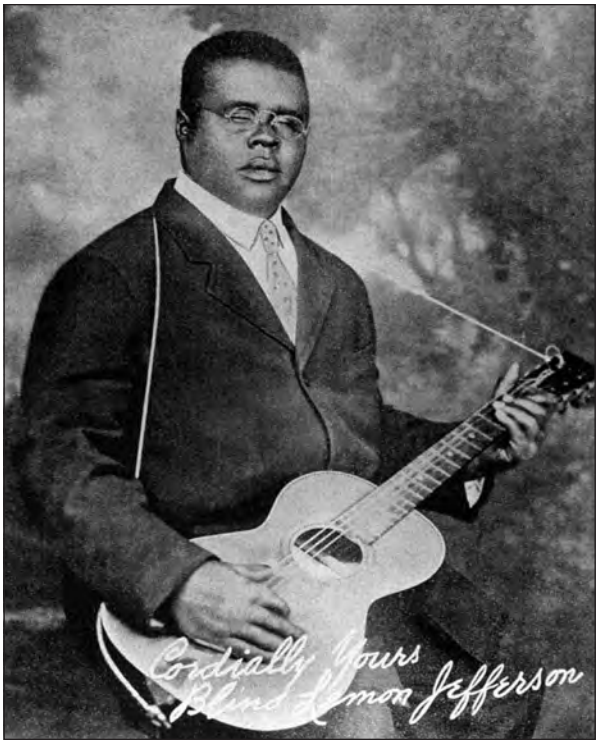
Jefferson's version, called "Corrina Blues," stretched the form, adding extra measures and beats as he saw fit. He used the guitar as a second voice, responding to each vocal phrase with an intricate run. He often slows the tempo when the guitar breaks away from its accompaniment role, then returns to the original tempo when the vocal comes back in. Jefferson also changed the basic structure of this song from a three-phrase to a four-phrase form by repeating the second phrase. This four-phrase blues structure is not uncommon and can also be heard on his recording of "One Dime Blues."

"Easy Rider Blues." On "Easy Rider Blues," Jefferson uses the twelve-bar blues structure instead of the regular four-bar phrases, and almost every phrase is four and a half measures (a two-bar vocal answered by a two-and-a-half-bar guitar pattern). While these variations on twelve-bar blues were exhibited by many self-accompanied blues artists who would record in the following years, Lemon had a virtuosic guitar style and a rubato vocal approach that made him immediately recognizable.

"He Arose from the Dead." Though Jefferson is most remembered for his blues, he learned many spirituals during his early days in rural Texas. In fact, Jefferson's first recording was a set of gospel numbers recorded under the pseudonym Deacon L. J. Bates, a name he would use again in 1927. Listening to these songs, one can imagine Jefferson leading a congregation. In "He Arose from the Dead" the lyrics are repetitive, the tempo is stable, and Jefferson refrains from adding extra measures or beats except between choruses. He takes fewer liberties with this community-based music than with the more narrative blues form.

"See That My Grave Is Kept Clean." Another number that Jefferson recorded in 1927 was "See That My Grave Is Kept Clean." It sold so well that Jefferson was asked to rerecord it in 1928. When Jefferson sings, "Have you ever heard that church bell toll?" he mimics the sound of a church bell on the bass notes of his guitar.



Blind Lemon Jefferson.

Musical Legacy

As the first commercially successful country-blues artist, Jefferson influenced generations of musicians. He traveled throughout Texas with Huddie Ledbetter, known as Leadbelly, years before Leadbelly was discovered by John and Alan Lomax (musicologists who preserved folk music) and became famous in his own right. Leadbelly recorded at least five tributes to Jefferson and often recalled their travels. Other musicians who knew Jefferson before he began to record include Victoria Spivey, Mance Lipscolm, and T-Bone Walker.

In the 1940's Son House outlined Jefferson's importance to Alan Lomax. A mentor to Robert Johnson and Muddy Waters, House learned the blues from a man in Clarksdale, Mississippi, who had taught himself to play from Jefferson's recordings. To Lomax, the discovery of this lineage was a breakthrough in his search for the origin of the blues. B. B. King cites Jefferson as one of his main inspirations.

Jefferson's influence reached well beyond the blues genre. Carl Perkins recorded a rockabilly version of his hit "Matchbox Blues," which was later covered by the Beatles. Bob Dylan's debut album featured a cover of Jefferson's "See That My Grave Is Kept Clean." Other covers or tributes have been recorded by the White Stripes and Nick Cave. In 1980 Jefferson was inducted into the Blues Foundation's Hall of Fame.

Oran Etkin

Further Reading

Charters, Samuel B. "Blind Lemon." In The Country Blues. New York: Da Capo Press, 1975. The strong narrative in this biographical account might appeal to younger audiences.

Evans, David. "Goin' Up the Country: Blues in Texas and the Deep South." In Nothing but the Blues, edited by Lawrence Cohn. New York: Abbeville Press, 1993. This chapter places Jefferson among fellow Texas musicians Leadbelly and Texas Alexander.

Govenar, Alan. "Blind Lemon Jefferson, That Black Snake Moan: The Music and Mystery of Blind Lemon Jefferson." In Bluesland: Portraits of Twelve Major American Blues Masters, edited by Pete Welding and Toby Byron. New York: Dutton, 1991. This essay features analysis of several songs, with lyrics included.

Santelli, Robert. "Blind Lemon Jefferson." In The Big Book of the Blues. New York: Penguin Books, 2001. A concise biography of Jefferson.

Uzzel, Robert L. Blind Lemon Jefferson: His Life, His Death, and His Legacy. Waco, Tex.: Eakin Press, 2002. Comprehensive biography on Jefferson.

Wald, Elijah. "Race Records: Blues Queens, Crooners, Street Singers, and Hokum." In Escaping the Delta: Robert Johnson and the Invention of the Blues. New York: HarperCollins, 2004. Fresh look at the birth of the blues, challenging many preconceptions.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Henderson, Fletcher; Hooker, John Lee; Hopkins, Lightnin'; House, Son; King, B. B.; Leadbelly; Rainey, Ma; Walker, T-Bone.

Waylon Jennings

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

One of the founders of country music's outlaw movement, Jennings gave voice to the sorrowful side of the genre's lyrical content.

Born: June 15, 1937; Littlefield, Texas
Died: February 13, 2002; Chandler, Arizona
Also known as: Waylon Arnold Jennings (full name)
Member of: The Highwaymen

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Waylon Jennings at J. D.'s, 1964; Folk Country, 1966; Leavin' Town, 1966; Nashville Rebel, 1966; Love of the Common People, 1967; The One and Only Waylon Jennings, 1967; Waylon Jennings Sings Ol' Harlan, 1967; Hangin' On, 1968; Jewels, 1968; Only the Greatest, 1968; Country-Folk, 1969 (with the Kimberlys); Just to Satisfy You, 1969; Waylon Jennings, 1969; The Country Style of Waylon Jennings, 1970; Don't Think Twice, 1970; Ned Kelly, 1970; Singer of Sad Songs, 1970; The Taker, 1970; Waylon, 1970; Cedartown, Georgia, 1971; Good Hearted Woman, 1972; Heartaches by the Number, 1972; Ladies Love Outlaws, 1972; Honky Tonk Heroes, 1973; Lonesome, On'ry, and Mean, 1973; Ramblin' Man, 1974; This Time, 1974; Dreaming My Dreams, 1975; Are You Ready for the Country?, 1976; Mackintosh and T. J., 1976; Wanted! The Outlaws, 1976 (with Jessi Colter, Willie Nelson, and Tompall Glaser); Ol' Waylon, 1977; I've Always Been Crazy, 1978; Waylon and Willie, 1978 (with Nelson); White Mansions, 1978 (with Steve Cash, Colter, and John Dillon); What Goes Around Comes Around, 1979; Music Man, 1980; Leather and Lace, 1981; Black on Black, 1982; WWII, 1982; It's Only Rock 'n' Roll, 1983; Take It to the Limit, 1983 (with Nelson); Waylon and Company, 1983; Never Could Toe the Mark, 1984; Highwayman, 1985 (with the Highwaymen); Turn the Page, 1985; A Couple More Years, 1986; Heroes, 1986 (with Johnny Cash); Sweet Mother Texas, 1986; Waylon!, 1986; Will the Wolf Survive, 1986; Hangin' Tough, 1987; A Man Called Hoss, 1987; Full Circle, 1988; The Eagle, 1990; Highwayman 2, 1990 (with the Highwaymen); Clean Shirt, 1991; Ol' Waylon Sings Ol' Hank, 1992; Too Dumb for New York City, Too Ugly for L.A., 1992; Waymore's Blues, Part 2, 1994; The Road Goes on Forever, 1995 (with the Highwaymen); Right for the Time, 1996; Closing in on the Fire, 1998; Cowboys, Sisters, Rascals, and Dirt, 1998; Old Dogs, 1998 (with Bobby Bare, Jerry Reed, and Mel Tillis).

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Waylon, 1996.

Waylon Jennings. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Life

Waylon Arnold Jennings was just twelve years old when he began working at a radio station in Littlefield as a country-music deejay. At fourteen, Jennings quit school, spent some time picking cotton, and then settled in Lubbock, about forty miles from his hometown. In 1954 Jennings began deejaying again at KLLL in Lubbock. While working at the radio station, he met up-and-coming artist Buddy Holly, who would go on to become an acclaimed rock singer and guitarist. The two became close friends, and Holly asked the nineteen-year-old Jennings to join his band, the Crickets, as bass player. Jennings later admitted that he had been playing the instrument for only a few weeks when he began touring with Holly.

During the tour, Holly chartered a plane for his bandmates one night in February, 1959. Jennings gave up his seat to J. P. Richardson, also known as the Big Bopper, who was suffering from a cold. That split-second decision affected the rest of Jennings's life. In what became known as "the day the music died," the plane crashed in Iowa, killing Holly, Richardson, and Ritchie Valens (known for his hit "La Bamba"). Jennings harbored guilt over the accident because he had joked to Holly that he hoped his plane would crash.

After he found little success in Texas and Arizona, Jennings moved to Nashville, Tennessee, in the mid-1960's, and he became roommates with Johnny Cash. The two formed a lifelong friendship, cemented at the time by their substance abuse.

In 1965, with the help of Bobby Bare and Chet Atkins, Jennings signed a contract with RCA Records. Jennings appreciated the artistic freedom his producer Atkins allowed him, as opposed to the demands placed by the rest of the country-music industry to look, act, and sing a certain way.

Jennings also found a friend in Willie Nelson, who, like Jennings, stubbornly asserted artistic control against the Nashville establishment. The two quickly became known as "outlaws."

Jennings had been married three times before he was thirty, but in October, 1969, he married country musician Jessi Colter, in a lasting union. The Cash-Jennings relationship is depicted in the motion picture Walk the Line (2005), with Jennings and Colter's son Shooter playing Waylon.

Substance abuse problems, particularly his use of cocaine, plagued Jennings throughout the height of his popularity in the 1970's, and it would take until the mid-1980's until he was free from drugs. By 1989 Jennings, who had dropped out of school in the tenth grade, had received his GED, a high school equivalency diploma. He wanted to finish high school to impress upon his ten-year-old son the importance of education. Jennings died from complications related to diabetes on February 13, 2002, in Chandler, Arizona.

The Music

Early Works. While on Holly's Winter Dance Party Tour, Jennings's star as a bassist began to rise, prompting him to form his own band, Jennings and the Waylors, in Phoenix, Arizona, in late 1960 after Holly's tragic death. Three years later, he moved again, to Los Angeles, signing a contract with Herb Alpert's A&M Records. The label wanted him to make a pop album, which Jennings refused to do. His first single, "Sing the Girl a Song, Bill," and his album were failures.

Folk-Country. With this first album from RCA Records, marking his first attempt at the Nashville sound, Jennings began scoring hits in the world of country music, starting with "Stop the World (And Let Me Off)," which made the Top 40. He continued with this success, releasing several albums that featured such hits as "Walk on out of My Mind," "I Got You," "Only Daddy That'll Walk the Line," and "Yours Love"—all Top 10 hits in 1968. After these successes, Jennings was even more determined to do things his way. He was constantly in conflict with the music establishment in Nashville. When he began working with staff producer Danny Davis, after Atkins, Jennings said that he was being bullied, and he pointed a pistol at Davis in the studio.

Wanted! The Outlaws. Jennings's next big move solidified his reputation as an outlaw and helped him to become a mainstream artist. The album Wanted! The Outlaws focused on Jennings but his collaborators were Willie Nelson, Tompall Glaser, and Colter. It became the first country record to be certified platinum, and it peaked at number one on the pop charts. Wanted! The Outlaws catapulted Jennings into pop music stardom, and it certainly boosted his career as a country musician. Jennings continued his solo success with Dreaming My Dreams, which was the first of his many number-one albums. He was also voted Best Male Vocalist of the Year at the Country Music Awards in 1975, and his work with Nelson on Wanted! The Outlaws earned them the Country Music Awards Duo of the Year in 1977.

Waylon and Willie. After the success of Wanted! The Outlaws, the duo teamed up for Waylon and Willie, an album that would link their names for a generation of country fans. The two worked together on many projects throughout the years, but it all started with the crossover hits "Luckenbach, Texas" and "Mammas Don't Let Your Babies Grow up to Be Cowboys"—which won a 1978 Grammy for Best Country Vocal Performance by a Duo or Group.

The Dukes of Hazzard. Throughout the 1980's, Jennings maintained his musical popularity. He had several number-one singles, such as "Amanda," "I Ain't Living Long Like This," "Lucille (You Won't Do Your Daddy's Will)," and "I've Always Been Crazy." Jennings was also a large part of the television comedy The Dukes of Hazzard. Jennings wrote and sang the show's theme song, and he did the off-screen narration, which introduced his voice to millions of viewers.

Highwayman. In 1985 Jennings teamed up with friends Nelson, Cash, and Kris Kristofferson to record Highwayman. The Columbia Records album went gold, and the title track was a number-one single and a huge hit for all four artists. At the same time, Jennings's solo career underwent a change when he left RCA in 1986 and signed a contract with MCA Nashville Records, in an effort to revitalize his career after kicking his addiction. He had a few number-one singles with MCA, including "Rose in Paradise." Jennings switched labels again in 1990 to Epic Records, where he scored two more Top 40 hits with "Wrong" and "The Eagle."

Closing in on the Fire. Although Jennings continued to work throughout the 1990's, most of his solo work and compilations—including more work with the Highwaymen and Nelson—did not reach the success he had experienced in the 1970's and the 1980's. Jennings was an accomplished performer, and his tours drew huge crowds. In 1996 Jennings released his autobiography, Waylon. Throughout the late 1990's, Jennings's work slowed down as his health deteriorated because of heart disease and diabetes. Jennings stopped touring in 1997, but the following year he released the well-received album Closing in on the Fire, which featured Travis Tritt, Sting, Sheryl Crow, Mick Jagger, and Colter. This was Jennings's last studio album.

Musical Legacy

A stunningly prolific artist, Jennings released seventy-two albums throughout his career, all while battling the conservative tendencies of the Nashville music establishment. A rebel to the end, Jennings refused to attend the ceremony when he was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 2001, believing that artists should not compete against each other. In spite of his aversion to awards ceremonies, he received two Grammy Awards, for Best Country Performance by a Duo, and four Country Music Awards, for Album of the Year, Single of the Year, Vocal Duo of the Year, and Male Vocalist of the Year.

Louis R. Carlozo, Laura Burns, and LeeAnn Maton

Further Reading

Allen, Bob. Waylon and Willie. New York: Quick Fox, 1979. Allen describes the Jennings-Nelson collaborations and the personalities behind the music.

Denisoff, R. Serge. Waylon: A Biography. Knoxville: University of Tennessee Press, 1983. This biography relates Jennings's story from his career beginnings through the peak of his success in the 1980's. Includes rare photographs and a full discography.

Jennings, Waylon, and Lenny Kaye. Waylon. New York: Warner Books, 1996. The singer retraces his hardscrabble life and musical career in typical uncompromising fashion.

Mansfield, Brian. "Waylon Jennings Marched to His Own Outlaw Beat." USA Today, February 14, 2002. An informative news story on Jennings's death, including a career overview, statistics, and a partial discography.

Smith, John L. The Waylon Jennings Discography. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1995. This volume covers the singer-songwriter's career in detail, including Jennings's six hundred songs and 850 studio sessions.

See also: Atkins, Chet; Buffett, Jimmy; Cahn, Sammy; Cash, Johnny; Eddy, Duane; Holly, Buddy; Jagger, Sir Mick; Kristofferson, Kris; Nelson, Willie; Sting; Valens, Ritchie.

Joan Jett

American rock singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Jett was a founding member of the Runaways, one of the first all-female rock-and-roll bands. She specialized in combining glam-rock beats, bubblegum hooks, and loud guitars with emotionally naked lyrics sung in a raw, feral voice.

Born: September 22, 1958; Ardmore, Pennsylvania
Also known as: Joan Marie Larkin (birth name)
Member of: The Runaways; Joan Jett and the Blackhearts

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Joan Jett, 1980 (reissued as Bad Reputation, 1981); I Love Playing with Fire, 1982; The Hit List, 1990; Notorious, 1991.

ALBUMS (with Joan Jett and the Blackhearts): I Love Rock 'n' Roll, 1981; Album, 1983; Glorious Results of a Misspent Youth, 1984; Good Music, 1986; Up Your Alley, 1988; Pure and Simple, 1994; Naked, 2004; Sinner, 2006.

ALBUMS (with the Runaways): The Runaways, 1976; Queens of Noise, 1977; Waitin' for the Night, 1977; And Now . . . the Runaways, 1978; Mama Weer All Crazee Now, 1978.

The Life

While most girls her age were completing high school and entering college, Joan Jett was touring the world and recording for Mercury Records as the rhythm guitarist and occasional lead singer of the Runaways. Neither she nor the band achieved more than cult status, but the experience prepared her for the solo career that she began in 1980. Jett's first solo album (released in England in 1980 and in the United States in 1981) went largely unnoticed. However, the follow-up, I Love Rock 'n' Roll (credited, like Jett's subsequent albums, to Joan Jett and the Blackhearts), sold more than a million copies on the strength of its immensely popular title anthem. While none of the other recordings that Jett released throughout the 1980's generated as much enthusiasm, she and the Blackhearts remained a regular presence on MTV and a popular attraction on the arena touring circuit. In 1987 Jett starred with Michael J. Fox and Gena Rowlands in the film Light of Day. During the 1990's, Jett recorded sporadically, focusing more on touring and promoting People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA), the 2004 presidential candidacy of Howard Dean, the Women's National Basketball Association, abortion rights, and vegetarianism.

The Music

From her teenage beginnings as a member of the Runaways, Jett enjoyed solo success as a hard-rocking woman in rock and roll. Although she wrote or cowrote much of her material, Jett's biggest hits were renditions of songs first recorded by the Arrows ("I Love Rock 'n' Roll"), Tommy James and the Shondells ("Crimson and Clover"), Sly and the Family Stone ("Everyday People"), and Gary Glitter ("Do You Wanna Touch Me?").

Early Works. Jett honed her guitar-playing and singing style on the five albums that she released with the Runaways. Although stylistically limited by the band's youth and inexperience and their manager Kim Fowley's insistence on exploiting their image as leather-clad rebels, the albums helped launch the solo careers of Jett and Lita Ford.

Bad Reputation. Released in England in 1980 as Joan Jett and retitled upon its release in the United States one year later, Bad Reputation was overshadowed at the time of its appearance by the immense popularity of its follow-up, I Love Rock 'n' Roll. In retrospect, however, it established the part-originals, part-covers pattern that Jett would follow on her subsequent recordings, and it did so with an enthusiastic and refreshingly defiant indifference to trends that has allowed it to age well. The title song, in particular, has had a long life as a soundtrack staple and an advertising jingle.

I Love Rock 'n' Roll. This best-selling and high-charting album rose to number two on the Billboard album chart in 1982, propelled by the instant popularity of its title track. Written and originally recorded by the British band the Arrows, "I Love Rock 'n' Roll" spent seven weeks at number one, and it was the subject of one of Weird Al Yankovic's earliest hit parodies ("I Love Rocky Road"). In the follow-up single, "Crimson and Clover" (another cover), Jett introduced the lesbianism that would become a recurring theme in her music by not changing the object of the singer's affection from "her" to "him."

Joan Jett. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Up Your Alley. Released in 1988, this million-selling album capitalized on Jett's renewed popularity in the wake of her appearance in the 1987 film Light of Day. Although its contents did not differ from what had by then become Jett's formula (the covers: Chuck Berry's "Tulane" and the Stooges' "I Wanna Be Your Dog"), it contained "I Hate Myself for Loving You," another Top 10 hit that in 2007 joined "Bad Reputation" in Jett's catalog of soundtrack appearances when it was rewritten as the theme song for NBC television's Sunday Night Football and performed by Faith Hill.

Compilations. Flashback (1993), Fit to Be Tied: Great Hits by Joan Jett and the Blackhearts (1997), and Fetish (1999) comprised the highlights of Jett's discography. Flashback included "Light of Day" and live versions of "Bad Reputation" and the Runaways' "Cherry Bomb," but otherwise it consisted of lesser-known material that emphasized Jett's connection to the "riot grrrl" movement. Fit to Be Tied contained Jett's best-known singles: a previously unreleased version of her cover of the Modern Lovers' "Roadrunner" and a hard-rocking rendition of The Mary Tyler Moore Show theme song that became an anthem of the Women's National Basketball Association, "Love Is All Around." Fetish emphasized Jett's raunchier material, earning it an explicit-lyrics warning sticker.

Musical Legacy

When Jett could not persuade record companies to release her first solo album in 1980, she founded Blackheart Records, thus becoming the first woman to start her own record company and establishing herself as an icon of independence. Even when under contract to CBS (in the 1980's) and Warner Bros. (in the 1990's), her albums bore the Blackheart Records imprint. (The cycle began again in 2006 when major labels passed on Jett's album Sinner, making it her first album of new material in twenty-five years to be released exclusively on Blackheart.) Her music both as a Runaway and as a solo artist was frequently cited as an influence and as an inspiration by all-female rock-and-roll bands such as the Go-Go's, the Bangles, and the Donnas and the all-female grunge bands such as L7. Jett's open espousal of various liberal sociopolitical causes made her a heroine to a generation of feminist activists.

Arsenio Orteza

Further Reading

Christgau, Robert. Christgau's Consumer Guide: Albums of the Nineties. New York: St. Martin's Griffin, 2000. This guide contains assessments of the compilations Flashback and Fit to Be Tied: Great Hits by Joan Jett and the Blackhearts.

_____. Christgau's Record Guide: The Eighties. New York: Pantheon, 1990. Contains critiques of Jett's 1980's' albums.

Spitz, Mark, and Brendan Mullen. We Got the Neutron Bomb: The Untold Story of L.A. Punk. New York: Three Rivers Press, 2001. Includes information on the Runaways' place in the West Coast punk movement.

Stieven-Taylor, Alison. "The Prodigal Daughter." In Rock Chicks: The Hottest Female Rockers from the 1960's to Now. Sydney, N.S.W.: Rockpool, 2007. A discussion of Jett in the context of other rock-and-roll women.

Young, Jon. "Joan Jett." The Rock Yearbook 1983, edited by Al Clark. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1982. A detailed summary of Jett's career from the Runaways through I Love Rock 'n' Roll.

See also: Lang, K. D.; Simmons, Joseph "Run"; Simon, Carly; Slick, Grace.

Antônio Carlos Jobim

Brazilian Latin jazz composer

Jobim, in the late 1950's, helped create a modern version of Brazilian samba called bossa nova, which was integral in the development of Latin jazz and has become an important component in the jazz repertoire.

Born: January 25, 1927; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil
Died: December 8, 1994; New York, New York
Also known as: Tom Jobim

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Orfeu da çonceicão, 1956; The Composer of Desafinado Plays, 1963; Getz/Gilberto, 1963 (with Stan Getz and João Gilberto); The Man from Ipanema, 1963; Caymmi Visita Tom, 1964 (with Dorival Caymmi); The Wonderful World of Antônio Carlos Jobim, 1964; The Astrud Gilberto Album, 1965; Love, Strings, and Jobim, 1966; A Certain Mr. Jobim, 1967; Francis Albert Sinatra and Antônio Carlos Jobim, 1967; Wave, 1967; Stone Flower, 1970; Tide, 1970; Constucão, 1971; O som do pasquim, 1972; Jobim, 1972; Matita Pere, 1973; Elis and Tom, 1974 (with Elis Regina); Urubu, 1976; Miúcha and Antônio Carlos Jobim, Vol. 1, 1977 (with Miúcha); Miúcha and Tom Jobim, Vol. 2, 1979 (with Miúcha); Brazil, 1980; Terra Brasilis, 1980; Edu e Tom, 1981 (with Edu Lobo); Um homem de Aquarius, 1981; Gabriela, 1983; Passarim, 1987; Echoes of Rio, 1989; Antônio Brasileiro, 1994; Antônio Carlos Jobim and Friends, 1996.

The Life

Antônio Carlos Jobim (ahn-TOH-nyoh KAHR-los zho-BEEM) was born in Rio de Janeiro and grew up in the neighborhood of Ipanema. He began studying piano relatively late, at age fourteen, with Hans Koellreuter, a German conservatory-trained composer and pianist. As a youth, Jobim loved Brazilian popular music of all types, particularly the chôros and sambas of composer and flutist Pixinguinha, the songs of Ary Barroso, and the intrinsically Brazilian classical music of Heitor Villa-Lobos.

In the late 1950's Jobim came to the world's attention through albums he arranged and produced with singer-guitarist João Gilberto and his collaboration with Vinicius de Moraes on the sound track for the film Orfeu negro (Black Orpheus, 1959). In 1958 Gilberto released "Chega de Saudade" (no more blues), which Jobim cowrote with de Moraes. These recordings brought bossa nova and Jobim's songwriting to the attention of the world.

In 1964 Gilberto recorded "Garota de Ipanema" ("The Girl from Ipanema") with jazz saxophonist Stan Getz. The song was a huge hit in the United States and Europe and won a Grammy Award for Best Song. In the 1960's and early 1970's Jobim recorded with a number of American artists, including Frank Sinatra and Ella Fitzgerald, which brought him further recognition. Jobim continued to compose and record until his death from a heart attack following surgery in New York's Mount Sinai Hospital in 1994.

The Music

Jobim began his career as a professional musician—playing in small clubs in Rio de Janeiro and transcribing and arranging music for recording sessions—in the early 1950's. In 1953, while he was writing songs with other young musicians living in Rio de Janeiro, he began working as artistic director for Odeon Records. Jobim's harmonic conceptions and skills as a songwriter were already well developed at this time, but, like many Brazilian composers, Jobim often wrote songs in collaboration with a lyricist.

Black Orpheus. Jobim and de Moraes met in 1956 and immediately began writing together. De Moraes brought a modern sophistication and subtlety to lyrics that complemented Jobim's melodic and harmonic inventiveness. The two collaborated on the music for a stage version of the Orpheus legend, as well as a number of songs that Gilberto would later record. When French director Marcel Camus came to Rio de Janeiro to film Black Orpheus, he asked Jobim and de Moraes to write several more tunes for the sound track. The film was extremely popular, both in Brazil and internationally.

"Chega de Saudade." In 1958 Jobim and de Moraes met Gilberto, a singer and guitarist from Bahia. Gilberto sang in a cool, intimate style and had developed a new method of playing samba on the guitar. All the elements were now in place, and a new musical style was born—bossa nova. Between 1958 and 1961 Gilberto recorded three albums in the new style, produced and arranged by Jobim. Many of Jobim's tunes that have since become standards—such as "Desafinado" (out of tune), "Insensitez" (how insensitive), and "Meditação" (meditation)—were recorded for the first time on these seminal albums.

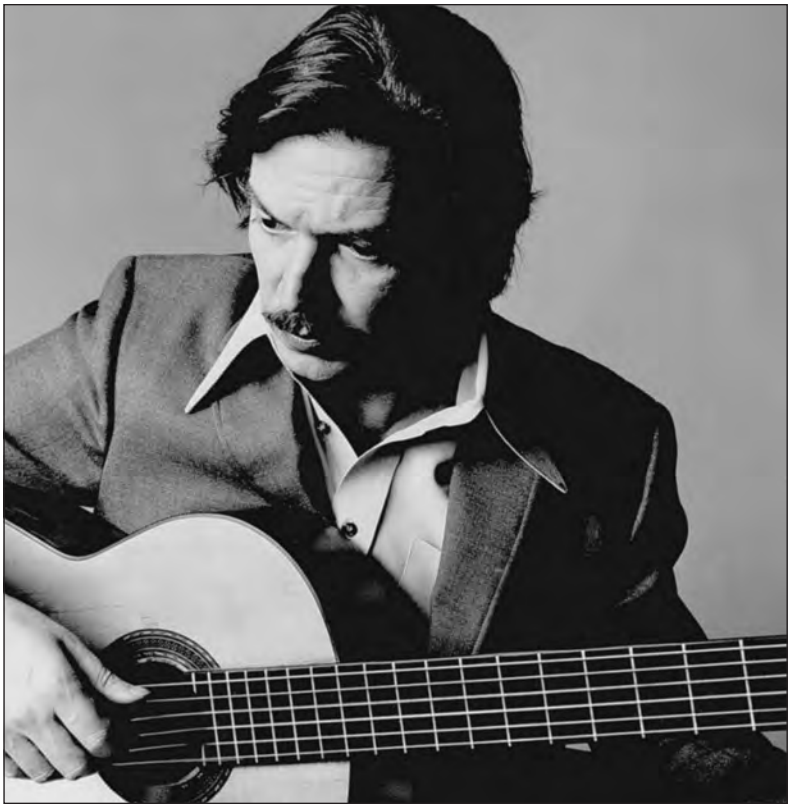
Jobim in the United States. In the early 1960's the U.S. State Department sponsored tours of Brazil by a number of jazz musicians. Many were profoundly affected by Brazilian music in general and captivated by bossa nova in particular, with its sophisticated harmonies and lyrical melodies. Guitarist Charlie Byrd and saxophonist Stan Getz were the first to begin recording and performing in the new style.



Antônio Carlos Jobim. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In 1963 Getz, Gilberto, and Jobim recorded Getz/Gilberto in New York City. It fused the bossa nova style with Getz's lyrical and understated jazz saxophone. The album won three Grammy Awards, with "The Girl from Ipanema," which was sung in both Portuguese and English, winning a Grammy Award for Best Song.

In the late 1960's and early 1970's Jobim made several popular and influential recordings in the United States, including two albums with Frank Sinatra, and appeared on a number of television shows. By the mid-1970's Jobim's songwriting was famous throughout the world.

Urubu, Passarim, and Antônio Brasileiro. Jobim continued to compose and record throughout the 1970's and 1980's, occasionally performing. He became a revered figure in his country, not least because of the national pride his worldwide success kindled in Brazilians.

In the last several decades of his life, he became more and more concerned with ecology and the plight of indigenous Brazilians known as Indios. Several albums contained songs about Brazil's natural beauty and the peril modern society posed. Not well known in the United States, Urubu and Passarim are masterpieces, containing some of Jobim's greatest songs and themes. The album Antônio Brasileiro was released after his death.

Musical Legacy

Jobim created an immense catalog of songs. His work is known and appreciated throughout the world, and his songs continue to be performed and recorded by musicians working in a wide variety of styles. His harmonic conception and melodic lyricism profoundly affected both popular song and jazz. Working either with a partner or alone, Jobim crafted lyrics of a surface simplicity that disguises a depth difficult to perceive in translation. In his songwriting, all the elements—harmony, melody, lyric, rhythm, and groove—work in a delicate, dynamic balance. The beauty of his songwriting transcends style and fashion and will inspire musicians for years to come.

Matthew Nicholl

Further Reading

Castro, Ruy. Bossa Nova: The Story of the Brazilian Music That Seduced the World. Chicago: A Cappella Books, 2000. An exhaustive and well-written history of the development of bossa nova, including numerous references to the life and work of Jobim. Extensive index, discography, and glossary of musical terms.

Jobim, Antônio Carlos. Jobim Cancioneiro: Obras Escolhidas. Rio de Janeiro: Jobim Music: Casa da Palavra, 2000. Written in Portuguese with English translations, this book contains piano-vocal arrangements of many of Jobim's famous songs. Jobim also writes about what was happening in his own life when he composed these songs.

_____. Songbooks. 3 vols. Edited by Almir Chediak. Rio de Janeiro: Lumiar Editora, 1990. In addition to more than a hundred lead sheets and chord charts of Jobim's songs, these volumes contain photographs of Jobim, his family, and his musical collaborators; several essays about his life and music (in Portuguese with English translation); and an extensive discography.

McGowan, Chris, and Rocardo Pessanha. The Brazilian Sound. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1998. This well-researched book tells the story of Brazilian popular music, beginning with samba at the beginning of the twentieth century and covering the development of bossa nova and MPB (música popular brasileira). Excellent photographs, discography, and bibliography.

Schreiner, Claus. Música Brasileira: A History of Popular Music and the People of Brazil. New York: Marion Boyars, 1993. A German radio producer and journalist, Schreiner became involved in the Latin music scene in the early seventies. Bibliography, glossary, index, and list of samba schools in Rio de Janeiro.

See also: Fitzgerald, Ella; Getz, Stan; Gil, Gilberto; Gilberto, João; Nascimento, Milton; Sinatra, Frank; Villa-Lobos, Heitor.

Billy Joel

American rock singer, pianist, and songwriter

Joel's music is remarkably eclectic and remains extremely popular. His insatiable curiosity regarding the formal and stylistic possibilities of popular music made him among the most successful composer-performers to follow in the wake of the Beatles.

Born: May 9, 1949; Bronx, New York
Also known as: William Joseph Martin Joel (full name); Piano Man
Member of: The Hassles; Attila

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Cold Spring Harbor, 1972; Piano Man, 1973; Streetlife Serenade, 1974; Turnstiles, 1976; The Stranger, 1977; Fifty-second Street, 1978; Glass Houses, 1980; Songs in the Attic, 1981; The Nylon Curtain, 1982; An Innocent Man, 1983; The Bridge, 1986; Storm Front, 1989; River of Dreams, 1993; To Make You Feel My Love, 1997; Fantasies and Delusions, Opp. 1-10, 2001 (for solo piano).

ALBUM (with Attila): Attila, 1970.

ALBUMS (with the Hassles): The Hassles, 1967; Hour of the Wolf, 1969.

The Life

William Joseph Martin Joel was born to Howard and Rosalind Joel in Bronx, New York, on May 9, 1949. Both parents were talented musicians, and Joel soon began to exhibit similar abilities. At the age of four, he received his first formal piano lessons, and although he continued to study for the next twelve years, his interest in rock and roll ultimately led him away from the classics. In 1967 he joined the Hassles, a Long Island rock group that recorded two moderately successful albums for United Artists. He subsequently left the Hassles, taking drummer Jon Small with him, to form Attila, a power duo that released one album on Epic Records in 1970. Frustrated by the failure of Attila, Joel decided to become a songwriter. He signed a contract with Family Productions and recorded an unsuccessful solo album entitled Cold Spring Harbor.

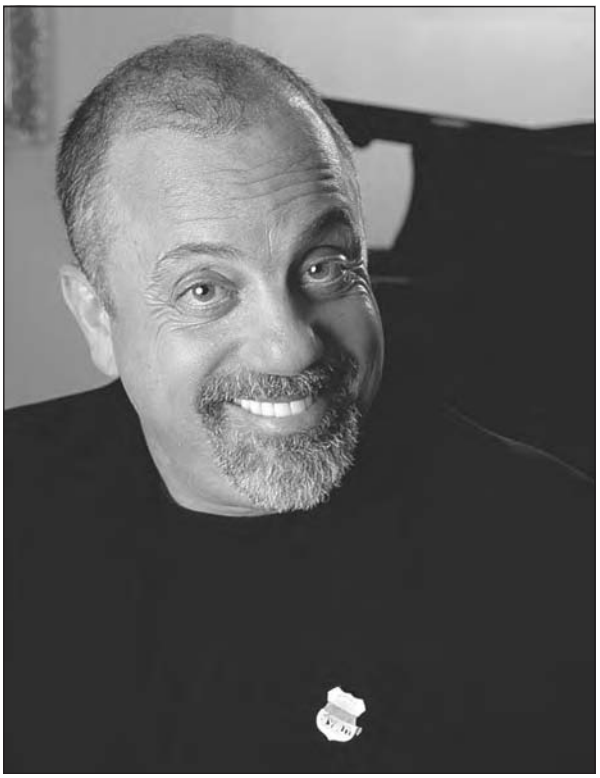
Despondent over his lack of success, Joel resolved to break his contract with Family Productions by fleeing to the West Coast with his wife, Elizabeth Weber. During this time, he performed as Bill Martin at a Los Angeles piano bar called the Executive Lounge. Meanwhile, a live radio concert he had given for a Philadelphia radio station resulted in the turntable hit "Captain Jack," which piqued the interest of Columbia Records executive Clive Davis. Joel subsequently signed with Columbia and returned to the studio to record Piano Man. The title track drew heavily on his experiences at the Executive Lounge, and it became a Top 40 hit. His next album, Streetlife Serenade, failed to build on the success of Piano Man, suggesting that the singer needed a change of scenery.

For Turnstiles, Joel returned to New York for inspiration, and the resulting album showed considerable artistic growth. He then teamed with producer Phil Ramone for The Stranger, which was the biggest-selling album in Columbia Records' history until 1985. His next record, Fifty-second Street, capitalized on the success of The Stranger and was another huge hit. Glass Houses, featuring a more aggressive rock and roll stance, was quickly followed by Songs in the Attic, a collection of numbers from his first four studio albums performed in a live setting. In 1982 Joel released The Nylon Curtain, an album that remains the singer's favorite.



Billy Joel. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Following his divorce from Weber in 1982, Joel began a relationship with model Christie Brinkley, who became the inspiration for An Innocent Man. The couple married in 1985 and the following year celebrated the birth of a daughter, Alexa Ray. Joel's next release, The Bridge, sold well but was generally perceived as a disappointment following the massive success of An Innocent Man. It marked his final full-length collaboration with producer Ramone. Following a historic tour of the Soviet Union, Joel recorded Storm Front, an album that revisited the edgier sounds of Glass Houses.

River of Dreams was an exploration of Joel's disillusionment with his former business manager, Frank Weber, and the breakdown of his marriage to Brinkley. At this point, he began devoting himself to the composition of classical music and in 2001 released Fantasies and Delusions, a collection of original piano works performed by Richard Joo. In the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, Joel lent his support to the benefit concerts America: A Tribute to Heroes and Concert for New York City. He would continue to tour extensively, both as a solo artist and with singer Elton John, as well as giving master classes to university students in which he described his experiences in the music business. In 2004 he married television personality Katie Lee. The couple settled in Long Island, New York, where they lent their support to various environmental causes.

The Music

Throughout his career, the hallmark of Joel's music was its eclecticism. It reflects Joel's insatiable curiosity regarding the formal and stylistic possibilities of popular music. The fact that each of his albums is organized around an underlying thematic thread suggests the influence of artists who attempted to transform the long-playing record into a unified statement, or concept. What distinguishes Joel from such artists is his lack of interest in recording technology as a part of the compositional process. Whereas bands such as the Beatles actively explored the sonic and structural potential of multitrack recording, Joel has been content to let others shape the sound of his records. This may be because of the fact that his approach can be traced back to an earlier standard that predates the emergence of recording technology as a part of the compositional process. However, his professed method of writing albums as unified statements does connect him with the classical tradition of the song cycle. In that sense, his works can be seen as consistent with the development of the concept album but unique in that they strongly adhere to an earlier standard of compositional practice.

Cold Spring Harbor. Joel's fascination with classic pop construction is evident on his solo debut, Cold Spring Harbor. The album demonstrates the singer's precocious mastery of song form and his fascination with mode mixture as the means for creating expressive variety.

Piano Man. On Piano Man, he continued to expand his musical palette by using modulation to create sectional contrast within individual songs.

Streetlife Serenade. Streetlife Serenade is an intriguing, yet uneasy transition into the singer's middle period. The textures are varied and interesting, but one senses that Joel is struggling with his considerable skills as a pop craftsman and his ambitions as a composer of pure music.

Turnstiles. Joel's next album, Turnstiles, began to resolve the contradictions that had emerged in his earlier works. He was still creating songs of remarkable skill, but he was now finding ways to extend his compositional ideas in unique and interesting ways. The album is further distinguished by the inclusion of jazz-derived musical gestures that would continue to be developed on the singer's next two offerings.

The Stranger. The Stranger marked the beginning of Joel's nine-year collaboration with producer Ramone. The album is an impressive tour de force that successfully highlights his strengths as a composer and performer. The centerpiece, "Scenes from an Italian Restaurant," is a remarkable formal experiment that rises to the standard set by the Beatles' Abbey Road medley. This album is clearly an arrival point for Joel, and one that would prove difficult to surpass.

Fifty-second Street. On Fifty-second Street, Joel turns the jazz-based musical gestures he explored on Turnstiles and The Stranger into a unifying thread. The harmonic progressions featured throughout demonstrate Joel's continuing interest in expanding the expressive variety of his music. As usual, there are several attractive pop ballads, and there is an ambitious track entitled "Zanzibar" that features a remarkable trumpet solo by jazz great Freddie Hubbard.

Glass Houses. Glass Houses attempts to foreground the connections Joel perceived between new wave and the earliest forms of rock and roll. The album concludes with "Through the Long Night," a delightful genre study that demonstrates his complete mastery of the Beatles' middle-period style (1965-1967).

The Nylon Curtain. His next release, The Nylon Curtain, was a lyrical meditation on the experiences of the post-World War II generation. The music appropriately draws on the textural effects associated with albums by the late-period Beatles (1967-1970). Although a critical success, The Nylon Curtain did not sell at the level of Joel's previous recordings.

An Innocent Man. He rebounded in 1983 with An Innocent Man, a collection of songs that explored the New York-based rock and rhythm-and-blues styles of the early 1960's. The musical structures are fairly traditional, but Joel's harmonic sense continues to shine on tracks such as "Leave a Tender Moment Alone" and "This Night," the latter referencing the second movement of Beethoven's Piano Sonata No. 8 in C Minor, Op. 13.

The Bridge. By the mid-1980's, Joel seemed to have exhausted the influences that were the impetus for his early and middle periods. As a result, The Bridge finds him grappling for inspiration in the very musical scene he had helped to create. The album features several interesting genre studies and a remarkable ballad, "This Is the Time," which employs a two-key framework to contrast its jazz-based verse with a stirringly majestic chorus.

Storm Front. For Storm Front, Joel enlisted the services of producer Mick Jones, a founding member of Foreigner and a formidable pop composer in his own right. The resulting album revisited the harder edged sounds of Glass Houses, with an accent on rhythm and blues. Joel continued to mine contemporary music for inspiration and also presented an intriguing hybrid in "I Go to Extremes," which merges the rhythmic attack of rock and roll with a harmonic progression more typical of the pop ballad. However, the standout track was a leftover from 1983, "And So It Goes," a secular hymn that remains highly melodic despite the fact that the piano accompaniment consistently employs dissonant major and minor seconds in support of the vocal line.

River of Dreams. The best material from his two previous albums indicated that Joel's compositional skills were still intact, but the fact that the best track from Storm Front was more than five years old suggested that something was seriously wrong. In an effort to revitalize his work, Joel recruited guitarist Danny Kortchmar to produce River of Dreams, his most eclectic collection of songs since the late 1970's. The strength of this album suggested that Joel was beginning to reconnect with his muse. However, the final track, "Famous Last Words," provided a thinly veiled description of the singer's impending retirement from the world of pop.

Fantasies and Delusions. Following the release of River of Dreams, Joel announced that he had lost interest in rock and roll and thereafter would devote himself to the creation of instrumental works in the classical style. In 2001 he released Fantasies and Delusions, a collection of piano works written in the manner of Frédéric Chopin, Johannes Brahms, and Ludwig van Beethoven. He reunited with producer Ramone in February, 2007, for the single "All My Life," which revisited the Tin Pan Alley style he had previously explored in such tracks as "Baby Grand" and "New York State of Mind."

Musical Legacy

Joel's musical longevity has surpassed all expectations for a composer working in the rock idiom. His back catalog continues to sell in large numbers, appealing to generations of fans who were not even alive when the singer first appeared on the scene. In 2002 a selection of his songs was used as the score for a Broadway musical, Movin' Out. The show was a popular success, and productions have been mounted in various cities throughout the world.

Compared with other composers of his generation, Joel's musical standard has remained remarkably high. The structural integrity of his pop songs makes his subsequent forays into classical music seem logical and inevitable. Joel's penchant for creating albums as unified statements does suggest an ongoing interest in the aesthetic potential of recorded sound. In that sense, his work may ultimately be seen as an important historical link between the classical traditions of the past and the technologically driven music of the present.

Thomas MacFarlane

Further Reading

Bego, Mark. Billy Joel: The Biography. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2007. This fascinating book draws heavily on interviews with former members of Joel's band, providing an informative and sobering account of the financial realities of the music business.

Bordowitz, Hank. Billy Joel: The Life and Times of an Angry Young Man. New York: Billboard Books, 2005. Detailed information regarding Joel's early career as a solo artist.

DeCurtis, Anthony. In Other Words: Artists Talk About Life and Work. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2005. For this book, a noted critic compiled interviews with prominent artists in popular music and film. It features a conversation with Joel and Elton John conducted in 2002.

Marmorstein, Gary. The Label: The Story of Columbia Records. New York: Thunder's Mouth Press, 2007. This remarkable study presents a historical overview of Columbia Records and features a description of the origins of Joel's tenure with the label.

Yetnikoff, Walter. Howling at the Moon. New York: Broadway Books, 2004. Compelling memoir by Yetnikoff, who was one of Joel's greatest supporters at Columbia Records.

See also: Blackwell, Otis; Brooks, Garth; Charles, Ray; John, Sir Elton; Smith, Michael W.; Tormé, Mel.

Sir Elton John

English pop pianist, singer, and songwriter

John redefined the worlds of pop and rock with his innovative piano-playing techniques and flamboyant presentations. Throughout his career, the singer set trends and produced a streak of hit singles and sold-out concert tours.

Born: March 25, 1947; Pinner, Middlesex, England
Also known as: Reginald Kenneth Dwight (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Empty Sky, 1969; Elton John, 1970; Friends, 1971; Madman Across the Water, 1971; Tumbleweed Connection, 1971; Honky Chateau, 1972; Don't Shoot Me I'm Only the Piano Player, 1973; Goodbye Yellow Brick Road, 1973; Caribou, 1974; Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy, 1975; Rock of the Westies, 1975; Blue Moves, 1976; A Single Man, 1978; Victim of Love, 1979; 21 at 33, 1980; The Fox, 1981; Jump Up!, 1982; Too Low for Zero, 1983; Breaking Hearts, 1984; Ice on Fire, 1985; Leather Jackets, 1986; Live in Australia, 1987; Reg Strikes Back, 1988; Sleeping with the Past, 1989; The One, 1992; Duets, 1993; Made in England, 1995; Big Picture, 1997; Aida, 1999; Songs from the West Coast, 2001; Peachtree Road, 2004; The Captain and the Kid, 2006; Elton John's Christmas Party, 2006.

The Life

Long before taking the stage name Elton John, the singer was born Reginald Kenneth Dwight in Pinner, Middlesex (a suburb of London), to parents Stanley and Sheila Eileen Dwight. His father was a onetime Royal Air Force trumpeter, and his mother was an avid record buyer, often exposing her son to top stars of the era (including Elvis Presley and Bill Haley and His Comets). John followed in similar artistic footsteps, playing piano at age four and winning a scholarship by age eleven to the Royal Academy of Music. However, once hitting his teen years, the hopeful star became disenchanted with studying, and, despite his father urging him to choose a more conventional path, he left school to pursue a career in the music business full time.

John pursued music in local clubs, joining the band Bluesology in 1961 (which backed everyone from the Isley Brothers to Long John Baldry and Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles). After breaking from the group in 1966, the solo star changed his name to Elton John (taking his first name from Bluesology saxophone player Elton Dean and his last name from John Baldry), in the hope of creating a flashy stage appeal.

The new moniker heralded a songwriting partnership with the like-minded hopeful Bernie Taupin, and it paved the way for John's debut album Empty Sky in 1969. John consistently recorded albums and became a top draw at the concert box office.

His flamboyant concert garb fostered his glitzy stage persona and raised questions about his sexuality. In 1976 John announced he was bisexual, and in 1984 he married Renate Blauel. They divorced four years later. Soon after, John announced that he was a homosexual, and in 2005 John and David Furnish were united in a civil partnership. John promoted gay rights, formed the Elton John AIDS Foundation, and supported the Gus Dudgeon Foundation (providing students with artistic opportunities in the recording studio).

The Music

Early Works. After breaking away from Bluesology, John auditioned for the popular British acts King Crimson and Gentle Giant, but he was not hired. He responded to an ad to join the Liberty Records roster. Although he did not score a record deal, he was introduced to developing songwriter Taupin. In 1968 the pair joined the staff of DJM Records, collaborating on several easy-listening tunes for other artists. Eventually they wrote more complex material, which yielded John's 1969 solo debut Empty Sky. Though the concept did not rate a lot of attention, there was enough interest to warrant another album, a self-titled project, in 1970. The first single, "Border Song," barely cracked the Top 100, but its follow-up, "Your Song," quickly soared to the Top 10 and pushed John to stardom. An American tour to promote the project was met with rave reviews, thanks to John's energetic performance, his unpredictable outfits, and his remarkably different blend of piano pop with old-fashioned rock and roll.

Sir Elton John. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Tumbleweed Connection. John on piano and Taupin in the lyric-writing seat continued their prolific pace by releasing Tumbleweed Connection in 1971, another landmark underscored by unconventional song presentations. The album's most popular track, "Burn Down the Mission," was an example of John combining ballad and up-tempo contexts in the same tune, a catalyst for the revolutionary streak that followed.

Honky Chateau. The momentum continued, and 1972's Honky Chateau was John's first album to reach the top slot in America, fueled by the success of "Rocket Man (I Think It's Going to Be a Long, Long Time)." The well-rounded disc combined his usual fare with elements of psychedelic rock, blues, and a bit of country, igniting an eclectic craze that led to a string of number-one albums and top singles hits. For the next few years, the pair (with a generally consistent backing band) had seemingly endless radio-play success, with the upbeat "Crocodile Rock," the irreverent "The Bitch Is Back," and the tenderhearted "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me." Additional album triumphs included 1973's double effort Goodbye Yellow Brick Road (yielding "Candle in the Wind" and "Bennie and the Jets") and 1975's Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy (a concept album that rated commercial success and critical kudos).

Rock of the Westies. Four months after releasing Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy, John surprised fans with the follow-up Rock of the Westies, switching to a new studio band and tweaking his sound yet again to incorporate harder guitar sounds, along with the dance-laden sounds of "Island Girl." Though it was met with enthusiasm from fans and critics alike, the significant changes developed over the next several projects, generating a fair amount of scrutiny along the way. The next year was a major turning point for the performer, including the relatively poor performance of 1976's bleaker Blue Moves (with only "Sorry Seems to Be the Hardest Word" standing out as a single) along with the highly publicized announcement that he was bisexual.

A Single Man. At the time, John's admission had a polarizing effect on his fan base. As a result, he lay low for the next two years, temporarily severing ties with Taupin and indulging in increased substance abuse. The subsequent A Single Man was written with onetime Vigrass and Osborne member Gary Osborne. Because it broke with John's previous formula and because the music industry was shifting toward disco, the album had no notable hits. A year later, John's Victim of Love attempted to capitalize on dance trends of the time, but it proved to be another poorly received project. Those outdated sounds permeated 1980's 21 at 33, but the album earned some attention, since Taupin contributed a trio of tracks. However, the pair split again, with John's next two releases getting little notice.

Too Low for Zero. Perhaps prompted by his recent commercial failures, John reunited with his long-standing band from the 1970's and Taupin on 1983's Too Low for Zero. The resulting publicity and return to his classic sound shot the star right back onto the charts, thanks to the rollicking "I'm Still Standing" and the soulful "I Guess That's Why They Call It the Blues." This period marked an upward trend for John that continued through the late 1980's, ably documented in 1987's concert comeback album and television special Live in Australia and 1989's Sleeping with the Past (anchored by "Sacrifice").

The One. Even with the resurgence, John took the next three years off for much-needed rest (and recovery from drug and alcohol abuse). He bounced back in 1992 with The One, marked by a more mature adult rock pattern and without the influence of drugs. Though he did not match his chart-topping success of the 1970's, the 1990's found John earning the highest concert grosses of his career. Several additional studio albums had a handful of singles that made the charts, but novelty projects such as 1993's Duets and 1999's musical Aida kept him in the headlines.

Songs from the West Coast. To coincide with a tour featuring fellow piano man Billy Joel, John entered the new millennium with the critically acclaimed Songs from the West Coast, which harked back to his early composing days and planted the seeds for 2004's Peachtree Road. The trend would continue into 2006, when The Captain and the Kid served as the stylistic and conceptual sequel to 1975's Captain Fantastic and the Brown Dirt Cowboy. The nostalgic turn of events also inspired John to set up shop in Las Vegas, performing a series of Red Piano concerts that encapsulated his entire career.

Musical Legacy

When John burst on the music scene in the late 1960's, he brought a completely different artistic formula to the stage and studio. Outside his progressive merging of piano pop with rock and roll, his visual appearance and performance energy throughout the 1970's cemented his reputation as an all-around entertainer. John was a model for success for many performers, from modern-day troubadours such as Rufus Wainwright and Ben Folds to the dance band the Scissor Sisters.

Part of John's longevity came from his ability to adapt to the times, and while some of his sonic decisions resulted in a career detour, he always got back on track. Another key factor was John's partner Taupin; their creative relationship was the perfect template for composer-lyricist collaboration. Although music was his ultimate priority, John used his tremendous popularity to promote several humanitarian causes.

Andy Argyrakis

Further Reading

Buckley, David. Elton: The Biography. Chicago: Chicago Review Press, 2007. Released just prior to John's sixtieth birthday, this book chronicles his career and his personal life through interviews with associates and musical collaborators.

Cassata, Mary Anne. The Elton John Scrapbook. New York: Citadel Press, 2002. Though it has some biographical text, this book features performance and behind-the-scenes photographs of John captured through the last thirty years.

John, Elton, and Bernie Taupin. Elton John and Bernie Taupin: The Complete Lyrics. New York: Hyperion Books, 1994. Lyrics up to 1994.

Peebles, Andy. The Elton John Tapes: Elton John in Conversation with Andy Peebles. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1981. An extensive interview chronicling John's rise to fame, his chart-topping songs of the 1970's, his relationship with Taupin, and his artistic expectations.

Rosenthal, Elizabeth J. His Song: The Musical Journey of Elton John. New York: Billboard Books, 2001. Overview of John's musical output and a look at his personal issues, including his sexuality and his battles with substance abuse.

See also: Blige, Mary J.; Brooks, Garth; Charles, Ray; Cohen, Leonard; Eminem; Joel, Billy; LaBelle, Patti; Pavarotti, Luciano; Rice, Sir Tim; Smith, Michael W.; Townshend, Pete; Wynette, Tammy.

Lonnie Johnson

American blues and jazz singer, songwriter, and guitarist

While his voice had the smooth delivery that sold millions of records, it was his innovations for the guitar—especially promoting the solo-guitar lead melodic line—that ensured Johnson's place in music history.

Born: February 8, 1899; New Orleans, Louisiana
Died: June 16, 1970; Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Also known as: Alonzo Johnson (full name)

Member of: Louis Armstrong and His Hot Five; Louis Armstrong and His Savoy Ballroom Five; Blind Willie Dunn and His Gin Bottle Four

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Lonesome Road, 1958; Blues and Ballads, 1960 (with Elmer Snowden); Blues, Ballads, and Jumpin' Jazz, Vol. 2, 1960 (with Snowden); Blues by Lonnie Johnson, 1960; Losing Game, 1960; Idle Hours, 1961 (with Victoria Spivey); Another Night to Cry, 1962; Stompin' at the Penny, 1965.

SINGLES (solo): "Baby You Don't Know My Mind," 1926; "Lonesome Jail Blues," 1926; "6/88 Glide," 1927; "Blue Ghost Blues," 1927; "Low Land Moan," 1927; "Careless Love," 1928; "Have to Change Keys to Play These Blues," 1928 (with Blind Willie Dunn); "Two Tone Stomp," 1928 (with Dunn); "Wrong Woman Blues," 1928; "Blue Room," 1929 (with Dunn); "Guitar Blues," 1929 (with Dunn); "Hot Fingers," 1929 (with Dunn); "Deep Sea Blues," 1930; "I Got the Best Jelly Roll in Town," 1930; "Just a Roaming Man," 1931; "Cat You Been Messin' Aroun'," 1932; "Flood Water Blues," 1937; "Hard Times Ain't Gone No Where," 1937; "Devil's Got the Blues," 1938; "Nothing but a Rat," 1939; "Be Careful," 1940; "Get Yourself Together," 1940; "Chicago Blues," 1941; "My Love Is Down," 1941; "She Ain't Right," 1941; "Lonesome Road," 1942; "Rambler's Blues," 1942; "When You Feel Low Down," 1942.

SINGLES (with Blind Willie Dunn and His Gin Bottle Four): "A Handful of Riffs," 1929; "Blue Blood Blues," 1929; "Blue Guitars," 1929; "Bull Frog Moan," 1929; "Jet Black Blues," 1929.

SINGLES (with Louis Armstrong and His Hot Five): "Heebie Jeebies," 1926; "Muskrat Ramble," 1926; "You Made Me Love You," 1926; "Hotter than That," 1927; "Savoy Blues," 1927; "Skip the Gutter," 1928; "Squeeze Me," 1928.

SINGLES (with Louis Armstrong and His Savoy Ballroom Five): "Hear Me Talkin' to Ya," 1928; "No One Else but You," 1928; "St. James Infirmary," 1928; "I Can't Give You Anything but Love, Baby," 1929.

The Life

Born in Orleans Parish in New Orleans, Louisiana, to a family of musical performers, Alonzo Johnson was encouraged to learn the family trade at a young age, first attempting the violin and later the guitar. In 1917 he began a two-year tour of England as part of a musical revue. When he returned, he discovered that his entire family, save one brother, had died in the influenza epidemic of 1918. Moving to St. Louis, Missouri, with his surviving sibling, Johnson began to concentrate upon his guitar technique, and in 1925 he won a talent contest sponsored by the Okeh recording company by singing a blues tune. As a blues singer for Okeh Records, he recorded more than 130 titles, more than any other black male musician of the era.

Despite his renown as a blues singer, his instrumental abilities did not go unnoticed, and from 1927 to 1929 he was invited to record with Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington. While the simple blues performers of the late 1920's were largely dismissed by the musically well-tutored jazz musicians, Johnson's advanced guitar technique won him featured moments in the studio recordings of two of the most respected names in jazz. He recorded another exceptional series of works with white guitarist Eddie Lang, the mixed-race sessions in 1928 and 1929 compelling Lang to adopt the pseudonym Blind Willie Dunn. In addition, Okeh recognized the guitar talents of Johnson, and he was recruited as the label's house accompanist, appearing on a considerable number of other blues singers' recordings.

Lonnie Johnson. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

By the mid-1930's, during the Great Depression, the market for his records had declined, and Johnson moved to Chicago, finding steel mill work and playing only after hours. In 1937 he returned to recording, for Decca and Bluebird, and, after World War II, for King Records. By the early 1950's he was again forgotten, and when a blues enthusiast went to search for him in 1959, Johnson was found working as a janitor in a Philadelphia hotel. Once again he was brought back into the public limelight, in time to enjoy success from the American folk-blues boom of the 1960's. Moving to Toronto in 1965, he was struck by a car four years later, and in 1970 he died from his injuries.

The Music

Johnson had the skill and musicality to be a jazz guitarist, but the record label that launched his career recognized him as a blues singer, and his recordings sold in the millions. Nevertheless, his innovations for the guitar greatly influenced the guitarists of the 1930's, such as Django Reinhardt and Charlie Christian, and, through them, rock-music lead guitarists from the 1950's until today. Using an acoustic guitar, Johnson forged a style that, once adopted by electric guitarists, would come to dominate popular music in the last third of the twentieth century.

"6/88 Glide." Recorded October 31, 1927, this was one of a few guitar instrumentals that Johnson was allowed to record. Played against a piano accompaniment, this piece is regarded by many as the first recorded single-string guitar solo. The tune features a tasty lead melody, interspersed with elegant improvisations, often using Johnson's distinctive dotted-rhythm playing style. This recording demonstrates that Johnson's musical horizons far exceeded the standard blues fare for which he was famous.

"Hotter than That." Recorded December 10, 1927, with Armstrong and His Hot Five, this is a hot, up-tempo tune, opening with Armstrong's statement of the melody and a pair of choruses of trumpet improvisation. Two choruses of Johnny Dodds on nimble clarinet, accompanied by piano, follow, then Armstrong and Johnson take over, with Johnson playing elaborate lead and chordal guitar under verses of Armstrong singing scat, ending with Armstrong singing scat phrases and Johnson echoing them on guitar. Trombone and trumpet solos conclude the recording, but Johnson gets the last statement.

"Have to Change Keys to Play These Blues." Recorded on November 17, 1928, this is one of the legendary duets with Lang (playing as Blind Willie Dunn). Two of the most accomplished jazz guitarists of the day give a performance notable for its sophistication and richness. The need to "change keys," as demanded in the title, refers to the added chordal progressions in the basic blues changes. Through most of the piece, Johnson plays solo lead guitar lines as Lang performs a chord-based rag-style foundation. For one chorus, the two switch roles, just to demonstrate their versatility.

"Another Night to Cry." A 1963 videorecording of Johnson performing this piece exists, showing how little the decades (during which he had worked at strenuous nonmusical jobs) had affected his abilities. The piece is a conventional blues song, sung with Johnson's customary pleasant voice. The guitar work is also up to Johnson's high standards, principally consisting of lead guitar lines resembling what B. B. King and T-Bone Walker spent the 1950's attempting to perfect.

Musical Legacy

In the late 1920's, Johnson was possibly the most popular blues singer in America. During the American blues revival of the 1960's, however, Johnson's urbane, smooth delivery did not appeal to younger fans searching for simpler and rougher country blues artists. As a guitarist, however, Johnson developed a single-note lead style that inspired many guitarists who followed.

Jeffrey Daniel Jones

Further Reading

Barlow, William. Looking Up at Down: The Emergence of Blues Culture. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1989. This book contains a section on

St. Louis blues guitarists, with Johnson as the foremost example. Several lyrics transcriptions of Johnson's songs are included.

Johnson, Lonnie, and Lenny Carlson. Away Down the Alley: The Great Blues Guitar of Lonnie Johnson. Pacific, Mo.: Mel Bay, 1993. This music book offers transcriptions of Johnson's beloved songs in score form, as well as guitar tabulature.

Oliver, Paul. The Story of the Blues. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1997. This work contains a brief but interesting retelling of the time Johnson was hired to accompany singer Alger "Texas" Alexander for a recording session.

Welding, Pete, and Toby Byron, eds. Bluesland: Portraits of Twelve Major American Blues Masters. New York: Dutton, 1991. Volume includes an excellent biography of Johnson, written by Chris Albertson, the fan who rediscovered him in 1959. Much of the material concentrates on Johnson's career after that year.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Christian, Charlie; Ellington, Duke; King, B. B.; Reinhardt, Django; Walker, T-Bone; Williamson, Sonny Boy, I.

Robert Johnson

American jazz guitarist, singer, and songwriter

With his searing voice, his poetic verse, and his virtuosic guitar playing, Johnson was the quintessential Mississippi Delta bluesman. His innovative use of slide guitar, boogie, and walking bass lines influenced generations of blues and rock-and-roll musicians.

Born: May 8, 1911; Hazlehurst, Mississippi
Died: August 16, 1938; Greenwood, Mississippi
Also known as: Robert Leroy Johnson (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: King of the Delta Blues Singers, 1961; King of the Delta Blues Singers, Vol. 2, 1970; The Complete Recordings, 1990.

SINGLES: "32-20 Blues," 1936; "Come on in My Kitchen," 1936; "Cross Roads Blues," 1936; "Dead Shrimp Blues," 1936; "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," 1936; "If I Had Possession over Judgement Day," 1936; "Kind Hearted Woman Blues," 1936; "Last Fair Deal Gone Down," 1936; "Phonograph Blues," 1936; "Rambling on My Mind," 1936; "Sweet Home Chicago," 1936; "Terraplane Blues," 1936; "They're Red Hot," 1936; "Walkin' Blues," 1936; "When You Got a Good Friend," 1936; "Drunken Hearted Man," 1937; "From Four Till Late," 1937; "Hellhound on My Trail," 1937; "Honeymoon Blues," 1937; "I'm a Steady Rollin' Man," 1937; "Little Queen of Spades," 1937; "Malted Milk," 1937; "Me and the Devil Blues," 1937; "Milk Cow's Calf Blues," 1937; "Stones in My Passway," 1937; "Stop Breakin' Down Blues," 1937; "Traveling Riverside Blues," 1937; "Love in Vain," 1938; "Preachin' Blues (Up Jumped the Devil)," 1938.

The Life

Robert Leroy Johnson was born in 1911 in Mississippi, the eleventh child of Julia Major Dodds. While her first ten children were born of Julia's marriage to Charles Dodds, Johnson was the illegitimate offspring of a relationship between Julia and Noah Johnson. The boy's family and living arrangements shifted constantly. When he was about ten, Johnson began living with his mother in the Mississippi Delta region, legendary for country, acoustic blues. Taking up the harmonica and guitar, Johnson learned all he could from traveling bluesmen such as Son House, Willie Brown, and Charley Patton.

Johnson married young in February, 1929, but his wife, Virginia Travis, died in childbirth at only sixteen. In May, 1931, Johnson married again, to Calletta "Callie" Craft, eventually settling in Helena, Arkansas. Johnson soon launched his career as an itinerant blues performer, teaming with guitarists Ike Zinnerman and Johnny Shines. Although he performed mostly in Delta juke joints (spaces set up for dancing, music, and drinking), he traveled as far as Chicago, New York City, and Windsor, Canada (just across the border from Detroit).

In November, 1936, Johnson was invited to record in the Gunter Hotel in San Antonio, Texas, for the Vocalion label of the American Record Company (ARC). He recorded sixteen songs, most in two takes. He was probably paid a few hundred dollars. When his recording of "Terraplane Blues" sold a profitable four thousand copies, he was invited to record another thirteen songs for ARC in Dallas in June, 1937.

Johnson was alleged to have engaged in numerous love affairs, using various last names to hide his identity. One girlfriend, Estella Coleman, was the mother of bluesman Robert Lockwood, who became Johnson's protégé.

Johnson's death certificate indicates that he died in Greenwood, Mississippi, on August 16, 1938. At the time some cited syphilis as the cause of death; others cited pneumonia. A persistent story, repeated by Sonny Boy Williamson and others, was that Johnson died from the effects of poisoned whiskey, supplied to him at a Three Forks juke joint by a husband whose wife Johnson was courting. Whatever the cause of his death, Johnson was a relatively obscure, itinerant bluesman, his grave unmarked and his passing little noted.

The Music

There are no contemporaneous descriptions of Johnson's numerous performances as he played on the street, at parties, and at makeshift juke joints up and down the Mississippi Delta in the 1930's. Facts about Johnson's music come from two sources: the retrospective interviews with his contemporaries conducted by historians and the twenty-nine songs Johnson recorded for ARC, most of which were released at the time as Vocalion race records and all since reissued by Columbia Records.

In the wake of Johnson's death, blues historians traveled to the Delta to interview those who knew or who had heard him. From these reminiscences, it appears that Johnson was a successful, but not the most popular, blues musician. Other musicians appreciated his innovative guitar work, especially on slide (also known as bottleneck) guitar. Johnson was also respected for his ability to assimilate the influences of successful bluesmen such as House, Patton, Leroy Carr, and Skip James, as well as the urban influences and popular songs that he heard on the radio and on jukeboxes, although this was likely lost on a rough-hewn audience. Johnson's small frame and singing voice would not easily stand out in the din and dancing of a juke joint; his well-crafted lyrics were less important than his ability to sustain verse upon verse, as needed.

Vocalion Singles. With the release of twenty-two of his singles under the Vocalion label in 1937 and 1938, Johnson acquired more of a reputation. He attracted the interest of legendary producer John Hammond, who wanted him to perform in his landmark Spirituals to Swing concert in New York, to be held in December, 1938. Folklorist Alan Lomax visited Mississippi in 1941 to learn more about Johnson and his environment. Johnson was noted in jazz historian Rudy Blesh's 1946 book Shining Trumpets and in blues historian Samuel Charters's 1959 book The Country Blues.

Three of Johnson's songs—"I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," "Stop Breakin' Down Blues," and "Sweet Home Chicago"—became blues standards in the 1940's and 1950's. The boogie guitar Johnson plays on these songs, in which he strums a one-two shuffle beat on the bottom strings, clearly adapted from the left hand of boogie-woogie piano, became a staple of the burgeoning Chicago electric blues. Johnson intersperses fast high-note triplets into his boogie bass on "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," doing the same with a slide on "Rambling on My Mind." Blues guitarist Elmore James popularized this slide triplet riff on his 1952 hit version of "I Believe I'll Dust My Broom," which became a signature blues sound.

King of the Delta Blues Singers. In 1961 Columbia Records, influenced by Hammond, released sixteen of Johnson's ARC songs on the album King of the Delta Blues Singers as part of its Thesaurus of Classic Jazz series.

The effect of making Johnson's songs widely available was dramatic. Johnson's voice and guitar playing were perfectly suited for the makeshift but high-quality studio ARC had arranged. Although his voice retains a spontaneous quality, it is apparent from comparing the alternative takes that Johnson's songs were carefully constructed and polished for the three-minute constraints of 78-rpm records. The recordings allowed a diverse audience to leisurely appreciate the genius of his vocal displays, his virtuosic guitar technique, and the terse, even poetic quality of his lyrics.

Johnson's deeply expressive singing frequently breaks into moans, growls, and falsetto to reinforce the metaphors and drama of his verse. His guitar playing is not a mere accompaniment but a well-composed musical arrangement with distinct lead, rhythmic, and bass lines. Johnson often employs an independent walking bass line to reinforce his lyrics. Both his vocals and his slide-guitar work make masterful use of microtonal intervals. In "Hellhound on My Trail," a song that contributed to Johnson's legendary link to dark forces, Johnson's images are haunting. In "Come on in My Kitchen," Johnson's complex guitar chords and progressions intensify his plaintive moaning and spoken lines.

"Love in Vain." Columbia included Johnson's 1938 "Love in Vain" and fifteen other of his ARC songs in its 1970 album King of the Delta Blues Singers, Vol. 2. "Love in Vain," adapted from Carr's 1935 hit "When the Sun Goes Down," is a complete integration of vocal, lyric, and guitar, with not a note to spare. After a striking guitar introduction, Johnson sings three verses about his pain watching his loved one depart on a train. In the fourth verse, he has become too "lonesome" for words and moans and howls. Each verse is concluded with the near-biblical phrase, "All my love's in vain," reinforced by a walking bass line. His images are memorable. In the third verse, he finds that the colors of the departing train lights reflect his sadness and despair. His propulsive rhythmic chords evoke the sound of the train.

Johnson's ability to play a melodic lead in the high strings without seeming to interrupt his rhythmic playing on the lower strings led Keith Richards of the Rolling Stones to think he was hearing two guitars when he first listened to Johnson's records. The Rolling Stones, who had acquired a bootleg version of "Love in Vain" in 1967, covered the song on their 1969 Let It Bleed album; on two of their live albums, Get Yer Ya-Ya's Out! and Stripped; and in their concert film Ladies and Gentlemen: The Rolling Stones! (1972). Rock guitarist Eric Clapton did the same on his 2004 album, Me and Mr. Johnson.

Musical Legacy

Johnson is one of the most acclaimed country blues musicians of all time. Dying young, his life barely documented, Johnson epitomized the mystery of the early blues. This mystery was magnified by the story of Johnson going to a Mississippi crossroads to sell his soul to the devil in exchange for supernatural musical abilities, a legend repeated in books and films, including Joel and Ethan Coen's O Brother, Where Art Thou? (2000).

Johnson synthesized the best of the country blues artists and traditions while laying the groundwork for rhythm-and-blues and British rock with his revolutionary slide-guitar playing, complex chords, high-triplet riffs, walking bass patterns, and piano-style boogie shuffle. Columbia's 1990 release of the two-compact-disc box set The Complete Recordings of Robert Johnson sold a startling two million copies. It was certified platinum and received a Grammy for Best Historical Recording. One of only two photographs of Johnson known to be in existence, an elegant studio shot posed with his guitar, was used in the U.S. postage commemoration of Johnson. Numerous documentaries—such as The Search for Robert Johnson (1992), Can't You Hear the Wind Howl? The Life and Music of Robert Johnson (1997), and Hellhounds on My Trail: The Afterlife of Robert Johnson (2000)—made his music and legend known to a broader audience.

Johnson's most important legacy was his twenty-nine recorded songs, with their impassioned vocals, stark imagery, and moving guitar harmonies. Clapton described Johnson's music as "deeply soulful . . . the most powerful cry that I think you can find in the human voice."

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Bennighof, James. "Some Ramblings on Robert Johnson's Mind: Critical Analysis and Aesthetic Value in Delta Blues." American Music 15, no. 2 (Summer, 1997): 137-158. Critical analysis of "Rambling on My Mind," addressing its cultural and technical appeal.

Charters, Samuel. Walking a Blues Road: A Selection of Blues Writing, 1956-2004. New York: Marion Boyars, 2005. Contains Charters's historic 1959 essay on the blues as well as his thoughts on Johnson.

Guralnick, Peter. Searching for Robert Johnson: The Life and Legend of the "King of the Delta Blues Singers." New York: Plume, 1998. Places Johnson in the context of the Delta blues.

Komara, Edward. The Road to Robert Johnson: The Genesis and Evolution of Blues in the Delta from the Late 1800's Through 1938. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2007. Includes historical photographs, maps, and musical examples.

Mann, Woody. The Complete Robert Johnson. New York: Oak Publications, 1991. Transcriptions of

Johnson's twenty-nine recorded songs with a note on his musical technique.

Pearson, Barry Lee, and Bill McCullogh. Robert Johnson: Lost and Found. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2003. Assesses critical writings on Johnson and his music.

Rothenbuhler, Eric. "For-the-Record Aesthetics and Robert Johnson's Blues Style as a Product of Recorded Culture." Popular Music 26, no. 1 (2007): 65-81. Johnson learned from and adapted his music for records, providing his blues aesthetic with a unique appeal for modern audiences.

Wald, Elijah. Escaping the Delta: Robert Johnson and the Invention of the Blues. New York: Amistad, 2005. Traces the blues musicians who inspired Johnson, with an accompanying Yazoo records compact disc, Back to the Crossroads: The Roots of Robert Johnson.

See also: Clapton, Eric; Fuller, Blind Boy; House, Son; Howlin' Wolf; James, Elmore; James, Etta; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Patton, Charley; Plant, Robert; Richards, Keith; Staples, Pops; Williamson, Sonny Boy, I; Williamson, Sonny Boy, II.

Elvin Jones

American jazz composer and drummer

Jones expanded the role of the jazz drummer from strict timekeeper to collective improviser. He took a rhythmically avant-garde approach to jazz drumming, blurring the line between measures and leading to an intense, polyrhythmic, tension-building power.

Born: September 9, 1927; Pontiac, Michigan
Died: May 18, 2004; Englewood, New Jersey
Also known as: Elvin Ray Jones (full name)
Member of: The John Coltrane Quartet; the Elvin Jones Jazz Machine

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Elvin, 1961; Elvin Jones and Company, 1961 (with Thad Jones and Frank Foster); Together, 1961 (with Philly Joe Jones); Illumination, 1963 (with Jimmy Garrison Sextet); And Then Again, 1965; Dear John C., 1965; Midnight Walk, 1966; Heavy Sounds, 1968 (with Richard Davis); Puttin' It Together, 1968; The Ultimate Elvin Jones, 1968; Mr. Jones, 1969; Poly-Currents, 1969; The Prime Element, 1969; Coalition, 1970; Genesis, 1971; Merry-Go-Round, 1971; Elvin Jones Is on the Mountain, 1975; Mr. Thunder, 1975; New Agenda, 1975; The Main Force, 1976; Summit Meeting, 1976; Time Capsule, 1977; Love and Peace, 1978 (with McCoy Tyner Quartet); Remembrance, 1978; Very R.A.R.E., 1978; Heart to Heart, 1980; Brother John, 1982; Earth Jones, 1982; For John, 1982; Reunited, 1982 (with McCoy Tyner); Love Me with All Your Heart, 1983; In Europe, 1991; Youngblood, 1992; Going Home, 1993; It Don't Mean a Thing, 1993; When I Was at Aso Mountain, 1993 (with Takehisa Tanaka); Familiar, 1997; Jazz Machine, Vol. 2, 1999; Moon Flower, 1999 (with Fumio Karashima).

ALBUMS (with the Elvin Jones Jazz Machine): The Elvin Jones Jazz Machine in Europe, 1991; Jazz Machine, 1997.

ALBUMS (with the John Coltrane Quartet): Coltrane Jazz, 1960; Coltrane Plays the Blues, 1960; Coltrane's Sound, 1960; My Favorite Things, 1960; Africa/Brass, 1961; Impressions, 1961; Olé Coltrane, 1961; Transcendence, 1961; Ballads, 1962; Bye Bye Blackbird, 1962; Crescent, 1964; A Love Supreme, 1964; Ascension, 1965; First Meditations, 1965; Infinity, 1965; The John Coltrane Quartet Plays, 1965; Kulu Se Mama, 1965; Meditations, 1965; Om, 1965; Sun Ship, 1965; Transition, 1965.

The Life

Elvin Ray Jones was born on September 9, 1927, in Pontiac, Michigan, to a musically supportive mother and a father who was a lumber inspector for General Motors and a bass in the church choir. Jones had nine older brothers and sisters, among them two other famous jazz musicians: pianist Hank Jones and trumpeter-arranger Thad Jones. After a tour of duty with the Army, from 1946 to 1949, Jones returned to Michigan, and he immersed himself in the abundant Detroit jazz scene. Tenor saxophonist and bandleader Billy Mitchell soon hired Jones (and brother Thad) at the Bluebird Inn, where he backed jazz giants Charlie Parker, Sonny Stitt, Wardell Gray, and Miles Davis during his three-year stint.

Elvin Jones. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In the mid-1950's, Jones relocated to New York. After an unsuccessful audition to join Benny Goodman's group, Jones remained in New York, and he began freelancing with many major artists, including Charles Mingus, Bud Powell, J. J. Johnson, and Davis. In 1960 Jones joined forces with John Coltrane, becoming a member of the classic Coltrane quartet. After his almost six-year tenure with Coltrane, Jones freelanced with many prominent jazz artists, but he mainly performed with his own groups, notably the long-standing Jazz Machine, which was formed in the early 1980's and lasted until Jones's death in 2004.

In 1966 Jones married Keiko Jones, a native of Nagasaki, Japan, and the two remained happily married until he died. Keiko acted as Jones's personal and business manager. She was also involved in the Jazz Machine musically, composing and arranging charts for the group. Jones was survived by one son (Elvin Nathan Jones) and one daughter (Rose-Marie Fromm).

The Music

At twenty-one years of age, Jones had become a leading drummer on the Detroit jazz scene, and his first recorded performances came from his tenure at the Bluebird Inn with the Billy Mitchell Quintet. The considerable gap in recorded performances occurred because Jones was in the Army. When his recording career resumed in 1955, he performed with Davis and Mingus in New York City. Beginning in 1955, Jones was in demand in New York as a drummer, performing and recording with the J. J. Johnson Quintet, the Art Farmer Quartet featuring Hank Mobley, Kenny Burrell, Gil Evans, Pepper Adams, Tommy Flanagan, and a famous run with Sonny Rollins at the Village Vanguard in November, 1957. These pianoless trio recordings featured Rollins and Jones constantly interacting and trading solos that garnered both musicians some of the finest critical reviews of their careers.

The Coltrane Years. In October, 1960, Jones recorded multiple sessions with the first version of the classic Coltrane quartet, featuring Coltrane on tenor and soprano saxophones, McCoy Tyner on piano, and Steve Davis on bass. Selections from these first sessions produced several popular releases, including Coltrane's Sound, Coltrane Plays the Blues, Coltrane Jazz, and My Favorite Things. The Africa/Brass and Olé Coltrane sessions came next, followed by the world-famous Village Vanguard performances in November, 1961. At the time of these recordings, Davis had been replaced by either Reggie Workman or Jimmy Garrison on bass, and it was Garrison who would usually perform with the group to solidify the classic quartet lineup. Johnny Hartman and John Coltrane and Coltrane Live at Birdland were released in 1963. Crescent and A Love Supreme were released in 1964, followed by Kulu Se Mama, Ascension, Sun Ship, First Meditations, and Meditations in 1965.

Later Works. During and after his time with Coltrane, Jones played on many of jazz's most influential recordings of the 1960's and 1970's. Some of these recordings include: Motion (Lee Konitz, 1961), Judgment! (Andrew Hill, 1964), In 'n' Out (Joe Henderson, 1964), Night Dreamer (Wayne Shorter, 1964), Matador (Grant Green, 1964), Juju (Shorter, 1964), Into Somethin' (Larry Young, 1964), Inner Urge (Joe Henderson, 1964), Speak No Evil (Shorter, 1964), Unity (Larry Young, 1965), The Real McCoy (Tyner, 1967), New York Is Now! Vol. 1 (Ornette Coleman, 1968), and The Complete Village Vanguard Sessions (Art Pepper, 1977). While there were a number of Jones-led sessions in the 1960's (Elvin!, Dear John C., Midnight Walk, and Mr. Jones), the majority of Jones's work as a leader came in the 1970's, 1980's, and 1990's, when his work as a sideman gradually decreased. The early and mid-1970's saw the releases of many Jones sessions, including The Prime Element, Live at the Lighthouse, Mr. Thunder, Summit Meeting, and Time Capsule. In the late 1970's, Jones formed the Jazz Machine, a revolving door of jazz musicians that released its first recordings in 1978. Throughout the 1980's and 1990's, the band toured and released records, many of them capturing the group live in concert. Jones continued touring and recording until his death in 2004.

Musical Legacy

Jones had a significant impact on the transition from the pioneering bebop drumming of the 1940's and 1950's to modern jazz drumming of the following decades. He expanded the possibilities available to the jazz drummer in many different genres—from the classic bebop period through the hard-bop period and into the avant-garde. His polyrhythmic approach to jazz rhythm was a means for him to initiate intense musical conversation and interaction with his fellow band members. The Percussive Arts Society, Modern Drummer, the Down Beat Critics Poll, and Zildjian honored Jones with positions in their Hall of Fame.

Eric Novod

Further Reading

Kahn, Ashley. A Love Supreme: The Story of John Coltrane's Signature Album. New York: Viking Adult, 2002. An in-depth study of the making of the classic quartet's legendary album. The book contains many references to Jones's playing and his role in the session.

Porter, Lewis. John Coltrane: His Life and Music. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1998. In this Coltrane biography, the chapters that cover the 1960's have many references to the Coltrane and Jones interplay.

Ratliff, Ben. Coltrane: The Story of a Sound. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2007. A study on Coltrane's approach to and influence on the development of modern jazz, with information on the Coltrane-Jones interplay.

Spagnardi, Ronald. The Great Jazz Drummers. Cedar Grove, N.J.: Modern Drummer Publications, 1992. A brief but informative chapter on Jones in which he discusses his approach to jazz rhythm and playing with Coltrane.

See also: Coltrane, John; Davis, Miles; Mingus, Charles; Parker, Charlie; Rollins, Sonny; Taylor, Cecil; Tyner, McCoy.

George Jones

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

With his smooth voice and his elegant phrasing, Jones captivated country-music fans with his personally revealing songs. His duets with Tammy Wynette, who was also his wife, chronicled their love affair in music.

Born: September 12, 1931; Saratoga, Texas
Also known as: George Glenn Jones (full name); Crown Prince of Country Music

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: The Grand Ole Opry's New Star, 1957; Hillbilly Hit Parade, 1958; Long Live King George, 1958; White Lightning and Other Favorites, 1959; Country Church Time, 1960; Crown Prince of Country Music, 1960; George Jones Salutes Hank Williams, 1960; George Jones Sings, 1960; Duets Country Style, 1962 (with Margie Singleton); The Fabulous Country Music Sound of George Jones, 1962; George Jones Sings Bob Wills, 1962; George Jones Sings Country and Western Hits, 1962; George Jones Sings from the Heart, 1962; Homecoming in Heaven, 1962; My Favorites of Hank Williams, 1962; The New Favorites of George Jones, 1962; Songs from the Heart, 1962; The Ballad Side of George Jones, 1963; I Wish Tonight Would Never End, 1963; Novelty Styles, 1963;

What's in Our Hearts, 1963; Blue and Lonesome, 1964; Bluegrass Hootenanny, 1964; Country and Western's Number One Male Singer, 1964; George Jones Sings Like the Dickens, 1964; I Get Lonely, 1964; A King and Two Queens, 1964; More Favorites by George Jones, 1964; George Jones and Gene Pitney: For the First Time! Two Great Singers, 1965; George Jones and Gene Pitney (Recorded in Nashville!), 1965; The Great George Jones, 1965; Heartaches and Tears, 1965; I Get Lonely in a Hurry, 1965; Mr. Country and Western Music, 1965; New Country Hits, 1965; Old Brush Arbors, 1965; Close Together as You and Me, 1966 (with Melba Montgomery); Country Heart, 1966; I'm a People, 1966; It's Country Time Again!, 1966; Love Bug, 1966; We Found Heaven Right Here at 4033, 1966; Hits by George, 1967; Walk Through this World with Me, 1967; George Jones Sings the Songs of Dallas Frazier, 1968; If My Heart Had Windows, 1968; I'll Share My World with You, 1969; My Country, 1969; Where Grass Won't Grow, 1969; Will You Visit Me on Sunday?, 1970; George Jones Sings the Great Songs of Leon Payne, 1971; George Jones with Love, 1971; We Go Together, 1971; George Jones (We Can Make It), 1972; Me and the First Lady, 1972; A Picture of Me (Without You), 1972; We Love to Sing About Jesus, 1972; Let's Build a World Together, 1973 (with Tammy Wynette); Nothing Ever Hurt Me, 1973; We're Gonna Hold On, 1973; I Can Love You Enough, 1974; In a Gospel Way, 1974; You Gotta Be My Baby, 1974; George and Tammy and Tina, 1975 (with Wynette); Memories of Us, 1975; Alone Again, 1976; The Battle, 1976; Golden Ring, 1976 (with Wynette); Bartender's Blues, 1978; My Very Special Guests, 1979; Double Trouble, 1980 (with Johnny Paycheck); I Am What I Am, 1980; Together Again, 1980; Encore, 1981 (with Wynette); Still the Same Ole Me, 1981; A Taste of Yesterday's Wine, 1982 (with Merle Haggard); Jones Country, 1983; Shine On, 1983; By Request, 1984; Ladies' Choice, 1984; You've Still Got a Place in My Heart, 1984; Who's Gonna Fill Their Shoes, 1985; Wine Colored Roses, 1986; Too Wild Too Long, 1987; One Woman Man, 1989; You Oughta Be Here with Me, 1990; And Along Came Jones, 1991; Friends in High Places, 1991; Walls Can Fall, 1992; High-Tech Redneck, 1993; The Bradley Barn Sessions, 1994; One, 1995; I Lived to Tell It All, 1996; It Don't Get Any Better than This, 1998; The Cold Hard Truth, 1999; The Rock: Stone Cold Country, 2001; Hits I Missed . . . and One I Didn't, 2005; God's Country: George Jones and Friends, 2006; Kickin' out the Footlights Again, 2006.

The Life

George Glenn Jones was born in Saratoga, Texas, in an area around Beaumont called the Big Thicket. His father, George Washington Jones, was an alcoholic who often beat him to make the boy sing country songs, especially those by Roy Acuff. Later, Jones sang for tips on the streets. From there he progressed to radio appearances on KTXJ in Jasper and on KRIC in Beaumont in the late 1940's. In 1950 he married Dorothy Bonvillion, and they divorced a year later. After serving in the Marines during the Korean War, Jones made his first record. He married Shirley Ann Corley in 1954, but his drinking, womanizing, and long absences from home took its toll on the marriage. Even the birth of two sons, Jeffrey and Bryan, could not salvage the marriage, which ended in divorce in 1968, after he met Tammy Wynette, a leading country singer who was also married.

Jones and Wynette married on February 16, 1969, becoming unofficially Mr. and Mrs. Country Music. They had a daughter, Tamala Georgette, in 1970. The marriage was troubled, and Jones and Wynette divorced in 1975. After that, Jones began drinking heavily, abusing drugs, failing to appear for shows, and experiencing financial problems (including with the Internal Revenue Service). Jones shot at his friend Earl "Peanut" Montgomery, and Montgomery had Jones committed to the psychiatric ward at Eliza Coffee Memorial Hospital in Florence, South Carolina; later, Jones was transferred to Hillcrest Hospital in Birmingham, Alabama. Nevertheless, he soon returned to using cocaine and to drinking. He met Nancy Sepulveda, who helped him to give up cocaine and alcohol. Jones married Sepulveda in 1983, but he continued to drink alcohol. In 1994 he had problems with his heart, and he underwent successful open-heart surgery. He moved to Franklin, Tennessee, with his wife, and he performs about one hundred shows each year.

The Music

Early Career. Jones's musical career began after the Korean War, when he recorded "No Money in This Deal" in 1954 for Starday Records. "Why Baby Why" in 1956 was his first big hit, reaching number four on the country charts, and "Just One More" was number three. After that, the hits slowed down, primarily because Jones sounded like his idol, Hank Williams. It was not until he developed his own style that he became popular. When Jones switched from Starday Records to Mercury Records, his career started to improve.

In 1958 Jones had three hits, and in 1959 he had four hits, including "White Lightning." "The Window Up Above," a song about unrequited love—a Jones theme—was on the country charts for thirty-three weeks, and he had several hits, notably "She Thinks I Still Care" for United Artists, the record company he switched to in 1961. He spent most of the 1960's on the road, where he started to drink heavily. In 1964 Jones switched to Musicor Records.

Duets with Wynette. Starting in 1963, he did hit duets with Melba Montgomery, but after he became involved with Wynette in 1967, she became his duet partner. Wynette's producer, Billy Sherrill from CBS, was responsible for persuading Jones to add strings and backup singers to his recordings. Jones subsequently left Musicor for CBS, and Sherrill helped him to develop a smoother style and to focus on phrasing. "We Can Make It" rose to the sixth spot on the charts, and "Loving You Could Never Be Better" was a number-two recording.

In 1972 Jones and Wynette began a series of hit duets, songs that often reflected their personal lives. "Let's Build a World Together" was followed by "We're Gonna Hold On," a song that mirrored their earlier breakup and then reconciliation. They went on tour together, making more than a million dollars a year, but in 1974 they recorded "We Loved It Away," when their marriage was almost over.

Solo Career. Although despondent after the end of his marriage to Wynette, Jones went on to record some of his most personal and most popular records. "Once You've Had the Best" and "The Door" reflect his lost love, as does "The Grand Tour," a house tour conducted by a man whose wife has left him. At the annual Willie Nelson Fourth of July picnic in 1976, Jones was the star, and national newspapers and journals were lavish in their praise of his performance. Nevertheless, by the late 1970's, he was using cocaine and failing to appear at his scheduled performances. Despite his problems, he did receive his second Male Vocalist of the Year Award from the Country Music Association in 1980 for "He Stopped Loving Her Today." In 1995 Jones and Wynette reunited to make One, an album of duets.

Musical Legacy

Jones is a great singer and entertainer whose ballads about lost love and memories resonated with his many fans. His "He Stopped Loving Her Today," about a man who loves a woman until he dies, is regarded by many as one of the greatest country love songs ever written. In 1994 Jones was inducted into the Country Music Association's Hall of Fame. In 1999 he won another Grammy Award for "Choices," and in 2002 he was awarded the National Medal of Arts Honor by President George W. Bush.

George Jones. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Thomas L. Erskine

Further Reading

Allen, Bob. George Jones: The Life and Times of a Honky-Tonk Legend. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996. An updating of his George Jones: The Saga of an American Singer, this book contains material on the resurgence of interest in and the appreciation of Jones in the face of competition from younger male country vocalists.

_____. George Jones: The Saga of an American Singer. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1984. Insightful biography that provides background information about Jones's family history and his life in Texas. It concludes with his marriage to Sepulveda.

Carlisle, Dolly. Ragged but Right: The Life and Times of George Jones. Chicago: Contemporary Books, 1984. A thorough and factual presentation of Jones's life; includes photographs and a discography.

Dawidoff, Nicholas. In the Country of Country: People and Places in American Music. New York: Pantheon Books, 1997. Fairly short coverage of Jones's life, although it includes perceptive analyses of several of Jones's best-known songs and an explanation of his appeal.

Jones, George, with Tom Carter. George Jones: I Lived to Tell It All. New York: Villard, 1996. Writing about his life, Jones focuses on his recovery from alcohol and cocaine abuse. He also gives an account of his relationship with Wynette. Includes photographs.

See also: Arnold, Eddy; Brooks, Garth; Frizzell, Lefty; Haggard, Merle; Nelson, Willie; Strait, George; Williams, Hank; Wynette, Tammy.

Hank Jones

American jazz pianist and composer

With a career spanning the history of modern jazz, Jones emerged from the bebop style to perfect his inventive sparse left-hand chord voicings beneath gently swinging, often bluesy and rhapsodic right-hand melodies.

Born: July 31, 1918; Vicksburg, Mississippi
Also known as: Henry Jones (full name)
Member of: The Great Jazz Trio

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Urbanity, 1947; Hank Jones Piano, 1950; Bluebird, 1955; Hank Jones Quartet/Quintet, 1955; The Trio, 1955; Hank Jones Quartet, 1956; Have You Met Hank Jones?, 1956; Relaxin' at Camarillo, 1956; Trio with Guests, 1956 (with Wendell Marshall and Kenny Clarke); Hank Jones Swings Gigi, 1958; The Talented Touch, 1958; Songs from Porgy and Bess, 1960; Arrival Time, 1962; Here's Love, 1963; This Is Ragtime Now, 1964; Happenings, 1966 (with Oliver Nelson); Hanky Panky, 1975; Arigato, 1976; Satin Doll, 1976; Bop Redux, 1977; I Remember You, 1977; Just for Fun, 1977; Portions, 1977; Rockin' in Rhythm, 1977 (with Ray Brown and Jimmie Smith); Tiptoe Tapdance, 1977; The Trio, 1977 (with Milt Hinton and Bobby Rosengarden); Ain't Misbehavin', 1978; A Foggy Day, 1978; Bluesette, 1978; Groovin' High, 1978; Jones-Brown-Smith, 1978 (with Brown and Smith); Have You Met This Jones?, 1979; Hank Jones-Red Mitchell Duo, 1987 (with Red Mitchell); Lazy Afternoon, 1989; The Oracle, 1989 (with Dave Holland and Billy Higgins); The Essence, 1990; Hank Jones Trio, 1991; Hank Jones Trio with Mads Vinding and Al Foster, 1991; A Handful of Keys: The Music of Thomas "Fats" Waller, 1992; Upon Reflection: The Music of Thad Jones, 1994; Hank Jones Meets Cheick Tidiane Seck and the Mandinkas, 1995; Sarala, 1995; Steal Away, 1995; Master Class, 1997; Darji's Groove, 1998; Compassion, 2002; The New York Rhythm Section, 2004; For My Father, 2005; Hank and Frank, 2006 (with Frank Wess); West of 5th, 2006 (with Christian McBride and Jimmie Cobb); Piano Solo, 2008.

ALBUMS (with the Great Jazz Trio): Love for Sale, 1976; The Great Jazz Trio Direct from L.A., 1977; Kindness, Joy, Love, and Happiness, 1977; The Great Tokyo Meeting, 1978; Milestones, 1978; Chapter Two, 1980; Moreover, 1980; The Threesome, 1982; The Club New Yorker, 1983; N.Y. Sophisticate: A Tribute to Duke Ellington, 1983; Monk's Moods, 1984; Standard Collection, 1986; Flowers for Lady Day, 1991; Village Vanguard Again, 2000; My Funny Valentine, 2001; Direct from L.A., 2002; KJLH, 2002; Autumn Leaves, 2003; Someday My Prince Will Come, 2004; Collaboration, 2005; Speak Low, 2005; S'Wonderful, 2005; I'm Old Fashioned, 2006 (with Sadao Watanabe); Objects Appear Closer, 2007.

The Life

Born in Vicksburg, Mississippi, in 1918, Henry Jones moved with his family to Pontiac, Michigan, where by his early teens he had established himself as a professional pianist working with groups in the Detroit and Flint area. After leaving Detroit, Jones worked first in Cleveland, Ohio, and then Buffalo, New York, where he met Art Tatum, a major influence on Jones's playing style. His move to New York City in 1944 was in part initiated by Lucky Thomson, who, after working with the young Jones, secured him a job in Oran Thaddeus "Hot Lips" Page's band. Jones's move to New York also ushered in his long recording career, when he became a regular rhythm-section member for the Savoy Records label by the late 1940's. By 1947 Jones had worked and recorded with some of New York City's finest jazz musicians, including Howard McGhee, Billy Eckstine, Charlie Parker, and Coleman Hawkins. In 1947 he began a five-year musical collaboration with Ella Fitzgerald, serving as her pianist and garnering a reputation as a refined, accomplished, and reliable accompanist.

From 1953 to 1959, Jones returned to freelance work in New York City, supplementing club work with tours (Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic, Benny Goodman) and recording dates (including his own trio, Hawkins, Lester Young, and Cannonball Adderley). In 1956 Jones recorded the solo album Have You Met Hank Jones? for Savoy Records. In 1958 Jones recorded Somethin' Else with Adderley and Miles Davis, considered by many one of the most influential jazz albums of the 1950's.

In 1959 Jones was hired as a staff musician for CBS, an engagement that provided the pianist opportunities to work in a variety of musical contexts. Jones remained on the CBS staff for fifteen years, performing for such popular television programs as The Ed Sullivan Show and The Jackie Gleason Show. While employed at CBS, Jones maintained an active performing and recording schedule, working intermittently with bands such as Goodman's and the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra, and recording with Oliver Nelson, Kenny Burrell, Johnny Hartman, Clark Terry, Sonny Stitt, and others.

Soon after CBS relinquished music production activities in 1974, Jones formed the Great Jazz Trio with Ron Carter and Tony Williams. The group first recorded at the Village Vanguard studios in 1975, releasing the album Hanky Panky featuring Grady Tate in place of Williams. The trio recorded its next ten albums from 1975 to 1978 with the original personnel, adding saxophonists Sadao Watanabe and Jackie McLean on two of the sessions. The Great Jazz Trio regularly performed and recorded throughout the 1970's and 1980's while undergoing two major personnel changes: Jimmy Cobb and Eddie Gomez replaced Carter and Williams in 1982, and Billy Hart and Mads Vinding replaced Cobb and Gomez in 1988 (drummer Al Foster is featured on two 1980 albums with Gomez on bass). Since the 1990's, the Great Jazz Trio has recorded and performed with a number of players, young and old, including Jones's brother Elvin, Roy Haynes, Richard Davis, George Mraz, and Jack DeJohnette. Apart from his work with the Great Jazz Trio, Jones has performed and recorded in a variety of duet formats with musicians such as John Lewis, Charlie Haden, George Shearing, Tommy Flanagan, Abbey Lincoln, and Joe Lovano.

The Music

Jones's musicianship is often characterized as refined, versatile, and comprehensive. His proficiency in classical music, ragtime, stride, blues, and gospel is complemented by an equally notable command of the more technical aspects of music: sight-reading, transposition, arranging, and accompanying. The all-inclusive nature of Jones's musical character was further developed through his work with Fitzgerald and later with the CBS Orchestra, where he was regularly called upon for a wide variety of musical tasks, including accompanying and composing or improvising background and incidental music for the studio's programs and commercials. In addition to his practical experience in the world of television and radio, Jones was instrumental in shaping the sound of modern jazz piano after Bud Powell. His uniquely assimilative approach to piano emanates from five major spheres of musical influence: spirituals, hymns, and jubilee gospel music of the urban Baptist church; the stride-piano styles of Fats Waller and Earl Hines; the sophisticated and refined piano styles of Teddy Wilson, Tatum, and Nat King Cole; the ensemble piano playing of Duke Ellington and Count Basie; and the harmonically inventive and complex language of bebop. This final source exerted a tremendous influence on Jones's musical vocabulary. Jones's professed indebtedness to the complex harmonic language of bebop is also evident in his solo and duet playing, where he often employs chromatic chord substitutions and sophisticated voicings in renditions of pop standards. Above all, Jones emerged as one of the most dependable and sought-after studio jazz pianists of the 1950's and 1960's. He performed on hundreds of commercial studio recordings, not including the hundreds of hours of live television and radio broadcasts that featured his playing.

Early Recordings. Jones's early recordings are typified by a straightforward bebop approach to comping, improvisation, and accompanying vocalists. As noted in his playing with Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic accompanying Fitzgerald, Jones maintains a conventional accompaniment style, providing a tasteful harmonic and rhythmic backdrop for the singer and soloists. With Jones's early small-group recordings as a leader and sideman, however, his playing reveals a sophisticated sense of harmonic variety coupled with an inventive melodic voice. His playing on the Verve sessions with Charlie Parker (1949-1952) features a solid command of the bebop musical vocabulary; Jones tends to avoid the persistent use of left-hand chords below the right-hand improvisation as favored by bop pianists such Powell and Horace Silver. This sparse left-hand texture directs listeners to the gracefully melodic and swinging character of Jones's tactile right-hand lines.

Somethin' Else. Jones's collaborative relationship with Adderley began in 1955 with the pianist joining Adderley on Presenting Cannonball, the alto saxophonist's debut album on the Savoy label. In 1958 Adderley assembled Jones, bassist Sam Jones, drummer Art Blakey, and trumpeter Davis for a Blue Note recording session released as the album Somethin' Else. In several interviews, Jones recalled how Davis, though not the official leader of the studio date, assumed leadership of the session, determining arrangements and promoting a relaxed and comfortable studio environment. Jones's soloing on Somethin' Else features his trademark unaccompanied right-hand style, while left-hand chords rarely interrupt the flowing treble improvisation. One noteworthy contrast to Jones's right-hand-style soloing is the sophisticated, at times polytonal block-chord solo on the album's title track. Also notable in the session are Jones's and bassist Sam Jones's unison grooves that serve as introductions and interludes to tunes such as "Autumn Leaves" and "Love for Sale." Jones's extensive solo at the coda of "Autumn Leaves" features a unique blend of tonal and modal musical language, weaving solo lines with harmonic lines above a relatively static vamp. These moments of groove-oriented improvisation foreshadow one of the hallmarks of the mature hard-bop jazz style of the 1960's.

Somethin' Else also features Jones as composer, with his "Allison's Uncle" closing the album's B-side. The group's forward-looking approach to improvisation, arrangement, and musical language established Somethin' Else as a landmark recording in the post-bop jazz era.

The Great Jazz Trio. Although Jones maintained an active recording schedule while working at CBS, critics often cite his recordings with the Great Jazz Trio of the 1970's and 1980's as his return to the jazz world. With the veteran crews of Williams or Foster on drums and Carter or Gomez on bass, the Great Jazz Trio amassed a series of commercial recordings that present Jones in what some regard as his top musical form. The sessions recorded at the Village Vanguard (1977, 1980) notably feature Jones and his band in moments of creative spontaneity tempered with a mature sense of inventiveness and logic. In recent decades the Great Jazz Trio recorded such historic albums as Flowers for Lady Day, Autumn Leaves, and Collaboration, which featured Richard Davis on bass and Jones's brother Elvin on drums. Flowers for Lady Day represents the first recorded collaboration between the two Jones brothers since 1963. The final album was released just months before Elvin's death in 2004.

Duets. The series of duet sessions are some of the pianist's most intimate and colorful recordings of his career. Playing without drums and sometimes bass affords Jones a chance to display his brilliant stride technique, something more or less absent in his trio and small-group recordings. As Jones admits, the duet recordings allow the pianist to collaborate with some of his closest musical friends, including fellow Detroiter and bebopper Flanagan and tenor saxophonist Lovano. The duet sessions have also permitted Jones the opportunity to branch out from his usual jazz repertory, touchingly illustrated in Steal Away with bassist Haden, where the pianist masterfully reads through a handpicked set of spirituals and hymns.

Musical Legacy

While some argue that Jones's steady work with big bands and CBS obscured his gifts for jazz playing in modern contexts until the 1970's, his career never suffered from a lack of productivity, employment, or admiration and respect from other musicians. When asked if he had any regrets about remaining somewhat of a conventional and commercially oriented pianist during the 1960's, when revolutionary changes were taking place in jazz (some of them in fact emanating from his brother Elvin's adventurous drumming with John Coltrane), Jones responded, "Whatever style I play is the suitable style for me. Just being different for the sake of being different is not necessarily a good thing . . . if it's viable, then do it." Jones is noted for having one of the most prolific and successful commercial and recording careers in jazz history, and the refined sense of groove and lyricism that has permeated his playing since the early 1950's has left an unmistakable stamp on a younger generation of pianists, most notably Barry Harris, Kenny Barron, and Mulgrew Miller. Jones's music has received three Grammy nominations, two for Best Solo Jazz Performance (Bop Redux and I Remember You), and one for Best Group Jazz Instrumental Performance (Love for Sale). In addition, Jones was awarded the Jazz Masters Fellowship by the National Endowment for the Arts in 1989. In 2003 the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers inducted Jones into the Jazz Wall of Fame, and the New School University granted Jones the Beacons of Jazz award in 2005.

Cory M. Gavito

Further Reading

Dobbins, Bill. "Jones, Hank." In The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz, edited by Barry Kernfeld. London: Macmillan, 2002. A concise introduction to Jones's life and career with a short list of sources about Jones written in foreign languages.

Giddings, Gary. "Autumn in New York: Hank Jones's Late-Flowering Mastery." The New Yorker (June 4, 2007). Giddings reflects on Jones's lengthy career after an engagement at Dizzy's Club Coca-Cola in New York City.

Jones, Hank, and Joe Lovano. "Family Legacy (Interview with Hank Jones)." Down Beat 72 (2005): 36-40. In an interview with friend and collaborator Lovano, Jones shares his memories and his thoughts about his late brothers, Thad and Elvin.

Lees, Gene. "One of the Jones Boys." In Waiting for Dizzy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1991. Lees added his 1991 interview with Jones and wife Teddy in upstate New York with anecdotes from Jones's illustrious career.

Rosenthal, David H. "The Lyricists: Detroit Pianists." In Hard Bop: Jazz and Black Music, 1955-1965. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992. In a monograph about hard bop, the author discusses Jones within the context of Detroit, the home of three of the most lyrical jazz pianists of the 1950's and 1960's: Flanagan, Barry Harris, and Jones.

Waltzer, Ben. "The Quiet Man with Voluble Fingers." The New York Times (June 24, 2001). Writing in preparation for Jones's 2001 appearance with Lovano at the JVC Jazz Festival in New York City, Waltzer assembles a series of the pianist's recollections alongside those of Jones's many admirers, including Flanagan and Miller.

See also: Adderley, Cannonball; Fitzgerald, Ella; Goodman, Benny; Grappelli, Stéphane; Hawkins, Coleman; Jones, Elvin; Lewis, John; Parker, Charlie; Tatum, Art; Young, Lester.

Quincy Jones

American pop, jazz, and film-score composer, songwriter, arranger, trumpeter, pianist, and singer

Jones helped define jazz in the 1950's, as an arranger for Count Basie and Tommy Dorsey and as a musician in Dizzy Gillespie's backing band. Later he established himself as a solo artist, record producer, and composer of film sound tracks.

Born: March 14, 1933; Chicago, Illinois
Also known as: Quincy Delight Jones, Jr. (full name)
Member of: The Jones Boys

Principal works

FILM SCORES: The Slender Thread, 1965; Walk, Don't Run, 1966; In Cold Blood, 1967; In the Heat of the Night, 1967; Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice, 1969; Cactus Flower, 1969; The Italian Job, 1969; Mackenna's Gold, 1969; The Getaway, 1972; The Color Purple, 1985.

TELEVISION THEMES: Ironside, 1967; The Bill Cosby Show, 1969; Sanford and Son, 1972; Roots, 1977.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as producer and/or arranger): Social Call, 1955 (Betty Carter); Vaughan and Violins, 1959 (Sarah Vaughan); Under Paris Skies, 1960 (Andy Williams); Genius + Soul = Jazz, 1961 (Ray Charles); You're Mine You, 1962 (Sarah Vaughan); Ella and Basie!, 1963 (Ella Fitzgerald); This Time by Basie: Hits of the 50's and 60's, 1963 (Count Basie); It Might as Well Be Swing, 1964 (Frank Sinatra); Our Shining Hour, 1965 (Sammy Davis, Jr.); Sinatra at the Sands, 1966 (Frank Sinatra); Off the Wall, 1979 (Michael Jackson); Give Me the Night, 1980 (George Benson); Lena Horne: The Lady and Her Music, 1981 (Lena Horne and cast); Thriller, 1982 (Michael Jackson); L.A. Is My Lady, 1984 (Frank Sinatra); USA for Africa: We Are the World, 1985 (various artists); Bad, 1987 (Michael Jackson).

ALBUMS (solo): Quincy Jones + Harry Arnold + Big Band = Jazz!, 1953; Quincy Jones with the Swedish/U.S. All Stars, 1953; This Is How I Feel About Jazz, 1956; Go West, Man!, 1957; Home Again, 1958; The Birth of a Band, Vol. 1, 1959; The Birth of a Band, Vol. 2, 1959; The Great Wide World of Quincy Jones, 1959; I Dig Dancers, 1960; Around the World, 1961; The Quintessence, 1961; Bossa Nova, 1962; Quincy Plays for Pussycats, 1962; Quincy Jones Plays the Hip Hits, 1963; Quincy Jones Explores the Music of Henry Mancini, 1963; Big Band Bossa Nova, 1964; Golden Boy, 1964; The Pawnbroker, 1964; Quincy's Got a Brand New Bag, 1965; I Heard That!, 1969; The Lost Man, 1969; Walking in Space, 1969; Gula Matari, 1970; Dollar, 1971; Smackwater Jack, 1971; Mode, 1973; You've Got It Bad, Girl, 1973; Body Heat, 1974; Mellow Madness, 1975; We Had a Ball, 1976; Sounds . . . and Stuff Like That!, 1978; The Dude, 1980; Quincy Jones All Stars, 1986; Strike Up the Band, 1988; Back on the Block, 1989; Christmas Jubilee, 1991; Inner Voices, 1991; Q. D. III Soundlab, 1991; Q's Jook Joint, 1994; Basie and Beyond (with Count Basie), 2000; Walk on the Wild Side, 2001.

ALBUMS (with the Jones Boys): The Jones Boys, 1957; Jump for Jones, 2001.

SINGLES: "I Don't Go for That," 1990; "Tomorrow," 1990; "We Be Doin' It," 1991; "The Secret Garden," 1992; "You Put a Move on My Heart," 1995; "Stomp," 1996.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Q: The Autobiography of Quincy Jones, 2001.

The Life

Born in Chicago on March 14, 1933, to Quincy Delight Jones, Sr., and Sarah Frances Wells, Quincy Delight Jones, Jr., lived in several different geographic locations throughout his early life. After moving to Seattle, Washington, during his primary-school years, the youngster developed a strong interest in the arts; when he was a teen, he learned the trumpet and sang with a gospel group. Upon high school graduation in 1950, the budding star won a scholarship to Boston's Schillinger House of Music (eventually named the Berklee School of Music).

Those studies were short-lived: Jones was offered work as a touring trumpet player for jazz legend Lionel Hampton. Following that early career stint, Jones moved to New York City to pursue work as an arranger, which led to additional sessions, solo projects, and, later, film scores and producing for other artists.

Throughout his rise to prominence, Jones had several romantic relationships, starting with a 1957 marriage to Jeri Caldwell. The couple had a daughter, Jolie, but they divorced in 1966. In 1967 Jones married Ulla Andersson, but after having daughter Martina Jones and son Quincy Jones III, they split in 1974. Jones was married to actor Peggy Lipton from 1974 to 1990, and they had two daughters, Kidada and Rashida. Other romantic ties included a relationship with Carol Reynolds, with whom he had a daughter, Rachel, and Nastassja Kinski, with whom he had a daughter, Kenya Julia Miambi Sarah.

In the 1960's Jones supported the ideals of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., which later inspired Jones to found the Institute for Black American Music. In 1985 Jones produced the charity single "We Are the World," which was instrumental in bringing international awareness to Ethiopian famine relief (a campaign that later led to outreach efforts with U2's Bono). Other credits include starting the Black Arts Festival in Chicago and forming the Quincy Jones Listen Up Foundation (which introduced underprivileged youth to the arts, music, culture, and technology). Jones's organization We Are the Future provided aid to children living in areas of conflict.

The Music

Early Works. After he left school, Jones's musical career soared. In the 1950's he played trumpet in Hampton's band. Following that tour, he became a highly regarded musical arranger, working on Betty Carter's 1955 release Meet Betty Carter and Ray Bryant. The next year he returned to the stage as a session man for Gillespie, who was so impressed with the newcomer's work that he commissioned Jones to lead a big band on 1956's This Is How I Feel About Jazz. By this point, Jones had proved his musical abilities, and he augmented his work for other artists (including Sarah Vaughan and Andy Williams) with several solo albums.

Genius + Soul = Jazz. Jones found even more mainstream fame in 1961 when he arranged Ray Charles's classic Genius + Soul = Jazz. Even though the project alluded to specific genres in the title, it broke boundaries for introducing nontraditional elements of soul and jazz, expanding the audience beyond either niche. Additional attention came to the project because the Count Basie Orchestra backed the critically acclaimed project. The momentum continued swinging in Jones's direction, with additional work with Vaughan, Peggy Lee, and Ella Fitzgerald.

It Might as Well Be Swing. In 1964 Jones branched out to a wider audience when he teamed with crooner Frank Sinatra on a collaborative project with Basie called It Might as Well Be Swing. As arranger and orchestra conductor for the album, Jones was instrumental in shaping the direction of "Fly Me to the Moon," "The Best Is Yet to Come," and "Hello, Dolly!," versions so highly regarded they became part of the Great American Songbook. The unprecedented success of this collection inspired Jones to return to the studio for 1969's

Quincy Jones. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Walking in Space, merging big band influences with contemporary pop and rock stylings. He continued branching out throughout the 1970's, producing for soul-gospel great Aretha Franklin and arranging strings for the folk-flavored Paul Simon.

Off the Wall. In 1979 Jones made headlines by producing Michael Jackson's solo album Off the Wall (on the heels of Jones's musical direction for the 1978 film The Wiz, costarring Jackson). The Jackson project was one of Jones's most diverse, incorporating soul, rhythm and blues, funk, and the burgeoning disco sound, while showcasing the occasional ballad and contemporary jazz flourish. The album topped the soul charts for that year, ending up with a number-three pop finish and going on to sell more than twenty million copies across the world. The high-profile release also drew considerable attention to Jones's 1980 solo rendering The Dude, which was best known for introducing rhythm-and-blues vocalist James Ingram on the singles "One Hundred Ways" and "Just Once."

Thriller. Off the Wall and The Dude were quickly eclipsed by Jones's production work on Jackson's 1982 effort Thriller. Featuring Jones's slick arrangements and Jackson's soulful vocals, the album incorporated a full-blown rock-and-roll song in "Beat It," a spoken-word introduction on the title cut from famous actor Vincent Price, and a duet with Beatle Paul McCartney, "The Girl Is Mine." The single "Billie Jean" was supported in concert by Jackson's signature moonwalk dance steps, adding additional fuel to the cultural frenzy. In the end, the project took home a record-breaking eight Grammy Awards and sold more than a hundred million albums. In fact, it inspired Jones and Jackson to continue their working relationship, including on the charity single "We Are the World" in 1985 and Jackson's Bad project in 1987 (which had a record five chart-topping singles).

Back on the Block. After spending the bulk of the 1980's alongside Jackson and composing the sound track to the Steven Spielberg-directed The Color Purple, Jones made a new statement on 1989's Back on the Block (his first solo effort in eight years). The goal of the project was to merge old-time jazz stars with rhythm-and-blues and rap classics, while introducing a handful of brand-new artists. The list of celebrity special guests is long and talent-laden, among them Dizzy Gillespie, Ella Fitzgerald, Sarah Vaughan, Miles Davis, Ray Charles, Chaka Khan, George Benson, Ice-T, Luther Vandross, Herbie Hancock, and Tevin Campbell. Along with seamlessly blending several generations of musical luminaries, the sessions were the catalyst for Jones to reunite with Davis on 1991's Miles and Quincy Live at Montreux (revisiting Davis's classic jazz outpourings for the first time in three decades).

Q's Jook Joint. In 1994 Jones reprised the formula of collaborating with a cavalcade of legendary and upcoming stars in Q's Juke Joint. The album showcases the diversity of classic standards, soulful ballads, and hip-hop songs, making Jones timeless as well as current. The album is regarded for several tracks, including "Let the Good Times Roll" (a collaboration of Jones, Bono, Ray Charles, and Stevie Wonder) and "Heaven's Girl" (featuring Jones, Aaron Hall, Ronald Isley, R. Kelly, and Charlie Wilson). Phil Collins and Gloria Estefan were among the guests, and the album provided the first major platform for Tamia on "You Put a Move on My Heart." The project remained in the public eye into the late 1990's, inspiring Jones to compile the career-spanning box set Q: The Musical Biography of Quincy Jones in 2001 (corresponding with the release of his autobiography).

Musical Legacy

With decades in the music industry, the multitalented Jones was a highly decorated entertainer. His early work as an arranger for several jazz giants showed his keen ear for musical sensibilities, leading Jones to be a highly sought-after session player. The balancing act continued while he developed his solo career, which began in jazz and later branched out innovatively into soul, rhythm-and-blues, and funk territories.

Jones held the distinction of producing Jackson's solo breakthrough Off the Wall and its record-shattering follow-up, Thriller. The latter project crossed over from the soul and rhythm-and-blues worlds into pop and rock arenas, and it became one of the best-selling albums of all time. When Thriller celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, artists as diverse as Kanye West, Fergie, Akon, and will.i.am cited the Jones-Jackson collaboration as a musical inspiration.

Jones's versatility continued in the world of film sound tracks with his work on Spielberg's socially conscious The Color Purple, a blockbuster upon its release and featuring Oprah Winfrey in a key role. All the while, Jones used his celebrity to promote several social and charitable causes.

Andy Argyrakis

Further Reading

Feather, Leonard. The Encyclopedia of Jazz. New York: Da Capo Press, 1960. Contains a traditional encyclopedia entry covering Jones's early-career accomplishments in the studio and on the stage.

Giddins, Gary. Visions of Jazz: The First Century. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. This comprehensive overview of the jazz genre has several references to Jones, including mentions of his solo work and collaborations with other artists.

Gioia, Ted. The History of Jazz. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997. A close look at Jones's involvement in the genre's history as an artist and producer, with emphasis on crossing over into pop during the 1980's.

Jones, Quincy. Q: The Autobiography of Quincy Jones. New York: Doubleday, 2001. The autobiographical text traces Jones's early jazz career through sound-track scoring and work on major pop projects throughout the 1980's. It also includes insights from Charles and Lipton.

Ross, Courtney, ed. Listen Up: The Lives of Quincy Jones. New York: Warner Books, 1990. This book showcases Jones's personal life, his rise to fame, and his many artistic facets.

See also: Basie, Count; Bergman, Alan; Crouch, Andraé; Davis, Miles; Gillespie, Dizzy; Grusin, Dave; Hampton, Lionel; Lee, Peggy; McCartney, Sir Paul; Mancini, Henry; Morricone, Ennio; Nascimento, Milton; Turner, Tina; Vaughan, Sarah; Washington, Dinah.

Janis Joplin

American rock singer and songwriter

Joplin was the first female blues singer to be a noted composer, arranger, and bandleader. A legendary figure, she was known for the range, volume, and depth of her voice as well as her outrageous lifestyle and her raw, emotional singing.

Born: January 19, 1943; Port Arthur, Texas
Died: October 4, 1970; Hollywood, California
Also known as: Janis Lyn Joplin (full name); Pearl
Member of: Big Brother and the Holding Company; the Kozmic Blues Band; the Full Tilt Boogie Band

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): The Typewriter Tape, 1964 (bootleg recording with Jorma Kaukonen); Pearl, 1971 (with the Full Tilt Boogie Band).

ALBUMS (with Big Brother and the Holding Company): Big Brother and the Holding Company, 1967; Cheap Thrills, 1968; Be a Brother, 1970 (with Kathi McDonald); How Hard It Is, 1971.

ALBUMS (with the Kozmic Blues Band): I Got Dem Ol' Kozmic Blues Again Mama, 1969.

The Life

Janis Lyn Joplin (JAW-plihn) was born in Port Arthur, Texas, in 1943, the oldest daughter of Seth Ward Joplin, an oil engineer, and Dorothy Bonita East, a housewife. As a child, Joplin was extraordinarily intelligent and creative, yet she also displayed an urgent need for attention and approval.

A fan of country-music legend Hank Williams, Joplin sang and played folk music, but she was more attracted to the blues, especially singers Bessie Smith and Odetta. Seeking a freer environment, she left Texas for San Francisco, where she continued her singing career and associated with other artists. She also developed a dependency on such addictive drugs as heroin and alcohol and lived a sexually promiscuous lifestyle.

In 1965 Joplin returned to Port Arthur and tried to conform to its standards, going as far as dressing conservatively and attending Lamar University for a year. A friend from Texas, Chet Helms, managed a psychedelic-rock group from San Francisco, Big Brother and the Holding Company, which needed a female singer. Fatefully, Joplin again left for the West Coast to audition, and she won the position. Sadly, she quickly slid into her old destructive habits.

The Monterey Pop Festival of July, 1967, made Joplin an overnight sensation. The volume and range of her voice and her flamboyant showmanship and appearance seemed to mesmerize the audience, and the band subsequently signed a deal with Columbia Records. In 1968 her fame was solidified by touring and the release of the classic album Cheap Thrills.

By the end of 1968 Joplin had left Big Brother to form a new group, which came to be known as the Kozmic Blues Band. After appearing at Woodstock with this group, Joplin released another successful album, but she was dissatisfied and disbanded the group in December, 1969. Her last group, called the Full Tilt Boogie Band, was composed largely of non-drug-using Canadian musicians, whom Joplin greatly appreciated personally and musically. While recording what would be her most successful album, Pearl, Joplin died October 4, 1970, at age twenty-seven, from a heroin overdose.

The Music

"Turtle Blues." An autobiographical number Joplin wrote about her painful relationships with other people, this was a classic blues piece in both format and structure. However, it featured recorded conversations from a bar and the sounds of breaking shot glasses as background to her vocals and the limited instrumentation. The goal was apparently to make it sound as though it had been recorded live at the neighborhood tavern, despite the fact that it had been recorded in the studio.

"Piece of My Heart." This was originally a blues song written by traditionalist Erma Franklin, but the Big Brother and the Holding Company version was quite different. It was loud, with prolonged musical breaks, and Joplin's voice ranged from near whispering to defiant screaming to pleading. It reached the number-twelve position on the pop charts, becoming the highest-rated song during her life.

"Try (Just a Little Bit Harder)." Jerry Ragovoy was one of Joplin's favorite composers, perhaps because of the blues feeling his songs possessed, and this was no exception. Recorded with the Kozmic Blues Band, this song tells the story of a woman's struggle to find male companionship. It is also interesting for the nonsinging conversation in the middle of the song, perhaps a precursor to rap music, which would appear a decade later.

"Mercedes Benz." Sung a cappella, this likable oddity is a short song consisting of three verses, with the first one repeated at the end with no musical breaks. The entire instrumentation consists of one lonely drum to keep the beat. The lyrics tell of a poor, lonely woman seeking material goods and company. This was a Joplin composition, which is not surprising, considering the subject matter. Interestingly, this song also contains spoken words of introduction and conclusion.

"Me and Bobby McGee." This was Joplin's only number-one hit, and unfortunately it did not reach that peak until March, 1971, five months after her death. This song was partly written by Kris Kristofferson, whose musical career was just beginning and was greatly aided by Joplin, his lover, recording this song. Like many of Kristofferson's songs, it stressed wanderlust, the inescapability of loneliness, and the love of freedom. This was basically a country song and took her full circle back to her Williams roots.

Musical Legacy

Since her death, Joplin's influence remains monumental, though, because of its complexity, not always recognized or acknowledged. She originated or helped to popularize many aspects of the modern music profession, such as women performing their own written works, leading their own bands, and making decisions about all aspects of their careers. However, other elements of her life do not merit emulation, such as the overwhelmingly intense energy she put into her performances, her rampant promiscuity, and her abuse of drugs.

Thomas W. Buchanan

Further Reading

Amburn, Ellis. Pearl: The Obsessions and Passions of Janis Joplin. New York: Grand Central, 1993. Standard biography for those wanting to know the main points of Joplin's life.

Echols, Alice. Scars of Sweet Paradise: The Life and Times of Janis Joplin. New York: Metropolitan Books, 1999. This is an excellent source, going far beyond the standard cradle-to-grave biography and placing Joplin's life in a wider pop-culture context. It also excels at illustrating the layers of complexity in the singer's enigmatic personality.

Friedman, Myra. Buried Alive: The Biography of Janis Joplin. New York: Harmony, 1992. This is a traditional biography—well researched, professionally objective, and interestingly written—although it does not cover a great deal of new ground.

Joplin, Laura. Love, Janis. New York: Villard Books, 1992. This work is an invaluable asset, especially for understanding Joplin's relationship with her family. Based on letters the singer wrote to her family in Port Arthur, and compiled by her sister Laura, it explores yet another side of the singer's psyche, namely her need to maintain her family's approval despite living a lifestyle her parents despised.

See also: Cotton, James; Gibb, Barry, Maurice, and Robin; James, Etta; Kristofferson, Kris; Little Richard; Nicks, Stevie; Odetta; Slick, Grace; Smith, Bessie; Stills, Stephen; Williams, Hank.

Scott Joplin

American jazz composer and pianist

Joplin was among the first ragtime pianists to see his work published. Aided by his early musical training, he notated the new rhythmic concepts on which the music was based, and in the process he developed a structure known as classic ragtime form.

Born: November 24, 1868; Bowie City, Texas
Died: April 1, 1917; New York, New York

Principal works

OPERA (music): Treemonisha, 1910 (published 1911; first performed 1972).

SONGS: "Please Say You Will," 1895; "Combination March," 1896; "Maple Leaf Rag," 1899; "Augustan Club Waltz," 1901; "Peacherine Rag," 1901; "Elite Syncopations," 1902; "The Entertainer," 1902; "The Ragtime Dance," 1902; "The Strenuous Life," 1902; "Weeping Willow," 1903; "The Cascades," 1904; "The Favorite," 1904; "Bethena," 1905; "Rosebud," 1905; "Gladiolus Rag," 1907; "Rose Leaf Rag," 1907; "Fig Leaf Rag," 1908; "Pineapple Rag," 1908; "Sugar Cane," 1908; "Country Club," 1909; "Euphonic Sounds," 1909; "Paragon Rag," 1909; "Pleasant Moments," 1909; "Solace," 1909; "Stoptime Rag," 1910; "Magnetic Rag," 1914; "Reflection Rag," 1917.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Original Rags, 1899.

The Life

Scott Joplin (JAW-plihn) was one of six children of Giles and Florence Givens Joplin. While not wealthy (both parents worked menial jobs), the Joplin family had enough to provide the children with musical instruction. Giles and Florence were musicians, and two of Joplin's brothers also took music as a profession.

After the family moved to Texarkana, Texas, in the mid-1870's, Scott was given violin lessons by his father, and the story goes that he was allowed to practice piano at a home where his mother worked as a laundress. When he showed aptitude for the piano, he was given instruction in classical technique by a local teacher. In addition, Joplin learned to play cornet, and he occasionally sang in local groups. By 1880, his parents had separated, and Joplin may have lived for a while with a relative in Sedalia, Missouri, where he might have heard the beginnings of the style that came to be known as ragtime.

By the late 1880's, Joplin was back in Texarkana, where he played and sang locally with, among others, the Texarkana Minstrels. A short trip to the Chicago World's Fair in 1893 with a band for which he played cornet served to introduce him to a number of ragtime pianists. The next few years found him in St. Louis, Missouri, and Texarkana again before he moved back to Sedalia. The reason for that move was to take music classes at the George Smith College for Negroes while also playing cornet in the Queen City Cornet Band. In short order, he organized an offshoot of that group, which provided dance music for local functions, with Joplin at piano. It was apparently at this time that he began to compose, with his first songs and piano pieces being published in 1895. He also began playing solo piano during this period, adopting the syncopated style he was to define in the next decade. While this was an important period of developing his own musical ideas, he was not entirely comfortable playing in bordellos and gentlemen's clubs. As he became recognized as a talented pianist and composer, Joplin began to mentor younger players, such as Scott Hayden and Arthur Marshall.

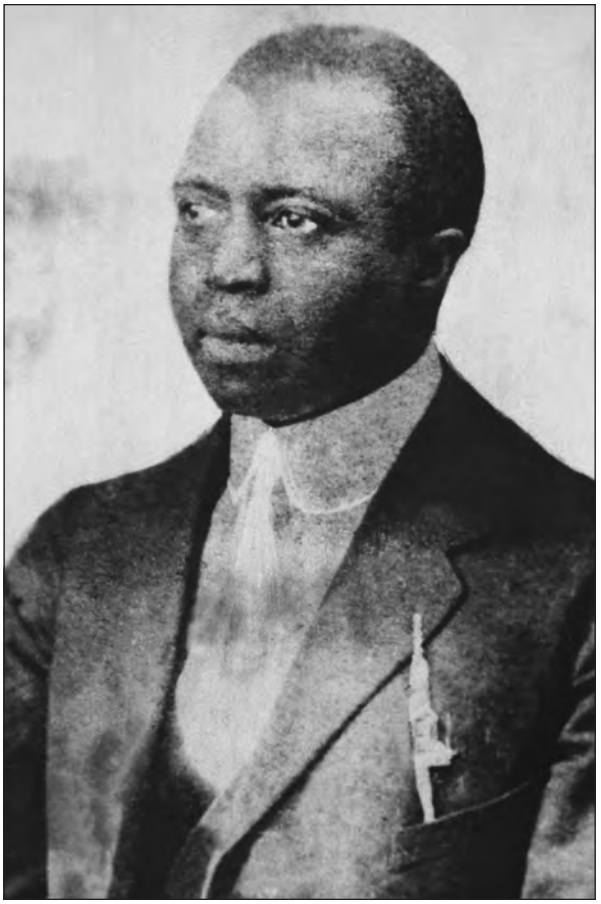
In Sedalia, in 1899, Joplin saw publication of his first true ragtime piece, "Original Rags." This introduced him to a wider public, and it advanced his reputation as a composer in the new style. The next ten years saw a steady flow of Joplin publications that defined the classic ragtime style. Many of these were published by John Stark, who had recognized the marketability of the new music and who saw in Joplin a great talent. In fact, Joplin's name had become so entrenched as the beacon of the ragtime movement that it was often attached to compositions by others with which he had little or nothing to do.

By 1901 Joplin had married Hayden's sister Belle and moved to St. Louis. There he continued publishing and teaching, although his career as a pianist began to fade, possibly at the onset of the effects of syphilis, which began to impact his coordination. In that more cosmopolitan environment, he was also tempted to explore larger forms, first with "The Ragtime Dance" (which included dancers and a narrator) and them with A Guest of Honor (1903, an attempt at a ragtime opera that almost bankrupted him and is considered a lost work). Possibly because of frustrations over these works, Joplin found his marriage collapsing, and he returned to Texarkana in 1904. There he married Freddie Alexander, who died only ten weeks later.

Burdened with depression as well as the continued effects of syphilis, Joplin moved to Chicago in 1905, where he found little to encourage him. A move to New York in 1907 introduced more publishing opportunities with new firms, and he began to compose more. He also began recording his works on piano rolls, and he occasionally directed vaudeville performances. In 1909 he married Lottie Stokes, who brought a measure of stability to his life through her income from the boardinghouse she ran.



Scott Joplin. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Joplin's last years were consumed with the composition and production of another opera, Treemonisha. Treemonisha is properly an example of grand opera, although it had much ragtime influence. The few performances he was able to mount were unsatisfactory, and the work had little acceptance, adding to his disillusionment. By the middle 1910's, Joplin was showing the advanced effects of his condition, and he was hospitalized in 1916, dying the next year.

The Music

"Maple Leaf Rag." Published by Stark in the summer of 1899, this composition became the benchmark of the ragtime movement. In it, Joplin established the classic form of aabbaccdd, with the standard tonic-subdominant key relationships derived from the structure of the march. Joplin had presumably been playing this piece for some time before it was published, but the huge sales of the sheet music (as many as a million copies were in print by 1909) as well as the recordings and the band arrangements brought ragtime to the attention of the general population. The popularity of the piece also introduced the written notation of ragtime syncopation to a wide audience, making it a formal tradition rather than one based on aural transmission.

"The Ragtime Dance." This work, published in 1902 while Joplin was in St. Louis, represents the composer's first attempt at a longer form. Stretching over nine printed pages, this piece requires a narrator and dancers, and it represents an attempt to blend musical theater and minstrelsy. It may have been performed as early as 1899, and the publication (issued with Stark's reservations) shows Joplin's developing consciousness of ragtime as more than just parlor or dance music. Unfortunately, it was not a success, and it was later shortened and republished as a piano solo in 1906.

"Bethena." Joplin's first publication following the sudden death of his second wife, "Bethena" was not a typical piece of ragtime. It was a waltz utilizing ragtime elements. The 3/4 meter is established by a bass line uncharacteristic of Joplin's other work, but the treble parts demonstrate the syncopated feel and harmonic twists of classic ragtime, creating a rhythmic tension uncommon for the time. The sequence of five strains is also close to the classic form. With a length of seven printed pages, this piece was among Joplin's longest works.

"Treemonisha." Joplin's 1911 work was an unprecedented attempt by an African American composer to create a full-length opera on vernacular themes. Celebrating the triumph of a poor black orphan adopted by a sharecropper and then mentored by their white employer, this opera may have autobiographical elements. Whether or not this is true, the music and the presentation clearly grew from Joplin's extensive experience as an actor, a singer, a producer, and a ragtime composer. The scale of this work and Joplin's inability to find financial backing led to it being fully staged only once in a modest production that was not well received by the critics. Joplin's constant battle to finish the opera, to revise it, and to mount a production greatly clouded the last years of his life, and it probably hastened his death.

"Magnetic Rag." Among the last works composed by Joplin, this self-published 1914 rag adheres to the standard four-strain form of "Maple Leaf Rag." It does, however, take liberties with the harmonic relationships, utilizing the parallel and relative minor keys of the primary B flat as well as featuring unpredictable and asymmetric phrases. His third strain is notable for its twelve-bar blues progression, which was becoming popular through the works of W. C. Handy. Joplin's score also extensively utilizes Italian performance and tempo directions, suggesting that he might have been attempting to bring his composition more into line with European concert works.

Musical Legacy

Joplin's career began with the popular music of the late 1800's, playing cornet in concert bands, singing in theatrical and minstrel productions, playing piano in bordellos and sporting houses, and playing in and arranging for dance orchestras. This apprenticeship, coupled with formal musical instruction at home and college, prepared him for his work as a composer, in which he synthesized those varied influences. In particular, the piano music he had played and had heard in the 1880's and 1890's inspired him to create his own repertoire of pieces that he began to publish in 1899. These pieces became the core repertoire of ragtime, establishing conventions of form, rhythm, and harmony for succeeding composers.

By the early 1900's, Joplin was experimenting with the use of ragtime elements in other pieces, including songs, waltzes, and character works. Moving from relatively short piano pieces into larger-scale concert works and operas, his compositions consistently developed over his eighteen-year publication career, although his fame took a corresponding decline. By the middle 1910's, Joplin was obsessed with his opera Treemonisha to the detriment of the rest of his livelihood, and he died bitter over its lack of acceptance.

Joplin's ragtime piano works are considered the greatest of the genre, and they spawned a host of imitations and adaptations for bands as well as for other solo instruments. His use of syncopation and his development of the march form also exerted considerable influence on early jazz, which used the repertoire extensively.

A ragtime revival occurred in the 1950's, and it generated interest in the pioneers of the music as well as produced a school of performers specializing in it. Another revival was inspired by the 1973 film The Sting (which used Joplin's "The Entertainer" as its theme) as well as by the New England Conservatory Ragtime Ensemble's Grammy Award-winning recordings of the Red Back Book arrangements of Joplin's most popular rags.

John L. Clark, Jr.

Further Reading

Berlin, Edward A. King of Ragtime: Scott Joplin and His Era. New York: Oxford University Press, 1994. A balanced discussion of Joplin and his music. Berlin includes primary and documentary research in this book, and he uncovers new information about Joplin's life. His analysis of select compositions and his inclusion of full scores of three of Joplin's songs not included in the collected works edition are also valuable.

Blesh, Rudi, and Harriet Janis. They All Played Ragtime. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1950. The first full-length discussion of ragtime, with an emphasis on Joplin's life. This book is a landmark study, although subsequent research negates some of its points. Nevertheless, it is especially valuable for the firsthand information gathered from ragtime composers and performers who were still alive in the 1940's.

Curtis, Susan. Dancing to a Black Man's Tune: A Life of Scott Joplin. Columbia: University of Missouri Press, 1994. An interesting perspective on Joplin discussing his experience as an African American in the late nineteenth century. Not concerned with musical analysis, Curtis discusses how Joplin both fit into and broke away from the stereotypes of black musician-composers of his generation.

See also: Garner, Erroll; Hamlisch, Marvin; Handy, W. C.; Morton, Jelly Roll; Navarro, Fats; Tatum, Art.

Louis Jordan

American jazz saxophonist, singer, and composer

An originator of rhythm and blues, Jordan became one of its most popular singers and bandleaders in the 1940's.

Born: July 8, 1908; Brinkley, Arkansas
Died: February 4, 1975; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: Louis Thomas Jordan (full name); King of the Jukeboxes
Member of: The Tympany Five

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (with the Tympany Five): Go Blow Your Horn (Part II), 1954; Rock 'n' Roll Call, 1955; Man, We're Wailin', 1957; Louis Jordan and Chris Barber, 1962; Hallelujah, 1963; Let the Good Times Roll, 1963; I Believe in Music, 1973; Choo Choo Ch'Boogie, 1975.

SINGLES (with the Tympany Five): "Barnacle Bill the Sailor," 1938; "Honey in the Bee Ball," 1938; "Doug the Jitterbug," 1939; "Keep A-Knockin'," 1939; "Sam Jones Done Snagged His Britches," 1939; "You're My Meat," 1939; "You Run Your Mouth and I'll Run My Business," 1940; "If It's Love You Want, Baby," 1941; "I'm Gonna Move to the Outskirts of Town," 1941; "Inflation Blues," 1941; "Knock Me a Kiss," 1941; "Ration Blues," 1941; "I'm Gonna Leave You on the Outskirts of Town," 1942; "What's the Use of Getting Sober (When You Gonna Get Drunk Again)," 1942; "The Chicks I Pick Are Slender and Tender and Tall," 1943; "Five Guys Named Moe," 1943; "That'll Just 'bout Knock Me Out," 1943; "G. I. Jive," 1944; "Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby," 1944; "Caldonia," 1945; "Mop! Mop!," 1945; "My Baby Said Yes," 1945 (with Bing Crosby); "Somebody Done Changed the Lock on My Door," 1945; "You Can't Get That No More," 1945; "Buzz Me," 1946; "Don't Worry 'bout That Mule," 1946; "Salt Pork, West Virginia," 1946; "Reconversion Blues," 1946; "Beware (Brother, Beware)," 1946; "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Cryin'," 1946; "Stone Cold Dead in the Market (He Had It Coming)," 1946 (with Ella Fitzgerald); "Petootie Pie," 1946 (with Ella Fitzgerald); "Choo Choo Ch'Boogie," 1946; "That Chick's Too Young to Fry," 1946; "Ain't That Just Like a Woman (They'll Do It Every Time)," 1946; "Ain't Nobody Here but Us Chickens," 1946; "Let the Good Times Roll," 1946; "Texas and Pacific," 1947; "I Like 'Em Fat Like That," 1947; "Open the Door, Richard," 1947; "Jack, You're Dead," 1947; "I Know What You're Puttin' Down," 1947; "Boogie Woogie Blue Plate," 1947; "Early in the Mornin'," 1947; "Look Out," 1947; "Barnyard Boogie," 1948; "How Long Must I Wait for You," 1948; "Reet, Petite, and Gone," 1948; "Run Joe," 1948; "All for the Love of Lil'," 1948; "Pinetop's Boogie Woogie," 1948; "Don't Burn the Candle at Both Ends," 1948; "We Can't Agree," 1948; "Daddy-O," 1948 (with Martha Davis); "Pettin' and Pokin'," 1948; "Roamin' Blues," 1949; "You Broke Your Promise," 1949; "Cole Slaw (Sorghum Switch)," 1949; "Every Man to His Own Profession," 1949; "Baby, It's Cold Outside," 1949 (with Ella Fitzgerald); "Beans and Corn Bread," 1949; "Saturday Night Fish Fry," 1949; "School Days," 1950; "Blue Light Boogie," 1950; "I'll Never Be Free," 1950 (with Ella Fitzgerald); "Tamburitza Boogie," 1950; "Lemonade," 1951; "Tear Drops from My Eyes," 1951; "Weak Minded Blues," 1951.

The Life

Louis Thomas Jordan (zhohr-DAHN) was the son of James and Adell Jordan. His mother died early in his childhood, and his father, a musician, encouraged him to practice music at a young age. Louis developed quickly as a reed player, working professionally in his early teens with a group called the Rabbit Foot Minstrels. Jordan was inspired by an even younger saxophonist, Lester Young.

Jordan performed with bands in the South and later in Philadelphia and in New York City. From 1936 to 1938, he played saxophone and sang with Chick Webb's nationally famous band, where he befriended the band's lead singer, Ella Fitzgerald. Jordan had already been married twice (and he would have three more wives), and Webb feared that Jordan's romance with Fitzgerald would impede the organization, so he fired Jordan. He soon formed his own small band, the Tympany Five, which blossomed in the 1940's, when Jordan also sang and played in a number of Hollywood motion pictures. Although he continued to perform, his success dwindled. After a heart attack in 1974, he died in February, 1975.

The Music

Jordan's career up to 1938 had been with minstrel, blues, and jazz organizations, but he was a dynamic stage performer who needed a group to enhance his work. He selected the members of his Tympany Five carefully, and he rehearsed the group (which sometimes had six or seven members) exactingly to fulfill that opportunity. Through the early 1940's, the music business referred to his style as race music, but he also attracted white audiences. Later his type of music, which stressed driving rhythms, highly syncopated vocals, comical lyrics, and urban themes, was designated rhythm-and-blues.

Louis Jordan. (Library of Congress)

"G. I. Jive." Johnny Mercer wrote a song that expressed the frustrations of Army life, recorded it himself, and later suggested that Jordan also record it. After the Tympany Five had played it on stage for several months, the group recorded it, its shuffle rhythm a carryover from many arrangements of previous blues. The humor of its lyrics and its repeated refrain ending in "Fall on your bunk—clunk!" suited Jordan's lively style. The recording topped the rhythm-and-blues popularity charts for six weeks in 1944.

"Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby." Popular music had a long history of employing "ain't," once an acceptable contraction of "I am not," and this, coupled an ungrammatical title, made the 1944 song irresistible to rhythm-and-blues fans and to the larger popular audience. The theme of a girlfriend who may not be true had become a common topic in a precarious urban culture.

"Stone Cold Dead in the Market." Over the years Jordan performed many duets with Fitzgerald. This song by Wilmoth Houdini was composed as a calypso, a form already familiar to Jordan and Fitzgerald. The recording was made in 1946, two or three years before Harry Belafonte and other performers created a calypso craze. It describes an unhappy woman killing the man in her life with her rolling pin. Fitzgerald spoke for the murderer; Jordan was a still but reflective corpse. Cole Porter had comically used the theme in "Miss Otis Regrets," and so had Lorenz Hart in "To Keep My Love Alive." Houdini, however, avoided lyrical sophistication and relied on many repetitions of the title and of the wife's assertion that she had, after all, murdered "nobody but her husband." It became increasingly common in post-World War II popular music for the lyricist to utilize simple and blunt assertions rather than witty phrases. Two radio networks, apparently worried that the murder resembled real domestic violence rather than the artful methods suggested by Hart, such as throwing the man off a balcony, banned the song.

"Choo Choo Ch'Boogie." In 1946 this boogie-woogie song in quadruple time, with its catchy accented triplets, every second triplet accented, delighted audiences and persisted for a record eighteen weeks as the number-one rhythm-and-blues hit. The use of boogie-woogie to suggest the rhythm of a train was not new, but it had never been done with the élan of Jordan's group. Few could resist Jordan's repetitions of its incessant refrain line, "Take me right back to the track, Jack!"

"Ain't Nobody Here but Us Chickens." The Tympany Five performed several chicken songs, none more popular than this one. This recording, another of the group's successes in 1946, ranks among Jordan's most popular. This humorous song probably owes much of its success to the fact that the chickens mirror the plight of many humans. The fact that the chickens are "nobody," that they are "locked up" in a barnyard, that they have a gun pointed at them, and that they refer to the farmer as "boss man" perhaps resonated with African Americans.

Musical Legacy

To his background in jazz, blues, and gospel music, Jordan added incessant jumpy rhythms and comical patter to become a leader of the mode eventually categorized as rhythm and blues. His primary audiences were young, urban African Americans less interested in jazz than in an energetic, eccentric, and refreshingly humorous music. Jordan's fame spread, and he enjoyed a popularity among white audiences almost as potent as that of Louis Armstrong and Fats Waller.

Jazz critics saw Jordan as someone who had opted out of an important tradition, but his work is now recognized as an anticipation of the popular music that came to the fore in the 1950's. Of the various reasons offered for his lack of later success, one may be that his Tympany Five continued to feature brass and reed instruments at a time when listeners had come to favor guitars and drums. After his death, Jordan was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. His work was much admired by artists such as pianist Ray Charles, saxophonist Sonny Rollins, and lyricist and guitarist Chuck Berry.

Robert P. Ellis

Further Reading

Chilton, John. Let the Good Times Roll: The Story of Louis Jordan and His Music. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1992. By far the best source of information on Jordan, this book has a valuable bibliography and a select discography.

Crowther, Bruce, and Mike Pinfold. Singing Jazz. San Francisco: Miller Freeman Books, 1997. This book outlines Jordan's contribution to jazz singing in Webb's band and thereafter.

Shipton, Alyn. A New History of Jazz. New York: Continuum, 2001. This source explains Jordan's decision to develop a distinctive style by creating his own band.

Starr, Larry, and Christopher Waterman. American Popular Music: From Minstrelsy to MP3. 2d ed. New York: Oxford Univrsity Press, 2003. A chapter describes Jordan's contribution to the development of rhythm and blues.

Tosches, Nick. Heroes of Rock 'n' Roll. New York: Harmony Books, 1991. The chapter on Jordan maintains that he did more than any other person to prepare the public for rock music.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Berry, Chuck; Brown, James; Charles, Ray; Diddley, Bo; Fitzgerald, Ella; Horne, Lena; Mercer, Johnny; Rollins, Sonny; Waller, Fats; Young, Lester.

K

John Kander

American film-score and musical-theater composer and lyricist

With his longtime collaborator Fred Ebb, Kander was a pioneer in the concept musical. Kander and Ebb's concept musicals adopt a play-within-a-play structure, and they incorporate early forms of popular entertainment, such as vaudeville, a roller rink, or a dance marathon.

Born: March 18, 1927; Kansas City, Missouri
Also known as: John Harold Kander (full name)

Principal works

FILM SCORES: Something for Everyone, 1970; Cabaret, 1972; Funny Lady, 1975; Still of the Night, 1982; Blue Skies Again, 1983; Places in the Heart, 1984; An Early Frost, 1985 (television); I Want to Go Home, 1989.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): A Family Affair, 1962 (lyrics by William Goldman; libretto by James Goldman); Flora, the Red Menace, 1965 (lyrics by Fred Ebb; libretto by George Abbott and Robert Russell; based on Lester Atwell's novel Love Is Just Around the Corner); Cabaret, 1966 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Joe Masteroff); The Happy Time, 1968 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by N. Richard Nash; based on Samuel Taylor's play); Zorba, 1968 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Joseph Stein; based on Nikos Kazantzakis's novel Zorba the Greek); Seventy, Girls, Seventy, 1971 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Norman L. Martin and Ebb); Liza, 1974 (libretto and lyrics by Ebb); Chicago, 1975 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Bob Fosse and Ebb; based on Maurine Dallas Watkins's play); The Act, 1977 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by George Furth); Woman of the Year, 1981 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Peter Stone); The Rink, 1984 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Terrence McNally); Kiss of the Spider Woman, 1993 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by McNally; based on Manuel Puig's novel); Steel Pier, 1997 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by David Thompson); Curtains, 2007 (lyrics by Ebb; libretto by Rupert Holmes).

SONGS: "My Coloring Book," 1962; "A Letter from Sullivan Ballou," 1993.

The Life

John Harold Kander (KAN-dur) was born and raised in Kansas City. His youth was filled with music, theater, and opera, and he began composing music at an early age. Kander entered the Oberlin Conservatory of Music in 1947, but he had to interrupt his studies for a stint in the U.S. Merchant Marine Cadet Corps. He soon returned to Oberlin, and he completed his degree in 1951. The following year, he entered the master's program in composition at Columbia University, where he studied with Jack Beeson and Otto Luening. He completed his degree in 1954.

For the next several years, Kander and James Goldman, a childhood friend, wrote musicals together, sometimes with the assistance of Goldman's brother William. One of the musicals that the three wrote together, A Family Affair (a comedy about the explosive familial politics surrounding a Jewish wedding), was produced on Broadway in 1962. A Family Affair boasted a solid score, but it closed after only sixty-five performances. In the same year, Kander met Fred Ebb, and they began their collaboration.

Kander and Ebb's first hit song was "My Coloring Book," which was nominated for a Grammy Award. Their first musical, Golden Gate, never found a producer, but when Hal Prince was looking for songwriters for Flora, the Red Menace, they used the score as audition material, and they got the job. Although Flora, the Red Menace was not a hit, it established Kander and Ebb's career-long relationship with Prince and with its star, Liza Minnelli. Two years later, their next musical, Cabaret, earned Kander and Ebb their first of three Tony Awards for best score of a musical, the others being for Woman of the Year and Kiss of the Spider Woman.

Throughout his collaboration with Ebb, Kander took on other projects, including composing for film. He wrote the scores for four films directed by Robert Benton, including Places in the Heart, and for three television movies directed by John Erman, including An Early Frost, the first television film about AIDS. Late in his career, Kander composed a song cycle for Carol Vaness and an aria for Renée Fleming.

The Music

At Oberlin, Kander wrote primarily vocal music and chamber works, mostly in the neotonal idiom of composers such as Samuel Barber. At Columbia, he continued to write in the same vein. His master's thesis was a one-act comic opera called Da Capo, for which James Goldman wrote the libretto. After Columbia, Kander began to focus on musical theater. His earliest musicals adhere to the song conventions of the 1950's book musical. With Ebb, Kander started to write more theatrically. They specialized in showstopping songs of survival, such as "Maybe This Time."

Kander and Ebb's collaboration is a study of opposites. Kander is known for an unabashed sentimentality and lyricism, and Ebb is known for an acerbic wit and ironic outlook. These opposing qualities produced the unsettling mixture of nostalgia and sardonicism that first obtained in Cabaret, which is based on Christopher Isherwood's The Berlin Stories (1946).

Cabaret. In Cabaret, musical vignettes performed in a seedy cabaret, which serves as a metaphor for decadence in Germany during Adolf Hitler's rise to power in the 1930's, alternate with book scenes and comments on the action. Cabaret marks a distinct change in Kander and Ebb's style. The composer used an expanded harmonic palette, chromaticism, and an inventive use of the minor mode. He also built several themes around an appoggiatura figure. These elements recur throughout Kander's subsequent scores.

Chicago. Chicago, a story set in the 1920's about two murderesses acquitted through the dazzling performance of their mutual lawyer, is told in the form of a vaudeville. The score, which evokes 1920's jazz, makes several direct references to songs associated with famous vaudeville performers, such as Sophie Tucker. These references draw attention to the play-within-a-play format while commenting on the story. Kander and Ebb had first attempted to use a vaudeville structure for their 1971 musical Seventy, Girls, Seventy, but it did not achieve the perfect marriage of form and content as did Chicago.

Kiss of the Spider Woman. Kiss of the Spider Woman is based on Manuel Puig's novel about a revolutionary and a homosexual who are cellmates in an Argentine prison for political dissidents. The score is infused with Latin rhythms and dance styles. Kiss of the Spider Woman is also one of Kander's most operatic works. It contains leitmotifs, extended musical scenes, and more ensemble writing than his early works. For instance, the quartet "Dear One" recalls the additive multivoice structure of "Mir ist so wunderbar" from Ludwig van Beethoven's Fidelio (1805).

The Last Musicals. At the time of Ebb's death, Kander and Ebb had finished the first draft of Minstrel Show, a concept musical about the Scottsboro Boys' trial, in which several young African American men were falsely accused of raping two white women. The score incorporates idioms associated with African American music. They also had three musicals ready for a Broadway production. Curtains, a backstage-musical comedy murder mystery, allows Kander to revisit the Broadway idiom of the 1950's. All About Us, a musical adaptation of Thornton Wilder's The Skin of Our Teeth (1942), has an eclectic score, which includes a spiritual, a hymn, a tango, a march, and a lullaby. The score of The Visit, which is based on Friedrich Dürrenmatt's 1956 dark play of the same name, mixes musical-theater tropes and Viennese operetta, thereby underscoring the play's inherent tragic-comic dichotomy. Curtains opened in 2007.

"A Letter from Sullivan Ballou." In 1993 Kander won the Richard Tucker Composer's Commission. He composed an art song for Fleming based on a letter written by Sullivan Ballou, a Confederate soldier, to his wife. Kander overcame the challenges of setting a long prose text by mixing spoken speech, recitative in F Lydian mode, and a lyrical theme capable of expansion and contraction. The tonal arrangement of the song lies along a mediant axis, a feature common in his theater music.

Musical Legacy

In his work with Ebb, Kander remains a force in American musical theater. Cabaret and Chicago, as relevant today as when they first premiered, continue to be performed around the world. The movie versions of these two works remain popular internationally. Several of Kander and Ebb's other musicals have gained a following, especially Zorba and Seventy, Girls, Seventy. Cabaret was the first fully realized concept musical, a form that Kander and his collaborater pioneered and that grew in popularity during the 1960's. Kander has a unique ability to use popular entertainment to tell a serious story.

James Leve

Further Reading

Kander, John, and Fred Ebb as told to Greg Lawrence. Colored Lights: Forty Years of Words and Music, Show Biz, Collaboration, and All that Jazz. New York: Faber & Faber, 2003. In this transcription of dialogues between Kander and Ebb, organized chronologically, they talk about their career collaboration.

Leve, James. John Kander and Fred Ebb. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2008. The first complete study of Kander and Ebb's career and musicals. Includes separate chapters on Cabaret, Chicago, and Kiss of the Spider Woman.

See also: Barber, Samuel; Ebb, Fred; Elfman, Danny; Hammerstein, Oscar, II; Hart, Lorenz; Lerner, Alan Jay; Loewe, Frederick; Rodgers, Richard.

Herbert von Karajan

Austrian classical conductor

A leading figure in the European classical music world, Karajan conducted orchestras in performances that were noted for their polish, color, and articulation. He left behind a prodigious number of recordings and video presentations of orchestral works.

Born: April 5, 1908; Salzburg, Austria
Died: July 16, 1989; Anif, Austria
Also known as: Herbert Ritter von Karajan (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Dvořák: Symphony No. 9, 1940; Schubert: Symphony No. 9 in C Major, 1946; Strauss: Metamorphosen, 1949; Verdi: Requiem Mass, 1949; Bach: Mass in B Minor, 1950; Bach: Saint Matthew Passion, 1950; Mozart: Die Zauberflöte, 1950; Puccini: Madama Butterfly, 1955; Strauss: Der Rosenkavalier, 1956; Mozart: Don Giovanni, 1960; Sibelius: Symphonies Nos. 2 and 5, 1960; Wagner: Parsifal, 1961; Beethoven: Symphonies Nos. 3 and 9, 1962; Wagner: Der Ring des Nibelungen, 1967; Tosca, 1971; La Bohème—Puccini, 1972; Verdi: Otello, 1973; Anton Bruckner: Symphony No. 7 in E Major, 1974; Schoenberg, Berg, and Webern, 1974; Strauss: Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40, 1974; Don Quixote, 1975; Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 5, 1975; Brahms: German Requiem, Op. 45, 1976; Tchaikovsky: Symphony Nos. 4 and 6, 1976; Brahms: The Complete Symphonies, 1978; Mozart: Violin Concerto No. 3 in G Major—Adagio, 1978; Verdi: Aida, 1979; Beethoven: Concerto for Violin in D Major, Op. 61, 1980; Mendelssohn: Concerto for Violin in D Major, Op. 77, 1980; Strauss: Eine Alpensinfonie, Op. 64, 1980; Vivaldi: The Four Seasons, Op. 8, Nos. 1-4, 1984; Karajan/Mussorgsky: Pictures at an Exhibition, 1986; Neujahrskonzert in Wien, 1987 (New Year's Concert in Vienna 1987, 1989); Bruckner: Symphonie No. 8, 1989.

The Life

Herbert Ritter von Karajan (fahn KAHR-eh-yahn) was born to Ernst and Martha von Karajan, an upper-class family of Greek-Macedonian origin. From his early childhood, Karajan showed a passion for piano, and he entered the Mozarteum, a music academy in Salzburg, in 1914. While he made rapid progress in piano, his parents thought a career in music was insecure. Following their advice, Karajan entered the Institute of Technology in Vienna in 1926. However, he soon re-entered the Academy for Music in Vienna, and he began taking conducting lessons from Alexander Wunderer. By the time Karajan had graduated from the academy, he had decided to pursue a career as conductor.

In 1929 Karajan made his conducting debut by directing the Mozarteum Orchestra. In the same year, Karajan became the conductor at the state theater in Ulm, where he performed more than 120 productions in five years. In 1934 Karajan was appointed conductor of the opera house in the small town of Aachen, and he was made the general music director in the following year. During this time, Karajan became a member of the Nazi Party in response to a request from the Aachen municipal authority, which was controlled by National Socialist government. Some studies suggest that he had already joined the party in April, 1933, in Salzburg and three weeks later in Ulm. Karajan biographer Richard Osborne attests that there is not sufficient information to verify these the facts of this matter.

During his residency in Aachen, Karajan made his debut with the Berlin State Opera, directing Ludwig van Beethoven's Fidelio (1805) in 1937, and he appeared as guest conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in 1938. When he conducted Richard Wagner's Tristan und Isolde (1865) at the Berlin State Opera in the same year, the performance was received enthusiastically, and music critic Edwin von der Nüll praised him as "Karajan the Miracle." In 1938 Karajan signed a contract with Deutsche Grammophon, and he made his first recording with the Berlin Staatskapelle. In 1939 Karajan recorded Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 (1893) with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, his first recording with this orchestra. After his contract in Aachen expired with the 1941-1942 season, Karajan conducted the Berlin Staatskapelle and the Berlin State Opera, and he had freelance engagements with orchestras in Europe, such as the Concertgebouw Orchestra and the Paris Radio Orchestra.

In 1946 Karajan gave his first postwar concert with the Vienna Philharmonic, but further conducting activities were prohibited because of his Nazi Party membership during the war. It was not until October, 1947, that he was allowed to resume conducting activity. Karajan officially made a contract with EMI, where he recorded with the Vienna Philharmonic as well as the newly formed Philharmonia Orchestra in London, founded by Walter Legge in 1945 as a recording orchestra for EMI. Karajan made numerous recordings with the Philharmonia Orchestra, such as his first complete recording of Beethoven symphonies. During this period, Karajan also appeared at La Scala in Milan (1948 and 1954), the Salzburg Music Festival (1948 and 1949), and the Bayreuth Festspielhaus (1951 and 1952).

Herbert von Karajan. (AP/Wide World Photos)

After the death of Wilhelm Furtwängler, Karajan was appointed principal conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra for life in 1955. He was also artistic director of the Salzburg Festival (1956-1960) and the Vienna State Opera (1957-1964). In 1967 he founded the Salzburg Easter Festival, and he served as music adviser to Orchestre de Paris (1969-1971). Although Karajan produced numerous recordings with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra for more than three decades, he relinquished the position as the principal conductor in April, 1989, after years of disagreement with the orchestra over artistic and managerial matters. He died of a heart attack three months later.

The Music

Karajan's music can be described as having well-calculated tempi and a sense of structure, with sumptuous color, accurate and perfect balance and articulation, and flowing legato, all of which come from the sheer virtuosity of a perfectly trained orchestra with a great traditional background. His musical interest went beyond standard Austro-

German literature to include French and Italian operas and orchestral works. In addition, he often recorded short orchestral vignettes with brilliance and perfection.

Der Rosenkavalier. Karajan's 1956 EMI early stereo recording of Richard Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier (1911) with the Philharmonia Orchestra featured a marvelous cast, with Elisabeth Schwarzkopf as the Marschallin, Christa Ludwig as Octavian, Teresa Stich-Randall as Sophie, and Otto Edelmann as Baron Ochs. As an opera conductor, Karajan knew how to accompany singers in the most effective way. With Karajan at the podium, they could breathe easily and sing naturally without forcing their voices. He was still in his forties at the time of the recording, and he conducted the opera with brisk and energetic tempi. This contrasts with his 1984 recording with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, in which the music sounded mature, with delicately polished expressions. Schwarzkopf's Marschallin represented one of her best performances, with her noble and elegant presence and her clearly articulated phrasing.

Beethoven's Nine Symphonies. In 1961-1962, Karajan made his first complete stereo recording of Beethoven's nine symphonies with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra for Deutsche Grammophon (he repeatedly recorded the cycle in the 1970's and 1980's with the same orchestra). Karajan's interpretation is straightforward but not forced. Every voice flows naturally in his lively and speedy tempi. Each chord starts exactly at the same time, as can be heard at the beginning of Symphony No. 1 in C Major (1800). Here, the first movement starts with a series of chords played by the wind instruments and the string instruments in pizzicato. Under Karajan, each chord attack is precisely simultaneous, which was not necessarily required by his predecessor, Furtwängler. Furthermore, the harmony is supported by the lower strings in just the right balance in the chord progression. The music sounds lucid and brilliant, as Karajan polished every moment of the symphony to perfection. This carefully polished texture and brilliant execution mark all the symphonies in this album, which is arguably the best of his three complete Beethoven cycles.

Schoenberg, Berg, and Webern. In this album, studio-recorded with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra by Deutsche Grammophon in 1974, Karajan proved his ability as an excellent interpreter of modern music, specifically of the Second Viennese School. Among the pieces compiled here, Arnold Schoenberg's Verklärte Nacht, Op. 4 (Transfigured Night, 1902) and Pelleas und Melisande, Op. 5 (1902) must have been natural choices for Karajan. They are highly expressionistic, and the tonality is expanded to its limits by the extreme use of chromatic alterations of the harmony, as found in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde. Karajan's performance of Schoenberg's pieces, with rich Wagnerian sonority, illuminates convincingly the late Romanticism embedded in the composer's expressionistic works. The same observation holds with Anton von Webern's Passacaglia, Op. 1 (1922), a romantic tonal piece with great passion.

However, the real surprise is Karajan's interpretation of the twelve-tone pieces: Webern's Symphony, Op. 21 (1929) and Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 (1926). Karajan uses a wide range of dynamics, from the delicate pianissimo to the powerful fortissimo, to give the twelve-tone works, often described as cold and cerebral, a dramatic expression with colorful contrasts. In an interview with Osborne, Karajan recalled that he said to the orchestra repeatedly in his rehearsals, if there are discords, we must always play them as beautifully as we know how. The result was a sensual realization of the twelve-tone works without roughly presented dissonance.

New Year's Concert in Vienna 1987. This Deutsche Grammophon recording of the 1987 New Year's concert with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra portrays a different side of the conductor, showcasing his ability to conduct short and light orchestral pieces. The music flows lively and spontaneously under his baton, which shows minimum movements. The orchestra is greatly inspired by this occasion. The polkas and waltzes of Johann Strauss, Jr., including "Annen Polka" and "The Blue Danube," are polished with elegance and played with a wide dynamic range. The soprano Kathleen Battle provides ideal singing in "Voices of Spring." After the great success of 1987, the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra began to rotate conductors for its New Year's concert, which became a worldwide telecast event.

Bruckner: Symphonie No. 8. Karajan conducted Anton Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 in C Minor

(1892) with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra at the Musikvereinssaal in Vienna in November, 1988. In addition to the audio recording, which appeared in 1989, the concert was filmed by Telemondial, which was founded by Karajan in 1982 to film his own performances as part of his Legacy for Home Video series on the Sony Classical label. The film is made in the same style as others by Telemondial. There is never a panoramic view of the orchestra, taken from the back of the conductor. Pictures of the audiences are avoided, and Karajan is always in focus, while the orchestra members often remain unfocused. The camera follows the instruments that play the main melody, but not the faces of the instrumentalists. It appears the film is not a documentary but Karajan's visual interpretation of the symphony, a view from the conductor's inner eye. In order to visualize the image, Karajan edited the film so that the angle of the shots changes frequently, and he edited the music by mixing up the sounds after a recording session. (Karajan had an editing room in his residence.) This film illustrates his passion for the newest recording technologies, which he sought throughout his life. It also captures Karajan's most matured vision on Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 (this is his third recording), beyond the sheer beauty of sound and richness of texture, both of which are his signatures. In February, 1989, Karajan brought the same symphony to New York with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, and this became his last performance of it outside Austria.

Musical Legacy

Karajan left a large number of recordings, rivaling that left by any other conductor. His extensive discography covers most of the symphonic and operatic literature of Western music history, from Johann Sebastian Bach to Béla Bartók. Keen in technologies, he made recordings of the same pieces whenever a new technology became available. He was also an advocate of leaving video footage of musical performance.

Fusako Hamao

Further Reading

Holden, Raymond. The Virtuoso Conductors: The Central European Tradition from Wagner to Karajan. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2005. A professional conductor, the author discusses nine European conductors after Wagner, including Karajan, concerning their rehearsal techniques, performance practices, and more.

Osborne, Richard. Conversations with von Karajan. New York: Harper & Row, 1989. A collection of Osborne's interviews with Karajan, over a period of twelve years, about his early life, his orchestras, performers, the Salzburg Festival, and much more.

_____. Herbert von Karajan: A Life in Music. Boston: Northwestern University Press, 2000. A highly detailed and scholarly researched biography of Karajan, this work contains illustrations and portraits as well as the transcript of his de-Nazification hearing.

Quantrill, Peter. "A God Among Conductors." Gramophone, Karajan Centenary Issue (January, 2008): 36-43. The author discusses Karajan's strong influence on the recording industry, which began when British record producer Legge met the conductor in 1946.

Vaughan, Roger. Herbert von Karajan: A Biographical Portrait. New York: Norton, 1986. This biography, written by a sailing expert, portrays Karajan as a musician and man; in his private life, Karajan enjoyed skiing, swimming, sailing, and flying small aircraft.

See also: Berg, Alban; Fischer-Dieskau, Dietrich; Klemperer, Otto; Mutter, Anne-Sophie; Schoenberg, Arnold; Webern, Anton von.

Jerome Kern

American musical-theater and film-score composer and lyricist

Kern was a musical innovator on Broadway from the 1910's through the 1930's, composing some of the finest examples of American popular song.

Born: January 27, 1885; New York, New York
Died: November 11, 1945; New York, New York
Also known as: Jerome David Kern (full name)

Principal works

FILM SCORES: The Flame Within, 1935; Swing Time, 1936; High, Wide, and Handsome, 1937; Joy of Living, 1938; Centennial Summer, 1946.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): The Red Petticoat, 1912 (lyrics and libretto by Rida Johnson Young and Paul West); A Girl from Utah, 1914 (with Paul Rubens and Sidney Jones; libretto by James T. Tanner); Nobody Home, 1915 (libretto by Rubens and Guy Bolton); Very Good Eddie, 1915 (lyrics by Schuyler Green; libretto by Philip Bartholomae and Bolton); Oh, Boy!, 1917 (lyrics by P. G. Wodehouse; libretto by Bolton and Wodehouse); Oh Lady! Lady!, 1918 (lyrics by Wodehouse; book by Wodehouse and Bolton); She's a Good Fellow, 1919 (lyrics and libretto by Anne Caldwell); Sally, 1920 (lyrics by Clifford Grey; book by Bolton); Stepping Stones, 1923 (lyrics and libretto by Caldwell); Sunny, 1924 (lyrics and libretto by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II); Show Boat, 1927 (lyrics by Hammerstein; based on the book, Show Boat, by Edna Ferber); Sweet Adeline, 1929 (with Hammerstein; libretto by Kern and Hammerstein); The Cat and the Fiddle, 1931 (libretto by Harbach and Kern); Music in the Air, 1932 (lyrics and libretto by Hammerstein); Roberta, 1933 (libretto by Harbach; based on the novel Gowns by Roberta by Alice Duer Miller); Swing Time, 1936 (lyrics by Dorothy Fields); Very Warm for May, 1939 (lyrics and libretto by Hammerstein).

SONGS: "The Way You Look Tonight," 1936 (lyrics by Dorothy Fields); "The Last Time I Saw Paris," 1941 (with Oscar Hammerstein II); "Dearly Beloved," 1942; "Long Ago and Far Away," 1944 (with Ira Gershwin).

The Life

Jerome David Kern's musical training began with piano lessons from his mother, followed by studies at the New York College of Music. He worked as a rehearsal pianist on Broadway and as a song-plugger for various popular-music publishers, including Harms. He visited London several times between 1905 and 1910, becoming well acquainted with the city's musical-theater scene. Throughout the 1910's, he wrote songs that were added to American adaptations of British musicals, the most famous of which was "They Didn't Believe Me" for A Girl from Utah.

Between 1915 and 1918, Kern created, with Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse, a series of Princess Theatre musicals (named for the venue in which they were staged). These musical comedies, which included Nobody Home, Very Good Eddie, Oh, Boy!, and Oh Lady! Lady!, strove for more realistic characterization and a sense of intimacy and immediate audience appeal. This approach was a reaction against the extravagance of the operetta and the spectacle of the revue.

In the early 1920's Kern was among the most prolific composers on Broadway. His successes included Sally (with "Look for the Silver Lining") and Sunny (featuring "Who?"). Kern's experience with the contemporaneous elements of musical comedy proved invaluable when he collaborated with Oscar Hammerstein II, who had garnered success as a librettist for romantic operettas, on the epochal Show Boat, in which elements of musical comedy and operetta were synthesized. This fused approach to musical theater continued into the early 1930's with The Cat and the Fiddle, Music in the Air, and Roberta.

Like many of his Broadway contemporaries, Kern moved to Hollywood in the 1930's, and he was active in the film industry. His most famous original film musical is Swing Time (1936), which starred Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and introduced the standards "A Fine Romance" and "The Way You Look Tonight." Other songs created expressly for films in the early 1940's include "The Last Time I Saw Paris," which was used in Lady Be Good (1941) and won Kern an Academy Award; "Dearly Beloved" for You Were Never Lovelier (1942); and "Long Ago and Far Away" for Cover Girl (1944).

Shortly before his unexpected and untimely death at age sixty, Kern was discussing the possibility of writing a new Broadway show to be produced by Richard Rodgers and Hammerstein based on the story of Annie Oakley. When the musical Annie Get Your Gun (1946) arrived on Broadway, it was with a score by Irving Berlin.

The Music

Kern's musical career began in musical comedy, and his style, with its slight syncopations and jazz-influenced harmonies, frames the heart of his musical voice. Elements of classic operetta, with its nearly operatic vocal technique often expressed through flowing waltzes, are superimposed onto this base. Kern's sound is defined by a sustained melody supported by colorful harmonies (often with added ninths, elevenths, and thirteenths) and a well-crafted rhythmic underpinning, both of which undergo subtle changes as the song progresses.

Oh, Boy! One of the famous Princess Theatre musicals, Oh, Boy! boasted music by Kern, lyrics by Wodehouse, and book by Wodehouse and Bolton. It was one of several musicals from the 1910's in which the male protagonist must enact some sort of marital charade in order to keep a wealthy aunt from cutting off his allowance. Matters become absurdly complicated, but they are resolved to everyone's satisfaction in the end. The score included "'Til the Clouds Roll By" (one of Kern's early classics), "An Old-Fashioned Wife," and "You Never Knew About Me." The show had an extraordinarily long (for the time) fourteen-month run and a five-year national tour.

Show Boat. Based on Edna Ferber's novel of the same name, Show Boat is frequently cited as the first Broadway musical in which plot, music, and dance are integrated and interdependent in telling the story. The score includes aspects of operetta and musical comedy, and, in many instances, characters are defined through their music. Florenz Ziegfeld produced the work, which was the first long-running Broadway musical to have a racially integrated cast.

The multigenerational tale begins in 1887 on board the Cotton Blossom, a Mississippi River showboat. Magnolia, or "Nola," is the daughter of the Cotton Blossom's owners, Cap'n Andy and Parthy Ann Hawkes. She falls in love at first sight with Gaylord Ravenal, a riverboat gambler, and she tells her friend Julie, the showboat's leading lady, about her infatuation. Julie, part African American, is forced to leave the showboat because of miscegenation laws in the South. Her husband, Steve, the leading man, leaves with her, and Nola and Gaylord assume Julie's and Steve's roles in the Cotton Blossom's production of "The Parson's Bride." Act 2 takes place at the 1893 Chicago Exposition. Gaylord has amassed huge gambling debts and leaves his wife and young daughter, Kim. Nola auditions at a club where an alcoholic singer, none other than Julie, keeps threatening to quit. When Julie sees Nola, she leaves, giving her old friend a chance to appear onstage. Act 3, set in 1927 on the Cotton Blossom, does not appear in Ferber's novel. Kim is now a Broadway star in her own right, and Gaylord returns to the showboat to be united with his wife and daughter as the curtain falls. Throughout the show, Joe, an African American, functions as a wise seer, observing and commenting on the action.

The score incorporates several distinctive musical styles. Nola and Gaylord sing a quintessential operetta waltz, "You Are Love," while Frank and Ellie, the secondary couple, have songs rooted in musical comedy, such as Ellie's "Life Upon the Wicked Stage." Perhaps the most haunting song from Show Boat is "Ol' Man River," sung by Joe at several critical points in the drama.

Jerome Kern. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Leitmotifs unify the score; for example, the basic figure of Cap'n Andy uses the same three scale degrees as Cotton Blossom, the name of the showboat that Cap'n Andy manages. These same three notes are inverted to create the famous motif that begins the refrain of "Ol' Man River," indicating a relationship between the river and those who work on it. Show Boat was filmed three times, in 1929, 1936, and 1951, and in 1994 it was revived on Broadway in a production directed by Hal Prince.

The Cat and the Fiddle. With book and lyrics by operetta veteran Otto Harbach and ensemble dances by Albertina Rasch, the love story of Victor Florescu, a Romanian opera composer, and Shirley Sheridan, an American songwriter, allowed Kern to create music in the distinctive styles of European operetta and American musical comedy. The score's highlights include "She Didn't Say Yes," "The Night Was Made for Love," and "Try to Forget." Although Broadway was suffering from the effects of the 1929 stock market crash and the Great Depression, the show managed to run nearly a year.

Music in the Air. Five years after the success of Show Boat, Kern and Hammerstein collaborated on Music in the Air, a show with strong operetta overtones. Set in Bavaria, it is the tale of a composer trying to get a song published, but his real struggles are those of the heart. Outstanding songs include "I've Told Ev'ry Little Star," "Egern on the Tegern See," and "When Spring Is in the Air."

Roberta. Roberta had book and lyrics by Harbach. Based on Alice Duer Miller's novel Gowns by Roberta, it is the story of John Kent, a college football player who inherits a Parisian dress shop. The score introduced the popular standard "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes."

Swing Time. Fred Astaire played a vaudeville dancer and gambler and Ginger Rogers a dance instructor in this 1936 RKO film with music by Kern and lyrics by Dorothy Fields. Astaire pretended not to dance well at the beginning of "Pick Yourself Up," and the famous team gave unforgettable performances of "Waltz in Swing Time" and "Never Gonna Dance." "The Way You Look Tonight" and "A Fine Romance" were other musical highlights of the film, and in "Bojangles of Harlem," Astaire appeared in blackface for the only time in his career.

Musical Legacy

The melodic appeal and harmonic innovation of Kern's songs made them popular with musicians in a variety of styles, including jazz, cabaret, and even opera. (The New York City Opera produced Show Boat in 1954, and opera singers were featured on the historic 1988 recording of the musical under the direction of John McGlinn.) Several of Kern's songs, including "Ol' Man River" and "The Way You Look Tonight," are popular music standards. Kern was among the most prolific composers of American song, with more than a thousand titles to his credit.

His efforts at creating an integrated musical, where music, words, and dance all tell the dramatic story—a popular version of Richard Wagner's Gesamtkunstwerk—brought about the golden age of the American musical, typified by the work of Rodgers and Hammerstein, Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe, Frank Loesser, and others. Kern was a composer whose character-defining songs also succeeded outside their original dramatic contexts.

Kern was the subject of the film Till the Clouds Roll By (1946), which, although not biographically accurate, included performances of Kern's music by some of the era's most famous singers, including Judy Garland, Frank Sinatra, Lena Horne, Dinah Shore, Van Johnson, Tony Martin, Cyd Charisse, Kathryn Grayson, and Angela Lansbury. Robert Walker played Kern in the film.

William A. Everett

Further Reading

Banfield, Stephen. Jerome Kern. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2007. Banfield provides tremendous detail on Kern's compositional style, including his approach to setting texts. He discusses the problems in the second act of Show Boat, and he champions some of Kern's underappreciated scores, including Sitting Pretty and The Cat and the Fiddle.

_____. "Scholarship and the Musical: Reclaiming Jerome Kern." In Proceedings of the British Academy 125 (2004): 183-210. Banfield discusses the challenges involved in his research on Kern.

Block, Geoffrey. "Show Boat: In the Beginning." In Enchanted Evenings: The Broadway Musical from "Show Boat" to Sondheim. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997. Block begins his landmark study on the Broadway musical with a discussion of Show Boat, demonstrating the unifying elements in its score and chronicling its performance and reception histories.

Bordman, Gerald. Jerome Kern: His Life and Music. New York: Oxford University Press, 1980. This skillful integration of Kern's life with his work avoids specialized musical vocabulary, and it includes song lists for Kern's most important musicals.

Davis, Lee. Bolton and Wodehouse and Kern: The Men Who Made Musical Comedy. New York: Heineman, 1993. Davis provides a lively and informal account of the various collaborations among the principal creators of the Princess Theatre musicals.

Freedland, Michael. Jerome Kern: A Biography. New York: Stein & Day, 1978. Kern's life and career are surveyed from a British perspective.

Kreuger, Miles. Show Boat: The Story of a Classic American Musical. New York: Da Capo Press, 1990. This comprehensive study of Show Boat provides valuable information on the show's creators and their creative process as well as on its various stage productions and film adaptations.

Lamb, Edward. Jerome Kern in Edwardian London. New York: Institute for Studies in American Music, 1985. Kern's activities in London between 1905 and 1910 are documented and contextualized.

Wodehouse, P. G., and Guy Bolton. Bring on the Girls! The Improbable Story of Our Life in Musical Comedy with Pictures to Prove It. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1997. Kern's collaborators on the Princess Theatre musicals chronicle their careers in a book filled with colorful anecdotes.

See also: Arlen, Harold; Berlin, Irving; Cohan, George M.; Fields, Dorothy; Fitzgerald, Ella; Gershwin, Ira; Goodman, Benny; Grappelli, Stéphane; Hammerstein, Oscar, II; Herbert, Victor; Lerner, Alan Jay; Loesser, Frank; Loewe, Frederick; Mercer, Johnny; Newman, Alfred; Robeson, Paul; Rodgers, Richard; Steiner, Max; Van Heusen, Jimmy.

Aram Khachaturian

Armenian Russian classical composer

An outstanding representative of the Russian school of composition, Khachaturian was a unique artist for whom folklore was the inspiration for his music. His ballets, symphonies, and other works are permeated by the intonations and rhythms of folk songs and dances of the East. They brought a fresh voice to the Russian music of the twentieth century.

Born: June 6, 1903; Tbilisi, Georgia, Russian Empire (now in Georgia)
Died: May 1, 1978; Moscow, Russia, Soviet Union (now in Russia)
Also known as: Aram Ilich Khachaturian (full name)

Principal works

BALLETS (music): Schast'ye, Op. 43, 1939 (Happiness; scenario by Gevorg Ovanesian; choreography by Ilya Arbatov); Gayané, Op. 50, 1942 (scenario by Konstantin Derzhavin); Gayané Suite No. 1, Op. 53, 1943; Gayané Suite No. 3, Op. 55, 1943; Gayané Suite No. 2, Op. 54, 1945; Spartak, Op. 82, 1956 (Spartacus; scenario by Nikolai Volkov; choreography by Yuri Grigorovitch); Gayané, Op. 89, 1957 (scenario by Boris Pletnev).

CELLO WORK: Sonata-fantaziya, Op. 104, 1974 (Sonata-Fantasy in C Major).

CHAMBER WORKS: Elegy in G Minor, Op. 4, 1925 (for cello and piano); Pesnya stranstvuyushchego ashuga, Op. 2, 1925 (The Roaming Ashug's Song; for cello and piano); Dance No. 1, 1926 (for violin and piano); The Dream, Op. 3, 1926 (for cello and piano); Pantomime, Op. 13, 1927 (for oboe and piano); Allegretto, Op. 18, 1929 (for violin and piano); String Quartet, Op. 23, 1931; Mass Dance, Op. 25, 1932 (for bayan); Sonata, Op. 29, 1932 (for violin and piano); Trio, Op. 30, 1933 (for clarinet, violin, and piano).

CHORAL WORKS: Mer Hayrenik, Op. 60, 1944 (Our Fatherland; national anthem of the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic; lyrics by Armenac Sarkisyan under the pseudonym A. Sarmen); Oda radosti, Op. 88, 1956 (Ode to Joy; for female soloist, chorus, violins, harps, and orchestra; lyrics by S. Smirnov); Ballada o Rodine, Op. 97, 1961 (Ballad of the Motherland; for soloist and symphony orchestra; lyrics by Ashot Garnakerian).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Baghdasar akhpar, 1927 (Uncle Baghdasar; incidental music for Hakob Paronian's play); Arevelian atamnabuzh, Op. 17, 1928 (The Eastern Dentist; incidental music for Paronian's play); Khatabala, Op. 15, 1928 (incidental music for Gabriel Sundukian's play); Dance Suite, Op. 32, 1933 (Tantseval'naya syuita); Macbeth, Op. 33, 1933 (incidental music for William Shakespeare's play); Symphony No. 1, Op. 35, 1935; Piano Concerto in D-flat Major, 1936; Violin Concerto in D Minor, Op. 46, 1940; The Widow of Valencia, Op. 45, 1940 (incidental music for Lope de Vega's play); Masquerada, Op. 48, 1941 (incidental music for Mikhail Lermontov's play); Symphony No. 2 in E Minor, Op. 56, 1943 (Simfoniya s kolokolom; The Bell Symphony); Russkaya fantaziya, Op. 59, 1945 (The Russian Fantasy); Cello Concerto in E Minor, Op. 65, 1946; Symphony No. 3, Op. 67, 1947 (Symphony-Poem); Oda pamyati Lenina, Op. 71, 1948 (Ode in Memory of Vladimir Ilich Lenin); Stalingradskaya bitva, Op. 74, 1949 (The Battle of Stalingrad); Macbeth, Op. 84, 1955 (incidental music for Shakespeare's play); Spartacus Suite No. 1, Op. 82a, 1955; Spartacus Suite No. 2, Op. 82b, 1955; Spartacus Suite No. 3, Op. 82c, 1955; King Lear, Op. 92, 1958 (incidental music for Shakespeare's play); Privetstvennaya uvertyura, 1958 (Salutatory Overture); Suite from Lermontov, Op. 94, 1959; Concerto-Rhapsody in B-Flat, Op. 96, 1962 (for violin and orchestra); Concerto-Rhapsody, Op. 99, 1963 (for cello and orchestra); Concerto-Rhapsody in D-flat Major, Op. 102, 1968 (for piano and orchestra).

PIANO WORKS: Poem, Op. 1, 1925; Andantino, Op. 5, 1926; Waltz-Caprice in C-sharp Minor, Op. 8, 1926; Waltz-Étude, Op. 6, 1926; Poem in C-sharp Minor, Op. 12, 1927; Toccata in E-flat Minor, Op. 24, 1932; Dance No. 3, Op. 31, 1933; March No. 3, Op. 34, 1934; Khoreograficheskiy val's, Op. 58, 1944 (Choreographic Waltz); Children's Album Book I, Op. 62, 1947; Waltz from Masquerade, 1952; Sonatina in C Major, Op. 93, 1958; Sonata in E-flat Major, Op. 95, 1961; Children's Album Book II, Op. 100, 1965; Seven Recitatives and Fugues, Op. 101, 1966.

The Life

Aram Ilich Khachaturian (ah-RAHM IHL-yihch kah-chah-TOO-rih-ahn) was born on June 6, 1903, in Kodjori, a suburb of Tbilisi. He grew up in an environment filled with folk music, his first musical impressions formed by the artistry of Ashugs, folk poets and singers of the Caucasus who fused all the best stylistic traits of Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, and Persia. His first encounter with classical music, at the age of sixteen, was an opera, Abesalom and Eteri (1918) by Georgian composer Zakharia Paliashvili. At that same time, he began to play the trumpet by ear in an amateur band.

In 1921 Khachaturian moved to Moscow to attend the university as a biology major. He soon realized his uncontrollable attraction to music and left the university to enroll in the Gnesin Institute of Music, studying cello with Andrei Borisyak and composition with Mikhail Gnesin.

In 1929-1934 he studied composition with Nikolai Myaskowski at the Moscow Conservatory, acquiring the best of Russian and Western European traditions. During his graduate studies (1934-1936) his tendency toward a virtuosic style was evidenced in concerti for piano (1936) and violin (1940) with bright harmonic "colors," emphatic rhythms, and expressive melodies. At the same time, he began an active performing career and became a member of the Composers' Union.

The 1940's were associated with a great Soviet patriotism, as demonstrated in The Bell Symphony, a tragic piece depicting terrible times. He also composed a cello concerto, the Gayané ballets, and Our Fatherland, considered the national anthem of the Armenian Republic.

In 1950 Kachaturian became a professor at both the Moscow Conservatory and the Gnesin Institute and began his conducting career. In 1951 he was awarded the title of National Artist of the U.S.S.R. During a trip to Rome, Khachaturian conceived an idea that led him to compose the ballet Spartacus, for which received the Lenin Prize in 1959. He received many honorary titles thereafter.

In the 1970's, as Khachaturian's health began to decline, he often spoke about wishing to be buried in Yerevan, in his Armenian homeland. After his death on May 1, 1978, his wish was fulfilled.

The Music

Khachaturian was first to use Asian themes in large, symphonic forms, thus enriching Western music. His music is marked by modern images and means of expression based on the folk motifs of the peoples of the Caucasus.

Early Works. Khachaturian's first compositional attempts were combined with great challenges: his lack of training in music theory and his age (he entered the conservatory at twenty-six). However, his hard work and purposefulness prevailed. His early works include a toccata for piano, a clarinet trio, and an orchestral dance suite, in which Eastern colors merge with academic strictness of form. His Symphony No. 1, a graduation project, won a gold medal.

Violin Concerto in D Minor. The Violin Concerto in D Minor marked the composer's artistic credo: brightness of musical images, an emphasis on folklore sources, a distinct foundation in dance, and a lack of dramatically emphasized conflicts. This work, filled with musical materials resembling Armenian folk songs and dances, depicts scenes from people's lives and poetic sketches of Armenian nature. Dancelike, ecstatic outer movements surround a lyrical second movement. The concerto premiered on November 16, 1940, conducted by its dedicatee, David Oistrakh.

Gayané. Composed in 1942, this ballet was the first Armenian work in the genre. It features three main elements: dance, drama (bordering on tragedy), and lyricism. The main characters are farmers and Red Army soldiers. Their happiness, resulting from the nation's prosperity, is boundless. Through difficult struggle against evil and unfairness, Gayané finally finds her happiness. She exposes the perpetrators (among them her husband) who set fire to a collective farm's warehouse, an act that almost costs her her life. The ballet concludes with a national celebration.

In Gayané Khachaturian used the best numbers from his first ballet, Happiness. Perhaps Gayané is most famous for the fiery "Saber Dance" of the fourth act. Arranged for various instrumental ensembles, this piece would become a standard in concert programs. In 1943 Khachaturian received the State Prize for Gayané.

Spartacus. Inspired by ancient Rome, Khachaturian composed this ballet, in which he shows the conflict between the opposing forces of Spartacus and the gladiators, and the aristocratic world of the Roman patriarchs. This opposition is heard in the prologue as Thracians pull the victor-commander's chariot. Heavily, with somber solemnity, sounds the march of the victors. This is Rome, a powerful, imperious, and brutal empire. Opposing it is Spartacus's heroic theme, conveying strength, nobility, and, at the same time, worry and sorrow. Premiering in 1956, Spartacus became one of the most prominent works of the Soviet ballet. Later Khachaturian created three suites using this ballet's most important fragments.

Musical Legacy

The stylistic individuality of Khachaturian's works lies in the inseparability of what is his own music and what is borrowed. Since even the authentic folk melodies are altered, it is nearly impossible to detect where traditional motifs end and the composer's work begins.

Most of Khachaturian's works are saturated with centuries-old motifs of Armenian culture. The traditions of folk music were sustained and developed by many national composers, such as Armenian Soghomon Soghomonian (Komitas) and Georgian Paliashvili, but Khachaturian was the first of the trans-Caucasian composers to weave these motifs into large, symphonic forms and, by enriching these classical forms with ethnic music, elevate the latter in the classical canon.

Karina Bruk

Further Reading

Bagar, Robert, and Louis Biancolli. The Concert Companion. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1947. Includes commentary on the composer, his life, and a performance history of the Piano Concerto and "Saber Dance" from Gayané.

Denton, David. "Speed Merchants: Khachaturian's Violin Concerto." Strad 112 (February, 2001): 152ff. The article discusses various performances of the piece, concentrating on its virtuosity and each performer's execution of it. Record label numbers, photographs.

Ewen, David. The Complete Book of Twentieth Century Music. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1959. Offers a background on Khachaturian's style and influence, followed by a brief description of concerti, symphonies, Gayané, and Masquerade.

Machlis, Joseph. Introduction to Contemporary Music. New York: W. W. Norton, 1961. A music professor at Queen's college gives a brief survey of Khachaturian's works, emphasizing his use of folklore.

Vroon, Donald R., John P. Mckelvey, and Steven J. Haller. "Overview: Russian Music Beyond Tchaikovsky." American Record Guide 67 (March/April, 2004): 48-75. An extensive overview of Khachaturian's works, including commentary on performances and recordings.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Elfman, Danny; Oistrakh, David; Shostakovich, Dmitri.

Ali Akbar Khan

Bangladeshi Indian sarod player and composer

A member of one of India's most distinguished musical families, Khan introduced Indian music to global audiences. Recognized as a virtuoso of the sarod, composer of ragas, and master of music, he shared his knowledge through extensive concerts and recordings and through the schools he established in India, in the United States, and in Europe.

Born: April 14, 1922; Shivpur, East Bengal, India (now in Bangladesh)

Also known as: Ali Akbar Khansahib (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Music of India, 1960 (with Ravi Shankar and Kanai Dutta); Raga Chandranandan, 1962; Master Musicians of India, 1964 (with Shankar and Dutta); North Indian Master of the Sarod, 1965 (with Shankar Ghosh); Traditional Music of India, 1965 (with Shashi Bellari); Sound of the Sarod, 1966 (with Ghosh); The Forty Minute Raga: Rag Marwa, 1968 (with Mahapurush Misra); Shri Rag, 1969 (with Ghosh); The Jewels of Maihar, 1982 (with Misra); Rag Misra Pilu, 1983 (with Shankar, Ustad Alla Rakha, and Zakir Hussain); The Artistic Sound of Sarod, 1985; Rare Artists, Rare Ragas, 1986 (with Pandit Swapan Chaudhuri); Journey, 1990; Signature Series, Vol. 1, 1990 (with Misra); Signature Series, Vol. 2, 1990 (with Misra); Indian Architexture, 1992 (with Chaudhuri); Ustad Ali Akbar Khan Plays Alap, a Sarod Solo, 1992; Garden of Dreams, 1993; Rag Manj Khammaj; Rag Misra Mand, 1994 (with Pandit Nikhil Banerjee); Signature Series, Vol. 3, 1994 (with Misra and Ghosh); Signature Series, Vol. 4, 1994 (with Banerjee and Misra); Then and Now: The Music of the Masters Continues, 1994 (with Chatur Lal and Hussain); Morning Visions, 1995; Duet, 1996 (with L. Subramaniam); Legacy: Sixteenth-to-Eighteenth-Century Music from India, 1996 (with Asha Bhosle and Chaudhuri); Passing on the Tradition, 1996 (with Chaudhuri); Rag Mian-ki Todi; Rag Chandranandan; Rag Bhairavi, 1998 (with Ghosh and Bellari); Psychedelic Music of India, 2007 (with Vilayat Khan).

The Life

Ali Akbar Khan (AH-lee AHK-bahr kahn) was born into a musical family that traces its artistic and ancestral lineage to Mian Tansen, a famous musician who served in the court of the Mughal emperor Akbar (who reigned from 1556 to 1605). This bloodline continued through generations of distinguished musicians of the Seni Gharana of Maihar and Rampur. While still a toddler, Khan was introduced to instruments and vocal music by his illustrious father, Acharya Allauddin Khan, court musician to the Maharaja of Madhya Pradesh. His uncle, Fakir Aftabuddin, trained him in tabla (Indian drums) and rhythm. His father decided that Khan should play the sarod, a lutelike instrument. Khan gave his first public concert when he was thirteen, in the city of Allahabad. His practice schedule was grueling, filling most of his waking hours. He shared this regimen with sitarist Ravi Shankar, who, having agreed to make the personal sacrifices required, had also been accepted as a student by Allauddin Khan, although the master was somewhat stricter with his own son. Khan's sister, Annapurna, who focused on surbahar, a lower-sounding version of the sitar, later became Shankar's wife. At age twenty-two Khan became court musician to the maharaja of Jodhpur.

After the partition and independence of India in 1947, the court patronage system, already in decline after centuries of supporting the classical musicians of India, was no longer a dependable source of sponsorship. Khan moved to Bombay, the center of the expanding film industry in South Asia, and began composing for films, including Devi (1960) and The Hungry Stones (1960). He continued performing and recorded on 78-rpm discs.

At the recommendation of violinist Yehudi Menuhin, in 1955 Khan came to the United States and gave a concert at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. He made a recording of Rag Bhairavi during that visit, and he was impressed with the ability of long-playing recordings to capture lengthy expositions. With his colleague Shankar, Khan was credited with exposing Western audiences to Hindustani classical music.

Beginning in the 1960's, Khan traveled around the world almost constantly, giving concerts, teaching, and recording. He established a music school in Calcutta in 1955, and he responded to the explosion of interest in Indian music during the 1960's by opening a branch of the school near San Francisco, California, in 1965. In 1985 a branch opened in Switzerland. In addition to his many solo recordings he collaborated with other musicians, from Hindustani classical genres and from jazz and other backgrounds.

The Music

The gharana, or family musical tradition in which Khan was trained, is a branch of the Seni Gharana, named for Mian Tansen. Its approach to instrumental music was influenced by dhrupad, an austere, deeply meditative classical vocal genre developed in the fifteenth century. Khan's instrument, the sarod, is a plucked lute related to the rebab, a bowed lute, both originating in Central Asia. It has a large metal fingerboard, unbroken by frets, which permits long glides and delicate vibratos. In addition to the four main melody strings, the remaining strings (usually around twenty) permit the reenforcement of the tonal center and sympathetic resonance for particular ragas, for which these supplemental strings are tuned (similar to the sitar in this respect). In adapting the vocal inflections and sustained tones of dhrupad to instruments such as the sarod, Khan's ancestors devised special techniques, which he learned from his father.

Khan used the sarod to add enhancements to the rhythmic dimension of raga expositions though rapid articulation of his plectrum strokes, adding dynamic intensity and excitement, especially in the climactic portions of a raga exposition. His earlier study of the tabla with Aftabuddin gave Khan the rhythmic knowledge required for this undertaking.

Raga Chandranandan. Raga exposition, with its systematic approach to improvisation, is the equivalent of both performance and composition, so the main documentation is in recordings. One of Khan's most important recordings is Raga Chandranandan. In this case, Khan also composed the raga, which is unusual, since most of the ragas have existed for centuries and are conveyed through tradition. He used the recording process as a way to confirm his compositional decisions and performed the piece in subsequent concerts.

Musical Legacy

Even though he was from the same oral tradition as his brother-in-law Shankar, and his performances generally followed the same overall format, Khan at times emphasized different aspects of that tradition. He was interested in preserving his father's heritage through documentation, teaching, and personal exploration of the material.

Several generations of sarod students included his sons Dhyanesh Khan, Ashish Khan, and Alam Khan, as well as Rajeev Taranath, Ken Zuckerman, George Ruckert (an ethnomusicologist who taught at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology), and many others. The music schools Khan established played a key role in the introduction of Indic traditions in the West.

Khan received many honorary degrees and awards, including a MacArthur Fellowship, the National Heritage Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts, and others. In 1989 he was awarded the Padma Vibhushan, a high civilian honor, by the government of India.

John Myers

Further Reading

Khan, Ali Akbar, and George Ruckert. Classical Music of North India: The First Years of Study—The Music of the Baba Allauddin Gharana as Taught by Ali Akbar Khan at the Ali Akbar College of Music. New Delhi: Munshirm Manoharlal, 2004. Khan's presentation of his father's introductory program, with Ruckert's notes and instructional commentary.

Lavezzoli, Peter. The Dawn of Indian Music in the West: Bhairavi. New York: Continuum, 2006. Comprehensive coverage of the major figures involved in the expansion of Indian music to Western musicians and audiences, including a chapter on the Ali Akbar College of Music. Encompasses Indic influences on popular, jazz, and classical musicians. Bibliography, glossary, index.

McNeil, Adrian. Inventing the Sarod: A Cultural History. Calcutta, India: Seagull, 2004. Comprehensive study includes the major classical traditions of the instrument. References, index.

Raja, Deepak S. Hindustani Music: A Tradition in Transition. New Delhi: D. K. Printworld, 2005. Comprehensive critical view of the classical genres, with appropriate attention to Khan and the role of the sarod. Glossary, bibliography, index.

Shankar, Ravi. My Music, My Life. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1968. Includes a detailed personal account of studies with Allauddin Khan, his friendship with Ali Akbar Khan, and his intercultural experiences. Photographs, glossary, musical exercises.

See also: Harrison, George; Shankar, Ravi.

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan

Pakistani world music vocalist and songwriter

Khan, a performer of qawwālī, introduced this genre of Sufi devotional music to new audiences throughout the world.

Born: October 13, 1948; Lyallpur, Pakistan
Died: August 16, 1997; London, England

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Shahen-Shah, 1988; Mustt Mustt, 1990; The Day, the Night, the Dawn, the Dusk, 1991; Magic Touch, 1991; Shahbaaz, 1991; Devotional Songs, 1992; Love Songs, 1992; Devotional and Love Songs, 1993; Ilham, 1993; The Last Prophet, 1994; Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan and Party, 1994; Pakistan: Vocal Art of Sufis, Vol. 1, 1994; Pakistan: Vocal Art of Sufis, Vol. 2, 1994; Back to Qawwālī, 1995; Revelation, 1995; Intoxicated Spirit, 1996; Mega Star, 1996; Night Song, 1996; Prophet Speaks, 1996; Akhian, 1997.

The Life

Born into a family of qawwālī performers that stretched back six centuries, Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (NEWS-raht FAT-eh ah-LEE kahn) was not encouraged to become a qawwāl (a performer of qawwālī). His family wanted him to become a doctor. After the death of his father in 1964, Khan dreamed that his father encouraged him to become a qawwāl. He followed his family's musical legacy, performing at festivals in Pakistan and rising quickly in popularity among qawwālī audiences. Khan's career shifted to international audiences in the mid-1980's, when he was included in Peter Gabriel's World of Music, Arts, and Dance (WOMAD) festivals. Consequently, he began to collaborate with Western artists, and his albums were released on Gabriel's Real World record label. Khan died suddenly in London in 1997, at the age of forty-eight, from cardiac arrest.

The Music

Khan's approach to the qawwālī genre focused on aspects of tradition as well as innovation. Stemming from the Chishtī sect of Sufi mysticism, qawwālī is a form of nonliturgical Islamic expression, which uses music as a medium to achieve union with God. Khan was true to tradition in that he stressed the primary importance of the text: His adaptation of Sufi poems to musical accompaniment was the exclusive focus of his performances. Nevertheless, he is also remembered for the important innovations he introduced in performance. Specifically, his use of sargam, syllabic techniques of North Indian classical music, traced a connection between his performances and other musical genres of the North Indian region. Moreover, his collaborations with rock musicians such as Gabriel, Eddie Vedder, and Michael Brook represented intercultural encounters, where electronic instruments were combined with the traditional instruments of the qawwālī ensemble: lead singer or singers, chorus, harmonium (hand-pumped organ), tabla, and dholak (drums).

"Ni Main Jogi De Naal." First released on Khan's 1991 album The Day, the Night, the Dawn, the Dusk, "Ni Main Jogi De Naal" is based on a Punjabi poem by the eighteenth century Sufi poet Bulleh Shah. Like many qawwālī texts, it uses the metaphor of worldly love to celebrate the relationship between the devotee and God. In this poem, a village girl reveals her love for a jogi (mendicant), who, in the last stanza, is finally revealed to be the prophet Muhammad. This final revelation gives a heightened significance to the throbbing refrain sung by Khan and the chorus throughout this performance.

The presence of Hindu imagery (for example, jogi from the Sanskrit yogi) in a Sufi text highlights the syncretic nature of the qawwālī genre. Indeed, this is reinforced by Khan's own performance: the melismatic passages of Khan's voice trace a connection with the North Indian musical genre of khayāl, a genre putatively linked to the origins of qawwālī.

"Haq Ali Ali." This song is included on many of Khan's albums, and the version recorded on Greatest Hits of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (1997) lasts nearly twenty-five minutes, considerably longer than renditions found on other releases. The most significant aspect of Khan's performance here is the way he embellishes the text with a series of rhythmic improvisations. He repeats one phrase, "ali maula," in varying rhythmic figures while descending and ascending through the raga (melodic mode used in qawwālī). Indeed, Khan's tendency to repeat one phrase for long periods of time became one of his stylistic signatures, which when performed in concert led to ecstatic responses from faithful fans.

Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"Mustt Mustt." If the performance of traditional qawwālī is considered the core of Khan's musical contribution, it was his collaboration with Western rock artists that first afforded him wide popularity. Based on a Punjabi poem written by Bari Nizami, "Mustt Musst," released on Mustt Mustt, uses the metaphor of intoxication (mustt) to represent the blissful experience of the Sufi devotee. The text of "Mustt Mustt" further explains that chanting the name of Ali, a prominent Sufi saint, produces this divine intoxication.

The musical setting for the poem mixes elements of traditional qawwālī performance with the compositional techniques of Brook. Brook's sparse, funk-derived guitar phrases together with slap-style electric bass and traditional tabla create an eclectic foundation for the vocals of Khan and his group. After progressing through the call-and-response stanzas, Khan uses traditional North Indian sargam while performing rapid vocal improvisations, thus creating a thick mix of traditional qawwālī and Western rock styles. Furthermore, the unique sound created by Khan and Brook reached an even greater audience when it was remixed by the band Massive Attack, becoming a surprise dance hit.

Musical Legacy

Embracing both tradition and innovation, Khan introduced the music of qawwālī to millions of people worldwide. Furthermore, because of his musical achievements and popularity, qawwālī has become a symbol of Pakistani identity. While collaborating with several Western musicians to create new varieties of fusion, Khan adhered to his main purpose: to spread the musical message of Sufism, seeking, as he said, "to portray a message of truth, humanity, love, and peace, to bridge the gap between Allah, the Almighty, and the human being." This task has now been passed on to Khan's nephew, Rahat Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, who has become Khan's successor in their family's tradition of qawwālī.

Eben Graves

Further Reading

Ehrlich, Dimitri. "Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan: A Tradition of Ecstasy." In Inside the Music. Boston: Shambhala Publications, 1997. Ehrlich, a music journalist, interviews Khan on the role of spirituality in his performance of qawwālī.

Qureshi, Regula Burckhardt. "Music, the State, and Islam." In The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music: South Asia, the Indian Subcontinent. New York: Garland Publishing, 2000. Qureshi examines crucial issues of music making in Pakistan, including musical internationalization, with special mention of the music of Khan.

Sakata, Hiromi Lorraine. "Devotional Music, Pakistan." The Garland Encyclopedia of World Music: South Asia, the Indian Subcontinent. New York: Garland Publishing, 2000. Sakata gives an overview of devotional music in Pakistan, paying special attention to the role of Sufi religious expression, particularly within the music of Khan.

_____. "The Sacred and the Profane: Qawwālī Represented in the Performances of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan." The World of Music 36 (1994): 86-99. Sakata examines how Khan's performance of qawwālī negotiates between spiritual and secular issues.

See also: Gabriel, Peter; Harrison, George; Shankar, Ravi.

Albert King

American blues guitarist and singer-songwriter

King was one of the more elemental and unique of electric blues musicians. Left-handed, he played his signature right-handed guitar in reverse but with dexterity and force. His singing had a plaintive, soulful quality. King made seminal recordings in the 1960's that influenced leading blues-rock guitarists.

Born: April 25, 1923; Indianola, Mississippi
Died: December 21, 1992; Memphis, Tennessee
Also known as: Albert Nelson (birth name); Velvet Bulldozer

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: The Big Blues, 1962; Born Under a Bad Sign, 1967; Travelin' to California, 1967; Live Wire/Blues Power, 1968; Years Gone By, 1969; Blues for Elvis: Albert King Does the King's Thing, 1970; The Lost Session, 1971; Lovejoy, 1971; I'll Play the Blues for You, 1972; Blues at Sunset, 1973; I Wanna Get Funky, 1974; Montreux Festival, 1974 (with Chico Hamilton and Little Milton); Albert, 1976; Truckload of Lovin', 1976; I'll Play the Blues for You, 1977 (with John Hooker); King Albert, 1977; Live, 1977; The Pinch, 1977; New Orleans Heat, 1978; Albert Live, 1979; San Francisco '83, 1983; I'm in a Phone Booth, Baby, 1984; Laundromat Blues, 1984; Great King Albert, 1988; Vintage Blues, 1989; Wednesday Night in San Francisco: Recorded Live at the Fillmore Auditorium, 1990 (recorded 1968); Thursday Night in San Francisco: Recorded Live at the Fillmore Auditorium, 1990 (recorded 1968); Masterworks, 1991; Roadhouse Blues, 1991; The Blues Don't Change, 1992; In Session, 1999 (with Stevie Ray Vaughan).

The Life

Albert King was born Albert Nelson in the Mississippi Delta in 1923. His mother, Mary Blevins, and his stepfather, Will Nelson, performed in church. King had little schooling and worked on a sharecropping farm. After his father's death, his family moved to Osceola, Arkansas. Constructing his first one-string instrument out of a cigar box, he later played for the gospel groups the Groove Boys and the Harmony Kings. As a teenager, he switched from gospel to blues music, under the influence of musicians Elmore James and Robert Nighthawk, whom he saw performing in West Memphis, Arkansas. He also took the last name King.

A physically imposing man (about six feet, four inches tall and weighing 250 pounds), King supported himself as a bulldozer operator while playing guitar in nightclubs and on the radio. In search of commercial success, he began making occasional recordings, moving successively to St. Louis, Missouri; Gary, Indiana; and Lovejoy, Illinois. He achieved prominence with his 1967 album Born Under a Bad Sign and became a regular on the rhythm-and-blues and rock circuit. King died of a heart attack in 1992 while preparing for a European tour.

The Music

King was left-handed, but he did not restring his guitar from its right-handed format. He simply flipped his guitar over and played the strings in reverse. Although this method slowed his playing, it also imparted a unique sound to his trademark Gibson Flying V electric guitar as he bent the strings to squeeze out blue notes. King used his bare fingers instead of a guitar pick. His guitar tunings and time signatures were often idiosyncratic. Perhaps because he played the guitar in reverse, King favored single strings over chords and a well-placed, spare selection of notes rather than long, complicated licks. The guitarist Mike Bloomfield said of King's minimalist technique: "He can take four notes and write a volume." Adding to the large tone and dynamism of his guitar playing was his voice, which was somber but also soft, almost feminine at the edges.

Born Under a Bad Sign. King had only sporadic success in the 1950's. His 1958 release "I'm a Lonely Man" and 1961 release "Don't Throw Your Love on Me So Strong," both on the Bobbin label, were minor hits. The following years were frustrating until his monumental Born Under a Bad Sign album was released by Stax Records in 1967. All eleven songs on the album feature King's hard-driving and soulful electric blues, and Rolling Stone magazine would later list the album as one of the five hundred greatest of all time. King benefits from the Memphis soul sound supplied by the excellent house band Booker T. and the MGs, including Booker T. Jones and Isaac Hayes on piano and the insistent Memphis Horns section of Wayne Jackson, Andrew Love, and Joe Arnold. The title song of the album remains one of the more popular of electric blues songs. Supported by a pulsating electric bass playing a blues scale riff and by a steady drum tattoo, King's lead guitar is piercing, twanging, and bell-like. It is the perfect accompaniment to his mournful lyric:

> Born under a bad sign
> Been down since I begin to crawl
> If it wasn't for bad luck
> You know I wouldn't have no luck at all.

King sings with a sad, soulful intensity. The song's sophisticated mix of major and minor keys adds to the baleful effect.

The up-tempo "Crosscut Saw" and "Laudromat Blues" are popular cuts from the album Born Under a Bad Sign. King's own composition, "Down Don't Bother Me" tells a woeful tale, picking up where "Born Under a Bad Sign" left off. In "Personal Manager," King's blazing guitar solo is punctuated by the blaring Memphis Horns.

"As the Years Go Passing By." Another cut from the Born Under a Bad Sign album, "As the Years Go Passing By," would play its own role in rock-and-roll history. King plays the song as a slow, haunting ballad, with a penetrating guitar solo midsong and soft vocal moaning at the end. In 1970, Eric Clapton's Derek and the Dominos, with guest guitarist Duane Allman, recorded the rock love song "Layla." Allman apparently derived Layla's famous first-section riff (a repeated musical figure) from King's vocal melody on "As the Years Go Passing By." Allman takes King's verse "There is nothin' I can do/ If you leave me here to cry" and turns it into a driving pentatonic lick.

Although Born Under a Bad Sign was the highlight of King's career, he later recorded popular blues songs such as "I'll Play the Blues for You." He also recorded songs with funky, disco, and multiple rhythms.

"Stormy Monday." Despite his unique style, King could excel in playing blues and jazz standards. His muted versions of the classics "Kansas City" and "I Almost Lost My Mind" were standouts on his Born Under a Bad Sign album. On December 6, 1983, King recorded a version of the blues classic "Stormy Monday" at the CHCH studios in Hamilton, Ontario. The television videotape of this session shows the power of King's performance. Drenched in sweat, shaking his head, hollering and whooping, King sings of his usual bad luck: "They call it stormy Monday/ But Tuesday's just as bad/ You know Wednesday's worse/ Lord and Thursday's also sad." His voice husky and muffled, King pauses for cutting guitar runs. This recording, which would be released in 1999 on the In Session album, demonstrates King's importance as a mentor and bridge to the white blues rockers of the 1970's and 1980's. Stevie Ray Vaughan shares guitar lead with King. A remarkable guitarist in his own right, Vaughan seems captivated by King's presence and pours forth a deft but rollicking guitar accompaniment. The two guitarists sympathetically jam together throughout the eight-minute session.

Musical Legacy

With B. B. King and Freddie King, Albert King was one of the three "kings" of the electric blues guitar. With his left-handed, upside-down guitar style on his signature Gibson Flying V electric guitar, his muted but soulful voice, and authentic personality, King was a commanding presence in the blues world. His spare, single-string guitar playing was the bedrock of a gritty electric blues style, accented with plaintive tales of bad luck.

Born Under a Bad Sign is ranked as one of the seminal postwar blues albums, representing a bridge from the Delta blues of the 1940's to the rhythm-and-blues and Memphis soul music of the 1960's. The title song, "Born Under a Bad Sign," is one of the more memorable of all electric blues recordings.

King's distinctive guitar style had an almost unrivaled influence on such modern blues-rockers as Eric Clapton, Mike Bloomfield, Mark Knopfler, Jimi Hendrix, and Stevie Ray Vaughan. Fellow left-handed guitarist Hendrix learned from King and featured him as an opening act, and King was perhaps the foremost influence on the talented 1980's guitarist Vaughan.

Howard Bromberg

Further Reading

Bogdanov, Vladimir, Chris Woodstrata, and Stephen Thomas Erlewine, eds. All Music Guide to the Blues: The Definitive Guide to the Blues. 3d ed. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. A section on King includes a complete, annotated discography.

Clapton, Eric. The Autobiography. New York: Random House, 2007. Clapton recounts the influence of the Delta bluesmen, especially Robert Johnson, on his music. Clapton also describes the influence of Albert King's music on Jimi Hendrix and Stevie Ray Vaughan.

Dicaire, David. Blues Singers: Biographies of Fifty Legendary Artists of the Early Twentieth Century. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 1999. The chapter on King emphasizes his guitar virtuosity.

See also: Clapton, Eric; Dixon, Willie; Hendrix, Jimi; James, Elmore; King, B. B.; Reed, Jimmy; Rush, Otis; Vaughan, Stevie Ray.

B. B. King

American blues singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Aided by his guitar Lucille, King was committed to preserving the history of the blues. Even when the blues fell out of musical fashion, he was tireless in his pursuit to elevate the blues to a true art form.

Born: September 16, 1925; Itta Bena, Mississippi
Also known as: Riley B. King (full name); Boy from Beale Street; King of the Blues

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Singin' the Blues, 1957; The Blues, 1958; B. B. King Wails, 1960; My Kind of Blues, 1960; The Thrill Is Gone, 1960; Mr. Blues, 1963; Rock Me Baby, 1964; Live at the Regal, 1965; Confessin' the Blues, 1966; The Soul of B. B. King, 1966; Blues on Top of Blues, 1968; Lucille, 1968; Completely Well, 1969; The Incredible Soul of B. B. King, 1969; Indianola Mississippi Seeds, 1970; Live in Cook County Jail, 1971; Guess Who, 1972; L.A. Midnight, 1972; Friends, 1974; Lucille Talks Back, 1975; King Size, 1977; Midnight Believer, 1978; Take It Home, 1979; There Must Be a Better World Somewhere, 1981; Love Me Tender, 1982; Blues 'n' Jazz, 1983; Six Silver Strings, 1985; Blues Is King (See for Miles), 1987; King of Blues: 1989, 1988; Live at the Apollo, 1991; King of the Blues, 1992; There Is Always One More Time, 1992; B. B. King's Blues Summit, 1993; B. B. King and Friends, 1995; Lucille and Friends, 1995; Deuces Wild, 1997; Blues on the Bayou, 1998; Let the Good Times Roll: The Music of Louis . . ., 1999; Makin' Love Is Good for You, 2000; Reflections, 2003; One Kind Favor, 2008.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Blues All Around Me, 1996 (autobiography; with David Ritz).

The Life

On September 16, 1925, Nora Ella King gave birth to Riley B. King on a plantation in Itta Bena, Mississippi, a rural town near Indianola. His father, Albert Lee King, named his son Riley in recognition of the kind plantation owner. When King was young, his parents separated. His mother instilled in her son the importance of religion, and they regularly attended church. King's interest in music was piqued when his pastor, the Reverend Archie Fair, played guitar in church and introduced the boy to the guitar and chord progressions. Although his mother did not approve of the blues, King's great-aunt, Mima, allowed him to play the phonograph, sparking his interest in the blues music of Lonnie Johnson, Blind Lemon Jefferson, T-Bone Walker, and King's cousin Booker White.

When King was eight years old, his world collapsed: His mother died. Although relatives provided stability, King's father reentered the scene with a new family, giving King a stepmother and three half-siblings. Upon joining this family in Lexington, Mississippi, King had difficulty adjusting to life and shaking his identity as a poor country boy. Even so, during this period, his father demonstrated to and instilled in his adolescent son the values of hard work, commitment, and diligence. Discontented with school, King dropped out and returned to Indianola, where he reunited with his extended family, and he worked as a sharecropper.

On weekends King began singing and playing the blues, which resulted in cash donations greater than the earnings from a whole week's worth of plantation labor. King quickly realized that the blues offered an attractive alternative and headed to Memphis in 1947. He had no success in Memphis, so he returned a year later and enjoyed his first break on radio station KWEM on the Sonny Boy Williamson program. As he grew in popularity, King joined the radio station WDIA, broadcasting the Sepia Swing Club, where he created the name B. B. King.

Memphis was a center for blues singers, and King's career blossomed with Bullet Records in 1949. Soon after, King began his lifelong touring of America. King performed on the road, for more than three hundred concerts a year. This lifestyle offered little time for a stable relationship, although he would eventually father fifteen children.

In the 1960's, when blues music fell out of fashion, King continued to create music and focus on live concerts. By the 1970's pop artists had acknowledged King's efforts, through his persistence and workaholic schedule, to keep the blues alive. When King reached the age of retirement, his music flourished. He performed in his seventies and eighties, preserving the blues in both live concerts and recordings.

The Music

King's generation of musicians transmitted their history and their small-town experiences by singing the blues. King's music documented the positive and negative sides of growing up in the South during an era of inequality, with King believing it his duty to preserve both sides of history. During the 1960's, as rock and roll rose in popularity, many white musicians realized the impact of blues on the new genre, especially on rhythm, improvisation, and electric-guitar technique. At the same time, many African Americans viewed the blues as archaic and low class. Nevertheless, King made inroads in maintaining the tradition, hoping to elevate the blues to a respectable art form.

King's style of music is a dialogue between voice and guitar. King often used the guitar to extend his singing, continuing the musical line. His technique emphasized bending every note and using a bottleneck style with finger vibrato. King's attention to diction, phrasing, and accents on various syllables set his style apart from others. Another trademark of King's music was his Gibson guitar, named Lucille, with an ebony pearly fingerboard. He coined the name Lucille after rescuing one of his guitars from a fire sparked during a brawl between two men fighting over a woman named Lucille. From then on, Lucille shared the applause and was acknowledged as King's only true love.

B. B. King. (AP/Wide World Photos)

King often performed with two saxophonists, two horn players, two guitarists, a drummer, and a keyboardist. Each member played a solo that highlighted his instrument's unique sound. Greatly influenced by the style and presentation of Duke Ellington's band, King integrated the musicians into the concert experience, introducing each performer and frequently announcing, "Let's hear it for the band."

Key to his engaging performances was King's extraordinary rapport with the audience. Rather than just playing the music, King conversed with his listeners, talking about life, love, disappointments, and accomplishments. Many in his audiences understood the challenges of growing up in a segregated world. Frequently he thanked the audience for the pleasure of playing for them and remarked, "You make me so happy."

Even though King enjoyed great success on tour, he soon realized the importance of strategically marketing and packaging the music. Throughout his career King hired a number of agencies and even unsuccessfully tried to serve as his own manager. Eventually, savvier managers designed five-year plans to develop, produce, promote, and expand King's offerings, and that kept him in the spotlight.

Throughout his career King completed more than 150 albums, including two number-one rhythm-and-blues singles: "Three o'Clock Blues" and "You Don't Know Me." Four other singles reached the number-two position on the rhythm-and-blues chart: "Please Love Me," "You Upset Me Baby," "Sweet Sixteen, Part I," and "Don't Answer the Door, Part I." In 1960 the song "The Thrill Is Gone" rose to number fifteen on the pop chart.

Live at the Regal. This legendary performance was a pivotal point in King's career. Set in Chicago's famous Regal Theater, where blues, soul, jazz, and other artists rose to fame, King demonstrates a superior style of guitar playing aligned with the blues. An electrifying performer, King opens with "Every Day I Have the Blues," which quickly became a standard in his repertoire. Other classics on the album include "Sweet Little Angel" and "It's My Own Fault."

Live in Cook County Jail. Recorded live at the Cook County Jail in 1971, this album presents a more polished performance than the one on Live at the Regal. In an era when the blues fell out of fashion with the younger generation, King identifies with the struggles of African Americans. Unique to this performance is the popularized rendition of "The Thrill Is Gone," which became a King favorite. In creating this album, King empathized with the struggles of the inmates and provided a glimpse into the realities of prison life. In 1972 he created the Foundation for the Advancement of Inmate Rehabilitation and Recreation.

Live at the Apollo. Set in New York's famous Apollo Theater, this album captures the most popular blues compositions in a live performance. Although King is significantly older in this recording, his voice preserves classics from his career, including "Let the Good Times Roll," "Rock Me Baby," "Every Day I Have the Blues," and "Sweet Little Angel."

B. B. King's Blues Summit. In 1993 King collaborated with several blues divas, including Ruth Brown, Etta James, Katie Webster, Koko Taylor, and Irma Thomas, to make this album, which won the Grammy Award for Best Traditional Blues Album. The women give a flirtatious and romantic flavor to songs such as "Since I Met You Baby," "We're Gonna Make It," and "There's Something on Your Mind."

Riding with the King. In this 2000 reprise, Eric Clapton and King exchange musical ideas in a jam-session setting. When they first met, King and Clapton wanted to fuse their styles, and in this recording the two great icons present an eight-minute rendition of the famous "Three o'Clock Blues." This album provides a new interpretation of the 1970 rhythm-and-blues hit "Worried Life Blues" and a rendition of "Key to the Highway" on acoustic guitars.

Musical Legacy

With his personal efforts, King made blues music mainstream and part of American culture. As a touring musician performing hundreds of concerts every year, King spread the understanding of the blues into world culture. Even when other musicians migrated to the more popular rock-and-roll style, King remained committed to blues music. When a new generation embraced the blues in the 1970's and 1980's, King's popularity rose.

King was noted for changing the way the electric guitar is played and for inspiring many blues composers. His clear diction, phrasing, accents, and nuances made his style unique, and his blues music documented and preserved the story of the past in a signature conversational format that embraced multigenerational audiences.

King received the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 2006, and he won fourteen Grammy Awards, including the Lifetime Achievement Award in 1987. King was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987 and the Blues Foundation Hall of Fame in 1984, and in 2003 Rolling Stone placed King number three on the list of the 100 Greatest Guitarists of All Time. The B. B. King Museum in Indianola, Mississippi, preserves King's commitment to education, promoting pride and understanding through exhibits and programs.

Mary H. Wagner

Further Reading

King, B. B., with David Ritz. Blues All Around Me. New York: Avon Books, 1996. Although the format of this autobiography is disorganized, the words are unadulterated King, and there are insights into King's approach to composition.

Kostelanetz, Richard. The B. B. King Reader: Six Decades of Commentary. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2005. These interviews provide a raw and refreshing perspective on King's career. This book is well organized, with bibliography, discography, articles, and other sources related to the blues.

McGee, David. B. B. King: There Is Always One More Time. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2005. A sound reference on King provides excellent insight into blues music in the twentieth century and addresses the contents of each King album and its relationship to music, politics, and civil rights.

Sawyer, Charles. The Arrival of B. B. King. New York: Doubleday, 1980. Details the significance of King's music to the American public during an era when blues music had not yet been accepted as a scholarly subject and an essential part of America's musical heritage.

See also: Charles, Ray; Clapton, Eric; Domino, Fats; Ellington, Duke; Guy, Buddy; Hopkins, Lightnin'; James, Elmore; James, Etta; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Johnson, Lonnie; King, Albert; Paul, Les; Redding, Otis; Reed, Jimmy; Rush, Otis; Walker, T-Bone.

Carole King

American rock singer and songwriter

King produced thought-provoking lyrics that possess universal appeal in a sonic merger of pop, rock, and folk styles.

Born: February 9, 1942; Brooklyn, New York
Also known as: Carol Klein (birth name)
Member of: The City

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Writer, 1970; Tapestry, 1971; Music, 1971; Rhymes and Reasons, 1972; Fantasy, 1973; Wrap Around Joy, 1974; Really Rosie, 1975; Thoroughbred, 1976; Simple Things, 1977; Welcome Home, 1978; Touch the Sky, 1979; Pearls: Songs of Goffin and King, 1980; One to One, 1982; Speeding Time, 1983; City Streets, 1989; Colour of Your Dreams, 1993; Time Gone By, 1994; Breaking Up Is Hard to Do, 1999; Love Makes the World, 2001.

SONGS (music; lyrics by Gerry Goffin): "Take Good Care of My Baby," 1961; "Will You Love Me Tomorrow," 1961; "Go Away Little Girl," 1962; "It Might as Well Rain Until September," 1962; "The Locomotion," 1962; "He's a Bad Boy," 1963; "One Fine Day," 1963; "Up on the Roof," 1963; "Don't Bring Me Down," 1966; "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," 1967.

The Life

Carole Klein (who adopted the stage name Carole King) was born into a working-class family. By age four, she was playing piano proficiently, and she was writing songs by the time she entered James Madison High School. Her songwriting continued at Queens College, where she formed a friendship with Neil Sedaka, who later wrote the smash hit "Oh! Carol" in her honor. Other friends who found success in music included Paul Simon and lyricist Gerry Goffin.

King married Goffin, whom she had met in college, and they had two daughters, Louise and Sherry. The pair crafted such classics as "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow?" in 1961 (covered later by King, Dusty Springfield, and the Four Seasons) and 1965's "Pleasant Valley Sunday" (inspired by the family's move to the much quieter West Orange, New Jersey, and recorded by the Monkees two years later).

In 1966 King sought spiritual refuge with religious guru Sri Swami Satchidananda, who reached out with meditative practices to artists. This introspective period steered her career in a fruitful direction, resulting in "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," which Aretha Franklin recorded in a powerful rendition. However, King and Goffin found their personal relationship strained, and they divorced in 1968. Despite the split, the pair's songwriting collaboration continued to flourish.

Later, King married Charles Larkey, with whom she formed the City in 1969. The group's debut album met with little success. Thanks to the prodding of fellow artist and friend James Taylor (who later recorded King's "You've Got a Friend," among others), she returned to solo work in 1970, with great success. Although she and Larkey had two children, son Levi and daughter Molly, they divorced in 1976. King then married composer Rick Evers. When he died in 1978, King began to focus on her work full time. She moved to Idaho, where she supports environmental outreach organizations and political causes.

The Music

Early Works. King began her solo career in 1962, when "It Might as Well Rain Until September" reached number twenty-two. Her follow-up in 1963, "He's a Bad Boy," reached only number ninety-four, prompting her to shift toward songwriting for other performers. In 1970 King returned to solo artistry, releasing a collection songs (aptly titled Writer) with her former husband and frequent writing partner Goffin. The project did not rise on the charts, although it later became a fan favorite when Taylor recorded the final track, "Up on the Roof."

Tapestry. King tried again to find a niche in the solo market, this time mixing new tracks with renditions of her songs that were hits for other artists. The result was 1971's Tapestry, with "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow?" and "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman," along with additional tracks that resonated with fans ("I Feel the Earth Move," "So Far Away," "You've Got a Friend," and "It's Too Late"). The album was lauded by critics, not only for the pensive lyrics but also for King's striking voice, her sparse but superior piano chord progressions, and its tasteful production. King received Grammy Awards for Album of the Year, Best Pop Vocal Performance Female, Record of the Year, and Song of the Year. The album held the top spot on the Billboard chart for fifteen weeks, and it continued to place in the rankings for six years (selling thirteen million copies).

Music. Shortly after Tapestry, King released a project simply titled Music. It continued in the tradition of her previous success, heading to the top of the charts, thanks in part to the single "Sweet Seasons." However, the success of Tapestry overshadowed it, just as it did Rhymes and Reasons (which hit number two), Fantasy (which hit number six), and Wrap Around Joy (which hit number one, with the hits "Jazzman" and "Nightingale"). King demonstrated her versatility with Really Rosie, based on a book series, that found success in movies, television, and Off-Broadway.

Thoroughbred. For Thoroughbred, King reunited with her ex-husband Goffin, and she included lyrical contributions from Taylor, David Crosby, and Graham Nash. The all-star cast propelled the album to major commercial and critical success. King's third husband died after the release of Simple Things, and she moved to Idaho after Speeding Time, taking a much-needed break from public view.

Tapestry Revisited: A Tribute to Carole King. She came out of retirement for City Streets and Colour of Your Dreams, but her introduction to a younger generation came with 1995's Tapestry Revisited: A Tribute to Carole King. The collection featured popular artists singing the songs from Tapestry, with Rod Stewart's take on "So Far Away" and Celine Dion's rendition of "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman" finding significant airplay on adult contemporary radio stations. Other artists who participated included Franklin, Amy Grant, Faith Hill, Richard Marx, the Bee Gees, and Manhattan Transfer.

Love Makes the World. King belatedly followed up the tribute project in the studio with Love Makes the World. The collection was touted as a return to her personal style, and King promoted the project as part of a Gap clothing store advertising campaign (expanding her audience to a young demographic). This marked the inaugural release on her Rockingale Records, which she founded in order to make music exclusively on her own terms.

The Living Room Tour. In 2004 King mounted a comeback tour of sorts. Rather than being backed by a massive production, she simply sang, played the piano, and told stories. This was documented on 2005's The Living Room Tour, which features songs from every period of King's career (with particular emphasis on the Tapestry era) and guest appearances by her daughters Louise and Sherry.

Musical Legacy

Never bound by convention or by genre, King is highly regarded as a singer and songwriter. She successfully crossed over to solo artistry, backed by her signature voice and proficient piano arrangements, a hybrid of pop, rock, and folk. A multifaceted performer, King created an individual sound in the 1970's. Her fans still anticipate her new material, and her tours regularly sell out, with audiences that span generations.

Andy Argyrakis

Further Reading

Brackett, Nathan, and Christian Hoard, eds. The New Rolling Stone Album Guide. New York: Simon & Schuster, 2004. In this expansive account of albums and artists are reviews of King's most popular albums, with extensive coverage of Tapestry.

King, Carole. The Carole King Deluxe Anthology. New York: Hal Leonard, 1986. Sheet music for more than seventy songs from King's catalog, including all of her classic hits.

O'Dair, Barbara, ed. Trouble Girls: The Rolling Stone Book of Women in Rock. New York: Random House, 1997. A chronicle of influential women in rock music includes several references to King's impact on other women and the musical world at large.

Perone, James E. Carole King: A Bio-Bibliography. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999. An ample summary of King's entire career, including biographical texts, performance and composition lists, and discographies.

Weller, Sheila. Girls Like Us: Carole King, Joni Mitchell, Carly Simon—And the Journey of a Generation. New York: Atria Books, 2008. A detailed look at three singer-songwriters who helped define the position of women in the rock movement. The text also links the three, commenting on their influence on one another and on subsequent generations.

See also: Bacharach, Burt; Crosby, David; Diamond, Neil; Franklin, Aretha; Goffin, Gerry; Grant, Amy; Raitt, Bonnie; Simon, Paul; Stewart, Rod; Stoller, Mike; Taylor, James.

Rahsaan Roland Kirk

American jazz composer, flutist, and saxophonist

By adding a percussive attack, slap-tonguing, breath noises, and humming to his flute playing, Kirk pioneered a new jazz flute aesthetic. He was noted for playing three instruments at once and for his eccentric stage appearances.

Born: August 7, 1936; Columbus, Ohio
Died: December 5, 1977; Bloomington, Indiana
Also known as: Roland Theodore Kirk (full name)
Member of: The Vibration Society

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Triple Threat, 1956; Introducing Roland Kirk, 1960; Kirk's Work, 1961 (with Jack McDuff); We Free Kings, 1961; Domino, 1962; Kirk in Copenhagen, 1963; Reeds and Deeds, 1963; Gifts and Messages, 1964; I Talk to the Spirits, 1964; The Roland Kirk Quartet Meets the Benny Golson Orchestra, 1964; Rip, Rig, and Panic, 1965; Slightly Latin, 1965; Funk Underneath, 1967; The Inflated Tear, 1967; Now Please Don't You Cry, Beautiful Edith, 1967; Left and Right, 1968; Volunteered Slavery, 1968; Blacknuss, 1971; Natural Black Inventions: Root Strata, 1971; A Meeting of the Times, 1972 (with Al Hibbler); The Art of Rahsaan Roland Kirk, 1973; Prepare Thyself to Deal with a Miracle, 1973; The Case of the Three-Sided Dream in Audio Color, 1975; The Return of the 5000 Lb. Man, 1975; Kirkatron, 1976; Other Folks' Music, 1976; Boogie-Woogie String Along for Real, 1977.

ALBUMS (with the Vibration Society): Rahsaan Rahsaan, 1970; The Music of Rahsaan Roland, 1986.

The Life

Blind from the age of two, Roland Theodore "Rahsaan" Kirk began playing the trumpet at nine, after having heard a bugle boy at a summer camp. He subsequently played trumpet and French horn in the school band. Complying with a doctor's advice to give up the trumpet because of the pressure the instrument's playing imposes on the eyes, Kirk took up saxophone and clarinet at the Ohio State School for the Blind in 1948.

By 1951 Kirk was playing professionally the tenor saxophone in several local rhythm-and-blues bands (among them Boyd Moore's combo and his own group). In the second half of the 1950's, he worked in Louisville, Kentucky; Nashville, Tennessee; Cincinnati, Ohio; and Indianapolis, Indiana, among other cities in the Midwest, before moving to Chicago in 1960. There he recorded his first jazz album under his own name, Introducing Roland Kirk.

In 1961 Kirk moved to New York. He became part of the Charles Mingus Workshop for three months, and he toured Germany (notably the Essen Jazz Festival) in April and California in December. In 1963 he began his residency at Ronnie Scott's club in London, an engagement that he repeated nearly every year during the 1960's. Until his death, Kirk led his own group, the Vibration Society, touring North America, Europe, Australia, and New Zealand and performing in a multitude of jazz styles.

In the early 1970's, he was the leader of the Jazz and People's Movement, an organization for the promotion of black music. In November, 1975, he suffered a stroke that paralyzed his right side. Strong-minded, he developed a technique that allowed him to play his tenor saxophone with one hand, and he resumed performing again in 1976 (notably at the Newport Jazz Festival). A second stroke in December of 1977 caused his death at the age of forty-one.

The Music

Kirk belonged to a group of multi-reed players who emerged during the latter half of the 1950's. In comparison with fellow musicians Eric Dolphy, Yusef Lateef, James Moody, and Sam Most, Kirk was probably the most eccentric and radical in terms of his aesthetic beliefs.

Around the age of fifteen, Kirk had a prophetic dream in which he played two instruments simultaneously. Some time later, in a music store basement, he came across two seemingly antique wind instruments. The first was called a manzello (a saxello, or a variant of the B-flat soprano saxophone), and the second was a stritch (a modified version of the straight E-flat alto saxophone). He developed a technique that enabled him to play both instruments at the same time, plus a tenor saxophone with modified keys as a bourdon. With his left hand he played the tenor saxophone with "false" fingering, and with his right hand he played the manzello and stritch.

Triple Threat. Kirk used such skills on his first album, Triple Threat, which was strongly influenced by the rhythm-and-blues idiom of the period. From 1960 onward, he expanded his instrumental assortment with a siren whistle (metal hunting horn), clavietta (similar to a melodica), nose flute, piccolo, and "conventional" flute, as well as a series of homemade creations such as the trumpophone (a trumpet with a soprano saxophone mouthpiece), the slidesophone (a miniature trombone with a soprano saxophone mouthpiece), the rokon whistle, puzzle flute, and mystery pipes. At the time of his death, Kirk owned more than forty-five instruments (among them an enormous gong and a foghorn in order to silence an inattentive audience).

Kirk's Work. His first major achievement was his album Kirk's Work, with the organist Jack McDuff. The album was a tribute to Dizzy Gillespie, having a title that alludes to the trumpeter's composition "Birk's Work" and beginning with a tune called "Three for Dizzy" ("three" referring to the manzello, the stritch, and the tenor saxophone played together). Even though Kirk's Work is stylistically close to other Prestige and Blue Note albums of the early 1960's, the tremendous originality of Kirk's reed playing is evident in every selection. On Kirk's Work, all his major traits are present, such as playing three instruments at once, as well as soloing on tenor, manzello, stritch, and flute (while simultaneously humming into the flute).

The Mercury Years. Kirk's output for Mercury Records from 1962 to 1964 is possibly some of the finest yet overlooked jazz music taped in the early to mid-1960's. It contains such sensitive compositions as "Petite Fleur" (with Kirk on flute) and such Third Stream-influenced works as "Fugue'n and Alludin'" (featuring flute and vibraphone) and a thoughtful rendering of John Lewis's "Django" (with flute and celesta). Of particular interest are two selections from the album The Roland Kirk Quartet Meets the Benny Golson Orchestra, the complex composition "Variation on a Theme of Hindemith" and the ballad "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square." During the same time, Kirk experimented with such avant-garde techniques as quartertones and nasal timbres ("Abstract Improvisation" on The Roland Kirk Quartet Meets the Benny Golson Orchestra) and multiphonics ("Ecclusiastics" on Mingus: Oh Yeah! in 1961). Furthermore, he perfected the circular breathing technique that allowed him to sustain a single note for an extended period of time or play sixteenth-note runs of extended duration, as demonstrated as early as 1963 in a rendering of Duke Ellington's "Mood Indigo" (Kirk in Copenhagen) and ten years later in his composition "Saxophone Concerto" (Prepare Thyself to Deal with a Miracle).

The Atlantic Years. While the Mercury recordings were influenced by such post-hard-bop stylists as Sonny Rollins and Golson, the recordings from the Atlantic years (1965-1976) demonstrated the influence of John Coltrane, especially in his approach to the soprano saxophone, on such compositions as "Something for Trane That Trane Could Have Said" (Natural Black Inventions: Roots Strata). On the Atlantic label, Kirk remained faithful to his playing of the manzello, stritch, and tenor saxophone simultaneously, occasionally unaccompanied, so that the three instruments sound like a "human choir" (as on the title track of The Inflated Tear). On the same album, Kirk demonstrated his lasting curiosity for unusual timbres such as the English horn as a solo instrument on the blues-tinged track "The Black and Crazy Blues." Next to such explorations for uncommon klangfarben, Kirk continued his excellent, often lyrical, and highly original flute soloing on such compositions as "A Laugh for Rory" (The Inflated Tear) and "Anysha" (Other Folks' Music) on Atlantic, as initiated earlier on Mercury.

African American Identity. Similar to many contemporary African American jazz musicians in late 1960's and early 1970's, Kirk expressed his increasing support for the black cause and his growing interest in African American identity by devoting more compositions to African-influenced music, such as "Volunteered Slavery" (on the album with the same title) and "Haunted Feelings," "Black Root (Back to the Root)," and "Dance of the Lobes" (on Natural Black Inventions: Root Strata).

Musical Legacy

Kirk was firmly rooted in the jazz tradition of his predecessors (Jelly Roll Morton, Fats Waller, Sidney Bechet, Ellington, Lester Young, Thelonious Monk, and John Coltrane) and the heritage of the blues, gospel, and soul (Marvin Gaye, Smokey Robinson, and Bill Withers). He introduced several new playing techniques to jazz, and he was the first wind player in the jazz world to use circular breathing. His technique of playing three instruments simultaneously was emulated by Vladimir Chekasin, Michael Marcus, Tim Price, and Dick Heckstall-Smith. Kirk's use of an array of unconventional instruments may have inspired such saxophonists as Roscoe Mitchell and Joseph Jarman from the Art Ensemble of Chicago. This group had in common with Kirk the goal of creating black classical music.

Michael Baumgartner

Further Reading

Kurth, John. Bright Moments: The Life and Legacy of Rahsaan Roland Kirk. New York: Welcome Rain, 2000. This useful biographical study incorporates material from a recently discovered audio autobiography by Kirk and interviews conducted by Kurth with Kirk's contemporaries Quincy Jones, Lateef, and Rollins.

See also: Bechet, Sidney; Coltrane, John; Ellington, Duke; Gillespie, Dizzy; Mingus, Charles; Monk, Thelonious; Morton, Jelly Roll; Rollins, Sonny; Waller, Fats; Young, Lester.

Kitarō

Japanese New Age synthesizer player, guitarist, percussionist, and composer

With his unique mix of the sounds from traditional Asian instruments and from the synthesizer, Kitarō contributed to the development of the New Age genre, emphasizing its global nature.

Born: February 4, 1953; Toyohashi, Aichi Prefecture, Japan
Also known as: Masanori Takahashi (birth name)
Member of: The Far East Family Band

Principal works

FILM SCORES (solo): Catch Your Dreams, 1983; Heaven and Earth, 1993; The Soong Sisters, 2002.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Astral Voyage, 1978; Millennia, 1978; Ten Kai Astral Trip, 1978; Full Moon Story, 1979; Ki, 1979; Oasis, 1979; Kitarō Meets the London Symphony Orchestra, 1980 (with the London Symphony Orchestra); Silk Road Suite, 1980 (with the London Symphony Orchestra); Silk Road, Vol. 1, 1981; Silk Road, Vol. 2, 1981; Tun Huang: Silk Road, Vol. 3, 1981; India, 1983; Tenjiku: Silk Road, Vol. 4, 1983; Silver Cloud, 1986; Tenku, 1986; Toward the West, 1986; The Light of the Spirit, 1987; Kojiki, 1990; Tenkai-Astral Trip, 1990; Far East Family Band, 1991; Dream, 1992; Mandala, 1994; Kitarō's World of Music Featuring Nawang Khechog, 1996; Kitarō's World of Music Featuring Yu-Xiao Guang, 1996; Peace on Earth, 1996; Cirque ingenieux, 1997; Gaia, 1998; Thinking of You, 1999; Ancient, 2001; An Ancient Journey, 2002; Ashu chakan, 2002 (Asian Café); Dunhuang, 2002; Mizuniinorite, 2002; Sacred Journey of Ku-Kai, Vol. 1, 2003; Saihou: Journey of Silk Road, 2004; Shikoku 88 Kasho, 2004; Healing Forest, 2005; Sacred Journey of Ku-Kai, Vol. 2, 2005.

ALBUMS (with the Far East Family Band): The Cave Down to the Earth, 1975; Nipponjin, 1975; Parallel World, 1976; Tenkeyin, 1977.

The Life

In 1953 Kitarō (kih-TAR-oh) was born Masanori Takahashi into a farmer's family. His friends nicknamed him Kitarō, meaning man of joy and love, from a popular television anime cartoon character, and he eventually used it as his stage name. He started to play music in high school, and, after graduation in 1971, he ran off to Tokyo, supporting himself with construction jobs and joining the Far East Family Band in 1972. After five albums and international tours, the band dissolved in 1976. That year Kitarō traveled extensively around Asia.

In 1977 Kitarō settled near Japan's Mount Fuji, launching his solo New Age career. After musical success in Japan, Kitarō married Yuki Taoka in 1983; in 1984, their son, Ryunosuke, was born. Because Kitarō's career required long tours in the United States after his first tour there in 1987, the couple divorced in 1990. By 1995 Kitarō was married to musician Keiko Matsubara, who had performed with him. The couple settled in Ward, Colorado, with Keiko's son. Kitarō has continued releasing successful albums and performing on sold-out tours. He and his wife have spent time in second homes near San Francisco and in the forests of Nagano Prefecture in Japan.

Kitarō. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

Once Kitarō embarked on his solo career, his combination of music from the synthesizer and from traditional Asian musical instruments contributed to the emergence of the New Age genre. Kitarō's focus on spiritual and soul-moving themes created a new style that won an appreciative world audience. Kitarō's career was inspired by German composer Klaus Schulze, who introduced Kitarō to the synthesizer. Kitarō's commitment to world peace in the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, terror attacks shaped his musical aspirations.

Silk Road. His music gained notoriety in 1980 when Japan's national television network, Nippon Hōsō Kyōkai, chose Kitarō to compose the sound track for its Silk Road series, featuring the ancient trade route between China and Europe. Kitarō was selected based on the ethereal music of his solo album Oasis, his music deemed appropriate for a show featuring the mysteries of the past. Kitarō's series of four Silk Road albums, from 1980 to 1983, made his name famous in Japan and with fans of New Age music. His successful combination of the sounds from a Minimoog synthesizer and traditional Asian instruments—such as the Chinese erhu flute and the Japanese taiko drum or shakuhachi flute—created a sonic fabric that moved and inspired his audiences with its fusion of the traditional and the contemporary.

The Light of the Spirit. To enter the American music scene, in 1986 Kitarō signed with Geffen Records, and a year later he produced the album The Light of the Spirit in San Francisco. Performing on the synthesizer, Kitarō was joined by a thirteen-piece classical ensemble as well as his friend Mickey Hart, drummer for the Grateful Dead. The Light of the Spirit sold exceedingly well, contributing to Kitarō's overall world sales of ten million records and encouraging him to launch his first American tour in 1987.

Kitarō's tour brought him wide media attention and charmed audiences. New Age was gaining in popularity, and Kitarō was one of its leading musicians. His songs exuded harmony and tranquillity, and the interplay of Asian instruments with Kitarō's imaginative synthesizer worked well.

Kojiki. For this album, Kitarō turned to the roots of Japanese mythological history as outlined in the 680 C.E. Kojiki. Kitarō's arrangement of a thirty-four piece string orchestra and eight taiko drums tells of Japan's origin in seven songs, including a hauntingly sad piece featuring the sun goddess Amaterasu's disappointed withdrawal into a cave, from which she is coaxed at the joyful finale. Kojiki was the top New Age album in 1990.

Heaven and Earth. Kitarō's score for Oliver Stone's film Heaven and Earth earned him the Golden Globe Award for Best Original Sound Track. Playing the electric guitar accompanied by a full orchestra, Kitarō created a suitable sonic backdrop for the story of a Vietnamese woman caught up in the Vietnam War.

Thinking of You. After many nominations, Kitarō finally won the Grammy Award in the category Best New Album New Age for Thinking of You. It was the full realization of Kitarō's trademark sonic dream, created by multiple synthesizers and classical Western and Asian instruments.

Sacred Journey of Ku-Kai, Vol. 1. The terror attacks of 9/11 shocked Kitarō into launching a musical response to promote world peace. Inspired by the journey of ninth century Japanese Buddhist monk Ku-Kai to the eighty-eight temples of the Japanese island of Shikoku, Kitarō released the first volume of Sacred Journey of Ku-Kai in 2003. It featured samples from the bells of some of the temples, and it combined new musical ideas with Kitarō's classic New Age style.

Musical Legacy

Kitarō helped launch the New Age genre, and he was a leading figure in shaping the style and content of the movement. His rapid worldwide success in the 1980's paved the way for New Age music to become a significant part of popular music, liberating it from a fringe niche, at a time when audiences appreciated spirituality and harmony. By fusing Asian and Western instruments and embedding them into an electronic fabric created by the synthesizer, Kitarō emerged as a musical innovator. An Asian popular musician with global appeal, Kitarō appeared as a beacon to Asian performers seeking global recognition.

R. C. Lutz

Further Reading

Diliberto, John. "Kitarō: Sacred Journey of Ku-Kai, Vol. 1." Billboard 115, no. 39 (September 27, 2003): 44. A New Age music critic who has covered much of Kitarō's career reviews the artist's album.

Harrington, Richard. "Kitarō: Sage of a New Age, Japan's Mood Music Maker." The Washington Post, October 3, 1987, p. G1. Perceptive portrayal of Kitarō on the eve of his Washington, D.C., concert, discussing his music and giving a biographical background.

McClure, Steve. "Kitarō Takes on the World with Tour, Mandala Album." Billboard 106, no. 43 (October 22, 1994): 50-51. Emphasis on Kitarō's synthesizer performance and his international success.

Ryūsuke, Akatsuka. "Kitarō: Master of the Synthesizer." Japan Quarterly 38, no. 1 (January-March, 1991): 85-88. Major review of Kitarō's work up to 1990 release of Kojiki. Includes biographical information, critical analyses, and photographs.

See also: Enya; Vangelis; Yanni.

Otto Klemperer

German classical conductor

A renowned conductor of the Austro-German repertoire, Klemperer was also a strong advocate of new music.

Born: May 14, 1885; Breslau, Prussia (now Wrocław, Poland)
Died: July 6, 1973; Zurich, Switzerland

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Bruckner: Symphony No. 4 in E-flat Major, 1951; Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 3 in A Minor, Op. 56, 1951; Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 4 in A Major, Op. 90, 1951; Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Minor, 1954; Mozart: Symphony No. 29 in A Major, 1954; Mahler: Symphony No. 4 in G Major, 1956; Mozart: Symphony No. 39 in G Minor, 1956; Beethoven: Symphony No. 9, 1957; Brahms: Symphony No. 3 in F Major, Op. 90; Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Op. 98, 1957; Mozart: Symphony No. 40 in G Minor, 1957; Brahms: Concerto for Violin in D Major, Op. 77, 1960; Bruckner: Symphony No. 6 in A Major, 1961; Bach: St. Matthew Passion, 1962; Beethoven: Fidelio, 1962; Mahler: Symphony No. 2, 1963; Stravinsky: Pulcinella Suite, 1963; Mahler: Das Lied von der Erde, 1964; Mozart: Die Zauberflöte, 1964 (The Magic Flute); Beethoven: Missa Solemnis in D Major, Op. 123, 1965; Handel: Messiah, 1965; Bruckner: Symphony No. 4, 1966; Bach: Mass in B Minor, 1967; Mahler: Symphony No. 9 in D Major, 1967; Stravinsky: Pétrouchka, 1967; Wagner: Der fliegende Holländer, 1968 (The Flying Dutchman); The Marriage of Figaro: A Comic Opera in Four Acts, 1971.

The Life

Otto Klemperer (KLEHM-pur-ur) was born to Nathan and Ida Klemperer, a middle-class Jewish family, in Breslau, Germany, now in Wrocław, Poland. The family moved to Hamburg when Klemperer was four years old. Because both parents loved music—Nathan was an amateur singer, and Ida was a pianist—they frequently visited theaters and concert halls. In his early childhood, Klemperer received piano lessons from his mother, and later he studied with Hans Havekoss.

In 1901 Klemperer entered the conservatory in Frankfurt to study piano with James Kwast. When the teacher left Frankfurt for the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin one year later, Klemperer followed him. Kwast was appointed to the Stern Conservatory in Berlin in 1905, and Klemperer moved to that institution, where he received composition and conducting lessons from Hans Erich Pfitzner in addition to the piano studies with Kwast.

After winning several international competitions, Klemperer was poised to begin a career as a concert pianist. At that time, he was given an opportunity to conduct: directing the offstage orchestra at a 1905 performance of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 2 (1895). This was a turning point for Klemperer, who made his first acquaintance with Mahler, composer and director of the Vienna State Opera. On Mahler's recommendation, Klemperer was appointed conductor at the Deutsches Landestheater in Prague in 1907, and his years as an apprentice began. He moved to Hamburg in 1910, to Barmen in 1913, and to Strasbourg in 1914.

Around the time Klemperer became musical director at Cologne Opera in 1917, his career as a conductor was flourishing. He conducted Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in 1919, and thereafter he performed at least one major work by Mahler each year until he left Cologne in 1924. There Klemperer conducted not only classical German repertories, such as symphonies by Ludwig van Beethoven and by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, but also contemporary works such as Arnold Schoenberg's Pelleas und Melisande (1905) and Pfitzner's Palestrina (1917). Klemperer moved to the State Opera in Wiesbaden in 1924, and in the same year he visited the Soviet Union for the first time, returning to conduct in Moscow and Leningrad every year until 1929. In Wiesbaden he developed further repertories, by conducting the neoclassical works of his contemporaries, such as Paul Hindemith and Igor Stravinsky. Their music was associated with the new art movement called New Subjectivity, which arose in Germany in the early 1920's in opposition to Expressionism.

In 1927 Klemperer became conductor at the Kroll Theatre, a branch of the Berlin State Opera at the Platz der Republik. At this time, he established his position as an advocate of new music. For the next four years, Klemperer directed numerous contemporary works, such as Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex (1927) and Mavra (1922), both produced by Klemperer; Schoenberg's Expectation (1924) and The Lucky Hand (1924); Hindemith's Cardillac (1926) and News of the Day (1929); Leoš Janáček's From the House of the Dead (1930); and Kurt Weill's Der Jasager (1930).

Otto Klemperer. (Library of Congress)

With the rise of the Nazi Party, Klemperer left Germany, emigrating to the United States in April, 1933, where he became music director of the Los Angles Philharmonic Orchestra. During this period, he also conducted the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the Pittsburgh Orchestra. In 1939, however, he underwent an operation for a brain tumor, and this surgery left him partially paralyzed. Because of this problem, his activity as conductor stopped for several years. His next regular engagement was at the Budapest Opera in 1947, but he left in 1950 because of the Communist regime's restrictive musical policies. Although he suffered another accident in 1951, falling on ice at the airport in Montreal, Klemperer accepted guest engagements in the 1950's, despite the fact that he had to conduct seated in a chair.

In 1954 Klemperer conducted and made recordings with the Philharmonia Orchestra in London at the invitation of Walter Legge, its founder, and he became the principal conductor the following year. He suffered another accident, a severe burn from a cigar, in 1959, but he resumed work nine months later. In 1961 he made his Covent Garden debut, conducting Beethoven's Fidelio (1805). Later he conducted Mozart's The Magic Flute (1791) and Richard Wagner's Lohengrin (1850). When the Philharmonia Orchestra turned into the New Philharmonia Orchestra in 1964, resulting in Legge's attempt to disband the orchestra, Klemperer became the honorary president of the new institution.

Klemperer began composing while he was still at the conservatory, and he continued to compose until the early 1970's. He wrote nine string quartets, five operas, many vocal works, and six symphonies. Klemperer continued conducting until 1971, and he died in Zurich, Switzerland, in 1973.

The Music

Born in the late nineteenth century, Klemperer started his conducting career at German opera houses, where his repertoire included works by Mozart and Wagner. At the same time, he showed an interest in contemporary music, including Schoenberg's Expressionistic and Stravinsky's neoclassical works. Klemperer later became known as an authoritative interpreter of German classical and Romantic music. His interpretations, however, have a strong element of neoclassical New Subjectivity; in that sense, they are different from late Romantic, subjective interpretations (such as those of Wilhelm Furtwängler, Hermann Abendroth, and Bruno Walter). Thus, Klemperer's performances were sometimes described as uncompromising and severe. He did not vary tempo, keeping in tempo whenever no tempo changes were indicated in the score. He looked for a fine balance of voices, in which each voice plays an equally important role without being exaggerated. Klemperer conducted in an unmanipulated manner: There is no surprise emphasis on any part. It may be said that his style represents a rare marriage of neoclassical approach and traditional Austro-German grand manner, and that is why his recordings, made in the 1960's, still appeal to the listeners.

In a videotaped interview in 1964, Klemperer rather bluntly proclaimed, "I am an immoralist." This remarkable statement, indicating he did not approve of mixing taste for musical idea and style with human morality, was a response to one made by Walter. Walter dismissed atonal or twelve-tone composition as "going against my moral standard." Even though his late recordings were mainly of German classical and Romantic music, Klemperer remained avant-garde in spirit.

Brahms's Symphony No. 3 and Symphony No. 4. Klemperer recorded the four symphonies of Johannes Brahms with the Philharmonia Orchestra between 1955 and 1957. This album includes Symphony No. 3 in F Major (1883) and Symphony No. 4 in E Minor (1885). In this recording, the first movement of Symphony No. 3 begins with a chord succession that sounds strong-willed and expansive. Following the German tradition, Klemperer built harmony from the lower voice up with an emphasis on the bass, which resulted in grand and solid sonority of the orchestra. In the first movement of Symphony No. 4, the initial theme is articulated in a long phrasing with the dynamics marked in the score carefully observed. Here, the music flows naturally, without being overly sentimental. His uncompromising approach reveals the architecturally solid structure of Brahms's symphonies clearly, not in a dry and cold manner but with a great passion.

Mahler's Symphony No. 2. This symphony is one of Mahler's most frequently recorded compositions. In this EMI studio recording from 1963, Klemperer conducted the Philharmonia Orchestra and Chorus with Elisabeth Schwarzkopf as soprano and Hilde Rössel-Majdan as mezzo-alto. He starts the first movement intensely, with great concentration. Klemperer treats every note carefully and produces the most delicate Ländler (folk dance) in the second movement and Urlicht (primal light) in the fourth movement. In the closing section of the finale, he successfully conveys the mood of divine tranquillity and happiness by taking a deliberately slow tempo with the chorus and soloists.

Bruckner's Symphony No. 4. Klemperer conducted Anton Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E-flat Major (1881) with the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra in Munich on April 1, 1966, and it was recorded live. In this performance, Klemperer chose rather fast tempi; it took about sixty minutes for the entire work. This is five to ten minutes faster than other famous recordings, such as those by Eugen Jochum (1965, with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra), Karl Böhm (1973, with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra), or Herbert von Karajan (1971, with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra). The fact that Klemperer was eighty years old at the time of this recording suggests that his choice of tempi, which is often slow in other recordings, is a judicious one, most likely not because of his old age. Klemperer produces strong and full harmonies with the powerful sound of the brass instruments throughout the performance. The last movement is especially thrilling and exciting.

The Marriage of Figaro. Klemperer recorded Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro (1786) with New Philharmonia Orchestra in January, 1970, before a concert performance at the Festival Hall in London on February 3. This studio recording presents Klemperer's unique interpretation of The Marriage of Figaro with unconventionally slow choice of tempi. Although it might be explained by his old age (he was eighty-four), there is another explanation. When Klemperer conducted the same opera in Strasbourg in May, 1915, he changed the main roles (Susanna and Cherubino) to far heavier voices. What he sought was an intense music drama, as Klemperer believed "Mozart was a matter of lightness on a dark background," according to his biographer Peter Heyworth. This illustrates that Klemperer's approach to The Marriage of Figaro was quite experimental. In this much later recording, Klemperer seemed to make another experiment, depicting the dark and serious side of this comic opera by taking slow tempi instead of using heavy voices.

Musical Legacy

Because Klemperer suffered from illnesses and had accidents in his later years, his recorded legacy has gaps in the 1940's and 1950's. A man of strong will, he overcame these difficulties to conduct until 1971, at the age of eighty-six, and he produced numerous recordings. Fortunately, his late years coincided with a period during which many commercial recordings were made and marketed. His large discography for EMI has high sound quality.

Fusako Hamao

Further Reading

Heyworth, Peter. Otto Klemperer: His Life and Times. Vol. 1: 1885-1933. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1996. This detailed biography of Klemperer discusses his early years in Europe.

_____. Otto Klemperer: His Life and Times. Vol. 2: 1933-1973. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1996. A scholarly researched biography illustrates the life of the composer after his immigration to the United States.

Holden, Raymond. The Virtuoso Conductors: The Central European Tradition from Wagner to Karajan. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2005. A professional conductor, the author queries nine European conductors, including Klemperer, about their rehearsal techniques, performance practices, and more.

Klemperer, Otto. Conversations with Klemperer. Compiled and edited by Peter Heyworth. London: Faber & Faber, 1985. Illustrates Klemperer's thoughts on conducting Mahler and Richard Strauss, on the singing of Myra Hess and Kathleen Ferrier, and on his early life.

_____. Klemperer on Music: Shavings from a Musician's Workbench. Edited by Martin Anderson. Preface by Pierre Boulez. Lancaster, England: Toccata Press, 1986. A collection of Klemperer's writings on Beethoven, Mozart, Schoenberg, Mahler, himself, and others.

Schwarzkopf, Elisabeth. "Otto Klemperer." In On and off the Record: A Memoir of Walter Legge. Introduction by Herbert von Karajan. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1982. Schwarzkopf

(Mrs. Legge) recalls her encounters with Klemperer after the 1920's.

See also: Fischer-Dieskau, Dietrich; Hindemith, Paul; Janáček, Leoš; Schoenberg, Arnold; Stravinsky, Igor; Walter, Bruno; Weill, Kurt.

Zoltán Kodály

Hungarian classical composer and ethnomusicologist

Kodály was a composer and an ethnomusicologist devoted to preserving the works of his native Hungary. He had a great impact in music education, and his pedagogical approach, known as the Kodály method, teaches musical literacy and skills to children worldwide.

Born: December 16, 1882; Krecskemét, Hungary
Died: March 6, 1967; Budapest, Hungary

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: String Quartet No. 1, Op. 2, 1910; Sonata for Solo Cello, Op. 8, 1918; String Quartet No. 2, Op. 10, 1918; Serenade, Op. 12, 1922 (for two violins and viola); Duo for Violin and Cello, Op. 7, 1924.

CHORAL WORKS: Psalmus hungaricus, 1923; Missa brevis, 1948; The Music Makers, 1964; Laudes organi, 1966.

OPERA (music): Háry János, 1926 (libretto by Béla Paulini and Zsolt Harsányi; based on the play Az obsitos [The Veteran], by János Garay).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Régi magyar katonadalok, 1918 (Old Hungarian Soldiers' Song); Szinházi nyitány, 1928 (Theatre Overture); Marosszéki táncok, 1930 (Dances of Marosszék); Nyári este, 1930 (Summer Evening); Galántai táncok, 1933 (Dances of Galánta); Felszállott a páva, 1939 (Variations on a Hungarian folk song, "The Peacock").

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: A magyar népzene, 1937 (Hungarian Folk Music, 1960); Énekeljünk tisztán, 1941 (Let Us Sing Correctly, 1952); Háromszäz harminchárom olvasógyakorlat, 1943 (Three-hundred Thirty-three Elementary Exercises in Sight-Singing, 1963); Húszonnégy kis kánon a fekete billentyűkön, 1945 (Twenty-four Little Canons on the Black Keys, 1955).

The Life

Zoltán Kodály (zohl-TAHN koh-DI) was born to a violinist (his father) and a singer and pianist (his mother) and was schooled in Galánta and Nagyszombat. He learned to play the piano and orchestral stringed instruments, he sang in the cathedral school choir, and he composed. Kodály exhibited an abiding interest in Hungarian cultural forms, which proved fundamental to his creative life and career.

In 1900 he entered Budapest University to study comparative literature, while pursuing studies at the Academy of Music, where he received degrees in composition and pedagogy. Realizing the potential loss of village song material through urbanization, he scoured the Hungarian countryside, collecting folk songs, which led to his 1906 Ph.D. dissertation, Strophic Structure in Hungarian Folk Song.

Kodály traveled to Paris, where he studied with Charles Widor and discovered the music of Claude Debussy. In 1907 he returned to Budapest to accept a position teaching theory and composition at the Academy of Music, during which time he composed several works for chamber ensembles. He also became a lifelong friend and mentor to his countryman Béla Bartók. They collaborated in folksong collecting and in developing analytical methods for the material, which profoundly affected their individual compositional styles.

Ethnomusicological fieldwork and compositional activities continued through World War I, after which Kodály devoted himself to writing articles and reviews. He established an international reputation as a composer and conductor with his oratorio, Psalmus hungaricus, in 1923. His work as a composer continued throughout the rest of his life, and he was respected for his small- and medium-scale works in the major compositional genres. He had a particularly fruitful relationship with the English as a result of their championing his works at the annual Three Choirs Festival beginning in the 1930's.

Kodály's efforts in preserving folk music led him to address his country's music education system. In the 1930's he initiated a radical reform of school music, and he wielded sufficient political clout to place his methodology in the daily curriculum of Hungarian schools. He remained in Budapest in World War II despite harrowing incidents, including briefly fleeing the city for a country monastery and giving shelter to persecuted Jews. Although he retired from full-time teaching in 1942, he continued throughout his life to research Hungarian folk music, compose, conduct, write, and lecture internationally. He served on important councils and committees, received numerous honors, and even remarried in 1959, the year after his first wife's death. His last major work, Laudes organi, for chorus and organ, showed his undiminished compositional genius.

The Music

Generally speaking, Kodály's composition was grounded in his research in Hungarian folk song and in a steadfast belief in the primacy of the human voice. Ferenc Bónis, who writes about Hungarian composers, divides Kodály's creative life into three periods. The first (1904 to 1923) demonstrates Kodály's tendency to engage in the prevalent European-salon forms of chamber music and art songs. The early instrumental pieces exhibit declamatory, almost recitative-like material. In the second period (1924 to 1935), his compositions demonstrate a sophisticated appropriation of numerous elements, including his vast knowledge of folk music and a broad form of neoclassicism with inspiration from historical models. A true synthesis characterizes the period of 1936 to the end of his life. His compositions show a carefully nuanced attitude toward form and voice leading.

Serenade. Written for two violins and viola, Serenade represents the culminating achievement of Kodály's chamber-work period. Despite the politically and personally turbulent events in his life during its composition (1919-1920), he forged a joyful work displaying his appropriation of French Impressionism mixed with German classicism. The piece is unusual in that a viola substitutes for a more standard cello, and it combines traditional formal structures with a narrative program. There are the sonata form of the first movement, the aaba of the second, and a further development in the third. The piece describes three musicians serenading a woman at the window, the song of her lover, lighthearted games of mutual rejection, and ultimate union ending with a dance.

Psalmus hungaricus. Kodály's first work for a large ensemble, tenor soloist, chorus, orchestra, and organ premiered in Budapest in 1923 along with compositions by Bartók and Ernő Dohnányi. It voiced a deeply spiritual and personal lament at the end of a dark period in Kodály's life. The unstable political situation in Hungary had reduced him from celebrated head of the Music Academy to being shamed, being briefly outcast, and finally being reinstated. He saw this as not only a personal trial but also one that universally epitomized the plight of the Hungarian people and of the history of civilization.

The text is drawn from sixteenth century poet Mihály Vég's translation of Psalm Fifty-five, penned during the Turkish occupation of Hungary. The voice is that of a complaining King David oppressed by wicked men. Ultimately, God hears, and the chorus ends in hushed, hopeful prayer. The piece met with immediate acclaim, and it went on to open the 1926 festival in Zurich alongside works of Arthur Honegger, Arnold Shoenberg, and Anton von Webern.

Zoltán Kodály.

Háry János. Opera did not have a long and rich tradition in Hungary as it had in most of Europe, and it was not until Ferenc Erkel (1810-1893) that indigenous works appeared. His two operas entered the repertory for a time, but later Hungarian composers were not successful in the medium, their creations either too Wagnerian or merely pastiches of popular art songs. Bartók had made a superb contribution to the stage with Bluebeard's Castle (1918), but its utter failure in the minds of the Hungarian public taught Kodály a lesson. He wrote Háry János between 1925 and 1926, partly in an attempt to arouse in his compatriots an indigenous musical language. The opera constitutes a richly orchestrated appropriation of folk elements, including the cimbalom, a Hungarian hammered dulcimer.

The title character is a historical figure, a veteran of the Napoleonic wars, who daily describes his adventures in the small village tavern. The story focuses on how the emperor's daughter falls in love with him, how he single-handedly defeats the emperor, how he restores order in Vienna, and how he brings the emperor's daughter home with him. The epic carries the essence of the Hungarian dream and the Magyar people's love for their ancestral land. Kodály included authentic folk songs and dances, as well as exquisite examples of choral writing. The opera become well known through the six-movement suite he excerpted from it.

Dances of Galánta. Kodály held special memories of his childhood spent in Galánta, now in western Slovakia. This symphonic poem recalls the game songs of his schoolmates, whose voices he loved to remember, as well as the dance forms, particularly the verbunkos music of the Gypsies of the region. It is not known how long the ideas for this piece had germinated, but the piece was first given at the eightieth anniversary of the Budapest Philharmonic Society Orchestra. It is a light and unusually consonant work that general audiences find instantly appealing, particularly in its dance rhythms, alternating slow and fast sections, and major-minor modalities. The English and American press of the time praised it for its brilliant orchestration and criticized it for its lack of substance.

Missa brevis. Kodály's schooling was steeped in Catholic chant and polyphonic traditions. When a request came in 1942 for music to accompany a low mass (for organ alone) at a country church, he responded by writing a work that a few years later easily adapted to the texts of the ordinary mass. It contains the usual movements, although it is framed by an organ Introit (opening) and an Ite missa est (conclusion). In addition to the traditional harmonic structure of the work, there is particular emphasis on the dramatic import of certain portions, such as the Miserere (have mercy) and Dona nobis pacem (give us peace). The composer once confessed in a letter that the Missa brevis expresses the emotions he lived through during the war, which explains the subtitle, In tempore belli.

Musical Legacy

Kodály helped transform the people of Hungary into one of the most musically active and musically literate in the world. The pedagogical approach he created in the 1950's for Hungarian schools has been studied, adapted, and applied in the industrialized world, and in Germany Carl Orff created a similar methodology. There was a move away from teaching so-called music appreciation in schools toward a renewed interest in comprehensive musicianship, singing, musical literacy, and aesthetics. Folk music, as Kodály said, serves as a bridge to learning, understanding, and performing European art music.

Kodály's output as a composer might appear small compared to that of others. He believed that a composer should not write unless he has something important to say. His philosophy is reflected in the quality of his works, as well as in the diversity of compositional style and the elements expressly suited to each genre. His music authentically incorporates plainchant, Renaissance harmony, Baroque polyphony, French Impressionism, and wholetone, pentatonic, and Lydian modes. Bartók asserted that Kodály was not an innovator but a summarizer and a champion of national classicism. Kodály encouraged many other composers, particularly through his teaching in Budapest, to develop their own Hungarian voices apart from the predominant German school. Kodály's successful students were legion, and his influence even left its mark on composers who did not study with him, including avant-gardists such as György Ligeti and György Kurtág, both students of Kodály's students, Sándor Veress and Ferenc Farkas.

Richard R. Bunbury

Further Reading

Breuer, János. A Guide to Kodály. Translated by Maria Steiner. Budapest: Corvina Books, 1990. A listener's guide to the composer's works, with an analysis, the history, and the reception of each major work. The book includes sections that summarize his songs, his piano pieces, and his choral works.

Eösze, László. Zoltán Kodály: His Life and Work. Translated by István Farkas and Gyula Gulyás. London: Collet's, 1962. This book, written by a fellow Hungarian who intimately knew the composer and his work, begins with a brief biography, and then it thoroughly examines Kodály's lifework as a composer, ethnomusicologist, and educator.

Kodály, Zoltán. The Selected Writings of Zoltán Kodály. Edited by Ferenc Bónis and Zenemükiadó Vállalat, translated by Lili Halápy and Fred Macnicol. London: Boosey & Hawkes, 1974. Offers the reader insights into the composer's unique views on other composers, folk music, and music education.

Vikár, László, ed. Reflections on Kodály. Budapest: International Kodály Society, 1985. A collection of twenty-four articles by individuals who knew Kodály or studied with his colleagues and students. The articles discuss the history of the implementation of the Kodály approach in various countries.

Young, Percy M. Zoltán Kodály: A Hungarian Musician. London: Ernest Benn, 1964. A balanced and readable portrayal of Kodály's life, with a focus on the composer's musical and social development, the Psalmus hungaricus, his influence, and his educational ideas.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Debussy, Claude; Ligeti, György; Orff, Carl; Rózsa, Miklós; Solti, Sir Georg; Suzuki, Shin'ichi.

Kool DJ Herc

American rapper and hip-hop disc jockey

In the 1970's, Herc played a seminal role in the creation and development of hip-hop in New York. He invented the technique of breakbeat looping, a formative element of hip-hop.

Born: April 16, 1955; Kingston, Jamaica
Also known as: Clive Campbell (birth name); DJ Kool Herc; Hercules Kool Herc

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Super Bad, 1994 (with Terminator X and the Godfathers of Threatt); Dig Your Own Hole, 1997 (with the Chemical Brothers).

The Life

In 1967, at the age of twelve, Kool DJ Herc moved from his birthplace, Kingston, Jamaica, to the Bronx borough of New York City. Herc established himself by deejaying for parties at community centers, at local schools, and at open-air block parties. He took his first professional club job at the Twilight Zone in 1973, and later he worked at such groundbreaking hip-hop venues as Disco Fever (alongside Grandmaster Flash and Clark Kent of the Supermen) and the Hevalo club (where he established his crew, the Herculoids, with rapper Coke la Rock). Herc's sudden withdrawal from the scene in 1977, just as hip-hop began to receive attention from the commercial music industry, led many to overlook his contributions to the culture.

Herc's role in the development of the turntable as an instrument and the musical tropes he inspired were recognized in the 1990's. He collaborated with Public Enemy's Terminator X and later with the Chemical Brothers. Herc makes rare appearances performing in New York and in Europe, and he was honored at a special concert in Manhattan's Lincoln Center in 2006.

The Music

Herc initiated musical and performance techniques with far-reaching influence on hip-hop. Drawing heavily on his West Indian roots, Herc adapted the reggae and dub devices of using the rhythm and bass-driven sound system as a creative instrument and of extending the instrumental breaks in songs. He also expanded the Jamaican practice of toasting, calling out to people in the audience and inciting listeners to move, one of the elements that inspired rapping. Herc did not leave behind scores or significant recordings of his early work, which, before hip-hop's entry into commercial recording, was designed for live performance. His musical legacy survives in stories about his performances by those who built on his work and by those who later collaborated with him.

Sound System and Turntable. Herc used his huge sound system to challenge other deejays on the scene. According to one report, Herc spinned past his set time, boldly warning deejay Afrika Bambaataa to turn off his sound so that Herc could continue undistracted. Bambaataa ignored Herc, only to find himself overpowered by Herc's massive speaker volume. The use of a sound system as a combative weapon against competing deejays was an element of the Jamaican sound system culture of the late 1960's and early 1970's, when deejays and record label owners battled each other physically and musically for dominance over the city of Kingston. This type of confrontation migrated to hip-hop culture, and it included deejay, emcee, and break-dancing battles.

Looping the Break. During his club performances, Herc noticed that patrons responded excitedly to the instrumental-break sections of whatever disco song he was spinning. He decided to experiment by starting the song at the beginning of the instrumental break and extending that section by repeating it several times. Herc did this by using his headphones to cue the next break on a separate turntable. At the transition, he faded the volume of the previous break and raised the level of the new break, usually talking to cover the mismatched tempi. This procedure required two turntables, a sound mixing console, and two copies of the same record. Herc refined this breakbeat style when he matched the tempi of the two breaks during live sessions so that when one break ended he could mix in, on tempo, the beginning of the same break. The repetition of this process produced a live looping effect in which a thirty-second or a fifteen-second break could be looped indefinitely. Song sources for the extended break loops are carefully guarded by innovative deejays, who search through stacks of recordings for new and unusual grooves. Herc is credited as the first deejay to obscure his sources by tearing off or covering up his record labels.

Musical Legacy

Herc's technique of breakbeat looping formed the foundation of hip-hop music and performance culture. Herc's style continues to shape digital sampling and production within hip-hop, especially with his modeling of the vital rapport between electronic instrumentalist and audience, and it informs practices within the broader genre of electronic and electroacoustic music. Breakbeat looping fostered the development of hip-hop dance on the part of B-boys, as Herc called them, or breakboys or breakdancers. Herc's adaptation of Jamaican deejay toasting led to the development of emceeing, better known as rapping (disco rapping), as its own musical art. The interrelated arts of deejaying, emceeing, breakdancing, and graffiti writing (which Herc practiced in his youth) are the four pillars of the hip-hop culture, each element representing respectively music, art, dance, and language.

Juliana Snapper and Robert Young

Further Reading

Brewster, Bill, and Frank Broughton. Last Night a DJ Saved My Life. New York: Grove Press, 1999. This book contextualizes Herc's role within the broader history of deejaying, starting with 1920's radio deejays and culminating in the 1999 rave and electronic scenes. Herc is portrayed as the seminal figure who helped deejaying transition from the reggae dance halls of Kingston to the hip-hop streets of the Bronx.

Chang, Jeff. Can't Stop, Won't Stop: A History of the Hip-Hop Generation. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2005. Herc writes the foreword to this solid history of the hip-hop movement, which includes interviews with many pioneers of the movement and places the movement in its social, political, and historical contexts.

Fernando, S. H., Jr. The New Beats: Exploring the Music, Culture, and Attitudes of Hip-Hop. New York: Anchor Books, 1994. This work describes Herc as the father of hip-hop. Opening with a transcript of a live radio interview with Herc, the book includes commentary from numerous hip-hop artists about Herc's importance in hip-hop history.

Ogg, Alex, and David Upshal. The Hip Hop Years: A History of Rap. New York: Fromm International, 2001. A British view of American hip-hop as a transnational phenomenon, addressing the impact of Herc's work as it enabled rappers such as N.W.A.

See also: Grandmaster Flash; Hammer, M. C.; Jay-Z; LL Cool J.

Erich Wolfgang Korngold

Austro-American classical composer

Korngold composed in a late Romantic style, with rich harmonies and soaring melodies. His well-respected film scores earned him two Academy Awards.

Born: May 29, 1897; Brünn, Austro-Hungarian Empire (now Brno, Czech Republic)
Died: November 29, 1957; Hollywood, California

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Piano Trio in D Major, Op. 1, 1910; Sonata in G Major, Op. 6, 1916 (for violin and piano); String Sextet in D Major, Op. 10, 1917; Much Ado About Nothing, Op. 11, 1920 (suite for violin and piano; incidental music for William Shakespeare's play); Quintet in E Major, Op. 15, 1923 (for piano and strings); String Quartet No. 1 in A Major, Op. 16, 1924; Suite, Op. 23, 1930 (for two violins, cello, and piano left hand); String Quartet No. 2 in E-flat Major, Op. 26, 1934; String Quartet No. 3 in D Major, Op. 34, 1946; Romance Impromptu, 1948 (for cello and piano).

CHORAL WORK: Tomorrow, Op. 33, 1944 (symphonic poem for mezzo-soprano, female chorus, and orchestra).

FILM SCORES: Captain Blood, 1935; A Midsummer Night's Dream, 1935; Anthony Adverse, 1936; The Prince and the Pauper, 1937; The Adventures of Robin Hood, 1938; Of Human Bondage, 1946.

OPERAS: Der Ring des Polykrates, Op. 7, 1916 (libretto by Julius Korngold and Leo Feld; based on Heinrich Teweles's play); Violanta, Op. 8, 1916 (libretto by Hans Müller); Die tote Stadt, Op. 12, 1920 (The Dead City; libretto with Julius Korngold; based on Georges Rodenbach's novel Bruges la morte); Das Wunder der Heliane, Op. 20, 1927 (libretto by Müller; based on Hans Kaltneker's play Die Heilige); Die Kathrin, Op. 28, 1939 (libretto by Ernst Décsey).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Der Schneemann, 1910 (pantomime; libretto by Walter Jens); Schauspiel Ouvertüre, Op. 4, 1911 (Overture to a Play); Sinfonietta in B Major, Op. 5, 1913; Sursum Corda, Op. 13, 1920; Piano Concerto in C-Sharp, Op. 17, 1924; Baby Serenade, Op. 24, 1932; Cello Concerto in C Major, Op. 37, 1946; Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 35, 1947; Symphonic Serenade in B-flat Major, Op. 39, 1950 (for string orchestra); Die stumme Serenade, Op. 36, 1951 (The Silent Serenade); Symphony in F-sharp Major, Op. 40, 1954; Theme and Variations, Op. 42, 1953.

PIANO WORKS: Piano Sonata No. 1 in D Minor, 1908; Don Quixote, 1909 (six character pieces); Piano Sonata No. 2 in E Major, Op. 2, 1911; Sieben Märchenbilder, Op. 3, 1912 (Seven Fairy-Tale Pictures); Vier kleine Karikaturen für Kinder, Op. 19, 1926 (Four Little Caricatures for Children); Geschichten von Strauss, Op. 21, 1927 (Tales of Strauss; for solo piano); Piano Sonata No. 3 in C Major, Op. 25, 1932.

VOCAL WORKS: Einfache Lieder, Op. 9, Nos. 1-6, 1913 (Simple Songs; for voice and piano); Abschiedslieder, Op. 14, Nos. 1-4, 1921 (Songs of Farewell; for voice and piano or orchestra); Narrenlieder, Op. 29, 1941 (Songs of the Clown; based on William Shakespeare's play Twelfth Night); Fünf Lieder, Op. 38, 1950 (Five Songs; for voice and piano); Sonett für Wien, Op. 41, 1954 (Sonnet for Vienna; for voice and piano).

The Life

Erich Wolfgang Korngold (EH-rihk VOHLF-gahng KORN-gohld) grew up in the Austro-Hungarian capital city of Vienna. A child prodigy and the son of a prominent music critic, he composed his first ballet when he was eleven. His

Erich Wolfgang Korngold. (Library of Congress)

Sinfonietta in B Major (1913) cemented his reputation as one of Europe's rising composers. Called up for military service during World War I, Korngold served out the war as his regiment's musical director. He met Luise von Sonnenthal in 1917, and the couple married in 1924.

Korngold was invited to Hollywood, California, in 1934 to work on the motion picture A Midsummer Night's Dream (1935), adapting incidental music that Felix Mendelssohn had written for William Shakespeare's play. For a time Korngold struggled to compose on both sides of the Atlantic, but with the rise of the Nazis in Germany and Austria, followed by the onset of World War II, he settled in the United States, becoming an American citizen in 1943. He eventually composed scores to some two dozen motion pictures.

Korngold returned to Vienna in 1949, determined to resume composing for the concert stage. However, his richly chromatic musical language was no longer in fashion. He returned to the United States after two years and revisited Europe for the premiere of his last major work, the Symphony in F-sharp Major. Korngold died in Hollywood in 1957, seemingly forgotten by the musical world.

The Music

Korngold's musical language and outlook remained largely consistent throughout his life. From the beginning he showed himself master of the rich harmonies that distinguished the works of older colleagues such as Richard Strauss. To this ability Korngold added a taste for fantasy and an almost boundless optimism that he expressed through soaring, buoyant melodies. He produced his first ballet, Der Schneemann, with the help of his father and his teacher, Alexander von Zemlinsky, but the work's character and spirit were entirely his own.

Sinfonietta in B Major. Korngold's first major work, completed in 1913, is in fact a full-scale symphony for a large orchestra in four movements, running to about three-fourths of an hour in performance. Its diminutive title is simply a reference to its joyous mood. The Sinfonietta in B Major marks Korngold's first use of what he called the "Motto of the Cheerful Heart," a rising motif that would appear in one form or another throughout his oeuvre. Besides its rich chromaticism, the work features one of Korngold's most arresting openings and triumphant conclusions.

The Dead City. Korngold based his third opera on a novel by Belgian writer Georges Rodenbach entitled Bruges la Morte: Die tote Stadt (1920; The Dead City, 1920-1921). The opera is set in Bruges, Belgium, and revolves around Paul's obsession with his late wife, Marie. When he meets a singer—Marietta—who strongly resembles Marie, he is thrown into confusion and ultimately strangles her with a braid of Marie's hair. In a departure from Rodenbach's novel, Korngold places Paul's crime in a demented vision, allowing Marie to survive and Paul to surmount his obsession. To emphasize the opera's opulent sound, Korngold employed what was for him an unusually large orchestra, and he included parts for such unusual instruments as a wind machine and a bass trumpet. The opera was given simultaneous premieres in the German cities of Hamburg and Cologne in 1920 to nearly rapturous reviews, but it was banned when the Nazis came to power.

Piano Concerto in C-Sharp. Korngold composed his only piano concerto for Paul Wittgen-stein, who had lost his right hand in World War I. Written during 1923 in one long movement of four sections, the concerto is unusually dissonant for Korngold, perhaps a psychological reflection of the physical trauma that Wittgenstein had undergone. The solo part is so complex that it is difficult for most listeners to appreciate that only one hand is involved. The work invites comparison with the better known Concerto for the Left Hand (1930) by Maurice Ravel, written for the same performer.

The Adventures of Robin Hood. Korngold had returned for a time to Europe when he received an offer to write the music for the film The Adventures of Robin Hood (1938), which was to star Errol Flynn. Although most of the music that Korngold produced was original, he utilized a theme from his 1920 orchestral overture Sursum Corda. Korngold had already won an Academy Award for his music for the film Anthony Adverse (1936), and this rousing new score—regarded as his best work in the genre—brought him a second Oscar.

Symphony in F-sharp Major. Korngold began work on a new symphony in 1947, although numerous obligations interrupted his progress. He finished the score in 1952 and traveled to Vienna to hear its premiere. The performance was undistinguished, however, and the work languished. For Korngold the symphony is unusually moody. Its opening movement is disturbingly discordant and its third somber, but its finale transforms themes from earlier movements into a lighthearted, almost jaunty conclusion. Korngold dedicated the symphony to the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, late president of the country that had given him a new life during the crisis that had destroyed his old one.

Musical Legacy

For years most listeners knew Korngold's music only through his film scores, and even then few would have recognized his name. Yet the composer had begun his career in Eastern Europe as one of the most remarkable prodigies in the history of music, stunning both audiences and critics. His sumptuous sounds and beguiling melodies made him an ideal composer for the romantic films that Hollywood began turning out in the 1930's, and he quickly established himself as a leading figure in the field.

After World War II critics revised their estimation of Korngold, concluding that the very elements that had once made him so popular now dated him in a musical world dominated by neoclassicism and serialism. With a series of new recordings in the 1980's and 1990's, however, Korngold's true stature became obvious. Along with Strauss and British composer Arnold Bax, he is now regarded as one of the foremost figures in late Romantic music.

Grove Koger

Further Reading

Brown, Royal S. "Erich Wolfgang Korngold: The Sea Hawk (1940)." In Overtones and Undertones: Reading Film Music. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1994. Extended analysis of Korngold's score and its relationship to the action of the film.

Carroll, Brendan G. The Last Prodigy: A Biography of Erich Wolfgang Korngold. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1997. Standard biography by the president of the International Korngold Society, comprehensive but readable. Illustrations, complete list of works, selected bibliography, discography for the period 1914-1996.

Duchen, Jessica. Erich Wolfgang Korngold. London: Phaidon, 1996. Short critical biography by a noted music critic. Numerous illustrations, classified list of works, brief bibliography, selective discography.

Wallace, David. "Film Music: Sergei Rachmaninoff and Erich Korngold." In Exiles in Hollywood. Pompton Plains, N.J.: Limelight Editions, 2006. Surveys Korngold's contribution to the Hollywood motion picture.

Winters, Ben. Erich Wolfgang Korngold's "The Adventures of Robin Hood": A Film Score Guide. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2007. Detailed analysis of Korngold's best-known film score. Illustrations, musical examples.

See also: Elfman, Danny; Heifetz, Jascha; Ravel, Maurice; Rózsa, Miklós; Steiner, Max; Strauss, Richard; Williams, John.

Serge Koussevitzky

Russian classical conductor

A celebrated conductor, Koussevitzky promoted new music by young composers by providing commissions and performances. He founded the renowned music festival at Tanglewood in Massachusetts.

Born: July 26, 1874; Vishny-Volochok, Russia
Died: June 4, 1951; Boston, Massachusetts
Also known as: Sergei Aleksandrovich Kusevitskii (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Mozart: Violin Concerto No. 4 in D Major, 1929; Debussy: Piano Suite No. 2, 1930; Maurice Ravel: Boléro, 1930; Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Op. 74, 1930; Strauss: Also sprach Zarathustra, Op. 30, 1935; Haydn: Symphony No. 102 in B-flat Major, No. 102, 1936; Sergei Prokofiev: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Op. 63, 1937; Beethoven: Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, Op. 125, 1950; Beethoven: Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 61, 1950; Edvard Grieg: The Last Spring, No. 2, Op. 34, 1950; Amran Khachaturian: Piano Concerto in D-flat Major, 1946; Haydn: Symphony No. 94 in G Major, H 1, No. 94, 1946; Sergei Prokofiev: Romeo and Juliet, Suite No. 2, Op. 64, 1946; Sergei Prokofiev: Symphony No. 5 in B-flat Major, Op. 100, 1946; Tchaikovsky: Serenade for Strings in C Major, Op. 48, 1949.

The Life

Serge Koussevitzky (sehrj koo-sah-VIHTS-kee) was born into a poor but musical family. His mother, Anne Barabeitchik, played piano; his father, Alexander Koussevitzky, a klezmer musician, played violin and double bass; his brother Nicholas played piano; and his brother Adolf played piano and was a conductor. He also had a sister Anyuta, or Anna. Koussevitzky was trained on the violin at an early age by his father. Following his mother's death when he was three, Koussevitzky studied piano with Maria Fiodorovna Ropenberg.

At age fourteen, Koussevitzky moved to Moscow to enroll in the Moscow Conservatory. His application was rejected, and he entered the Moscow Philharmonic School, where his principal instrument was the double bass. Upon graduation, Koussevitzky embarked on a career as a double bassist in the Moscow Imperial Theatre Orchestra, and he worked as a soloist traveling throughout Russia.

Koussevitzky married ballerina Nadezhda Galat in 1901. The marriage did not last long, and after his divorce in 1905, he married Nataliya Konstantinova Ushkove, daughter of a wealthy Moscow merchant. Together, they toured Europe, with Koussevitzky performing as a double-bass soloist.

Although Koussevitzky's first work as a conductor and musical director had occurred with a small theatrical group in his town of Vishny-Volochok, in the Tver region of Russia, before his trip to Moscow in 1888, his formal debut took place in 1908, when he conducted the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra with great success. In this performance, he included works by two relatively unknown composers, Sergei Taneiev and Reinhold Glière. This sponsorship of new composers was repeated throughout his conducting career. After this, Koussevitzky and his wife traveled extensively among Moscow, St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Paris.

In 1924 Koussevitzky moved to Boston, Massachusetts, to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position he held until 1949. His tenure with this orchestra produced numerous world premieres performed in conjunction with recognized and established pieces, such as Hector Berlioz's The Roman Carnival overture (1844), Johannes Brahms's Haydn Variations (1873), and Ludwig van Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 (1808). In addition, Koussevitzky performed as guest conductor in Europe with such illustrious organizations as the London Symphony Orchestra.

In 1942 his wife Nataliya died, and Koussevitzky established the Koussevitzky Foundation in her honor. Numerous compositions written as tributes to her were performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1947 Koussevitzky married Olga Aleksandrova Naumov, his wife's niece. They remained committed to the sponsorship of new music, primarily by American composers. Koussevitzky died in Boston in 1951, and Olga died in 1976.

The Music

Koussevitzky is best known as a conductor and a supporter of new music by living composers. He demonstrated his interest in 1908, when he conducted the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in a program consisting of all Russian music: Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet (1870), Sergei Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto in C Minor (1901), Taneiev's entr'acte to Oreste (1895), and Glière's Symphony in C Minor (1907).

Music Publisher. In 1909 Koussevitzky returned to Russia and established his own publishing company, the Russian Music Publishing House, also known as Editions Russes de Musique. In support of Russian composers, this organization issued works by Taneiev, Rachmaninoff, Igor Stravinsky, Aleksandr Scriabin, Sergei Prokofiev, and Nikolay Medtner.

Conductor. Koussevitzky propelled his conducting career by founding his own orchestra, and he initiated the Concerts Koussevitzky, first in Moscow and St. Petersburg and then in Paris. He focused his attention on combining standard orchestra repertoire, such as pieces by Beethoven and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, with works of new composers: Prokofiev, Stravinsky, Arthur Honegger, Erik Satie, and Lili Boulanger.

Serge Koussevitzky. (Library of Congress)

Later, as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky programmed music by living composers, averaging between nine and twelve premieres per season. Among the composers he promoted were Arthur Bliss, Aaron Copland, Ottorinio Respighi, Filip Lazăr, Walter Piston, and Howard Hanson. The complete list showcases American composers from the early to middle twentieth century. Many of these performances were recorded.

Tanglewood. Koussevitzky wanted to do more for young composers. With Nataliya's support, he established the Berkshire Symphony Festival in the 1930's, and it later became the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Massachusetts. This summer music festival provided advanced classes in conducting, composition, harmony, and counterpoint with well-known musicians, such as Leonard Bernstein. It also provided general classes in singing and playing an instrument, with a series of concerts featuring the classic repertoire and new music. In addition, Koussevitzky encouraged the musicians in the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take part in the festival as performers, teachers, and consultants.

Musical Legacy

Koussevitzky's legacy lies in his recognition of young talent and his ability to bring this music to the attention of the general public. His work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, encompassing the largest portion of his conducting career, revealed his desire to provide a place where new and largely unknown composers could hear their music performed by a world-class orchestra for one of the most musically savvy audiences in the United States. At Tanglewood, Koussevitzky provided a school where experienced musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trained the younger musicians. This school has since expanded to include opera production. The Koussevitzky Foundation continues to promote the works of new composers through commissions and awards.

Roberta L. Lindsey

Further Reading

Copland, Aaron. "Serge Koussevitzky and the American Composer." In Copland on Music. New York: Doubleday, 1960. Copland was one of the first American composers to come into contact with Koussevitzky in Paris, and here he details the maestro's work with young composers in the early twentieth century and describes Koussevitzky's passion for introducing music by living composers to audiences in Europe and America. Includes a listing of works by American composers performed by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1943-1944 season.

_____. "Tanglewood: 1952." Tempo 24 (Summer, 1952): 22-23. Copland was the assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center when he wrote this article designed to reassure musicians that the music program would continue after Koussevitzky's death in 1951.

Music Educators Journal. "Summer Music Mecca in the Berkshires: The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood." 26, no. 4 (February, 1940): 46. The opening of the new music center and school is the focus of this article.

Smith, Moses. Koussevitzky. New York: Allen, Towne & Heath, 1947. A music critic offers a thorough look at the life and career of Koussevitzky. Includes illustrations and several appendixes: a list of world premieres by the Boston Symphony Orchestra; a list of American composers whose works were performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during Koussevitzky's tenure; compositions commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation through 1945; and a discography of recordings with Koussevitzky.

See also: Bernstein, Leonard; Boulanger, Nadia; Copland, Aaron; Honegger, Arthur; Levine, James; Messiaen, Olivier; Prokofiev, Sergei; Respighi, Ottorino; Rubinstein, Artur; Satie, Erik; Scriabin, Aleksandr; Stravinsky, Igor; Szigeti, Joseph.

Alison Krauss

American singer, violinist, and composer

Krauss combined her talents as instrumentalist and vocalist to make bluegrass more accessible. In the mid-tempo mode, Krauss's music features sweet sonic textures, avoiding the often precision-oriented feel of bluegrass.

Born: July 23, 1971; Decatur, Illinois
Also known as: Alison Maria Krauss (full name)
Member of: Union Station

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Different Strokes, 1985; Too Late to Cry, 1987; I've Got That Old Feeling, 1991; I Know Who Holds Tomorrow, 1994 (with the Cox Family); Now That I've Found You: A Collection, 1995; Forget About It, 1999; Raising Sand, 2007 (with Robert Plant).

ALBUMS (with Union Station): Every Time You Say Goodbye, 1992; Two Highways, 1992; So Long So Wrong, 1997; New Favorite, 2001; Lonely Runs Both Ways, 2004.

The Life

Alison Maria Krauss (krows) was born July 23, 1971, in Decatur, Illinois, and she grew up in the college town of Champaign, home to a campus of the University of Illinois. At an early age, Krauss began to study classical violin. Krauss related many years later that her mother wanted her to be exposed to different cultural experiences, music as well as team sports and art.

Soon Krauss was regarded as a child prodigy. When she switched to playing country and bluegrass, Krauss entered talent competitions, her first at the age of eight. By the time she was ten, Krauss had her own band. Two years later, she won the Illinois State Fiddle Championship.

Krauss has gained a reputation as one of the most self-effacing performers in the bluegrass-country arena. She is noted for her easygoing stage manner and her joke-cracking, especially directed at herself, on such topics as her weight and her pop-idol status. In November, 1997, Krauss married Pat Bergeson. The couple had a son in July, 1999, before divorcing in August, 2001.

The Music

In 1985 Krauss, who was not yet fifteen, made her recording debut on her brother Viktor's album. Later in the year, she was signed by Rounder Records, a Massachusetts-based label that specializes in roots music (and became famous for signing blues guitarist George Thorogood). In 1987 Krauss released Too Late to Cry, and at the age of sixteen she received positive reviews from music critics. "Two Highways" was released in 1989, with Krauss supported by her backup band, Union Station. Known as her "purest bluegrass effort," it secured her first Grammy Award nomination, just in time for her eighteenth birthday. For her next album, Krauss meshed her bluegrass roots with soft country and pop music stylings—to much acclaim.

I've Got That Old Feeling. I've Got That Old Feeling gave nineteen-year-old Krauss her first Grammy Award, for Best Bluegrass Recording. The International Bluegrass Music Association named it 1991's Album of the Year. Krauss and Union Station then released Every Time You Say Goodbye, and on July 3, 1993, Krauss was inducted into the Grand Ole Opry. At age twenty-three she was the Grand Ole Opry's youngest cast member and the first bluegrass musician inducted in twenty-nine years.

I Know Who Holds Tomorrow and Now That I've Found You. Krauss moved on to Southern gospel music and demonstrated her abilities in production when she joined the Cox Family for the album I Know Who Holds Tomorrow in 1994. Although her fiddle-playing prowess paved the way for her musical career, Krauss has a talent as a vocalist that should not be overlooked. Her cover of "Baby, Now That I've Found You" (from her 1995 covers album Now That I've Found You: A Collection) is a moving rendition of the heartbreak song. The collection of 1960's love songs still stands as one of Krauss's biggest successes; a staggering 105 of 115 reviewers on Amazon.com give the record a five-star rating. Rolling Stone also raved, calling Krauss "a crystalline soprano (who) sings with riveting emotion." The album went double platinum and reached number three on the U.S. country-music charts. In 1995 Krauss' version of the song "When You Say Nothing at All" reached number three on the country singles charts, and it crossed over onto the pop charts as well.

Forget About It and O Brother, Where Art Thou? In 1999 Krauss moved a little further from her bluegrass roots with Forget About It. The title track and many of the songs from the album were considered pop-bluegrass meldings. In 2000 Krauss contributed to the Cohen Brothers' film, O Brother, Where Art Thou?, which helped revive the popularity of bluegrass music, bringing it to the attention of a mainstream audience and attracting new fans from the country and pop genres. Krauss and Union Station even remade the hit song, "Man of Constant Sorrow," with a faster, more energetic tone, making it a hit single. A North American tour in the summer of 2002 brought Krauss and Union Station to a new height of popularity.

Lonely Runs Both Ways. In 2005 Lonely Runs Both Ways hit number one on the bluegrass charts and number six on the country charts. Krauss and

Alison Krauss. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Union Station also received two Grammy Awards for the album, including Best Country Instrumental Performance for "Unionhouse Branch" and Best Country Performance by a Duo-Group Award for "Restless." The album also won Country Album of the Year. This gave Krauss a total of twenty Grammy Awards, making her the most honored female artist. She is also tied for seventh on the all-time Grammy Award winner's list. Two tracks she cut for the Cold Mountain (2003) sound track were also nominated for Oscars.

Union Station took a break from recording and touring throughout 2006, though Krauss worked as a guest performer on other projects. She also helped produce Alan Jackson's 2006 release, Like a Red Rose, acclaimed for expanding his horizons as an artist.

Musical Legacy

Krauss's sweet soprano voice—which often veers into driving textures and vocals that might be shouted or hollered—makes her a distinct force in bluegrass. Her production talents and credits continue to expand, and she has established an enviable reputation for making the artists with whom she works accessible to listeners without pandering to current popularity trends.

A Hundred Miles or More: A Collection perhaps best represents her collective musical contributions, showcasing a number of Krauss's previous collaborations—with artists such as Brad Paisley, John Waite, James Taylor, and Natalie MacMaster. Throughout her career, Krauss remained with Rounder Records, which has overseen her progress from teenage prodigy to prolific independent artist. She has fiddled and sung in multiple genres, from bluegrass to mainstream to pop.

Louis R. Carlozo and Laura Burns

Further Reading

Menaker, Daniel. "Alison Krauss: O Superstar, Where Art Thou?" The New York Times, January 24, 2002. Personal interview with Krauss, in which she discusses her life on the road, her life with her son, and her private passions.

Pareles, Jon. "When It Takes Three People to Make a Duet." The New York Times, October 21, 2007. Interviews with Krauss, Plant, and T Bone Burnett, who produced their record Raising Sand. Burnett tells how he merged the disparate voices; Krauss and Plant describe how they selected the album's songs.

See also: Plant, Robert; Taylor, James.

Fritz Kreisler

Austrian classical composer and violinist

Kreisler was a celebrated violinist, trained in Vienna before World War I. His playing was noted for continually varying tempi, nearly constant vibrato, and an imitation of a vocal slide known as portamento.

Born: February 2, 1875; Vienna, Austria
Died: January 29, 1962; New York, New York

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (music): Apple Blossoms, 1919 (with Victor Jacobi; lyrics by William Le Baron; libretto by Alexandre Dumas); Rhapsody, 1944 (lyrics by John LaTouche; libretto by Leonard Louis Levinson and Arnold Sundgaard).

ORCHESTRAL WORK: String Quartet in A Minor, 1921.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as violinist): Variations on a Theme of Corelli, 1910; Rondino on a Theme by Beethoven, 1916; Aucassin et Nicolette, 1921; March of the Toy Soldiers, 1921; Caprice viennois, Op. 2, 1924; Liebesfreud, 1926; Liebesleid, 1926; Gypsy Caprice, 1927; Shepherd's Madrigal, 1927; Tambourin chinois, Op. 3, 1928; La Précieuse in the Style of Couperin, 1929; The Old Refrain, 1929; Polchinelle, 1929; Schön Rosmarin, 1929; La Gitana, 1942; Viennese rapsodic fantasietta, 1946.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Four Weeks in the Trenches, 1915.

The Life

Born to physician Saloman Severin Kreisler and his wife Anna in Vienna, Fritz Kreisler (frihtz KRI-slur) played a violin as soon as he could hold one. His Polish-born father was a gifted amateur violinist, and he was Kreisler's first teacher. By the age of four Kreisler had drawn the attention of Vienna's major musicians. At the age of seven Kreisler entered the Vienna Conservatory, where he studied theory with composer Anton Bruckner. At the age of ten he won the conservatory's gold medal, and he went on to the Paris Conservatory, where he won the premier prix in violin two years later in 1887. The following year he toured the United States with pianist Moritz Rosenthal, but he did not receive the acclaim Europe afforded him.

Back in Vienna, Kreisler abandoned music for a series of experiments in other vocations, studying medicine in Vienna and art in Rome and Paris. In 1895 and 1896, he took officer training in the Austrian army. Returning to the violin after this hiatus, he discovered he had lost none of his virtuosity. Appearing as a soloist first with the Vienna Philharmonic and then the Berlin Philharmonic, Kreisler began a second U.S. tour in 1900, this time to great acclaim.

During his second U.S. tour, he met and courted Harriet Lies; they married in New York in 1902. In 1910 England's foremost composer, Edward Elgar, wrote a violin concerto for him, which Kreisler premiered. When World War I broke out in 1914, Kreisler rejoined his old regiment, but he was discharged after being wounded in action. He returned to the United States, where he toured again with great success. When the United States entered the war in 1917, Kreisler, who had fought in the army now fighting U.S. forces, stopped giving concerts and turned to composing. With Victor Jacobi, Kreisler created music for the Broadway operetta Apple Blossoms. In 1924 he returned to Europe, living in Berlin until 1938. He moved to France, and to escape the Nazi advance he left a year later. He returned to the United States, and he became a U.S. citizen in 1943. He retired from public concerts in 1947, though he continued playing on the radio until 1950. Complications from a 1941 auto accident left him blind and deaf for the last decade of his life. When he died in 1962, his legacy included one of the largest private collections of eighteenth century violins, and some still bear his name.

Fritz Kreisler. (Library of Congress)

The Music

Kreisler composed short works, which he used as encore pieces (though he created a stir by attributing some of his pastiches to famous Baroque composers), and which are now part of the standard repertoire of virtuoso violinists. He was influenced by the music of his Viennese childhood, when it was the peak of popularity for the waltzes and ländler (folk dances) of Johann Strauss and Josef Lanner, echoing the folk-music traditions of Austria at the end of the nineteenth century. Although Kreisler was trained in the Franco-Belgian school, he manifested the Viennese style in his performances and in his compositions.

Three Viennese Melodies. When Kreisler published a trio of violin and piano pieces in 1905 under the title of Three Viennese Melodies, he attributed them to Lanner, Strauss's rival. They were instant successes, and they became popular concert pieces not only for Kreisler but also for other violin soloists, who assumed that Kreisler's role in publishing them was as arranger. Five years later Kreisler published the third piece, a waltz entitled "Schön Rosmarin" ("Beautiful Rosmarin"), under his own name, revealing it as his own composition. Audiences and critics quickly figured out that the other two songs, "Liebesleid" ("Love's Sorrow") and "Liebesfreud" ("Love's Joy"), long performed as posthumous compositions by Lanner, were also Kreisler's. Companion pieces, "Liebesleid" and "Liebesfreud" are nearly program-music clichés of the emotions in their titles. "Liebesleid" creates a mournful sound by using portamentos that project sorrow and adding glissandi. "Liebesfreud" achieves a joyful sound with sprightly rhythms and the liberal use of the double stop, in which two notes are played simultaneously. "Schön Rosmarin" remains a popular showpiece for violinists, with its Strauss-Lanner Viennese waltz style, yet it develops rhythmic complexities by continually grouping pairs of standard 3/4 waltz time measures so that they sound like larger measures of 3/2 time. Taken together, the three pieces evoke the spirit of Vienna at the end of the nineteenth century. They complement one another, and yet each played alone can be an effective recital or encore piece.

Caprice viennois, Op. 2. An imitation of the Strauss Viennese melodies of Kreisler's youth, this sprightly piece lives up to its capricious name. Kreisler achieves humor by opening with a lingering, sensuous, slow rhythm before bursting into dynamic activity of breathtaking rapidity.

Tambourin chinois, Op. 3. Composed about the same time as the Viennese pieces (and copyrighted the same year, 1905), this pseudo-Chinese invention is not as authentic as Kreisler's imitation of his native folk music of Vienna, but it is as good as most of the Orientalist imitations in vogue at the end of the nineteenth century. Like most of those imitations, Tambourin chinois (Chinese tambourine) employs the pentatonic scale, the five pitches per octave that is the basis for Chinese and Japanese folk music (known as the "oriental scale" in the West). A piano begins the piece, with sharply hammered notes that imitate the tambourine of the title, and then the violin picks up the pentatonic melody to conclude the first part. The second section abandons the pentatonic and sounds as Viennese as Kreisler's other compositions of the period. The third and concluding section is a reprise of the opening melody.

Apple Blossoms. More than a decade before Fred Astaire danced to Irving Berlin's jazz-inspired syncopations with Ginger Rogers, he was dancing to the Viennese sounds of fellow Austrian American Kreisler. (Astaire was born Frederick Austerlitz; his father emigrated from Austria.) In this otherwise forgettable operetta, Kreisler's melodies recall the Strauss-Lanner imitations of the previous decade, yet they are now fully Americanized, as is the thin story line. Based on a novel by writer Alexandre Dumas père, the nineteenth century French love story is transposed to New York. Of the twenty-two songs in the score, ten are Kreisler's compositions and two more are collaborations with the show's other composer, Jacobi. The most enduring song is "Who Can Tell?" In it, Kreisler's shifting rhythms and tempi perfectly capture the emotions of the song and the central conflict of the play. The conflict is a familiar one for romantic comedy: two girls love two boys, but the girls' parents want each to marry the other's beau. When Kreisler reworked the operetta to become the Columbia Pictures film The King Steps Out (1936), the song was revived for another generation as "Stars in My Eyes."

Musical Legacy

Kreisler's violin technique influenced students of the instrument long after he stopped performing, and his compositions remain standard elements for violinists' training. Kreisler's constant vibrato may strike some as overly mannered, but violinists trained in Europe and North America in the first half of the twentieth century were heavily influenced by that performance style. Kreisler established an award, which he gave personally to the best violinist at his alma mater, the Wiener Musikakademie (Vienna Music Academy) each year from 1924 to 1938. In 1979 the award was made international, and it is given every four years to an outstanding young violinist. In 2005 the Canadian Broadcasting Company began a series of annual concerts dedicated exclusively to music by Kreisler and Kreisler's arrangements of the works of other composers.

Kreisler's compositions may constitute his most lasting legacy. His works play major roles in violinists' repertoire, and they are used as teaching pieces on which young violinists perfect their technique. Many of the cadenzas (violin solos) he wrote for Brahms and Beethoven violin concerti are still heard in performances of those pieces. His arrangements of Antonín Dvořák's Slavonic Dances (1878) and Arcangelo Corelli's La Folia (1700) are still popular if not standard choices.

John R. Holmes

Further Reading

Bell, A. Craig. Fritz Kreisler Remembered: A Tribute. Braunton, England: Merlin Press, 1992. This brief and readable biography is an ideal starting point for understanding Kreisler and his music.

Biancolli, Amy. Fritz Kreisler: Love's Sorrow, Love's Joy. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1998. Detailed and grounded in hard documentary evidence, this biography demonstrates the author's thorough knowledge and obvious love of Kreisler's music.

Kreisler, Fritz. Four Weeks in the Trenches. New York: Houghton Mifflin, 1915. Kreisler's contemporary account, written and published before the United States entered the war, of his experience fighting for the Austrian Empire in World War I.

Lochner, Louis P. Fritz Kreisler. New York: Macmillan, 1951. A richly detailed biography (with an extensive discography). It is enhanced, but also limited, by Lochner's intimate friendship with Kreisler. Important aspects of Kreisler's life (such as his Jewish childhood) are suppressed.

Sachs, Harvey. Virtuoso: The Life and Art of Niccolo Paganini, Franz Liszt, Anton Rubinstein, Ignace Jan Paderewski, Fritz Kreisler, Pablo Casals, Wanda Landowska, Vladimir Horowitz, Glenn Gould. London: Thames & Hudson, 1982. The chapter on Kreisler in this collection of biographical-critical sketches is a concise portrait of the virtuoso.

See also: Casadesus, Henri; Elliot, Cass; Galway, Sir James; Heifetz, Jascha; Szigeti, Joseph.

Kris Kristofferson

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Kristofferson was a leading figure in the transformation of country music. The subject matter and emotional tone of his lyrics broke with Nashville conventions and earned respect from country, pop, and rock artists who scored major hits with their versions of his songs.

Born: June 22, 1936; Brownsville, Texas
Also known as: Kris Carson
Member of: The Highwaymen

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Me and Bobby McGee, 1971; The Silver Tongued Devil and I, 1971; Jesus Was a Capricorn, 1972; Full Moon, 1973 (with Rita Coolidge); Border Lord, 1974; Breakaway, 1974 (with Coolidge); Spooky Lady's Sideshow, 1974; Who's to Bless and Who's to Blame, 1975; Surreal Thing, 1976; Songs of Kristofferson, 1977; A Star Is Born, 1977 (with Barbra Streisand); Easter Island, 1978; Natural Act, 1978 (with Coolidge); Shake Hands with the Devil, 1979; To the Bone, 1981; Music from Songwriter, 1984 (with Willie Nelson); Highwayman, 1985 (with the Highwaymen); Repossessed, 1986; Highwayman II, 1990 (with the Highwaymen); Third World Warrior, 1990; A Moment of Forever, 1995; The Road Goes on Forever, 1995 (with the Highwaymen); The Austin Session, 1999; This Old Road, 2006.

The Life

A Texas native, Kris Kristofferson (krihs-TAH-fur-suhn) was born to Henry and Mary Ann Kristofferson. As an undergraduate at Pomona College in California, Kristofferson studied classic English literature, won creative writing awards, and excelled in athletics. Other academic credentials included Phi Beta Kappa honor society membership and a Rhodes scholarship to Oxford University. Influenced by his father, a U.S. Air Force general, Kristofferson served in the U.S. Army (1960-1965) and was on track for a military career that would involve teaching English at West Point. However, musical aspirations led Kristofferson to Nashville, Tennessee, where he hoped to publish his songs and meet Johnny Cash. After a period of struggles that contributed to the collapse of his first marriage, Kristofferson achieved these goals and took on momentum in the late 1960's. Johnny and June Carter Cash became mentors for Kristofferson, whose countercultural charisma and knack for writing hits earned him fame.

Kris Kristofferson. (AP/Wide World Photos)

By the early 1970's Kristofferson was in demand as an actor. Sam Peckinpah made three films with Kristofferson, including 1973's Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, which also featured Bob Dylan and Kristofferson's soon-to-be second wife, Rita Coolidge. In the following year Kristofferson was Ellen Burstyn's leading man in Martin Scorsese's Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore (1975). In 1976 Kristofferson took on what was, for better or worse, his most recognizable role as a doomed singer opposite up-and-coming Barbra Streisand in A Star Is Born. He continued recording and touring, often with Coolidge, but Kristofferson's music became secondary to celebrity. Battles with alcohol, drugs, and his divorce from Coolidge made Kristofferson's life tabloid fodder. His starring role in the catastrophic Heaven's Gate (1980) derailed Kristofferson's film career, leading to reflection, sobriety, and renewed interest in music. Kristofferson rebounded with strong, if not strong-selling, records in the 1980's and 1990's and did solid work in independent films such as John Sayles's Lone Star (1996). In his seventies, Kristofferson settled into an elder-statesman role that prioritized music, movies, political activism, and family life with his third wife and many children. The Country Music Hall of Fame inducted Kristofferson in 2004.

The Music

Me and Bobby McGee. Kristofferson's self-titled first album appeared in 1969 and was later re-released as Me and Bobby McGee to call attention to the song that was one of Janis Joplin's biggest hits. Along with "Bobby McGee," the album contains "For the Good Times," "Help Me Make It Through the Night," "To Beat the Devil," and "Sunday Morning Coming Down." Johnny Cash's version of "Sunday Morning" was named Country Music Association Song of the Year; Cash also wrote a poem about Kristofferson for the album's jacket. As a performer, Kristofferson benefited from the strong support of his accomplished band and appealed to listeners with a taste for the unorthodox singing of Bob Dylan and Leonard Cohen.

The Silver Tongued Devil and I. With fewer memorable songs than Me and Bobby McGee, The Silver Tongued Devil and I (1971) remains notable for Kristofferson's greater performing confidence. In addition to signature compositions such as "Loving Her Was Easier (Than Anything I'll Ever Do Again)," "The Pilgrim: Chapter 33," and the title song, Kristofferson had the assurance to cover Billy Joe Shaver's antiwar "Good Christian Soldier."

Third World Warrior. Kristofferson remained prolific in the 1970's but seldom reached his early heights. It was not until the mid-1980's that he returned to compelling material and performances. Repossessed in 1986 featured songs denouncing U.S. intervention in Central America and eulogizing Martin Luther King, Jr., Mahatma Gandhi, and

John F. Kennedy against a polished yet tough country-rock backdrop. Four years later, Kristofferson went further with Third World Warrior, a fierce and moving political concept album that incorporated Latin and Caribbean musical textures. Third World Warrior celebrates and eulogizes the revolutionary Sandinista government that ruled Nicaragua from 1979 to 1990, when pressure from Presidents Ronald Reagan and George H. W. Bush proved too much to withstand. Despite low sales and lack of radio play, the album's commitment and passion affirmed Kristofferson as a vital, evolving artist.

This Old Road. Recorded shortly before his seventieth birthday and not long after the deaths of June Carter and Johnny Cash, 2006's This Old Road is both reflective and contemporary in its subject matter and sound. Age and experience made Kristofferson's singing more appealing, and he performs with urgency in a mostly acoustic musical setting with spartan production values. This Old Road combines older songs such as the title track and "The Final Attraction" with commentary on current events ("In the News") and ruminations on his young, wild years ("The Show Goes On").

Musical Legacy

Kristofferson's contributions have not always been consistent, but his best work has an invaluable place in country and related genres. Early in his career, Kristofferson set a songwriting standard that rejuvenated established artists and inspired a new, often iconoclastic generation of performers. A decline in the quality and influence of his songwriting compromised the middle period of Kristofferson's career, but he reclaimed his reputation and relevance during the 1980's and 1990's. Alternative country artists recognize Kristofferson as a guiding light; his ties to the late Johnny Cash confirm his integrity; and his belief in music as a force of social and political change remained undiminished.

Ray Pence

Further Reading

Bane, Michael. The Outlaws: Revolution in Country Music. New York: Doubleday, 1978. Lively account of how Kristofferson and kindred spirits Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, David Allan Coe, Jerry Jeff Walker, and others shook up country's establishment in the 1970's. Illustrated with vintage photographs.

Friskics-Warren, Bill. "To Beat the Devil: Intimations of Mortality." No Depression 62 (2006): 90-105. In-depth interview, career retrospective, and analysis of Kristofferson's This Old Road. Kristofferson reflects on his relationship with Johnny and June Carter Cash, who had recently died.

Lewis, George H. "Duellin' Values: Tension, Conflict, and Contradiction in Country Music." Journal of Popular Culture 24, no. 4 (1991): 103-117. Using several Kristofferson songs as a springboard, Lewis examines the work of Kristofferson's contemporaries to illustrate the presence of seemingly incompatible values and ideas in country lyrics.

_____. Review of This Old Road. Popular Music and Society 30, no. 1 (2007): 107-109. This lengthy and insightful evaluation places Kristofferson's 2006 album within the context of his whole career and life.

Lock, Cory. "Counterculture Cowboys: Progressive Texas Country of the 1970's & 1980's." Journal of Texas Music History 3, no. 1 (2003): 12-23. Lock surveys the innovative, often insurgent brand of country music that emerged in post-1960's Texas, focusing on rebels such as Kristofferson and Nelson.

See also: Bacharach, Burt; Blackwell, Otis; Cash, Johnny; Jennings, Waylon; Joplin, Janis; Nelson, Willie; Parton, Dolly; Prine, John; Raitt, Bonnie; Streisand, Barbra.

Fela Kuti

Nigerian world music composer, singer, saxophonist, and guitarist

A pioneer of Afrobeat, Kuti offered his fellow Nigerians and the rest of the citizens of the world Africa's musical heritage.

Born: October 15, 1938; Abeokuta, Nigeria
Died: August 2, 1997; Lagos, Nigeria

Also known as: Olufela Olusegun Oludotun Ransome-Kuti (birth name); Fela Anikulapo Kuti (full name)
Member of: Koola Lobitos; Africa 70; Egypt 80

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Fela's London Scene, 1970; Twothousand Black, 1980 (with Roy Ayers); Black President, 1981; Original Suffer Head, 1982; Army Arrangement, 1984; Mr. Follow Follow, 1986; Music of Many Colours, 1986 (with Ayers); Teacher Don't Teach Me Nonsense, 1987; Black Man's Cry, 1992; The '69 Los Angeles Sessions, 1994; Buy America, 1997.

ALBUMS (with Africa 70): Live!, 1970 (with Ginger Baker); Open and Close, 1971; Roforofo Fight, 1972; Shakara, 1972; Afrodisiac, 1973; Gentleman, 1973; Confusion, 1975; Everything Scatter, 1975; Excuse O, 1975; Expensive Shit, 1975; He Miss Road, Noise for Vendor Mouth, 1975; Monkey Banana, 1975; Na Poi, 1975; Ikoyi Blindness, 1976; Kalakuta Show, 1976; Unnecessary Begging, 1976; Upside Down, 1976; Yellow Fever, 1976; No Agreement, 1977; Opposite People, 1977; Shuffering and Shmiling, 1977; Sorrow, Tears, and Blood, 1977; Stalemate, 1977; Zombie, 1977; Authority Stealing, 1980; I. T. T., 1980.

ALBUMS (with Egypt 80): Beasts of No Nation, 1989; ODOO (Overtake Don Overtake Overtake), 1989; Underground System, 1992.

The Life

The son of middle-class Nigerians, Fela Anikulapo Kuti (FAY-lah a-nih-ko-LAH-poh KOO-tee), born Olufela Olusegun Oludotun Ransome-Kuti, received musical training from a young age. He honed his skills at Trinity College of Music in London, where he formed his first band, Koola Lobitos. After returning from college, Kuti toured Nigeria and Ghana in search of an audience for his musical style, called highlife jazz. In 1969 Koola Lobitos toured the United States, and there Kuti's encounters with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Black Panther Party, and The Autobiography of Malcolm X (1965) combined to shape his new style, Afrobeat.

When he returned home, his band was renamed Africa 70, reflecting Kuti's increasingly Pan-African aesthetic. Police raids on Kalakuta Republic (his home and recording studio) in 1974 resulted in Kuti being imprisoned on a drug charge; this incident inspired the album Expensive Shit. Another raid in 1977 left his mother dead, which fueled Kuti's rebellion. In 1978 Kuti married twenty-seven women in a single ceremony, and he formed his own political party, Movement of the People (MOP).

Following the breakup of Africa 70, Fela began touring Europe with his new group, Egypt 80. They toured the United States in 1986, returning during the summers of 1989, 1990, and 1991. Numerous arrests over the next several years did little to harm Kuti's popularity. When he died of AIDS in 1997, a million people attended his funeral in Nigeria.

The Music

A prolific composer and arranger, Kuti produced a body of work that reflects his musical development from highlife to Afrobeat.

Early Works. Kuti returned home from college in 1963 to a country still interested in highlife music, which had filtered in from Ghana to fuel Nigeria's independence movement. Tunes such as "Highlife Time," "Omuti Tide" (the drunkard is here), and "Olufe Mi" (my lover) were popular, and Kuti's initial reaction was to bring his jazz influences to highlife, playing what he called highlife jazz in the context of the Fela Ransome-Kuti Quintet. Despite the remnants of highlife in this style, his harmonies were too complex and unpredictable for dance music, and his vocal delivery was overshadowed by his enthusiasm for instrumental breaks.

"My Lady Frustration." Playing music that appealed to the masses was not simply a question of looking for a steady income; it was also a matter of making music that spoke truth to power. "My Lady Frustration" is representative of the new style called Afrobeat that Kuti forged during the The '69 Los Angeles Sessions. He fuses rhythmic and tonal aspects of Yoruba language with the horn lines and song architecture of highlife, jazz, and American soul. He opens with a call-and-response section, follows with horn solos, and returns to the main theme, this time punctuating it with improvised vocal variations.

"Jeun Ko Ku." After returning home from a U.S. tour with his newly named band, Nigeria 70, Kuti released "Jeun Ko Ku" ("Chop and Quench") in 1971, selling more than two hundred thousand copies in six weeks. He had finally located the ideal combination of musical sophistication and popularity in mesmerizing percussion breaks alternating with flashy horn lines. His lyrics interpret Nigeria's postcolonial problems as a politics of the belly: He berates a drunken glutton who has taken advantage of his generosity, a metaphor for African leaders who seize independence as an opportunity for personal political and financial gain.

Expensive Shit. From 1970 to 1975, Kuti produced nearly fifty songs, many of them critiques of the police and the government. If tunes like "Je'Nwi Temi" (don't gag me) showed the authorities that Kuti would not be silenced, his release of "Alagbon Close" and "Expensive Shit" reinforced this point. Following his stint in Alagbon, Lagos's largest prison, these tunes retained an energetic, percussive backdrop behind punchy horn lines that accented his biting lyrics. Particularly in "Expensive Shit," he delivers the vocals with a burning sense of urgency.

"I.T.T." Between 1976 and 1979, antiauthority critiques continued to dominate Kuti's music. "I.T.T.," or "International Thief Thief," critiques neocolonial practices levied on Africa by multinational corporations. The call-and-response features of these critiques highlighted the popularity of their message, and his mention of specific "rats" in the lyrics publicly decried local participation in processes of economic exploitation.

"Perambulator." Kuti's critical stance on national and international politics culminated in his notion of the "perambulating state." His lyrics posit perambulation both as structural feature of official postcolonial institutions and as a state of being for many Nigerians. His ensemble sound in "Perambulator" grows from an insistent bass guitar vamp into a chaotically funky keyboard solo and eventually roaring and dramatic horn lines, all of which preface his piercing lyrics. This tune exemplifies the developed master in his multiple capacities as a composer, arranger, lyricist, and bandleader.

Fela Kuti. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Kuti's political rantings and Afrobeat music gave average Nigerians a voice. In traveling to the United States during the Civil Rights movement, he actively educated himself about the tenets of pursuing liberty by any means necessary. If his offstage actions displayed incredible hubris, they were balanced by the eloquence of his performance art and lyricized rhetoric. Kuti combined African music and religion, jazz, activism, and a spirit of pure rebellion in a career of performance art with pan-African and worldwide appeal. Just as American funk and soul artists found their Afrocentric voices in the 1960's and 1970's, Kuti produced in Afrobeat a voice every bit as timely and forceful.

Peter J. Hoesing

Further Reading

Labinjoh, Justin. "Fela Anikulapo Kuti: Protest Music and Social Processes in Nigeria." Journal of Black Studies 13, no. 1 (September, 1982): 119-134. Labinjoh's quasi-biographical article takes Kuti's experiences in the United States and in Nigeria as a starting point for an ethnographic analysis of individualism and collectivism as social processes.

Moore, Carlos. Fela, Fela: This Bitch of a Life. London: Allison and Busby, 1982. Jamaican-Cuban author Moore wrote the first biography of Kuti based on interviews with Kuti, his wives, and his mother.

Olaniyan, Tejumola. Arrest the Music! The Art and Politics of Fela Anikulapo Kuti. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2004. A resource for scholarly study of Kuti, this is an excellent ethnographic monograph. Includes a song index and a discography.

Olorunyomi, Sola. Afrobeat! Fela and the Imagined Continent. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 2003. This source describes Kuti's invention of Afrobeat and the subsequent innovations in that genre.

Waterman, Christopher A. "Chop and Quench." African Arts 31, no. 1 (Winter, 1998): 1-9. An anthropologist and leading scholar of Nigerian popular music, Waterman provides a thoughtful obituary of Kuti, giving a brief overview of Kuti's life and work.

See also: Simon, Paul; Sun Ra.

L

Patti LaBelle

American rhythm-and-blues singer and songwriter

With her wide vocal range and flamboyant onstage performances, LaBelle reshaped the image of African American women in music in the 1970's.

Born: May 24, 1944; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Also known as: Patricia Louise Holt (birth name)
Member of: Ordettes; Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles; Labelle

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Patti LaBelle, 1977; Tasty, 1978; It's Alright with Me, 1979; Released, 1980; The Spirit's in It, 1981; I'm in Love Again, 1983; Patti, 1985; Winner in You, 1986; Be Yourself, 1989; This Christmas, 1990; Burnin', 1991; Gems, 1994; Flame, 1997; Yo Mister, 1997; Live! One Night Only, 1998; When a Woman Loves, 2000; Timeless Journey, 2004; Classic Moments, 2005; Miss Patti's Christmas, 2007.

ALBUMS (with Labelle): Labelle, 1971; Moonshadow, 1972; Pressure Cookin', 1973; Nightbirds, 1974; Phoenix, 1975; Chameleon, 1976.

ALBUMS (with Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles): Sleigh Belles, Jingle Belles, and Bluebelles, 1962; Sweethearts of the Apollo, 1963; The Bluebelles on Stage, 1965; Over the Rainbow, 1966; Dreamer, 1967.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Don't Block the Blessings: Revelations of a Lifetime, 1996; LaBelle Cuisine: Recipes to Sing About, 1999; Patti's Pearls: Lessons in Living Genuinely, Joyfully, Generously, 2001; Patti LaBelle's Lite Cuisine: Over 100 Dishes with to-Die-for Taste Made with to-Live-for Recipes, 2003.

The Life

A native of Philadelphia, Patti LaBelle grew up just outside the city in Elmwood. As a young girl, she listened to jazz standards and sang in the Beulah Baptist Church Young Adult Choir. Never a good student, LaBelle dropped out of high school to pursue a career in singing. After more than ten years on the road with various "girl groups" such as the Ordettes, Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles, and Labelle, she emerged as a solo artist in the late 1970's, recording many hits throughout the 1980's and 1990's. She also performed in Your Arm's Too Short to Box with God (1976) on Broadway in 1982. In 1995, during a performance in Florida, LaBelle collapsed onstage, and she was immediately diagnosed with diabetes. She has since emerged as one of the most prominent advocates for diabetes care in the United States, publishing two cookbooks for diabetics and endorsing blood glucose-monitoring systems. In addition, throughout her singing career, her philanthropic work has supported the American Cancer Society, the American Diabetes Association, the American Red Cross, Big Sisters of America, the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD), LaBelle Community Football League, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the National Minority AIDS Council, Save the Children, and the United Negro College Fund.

The Music

While her early work conformed to the doo-wop trends of the 1950's and 1960's, LaBelle created an individual style during the 1970's. Her continued success through the 1980's and 1990's were the result of her wide vocal range and her brilliant stage persona.

Early Works. LaBelle first sang publicly as a soloist for the Beulah Baptist Church Young Adult Choir, so perhaps it was fitting that her first big audition included singing the Shirelles' "I Met Him on a Sunday." LaBelle and her group had their first gig at the Orchid Ballroom, which eventually led her new group, the Ordettes, to shows all over New Jersey, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. A few personnel changes transformed the Ordettes to Patti LaBelle and the Bluebelles, a quartet that logged nearly eighty thousand miles a year on the "chitlin' circuit," venues in the South and East of the United States that catered to black performers, during the early 1960's.

Patti LaBelle. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In 1962 the Bluebelles got their first break on the television show American Bandstand, lip-synching the Starlets' "I Sold My Heart to the Junkman." After recording the single, they soon had their first gold record. They signed a contract with Atlantic Records in 1965, but after Cindy Birdsong left the group to join the Supremes, the Bluebelles never made another hit record.

"Monkey Time" and "Dancing in the Street." In 1970 the group moved to England and changed management, resulting in a new name, Labelle. They recorded a compilation of soul and rhythm-and-blues classics with singer-songwriter Laura Nyro in 1971, which was produced by LaBelle's childhood friend Kenny Gamble and his partner Leon Huff of Philadelphia International Records. Curtis Mayfield's "Monkey Time" was written for Major Lance as a soul dance tune with doo-wop backup vocals for Okeh Records. Marvin Gaye wrote "Dancing in the Street" with William "Mickey" Stevenson for Martha and the Vandellas. Nyro and the Labelle's medley features the vocal harmonies prominently over a driving backbeat that was rare for Gamble and Huff, originators of the smooth "Philly soul" sound.

"Lady Marmalade." Labelle's best-known work, "Lady Marmalade," hit number one on the Billboard Top 100 and helped make Nightbirds a gold record. The chorus seductively propositions listeners in French over cowbell-fuelled horn lines and funky congas. A year after recording this tune, Labelle broke up, and Patti LaBelle embarked on her solo career.

"New Attitude." This up-tempo rocker showed up on the Beverly Hills Cop (1984) sound track and the Billboard Top 20 in 1984. After a small slump between 1980 and 1983, LaBelle's no-nonsense vocals began to enjoy great success. The synthesizer introduction to this track was as up-to-date as her clothing and her hairstyle in the video.

"On My Own." Her first number-one hit as a solo artist, LaBelle's "On My Own" duet with Michael McDonald, was one of several tunes from Winner in You to appear on the Billboard Hot 100 in 1986. This slow ballad alternates verses between the two singers, with sensuous guitars and synthesizers in the background. The latter choruses have LaBelle and McDonald trading virtuosic vocal riffs into a smooth studio fade.

Burnin'. This 1991 album garnered LaBelle the first of two Grammy Awards for Best Female Vocal Performance (the other was for Live! One Night Only in 1998). It features the hit ballad "Somebody Loves You Baby (You Know Who It Is)," the saxophone-charged "When You've Been Blessed," the up-tempo "Feels Like Another One," and a reunion track with former Labelle members Sarah Dash and Nona Hendryx called "Release Yourself." This album and subsequent successes such as Gems and Flame kept LaBelle popular throughout the 1990's.

Musical Legacy

While many African American vocalists brought gospel influences into the popular music of the 1960's, LaBelle drew on similar harmonies even as she updated the concept of the "girl group" in the 1970's. LaBelle pushed the girl-group vocal style in a rock-oriented direction, and she exchanged the copycat dresses of the 1960's girl groups for outrageous costumes, huge headdresses, and feather boas. As a solo artist, LaBelle enjoyed popular success all over the world for more than twenty-five years, often using her popularity to support organizations that raise money to fight cancer, diabetes, and AIDS. LaBelle, who grew up in an era when great stage acts presented live music, perfected a popular onstage persona, utilizing her impressive vocal range and her exciting visual style.

Peter J. Hoesing

Further Reading

Gaar, Gillian G. "Diverse Directions." In She's a Rebel: The History of Women in Rock and Roll. Seattle, Wash.: Seal Press, 1992. A music journalist looks at women in rock, from such blues singers as Big Mama Thornton through such contemporary artists as Queen Latifah. This chapter provides excellent coverage of the contributions that LaBelle and her various vocal groups made to popular music through the 1960's and 1970's.

LaBelle, Patti, and Laura Randolph Lancaster. Patti's Pearls: Lessons in Living Genuinely, Joyfully, Generously. New York: Warner Books, 2001. LaBelle reached out to her fans and admirers with advice in this book, which draws on anecdotes from her personal and professional life to offer a few lessons in living.

LaBelle, Patti, with Laura B. Randolph. Don't Block the Blessings: Revelations of a Lifetime. New York: Riverhead Books, 1996. In this autobiography, LaBelle covers her personal and professional life. She reveals her experience with sexual abuse, and she gives readers a behind-the-scenes look at her career and her family life.

See also: Bacharach, Burt; Blige, Mary J.; John, Sir Elton; Latifah, Queen; Piaf, Édith; Ross, Diana.

Wanda Landowska

Polish harpsichordist and pianist

Landowska was responsible for the revival of the harpsichord and its repertoire, paving the way for interest in historically informed performance.

Born: July 5, 1879; Warsaw, Poland, Russian Empire (now in Poland)
Died: August 16, 1959; Lakeville, Connecticut
Also known as: Wanda Louise Landowska (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Five Polish Folk Songs, 1895; Serenade for Strings, 1896; Paysage triste, 1900.
PIANO WORKS: Dance polonaise, Op. 7, 1901; En route, Op. 4, 1901; Lied, Op. 5, 1901; Reverie d'automne, Op. 6, 1901; Liberation Fanfare, 1941.
VOCAL WORKS: Sechs Lieder, Op. 3, 1898.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Bach: Goldberg Variations; Italian Concerto; Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, 1933-1936 (by Johann Sebastian Bach); J. S. Bach: Sonatas and Partitas, 1934-1944; D. Scarlatti: Twenty Sonatas, Vol. 2, 1940; A Treasury of Harpsichord Music, 1946; J. S. Bach: The Well-Tempered Clavier, Book I, 1949-1951; J. S. Bach: The Well-Tempered Clavier, Book II, 1951-1954; Dances of Ancient Poland, 1951.
WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Musique ancienne, 1909 (Early Music, 1924); Landowska on Music, 1965 (edited by Denise Restout).

The Life

Wanda Louise Landowska (lan-DOV-skuh) was born to Marion Landowski, a lawyer and an amateur musician, and Eva Lautenberg-Landowska, a linguist who founded the first Berlitz school in Warsaw. Of Jewish ancestry, her family had converted to Catholicism before she was born. At the age of three she began her musical studies on the piano with Jan Kleczyński, a renowned pianist who specialized in the work of Frédéric Chopin. She later studied with her godfather, the famous virtuoso pianist Aleksander Michałowski, graduating from the Warsaw Conservatory at the age of fourteen. The same year, Artur Nikisch, the German conductor, heard her play a prelude and fugue from The Well-Tempered Clavier by Johann Sebastian Bach and nicknamed her "the Bacchante."

In 1895 Landowska was sent by her parents to the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin, where she studied piano with Moritz Moszkowski and composition with Heinrich Urban. She began to perform in public, and several of her compositions were published in Poland and Germany. While in Berlin, she saw antique harpsichords for the first time in a museum. She eloped in 1900 with the Polish folklorist Henri Lew to Paris, where they were married. While she had a growing interest in the harpsichord, she continued to compose and won prizes in a competition organized by the music magazine Musica in 1903. After being introduced to Vincent d'Indy, Charles Bordes, and Félix Alexandre Guilmant, who founded the Schola Cantorum, she conducted extensive research on music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

From 1903, while continuing to appear as a pianist, Landowska performed on the harpsichord and toured throughout Europe. A new two-manual Pleyel harpsichord, built to her specifications, was introduced by Landowska in 1912 at the Bach Festival in Breslau. A year later she was invited to teach the first harpsichord class at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. She and her husband remained in Germany as civil prisoners on parole after the outbreak of World War I. In 1919, as they were preparing to return to Paris, Lew was killed in a car accident.

Landowska resumed touring, performing on both the harpsichord and the piano, and made her American debut in 1923. After teaching several years at the Sorbonne and the École Normale de Musique in Paris, she founded her own École de Musique Ancienne in 1927 at Saint-Leu-la-Forêt near Paris. Fleeing France at the Nazi invasion, she and Denise Restout, her student and companion, arrived in New York on December 7, 1941, the day the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. In 1947 she settled in Lakeville, Connecticut, where she taught, wrote, composed, and made recordings. She died on August 16, 1959.

Wanda Landowska. (Library of Congress)

The Music

A pioneer in the study of music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, Landowska published numerous articles in French and German on such topics as the interpretation of Bach's keyboard works, Bach's keyboard instruments, the harpsichord works of François Couperin and Jean-Philippe Rameau, and problems of interpretation, including keyboard fingering, touch, and registration. Her recording repertoire was varied, ranging from seventeenth century works by Jacques Champion de Chambonnières on the harpsichord to nineteenth century compositions by Ludwig van Beethoven and Robert Schumann on piano rolls. She played Baroque pieces on the harpsichord, and she also commissioned new works, such as Concert champêtre for harpsichord and orchestra (1927-1928) by Francis Poulenc and Concerto for Harpsichord or Piano (1928) by Manuel de Falla. Besides transcribing pieces by other composers, she wrote or improvised cadenzas for the keyboard concerti of George Frideric Handel, Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, Joseph Haydn, and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Her own compositions included works for piano, harpsichord, voice, and ensembles.

Early Works. Except for her last work, Liberation Fanfare, scored by Richard Franko-Goldman in 1943 (keyboard version, 1941), all of Landowska's compositions were written between 1895 and 1920. Her earliest chamber works include Five Polish Folk Songs for harpsichord with winds and strings, Serenade for Strings, and Paysage triste. Many of her compositions for voice and piano are not dated, such as Kolysanka, Piosenka ludowa, Mir seimmt in Herzen, Im Walde, Tu veux partir, and Après la pluie, but they were probably written before her Sechs Lieder, Op. 3, published by Gebethner & Wolff of Warsaw in 1898. Her earliest piano works, such as En route, Lied, Reverie d'automne, and Dance polonaise, are in the style of character pieces from the Romantic period.

Early Music. Written between 1905 and 1909, Early Music was a collaboration between Landowska and her husband. They collected manuscripts and examined instrument collections in numerous libraries and museums in Europe in preparation for the book. For the most part, Landowska polemically argues against the then-common concept of progress in music. She also clarifies the confusion between the harpsichord and other early keyboard instruments and anticipates the renaissance of old music. The book received wide attention and recognition from her contemporaries. First translated from French into English by William Aspenwall Bradley in 1924, Early Music is incorporated into Landowska on Music, with a new translation and revisions made by Restout and Robert Hawkins.

Bach: Goldberg Variations. On May 17, 1933, at Saint-Leu-la-Forêt, Landowska gave a complete performance of Johann Sebastian Bach's Goldberg Variations on the harpsichord for the first time in the twentieth century. Her performance received much acclaim from highly regarded French critics, including René Lalou of La Revue des vivants, André Cœuroy of Gringoire, and Patrice Fitz-Herbert of Marianne. The same year, she made the first recording of the Goldberg Variations on the HMV label; thereafter, she performed the masterpiece throughout Europe and in the United States with much success. She recorded the work again in 1945 for RCA Victor in New York; the album sold a respectable thirty-five thousand copies in its first six years.

A Treasury of Harpsichord Music. In her recording A Treasury of Harpsichord Music made in 1946 for RCA in New York, Landowska performed a program of harpsichord favorites by several seventeenth and eighteenth cenutury composers, including Chambonnières, Couperin, Rameau, Mozart, Handel, William Croft, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Domenico Scarlatti. Several of these pieces are variations on a ground bass or a melody, such as Croft's Ground in C Minor and Handel's Suite No. 5 in E, Air and Doubles ("Harmonious Blacksmith"). She twice recorded Scarlatti's Sonata in D and Sonata in D Minor, the first time on her D. Scarlatti: Twenty Sonatas, Vol 2. and the second time on A Treasury of Harpsichord Music.

J. S. Bach: Well-Tempered Clavier. One of Landowska's many lifelong research interests was the proper instrument for the performance of J. S. Bach's keyboard works, especially The Well-Tempered Clavier (the forty-eight preludes and fugues). Because of the tonal limitations and the relatively small compass of the clavichord, she argued that the harpsichord, instead of the clavichord, is the appropriate instrument for The Well-Tempered Clavier. In 1949, at the age of seventy, Landowska began a five-year project with RCA to record the complete work as her "last will and testament." Except for the first six preludes and fugues of Book I that were recorded at the studios in New York, the rest of The Well-Tempered Clavier pieces were recorded in her house in Lakeville, Connecticut, where she made her other final recordings, including works by Bach, Mozart, and Haydn. The complete six-record set of The Well-Tempered Clavier was released in late 1954.

Musical Legacy

When Landowska died at the age of eighty, she left behind a legacy of more than a hundred recordings. She wrote or improvised cadenzas for all the concerti she played, including ten of Mozart's concerti; many were published between 1959 and 1963. In addition to her ornamentation of several sarabande movements of Bach, she left behind continuo realizations for several works, including Bach's cantatas, St. Matthew Passion (1727), Harpsichord Concerto in D Minor (1738), Harpsichord Concerto in G Minor (1735-1740), Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D Major (1720-1721), as well as Handel's Ode for St. Cecilia's Day (1739), all of which remain unpublished.

Landowska published more than fifty scholarly writings and commentaries, many of which, along with a new translation of her Early Music and several unpublished essays, were incorporated into Landowska on Music, edited by her life companion Restout. Landowka's instruments, including two Pleyel harpsichords, a Challis clavichord, and a Steinway baby grand piano, as well as her manuscript and printed music, books, correspondence, diaries, photographs, sound recordings, and programs that were preserved by Restout (who died in 2004), are now in the music division at the U. S. Library of Congress.

Decorated by the Polish and French governments, Landowska was widely respected by her contemporaries. Her most important students included Alice Ehlers, Putnam Aldrich, Denise Restout, Ralph Kirkpatrick, Ruggero Gerlin, Aimée van de Wiele, Sylvia Marlowe, Rafael Puyana, Joseph Payne, and Daniel Pinkham, all of whom continued Landowska's legacy in historically informed performance practice.

Sonia Lee

Further Reading

Bainbridge, Timothy. "Wanda Landowska and Her Repertoire." Early Music 3, no. 1 (January, 1975): 39-41. This article offers an account of Landowska's extensive concert and recording repertoire.

Cash, Alice Hudnall. "Wanda Landowska and the Revival of the Harpsichord." In Music in the Theater, Church, and Villa: Essays in Honor of Robert Lamar Weaver and Norma Wright Weaver, edited by Susan Parisi with the collaboration of Ernest Harriss and Calvin M. Bower. Warren, Mich.: Harmonie Park Press, 2000. Focuses on Landowska's career and her challenges as a woman in the revival of the harpsichord as a performing instrument.

Dyson, Ruth. "Bend the Finger at All Three Joints: A First-Hand Record of Landowska's Teaching Methods." Early Music 3, no. 3 (July, 1975): 240-242. Dyson investigates a notebook owned by a student of Landowska and attempts to reconstruct her teaching methods. Discusses Landowska's technical exercises, including finger position and fingering.

Gavoty, Bernard, and Roger Hauert. Wanda Landowska. Translated by F. E. Richardson. Geneva: René Kister, 1957. This book features a number of high-quality photographs of Landowska with a concise biography.

Landowska, Wanda. Early Music. Translated by William Aspenwall Bradley. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1924. Written with her husband and first published in French in 1909, Landowska's book argues against the then-common concept of progress in music. The work consists of extensive quotations from more than seventy authors and composers from different periods of music history.

_____. Landowska on Music. Collected, edited, and translated by Denise Restout, with the assistance of Robert Hawkins. 3d ed. Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.: Scarborough House, 1981. Contains a substantial selection of Landowska's writings and a new translation of Early Music, edited by Restout. Includes a discography, a list of compositions, and photographs of Landowska, her Pleyel harpsichord, and other historical keyboards.

Schott, Howard. "Wanda Landowska: A Centenary Appraisal." Early Music 7, no. 4 (October, 1979): 467-472. This article provides an assessment of Landowska's career and her legacy on the hundredth anniversary of her birth.

See also: Leonhardt, Gustav; Paderewski, Ignace Jan; Previn, Sir André.

K. D. Lang

Canadian country/jazz singer and songwriter

Lang is a prominent singer of torch songs, ballads, and other popular music who gained international fame in the late twentieth century. She is best known for her powerful vocals, her visibility as a lesbian, and her ability to subvert gender norms expected within the popular music establishment.

Born: November 2, 1961; Consort, Alberta, Canada
Also known as: Kathryn Dawn Lang (full name)
Member of: K. D. Lang and the Reclines

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Shadowland, 1988; Ingénue, 1992; Even Cowgirls Get the Blues, 1993; All You Can Eat, 1995; Drag, 1997; Invincible Summer, 2000; A Wonderful World, 2002 (with Tony Bennett); Hymns of the Forty-ninth Parallel, 2004.

ALBUMS (with the Reclines): A Truly Western Experience, 1984; Angel with a Lariat, 1987; Absolute Torch and Twang, 1989.

The Life

Kathryn Dawn Lang was born in 1961 to Audrey, a schoolteacher, and Fred Lang, a drugstore owner. The youngest of four children, Lang grew up in the small town of Consort, Alberta. When she was twelve years old, Lang experienced several tragic events—the death of three schoolmates in an accident as well as her father leaving the family. She wrote her first song at age thirteen and aspired to become a famous singer and songwriter. After graduating from Consort High School in 1979, Lang attended Red Deer College, where she studied music and explored becoming a singer, actor, and performance artist. There Lang met Gary Elgar, who became her close friend and musical collaborator. After attending college for a year and a half, Lang dropped out and moved to Edmonton. In 1982 Lang played a role modeled after Patsy Cline in the musical Country Chorale with Edmonton's Theater Network and Red Deer College, which sparked her interest in Cline's music. Later that year she met Larry Wanagas, founder of Homestead Records, who became her manager, and soon formed a backing band, the Reclines. Around this time, she began initializing her name Kathy Dawn to k. d. (intentionally lowercased) and assumed the persona of K. D. Lang, as she is known now. In 1984 Elgar was brutally killed at a party following an argument, and Lang was profoundly affected by his death. Shortly thereafter Lang made her first recordings with her newly formed band, and her musical career soared.

In 1985 Lang made her debut in the United States at New York's Bottom Line nightclub. Shortly after this debut and after turning down a developmental deal offered by CBS Records, Lang met Seymour Stein, the founder of Sire Records, and signed a contract. In the same year Lang toured Japan with her backing band. On this tour she met Ben Mink, with whom she developed a long-term musical relationship. In the following year Lang debuted on the Late Night with David Letterman television show and also became acquainted with the country-music establishment in Nashville.

In the 1990's Lang's musical interests shifted from country and rockabilly music to mainstream adult contemporary popular music, and she also appeared as an actor in Percy Adlon's Salmonberries. In June, 1990, Lang appeared on a television commercial in support of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, which spawned some criticism, including a loss of airplay at radio stations in her home province of Alberta, which boasts a prosperous beef industry. In 1992 Lang publicly came out as a lesbian in a landmark interview published in The Advocate. The following year Lang, dressed in drag, appeared with Cindy Crawford on the cover of Vanity Fair. In 1996 Lang became romantically involved with musician and actor Leisha Hailey, and the relationship lasted for four years. Lang lived in Los Angeles for a period of time in the 1990's but eventually moved back to Alberta.

In 2000 Lang appeared in Stephan Elliott's film Eye of the Beholder. In 2001 Lang toured with Tony Bennett following the release of Live by Request, and in 2002 she recorded a duet album with Bennett titled A Wonderful World. In 2005 Lang embarked upon a symphony orchestra tour in North America. In the following year she played a minor role in Brian De Palma's The Black Dahlia. In 2007 Lang toured with Lyle Lovett.

The Music

Well known for her powerful vocals, Lang began her musical career by combining parody and camp with a genuine love for the country music she performed. She distinguished herself by subverting the gender norms of the country-music establishment and by challenging her audiences with ironic interpretations of standard country songs and camp. As her musical career progressed, Lang's interests shifted from the rockabilly-influenced country style to a more mainstream adult contemporary pop. Her strong vocal abilities have endured throughout these changing musical styles.

Early Works. Lang's debut album, A Truly Western Experience, was issued in 1984 on the independent label Bumstead Records. She recorded the cheaply produced album with her backing band, the Reclines, and upon its release embarked upon a concert tour. After signing a recording contract with Sire Records in the following year, Lang became acquainted with several contacts in Nashville, filmed an act on Hee Haw (recorded in Nashville), and performed at the nightclub Exit/In, where her show was well attended by many famous country musicians. In 1987 Sire Records released Angel with a Lariat, which Lang recorded in London with the Reclines and under the supervision of producer Dave Edmunds. The album contains a high-spirited collection of songs written by Lang, Mink, and others in a traditional country style. Ultimately, Lang and Edmunds lacked compatibility, and the album received mixed reviews. In the same year Lang's duet with Roy Orbison, "Crying," which the duo recorded in Vancouver, appeared on the sound track for Bob Giraldi's 1987 film, Hiding Out. This song won the pair a Grammy Award for Best Vocal Collaboration in 1989.

Shadowland. Recorded in Nashville, under the guidance of the legendary country-music producer Owen Bradley, Shadowland proved to be Lang's breakthrough album—selling more than five hundred thousand copies and appearing on the Billboard country album chart for 121 weeks. This solo album comprises songs written by people other than Lang, and it conforms to the traditional Nashville country aesthetic in terms of musical sound, album art, liner notes, and so forth. Shadowland showcases elements of Bradley's distinctive sound, which features lush arrangements that appeal to a widespread audience. Lang toured the United States and Europe in the Amnesty International Tour in 1988, the same year Shadowland was released, and also performed at the closing of the Winter Olympics at Calgary, Alberta.

Absolute Torch and Twang. In 1989 Sire Records released Absolute Torch and Twang, which contains a combination of original songs by Lang and Mink as well as several cover songs. The album was produced by Greg Penny, Mink, and Lang. After a several-year hiatus from performing with the Reclines, Lang re-formed the band and involved them on this album. Absolute Torch and Twang fuses several diverse musical styles, such as jazz, ballad singing, rockabilly, Latin pop, and country. In this album Lang departed from a strictly country-music theme; for example, the closing track, "Nowhere to Stand," deals with child abuse. Lang received very little airplay from country radio stations because she did not conform to Nashville's gender norms. In the following year, Lang recorded a video for Cole Porter's "So in Love" for inclusion on Red Hot + Blue: A Tribute to Cole Porter to Benefit AIDS Research and Relief, which was a collection of Porter covers to benefit AIDS research. The video depicts the loss of a loved one to illness while exhibiting a certain degree of gender ambiguity.

Ingénue. In 1992 Ingénue was released by Sire Records and ultimately sold more than two million copies. Comprising songs written exclusively by Lang, Mink, and Penny, the album marks a stylistic turning point in Lang's career. Ingénue is a mainstream album, fitting into the genre of adult contemporary pop. Songs on this album address themes of unrequited love and acknowledge Lang's sexuality. Throughout the 1990's the musical aesthetic that first appeared on Ingénue carries forth on her later albums, the sound track to Even Cowgirls Get the Blues, All You Can Eat, and Drag, which is a concept album that uses smoking as a metaphor for romantic addiction. These later albums were less commercially successful than Ingénue and received lukewarm reviews.

Hymns of the Forty-ninth Parallel. Recorded in Los Angeles, Hymns of the Forty-ninth Parallel was released in 2004, and this album contains covers of songs written by Canadian songwriters. The album was inspired in part by Lang's previous musical collaboration with Tony Bennett, including a concert tour and the recording of A Wonderful World (2002). The songs on Hymns of the Forty-ninth Parallel highlight Lang's voice by using drums sparingly, if at all, and adhering to simple folklike arrangements. Lang embarked upon the Symphony Orchestra Tour in North America in the same year that Hymns of the Forty-ninth Parallel was released and has since toured with Lyle Lovett in addition to performing in numerous venues.

Musical Legacy

Lang has won a number of prestigious awards for a variety of performances throughout her career—including the Canadian Juno Award for Most Promising Female Vocalist and the Grammy Award for Best Vocal Collaboration from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences in the 1980's, as well as additional Grammy Awards since then.

Lang is an important popular musician, not just because of her vocal and songwriting contributions but also because she brought mainstream visibility to lesbians in the entertainment industry. Lang led the way for other high-profile lesbian and gay musicians to come out publicly.

Victoria Malawey

Further Reading

Collis, Rose. K. D. Lang. Bath, England: Absolute Press, 1999. This text outlines Lang's life and career through the end of the twentieth century. Illustrations, discography.

Fleming, Lee, ed. Hot Licks: Lesbian Musicians of Note. Charlottetown, P.E.I.: Gynergy, 1996. An article by Lang offers her perspective on her musical influences, sexuality, and career. Illustrations, discography.

Gaar, Gillian. She's a Rebel: The History of Women in Rock and Roll. Seattle, Wash.: Seal Press, 1992. This text summarizes Lang's life and career through Ingénue and places Lang in context with other women in popular music.

Lang, K. D. In Her Own Words. Compiled by David Bennahum. London: Omnibus, 1995. Collection of quotations by Lang, organized by a number of themes, including her childhood, musical influences, different aspects of her career, her personal beliefs, and her sexuality. Illustrations.

Lemon, Brendan. "Virgin Territory: K. D. Lang." The Advocate, June 16, 1992: 34-36 ff. In this interview Lang publicly comes out as a lesbian for the first time.

Robertson, William. K. D. Lang: Carrying the Torch. Toronto: ECW Press, 1993. Detailed biography of Lang through the release of Ingénue with an emphasis on her changing image and persona. Illustrations, bibliography.

Starr, Victoria. K. D. Lang: All You Get Is Me. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1994. Although a bit sensationalized, this source thoroughly describes events in Lang's career and personal life, while stressing her eccentric personality and sexuality. Illustrations, discography.

See also: Bennett, Tony; Orbison, Roy; Porter, Cole.

Queen Latifah

American rapper

At a time when rappers were writing lyrics that denigrated women and glorified the use of drugs and the gang lifestyle, Latifah introduced a positive message for women and for African Americans into rap music.

Born: March 18, 1970; Newark, New Jersey
Also known as: Dana Elaine Owens (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: All Hail the Queen, 1989; Nature of a Sista, 1991; Black Reign, 1993; Order in the Court, 1998; The Dana Owens Album, 2004; Trav'lin' Light, 2007.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Ladies First: Revelations of a Strong Woman, 1999 (autobiography).

The Life

Born to Rita Bray and Lancelot Owens, Queen Latifah (lah-TEE-fah) was given the name Dana Elaine at birth. As a young child, she loved to sing, and her parents were supportive of all her achievements, both musical and nonmusical. Her parents provided private school education for her and her brother Winki, and they taught their children that they had descended from African royalty. Like many African Americans in the 1970's, she adopted a Muslim name in 1978, calling herself Queen Latifah, to honor her ethnic identity and her royal lineage.

In the small Newark apartment where her family lived, Latifah danced to the sounds of the Jackson Five, the Delfonics, and Jamaican reggae in her room. Many of the artists who influenced her songwriting career sang about personal and social justice issues. By the time she was playing basketball and performing music at Irvington High School, she had established herself as a high achiever who studied hard to maintain good grades. Issues such as the social struggle in South Africa and racism and drug abuse among African Americans made a lasting impression on her that would later result in material for her own music as a rap artist. From her early days, she was known to her family, teachers, and peers as a strong and confident person, an image that continued throughout her career in music and eventually in her career as an actor.

As a teenager, Latifah spent many evenings at clubs in New York City, most notably the Latin Quarter, where rap music was introduced to the music world as the new voice from the streets. She adopted the musical style and the clothing of the rappers at the clubs, and she began writing rap lyrics about childhood memories and her African heritage. These experiences at the clubs, though not endorsed by her mother, became the foundation for Latifah's musical, dance, and acting persona.

By the time she was nineteen, Latifah had already released her first album by Tommy Boy Records, All Hail the Queen, and she wore a signature crown and regal clothing to draw attention to her appearance. The Flavor Unit, a group of emcees and rap deejays, became her best friends, mentors, and fellow performers in the world of music production, creating a support system that would help performers work out business dealings. Nonetheless, the inexperience of the group members sometimes proved to be a liability, when the performers were not paid the agreed-upon fees. When she formed her group, Ladies Fresh, Latifah enlisted the help of family members to manage its business deals.

In 1992 Latifah's older brother was killed in a motorcycle accident, and she halted work on an album. She eventually dealt with the painful loss by writing the song "Winki's Theme" to finish the project, released by Motown Records. Latifah wears the key to her brother's motorcycle around her neck on a chain. In 1993 she was the victim of a carjacking, during which her bodyguard and friend was shot. These incidents led to a period of depression, and she was arrested for marijuana possession in 1996. She has revealed that she wore dark glasses and abused drugs at this time in order to shut out the pain. Her activities in public and at clubs came to a near halt after the carjacking, although her appearances on television's The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air starring Will Smith led to more roles in films and on television and increasing success as an entertainer. Despite other arrests for carrying a concealed weapon and a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol, Latifah continued to inspire and promote messages of a positive attitude in her films, her music, her books, and her appearances on television and the concert stage.

The Music

After making acquaintance with performers at the New York City clubs, Latifah worked with Ladies Fresh as a beat boxer, which led to her own style of music influenced by jazz, reggae, and soul traditions. "Wrath of My Madness," her first single, was released in 1988.

All Hail the Queen. In 1988 DJ Mark the 45 King heard a demo version of Latifah's single "Princess of the Posse," and he gave a demo recording of it to the host of the MTV television show called Yo! MTV Raps. The singles "Wrath of My Madness" and "Dance for Me" were released in 1989, along with a duet with British rapper Monie Love, called "Ladies First." The "Ladies First" song was eventually included in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame's 500 Songs That Shaped Rock and Roll. The album All Hail the Queen followed, earning critical acclaim and favorable reviews. Selling one million copies and climbing to number six on the Billboard rhythm-and-blues chart, the album represented a woman's point of view, and it appealed to a broad audience, which included pop and alternative rock fans. The album cover and promotional photographs featured Latifah wearing a regal costume and a crown, representing a royal and self-assured image, unusual for women at that time.

Nature of a Sista. Latifah branched out into the world of music management and production when she established Flavor Unit Management, breaking away from Tommy Boy. Her company managed the careers of Naughty by Nature, Apache, LL Cool J, and other successful rap and hip-hop musicians. She collaborated with David Bowie in his remake of the song "Fame" and again pleased the critics with her thoughtful lyrics, which pointed to the harmony possible across race and gender lines and which brought about positive regard for rap music as a legitimate and respectable musical genre. Latifah made television appearances with Barbra Streisand, Robin Williams, the cast of The Cosby Show, and basketball star Magic Johnson, and she made several guest appearances on The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air, one of the most successful African American-focused television programs of all time, paving the way for rappers in prime-time television.

After a European tour and collaboration with other musicians, Latifah accepted a role in the Spike Lee film Jungle Fever (1991). Though her on-screen time was brief, this role propelled Latifah's career in a new direction, and in 1990 Rolling Stone awarded her the title Best Female Rapper, voted by readers. She was also named Best New Artist by the New Music Seminar in New York City, and she was invited to speak at Harvard University. Other films followed, including House Party 2 (1991) and Juice (1992), both about the lifestyles of urban African American youth.

In 1991 she released her second and final album with Tommy Boy Records called Nature of a Sista. The album got favorable reviews, and it featured songs that encouraged women to be self-confident and responsible. The track "Fly Girl" addressed men, reminding them to respect women. "Fly Girl" was nominated for a Grammy Award, and the album was promoted by a national performing tour with Ziggy Marley, the reggae artist.

After Winki's death and the release of Black Reign, Latifah found the album climbing to number sixty on the Billboard chart and going gold. This time, her singing was traditional in style, with the song "U.N.I.T.Y." winning a Grammy Award for Best Rap Solo Performance. She recorded another album for Motown Records called Order in the Court in 1998, which proved to be her last album on a Motown label. That same year, after her lead role in a situation comedy called Living Single came to an end when the show was canceled, Latifah performed at Lilith Fair, a concert tour for women artists only.

Trav'lin' Light. Another successful album, featuring Latifah's singing voice and her given name called The Dana Owens Album, continued to showcase her versatility, just as her multiple television and film roles had done throughout the 1990's and into the 2000's. In 2007 Verve Records released Trav'lin' Light, which confirmed her skills as a vocalist and as a rapper, and the album was nominated for a Grammy Award for Best Traditional Pop Album. It won a Grammy Award for the vocal arrangement on the album's track "I'm Gonna Live Til I Die," arranged by John Clayton.

Latifah's appearance in the crowns, hats, and headdresses came to a halt, because she wanted to project an image as a serious musician, not just a female rapper. Her acting and modeling career also contributed positively to her image as a self-actualized and empowered woman. The strength portrayed in her music and her on-screen roles was reflected in her business life, and she launched her record label in 1995, so she could move from managing artists to recording them. Singers Monica and Daddy D recorded on Latifah's label Flavor Unit. When Latifah took film roles that portrayed what she considered to be realistic African American lifestyles, she earned both criticism for playing a substance-abusing lesbian in the violent 1996 film Set It Off and acclaim for her willingness to portray negative characters.

Musical Legacy

Latifah's promotion through television, film, and her production company of a number of rap musicians is as important as the contribution of her compositions and performances. She offered empowering messages to African Americans in her music, and later she portrayed characters on television and in films that promoted respect for women and for African Americans throughout her career. Latifah is ranked number seventy-two on VH1's list of the 100 Greatest Women of Rock and Roll, and she has gained recognition for her work as an author, actor, and mentor. In 2007 she won an Emmy Award for her role in the television film Life Support (2007) and received seven Grammy Awards for musical recording.

Susan W. Mills

Further Reading

Feinstein, Stephen. African American Heroes: Queen Latifah. New York: Tower Books, 2008. A biography of Latifah, with information about her career as an actress and and a rapper based on interviews with her.

Latifah, Queen. Ladies First: Revelations of a Strong Woman. New York: William Morrow, 1999. This autobiography of Latifah includes personal reflections about her childhood, her family life, her entertainment career, and her musical success.

_____. Queen of the Scene. New York: HarperCollins, 2006. This children's tale written by Latifah is based on the self-confident queen herself. The story features a girl whose love for sports, such as baseball and basketball, demonstrates her girl power.

Ruth, Amy. Queen Latifah: Biography. Minneapolis, Minn.: Lerner, 2001. An overview of Latifah's home life and career, with emphasis on the motivation for the early years, through 2000.

Tracy, Kathleen. Queen Latifah: A Blue Banner Biography. Hokessin, Del.: Mitchell Lane, 2005. This biography focuses on Latifah's business dealings, on her importance as the first rapper to be nominated for an Academy Award, and on her significance as the first prominent female rapper in the music industry.

See also: Bowie, David; Jackson, Michael; LL Cool J; Streisand, Barbra.

Leadbelly

American folk/blues singer, guitarist, and songwriter

A profound influence on American popular music from blues to jazz to rock and roll, Leadbelly was known for writing and adapting songs in many traditions, including work songs, country ballads, folk songs, spirituals, blues, and children's songs.

Born: January 29, 1885; Mooringsport, Louisiana
Died: December 6, 1949; New York, New York
Also known as: Hudson William Ledbetter (birth name); King of the Twelve-String Guitar

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Negro Sinful Songs, 1939; Midnight Special, 1940; Play Parties in Song and Dance, 1941; Leadbelly Sings and Plays, 1951; Last Session, 1953; Leadbelly Sings, 1962; Ledbetter's Best, 1963; Good Night Irene, 1964; Take This Hammer, 1965; Ballads of Beautiful Women and Bad Men, 1973; Let It Shine on Me, 1989; Gwine Dig a Hole to Put the Devil In, 1991; Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen, 1994; The Titanic, 1994; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 1: 1939-1940, 1995; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 2: 1940-1943, 1995; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 3: 1943-1944, 1995; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 4: 1944, 1995; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 5: 1944-1946, 1995; Go Down Old Hannah, 1995; Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 6: 1947, 1998; Leadbelly, Vol. 1, 1934-1935: The Remaining ARC and Library of Congress Recordings, 2000; Leadbelly, Vol. 2, 1935: The Remaining Library of Congress Recordings, 2000; Black Folk Singers: Leadbelly, Josh White, 1937-1946, 2005 (with Josh White); Complete Recorded Works, Vol. 7: 1947-1949, 2006.

SINGLES: "Goodnight Irene," 1933; "Becky Deem, She Was a Gamblin' Gal," 1935; "Honey I'm All Out and Down," 1935; "If It Wasn't for Dicky," 1935; "Jefferson's Match Box Blues," 1935; "Good Morning Blues," 1940; "On a Monday," 1943 (with Sonny Terry); "Rock Island Line," 1949.

The Life

Leadbelly (LEHD-beh-lee) was born Hudson William Ledbetter to sharecroppers John Wesley and Sallie Ledbetter in Mooringsport, Louisiana. When Leadbelly was still a boy, his father acquired land in Harrison County, Texas, and there his son learned to pick cotton, chop wood, and ride horses.

Leadbelly showed an early interest in music, playing the accordion as a child. He attended school, learning to read and write at a time when literacy was not yet the norm among the rural black population in Texas. He quit school after the eighth grade to work on the farm. As a teenager Leadbelly received two gifts from his parents that would shape much of his life: a guitar and a pistol.

Leadbelly first played guitar and mandolin with friends and relatives, but soon he was performing at house parties and country dances, learning the repertoire of local musicians and honing his technique. At sixteen he left home and spent two years in Shreveport, Louisiana. On Fannin Street, the subject of a song he later wrote, Leadbelly was exposed not only to emerging blues music but also women, dancing, gambling, and violence.

Although Leadbelly had had a reputation for fighting, drinking, and womanizing for some time, he got into his first bout of serious trouble in 1915. Though the circumstances are murky, he was convicted of carrying a gun and sentenced to thirty days on a chain gang. After serving only three days, he escaped, moved to northeast Texas, and took the name Walter Boyd.

Leadbelly did not stay out of trouble for long. In February, 1918, he was convicted of the murder of

Will Stafford and sentenced to seven to thirty years in prison. After a failed escape attempt, Leadbelly decided that good behavior was his only hope for early release. He earned a reputation as a strong worker and a compelling musician. In 1924, when he was invited to play for visiting Texas governor Pat Neff, Leadbelly composed and performed a pardon song, pleading for his release. Just before the end of his term in office in 1925, Neff granted Leadbelly a full pardon, and he was released from prison.

Upon his release, Leadbelly returned to Louisiana. He did manual labor in the daytime and played in bars at night. Escaping several violent encounters over the next few years, Leadbelly landed in serious trouble again in 1930. Accused of attacking and nearly killing a white man, he was sentenced to six to ten years of hard labor at Angola State Prison.

Though conditions at Angola were miserable, Leadbelly was a model prisoner. In 1932 he sought early release from the Louisiana Board of Pardons. In 1933 John Lomax of the Library of Congress visited Angola State Prison, hoping to record traditional African American work songs. The warden recommended Leadbelly, who recorded seven songs during Lomax's visit.

Lomax and his son Alan returned to Angola in 1934 to gather more recordings. Leadbelly made a special recording for governor Oscar Allen of Louisiana in which he pleaded for his release once again. Lomax delivered the recording to the governor's office, and Leadbelly was released on August 1, 1934. Legend has it that the recording was responsible, but Allen claimed that Leadbelly was released under the double good time rule used to combat overcrowding in prisons.

After his release, Leadbelly traveled extensively with Lomax, serving as his driver and demonstrating to other musicians the recording process Lomax used during field sessions. Lomax acted as Leadbelly's manager, arranging concerts and radio appearances and collecting many of his songs for the Library of Congress. Slowly mistrust grew between Leadbelly and Lomax until the relationship soured and they parted ways.

In March, 1939, Leadbelly was arrested for stabbing a man in New York. This time he served an eight-month sentence. Upon his release, Leadbelly recorded for RCA Victor and appeared on his own weekly radio show for WNYC. In late 1941 he began working with Moses Asch of Asch Records (later Folkways), who became his new agent.

Leadbelly. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

In 1944 Leadbelly moved to the West Coast for two years, in search of a movie career. Although he performed and recorded, a movie deal never materialized, and he returned to New York in 1946.

While on tour in Paris in May, 1949, Leadbelly sought medical attention for numbness in his legs. He was diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, commonly known as Lou Gehrig's disease, a progressive, degenerative condition. He managed a few last performances before he was no longer able to play. He died in December, 1949, at the age of sixty-three at Bellevue Hospital in New York.

The Music

Leadbelly's style incorporated so many musical traditions that it is difficult to categorize. Though he could play many instruments, including piano, mandolin, harmonica, and accordion, he most often played a Stella twelve-string guitar. His early experiences with music were in his rural community, where he was exposed to old country, cowboy songs, murder ballads, dance tunes, work songs, spirituals, and folk songs.

"Pick a Bale of Cotton" and "Cotton Fields." Several of Leadbelly's songs were reminiscent of his early life on his parents' farm. He developed "Pick a Bale of Cotton" out of work songs that he learned as a child in the fields. Both in and out of prison, Leadbelly had a reputation for being able to pick large volumes of cotton in a day. In 1945, while in California, Leadbelly was filmed playing "Pick a Bale of Cotton," and it is one of a few moving images of him ever recorded. "Cotton Fields" is a song about his rural childhood in Texas and Louisiana. When the Highwaymen covered it in 1961, it reached the Top 40 on the Billboard charts.

"Midnight Special." Leadbelly spent a significant portion of his life in prison. Music not only helped him pass the time but it also gained him special status among the prisoners, guards, and wardens. The Midnight Special was an inmate nickname for a train that ran west from Houston and passed near Sugar Land Prison every night. Although Leadbelly was not the originator of "Midnight Special," he modified and popularized it. His version is a bleak commentary on prison life. The song was later recorded by Creedence Clearwater Revival.

Leadbelly was in his mid-forties when he met John Lomax in 1933 and already a seasoned vocalist and guitar player. His first recordings with Lomax demonstrated his varied repertoire: "The Western Cowboy," "Take a Whiff on Me," "Angola Blues," "Frankie and Albert," "You Can't Lose-a-Me, Cholly," "Ella Speed," and "Goodnight Irene." Although Leadbelly wrote some original songs, he often developed new arrangements of songs he learned from other musicians. Once he modified them, they often differed significantly from the originals.

"Goodnight Irene." This slow, mournful waltz was Leadbelly's adaptation of a song called "Irene, Goodnight" that he learned from his uncle, originally penned by African American songwriter Gussie L. Davis. Over the years Leadbelly continued to modify "Goodnight Irene," eventually adding six verses. The year after his death, the Weavers' cover titled "Goodnight, Irene" reached number one on the Billboard charts. It was subsequently recorded by Frank Sinatra; Ernest Tubb and Red Foley; Johnny Cash; Nat King Cole; Peter, Paul, and Mary; Tom Waits; and others.

In March, 1940, Leadbelly met Woody Guthrie and Pete Seeger at a concert to benefit California migrant workers. Seeger and Guthrie introduced Leadbelly to the radical political scene where he met Burl Ives, Josh White, Sonny Terry, and Brownie McGhee. Although Leadbelly largely shied away from involvement in politics, he wrote several civil rights songs.

"Bourgeois Blues." Race was a complicated issue for Leadbelly. Over the course of his career, many of Leadbelly's strongest supporters and allies were white men and women, and his music was often in greater demand among white audiences. Nevertheless, Leadbelly often experienced racism in his travels, frequently in response to seeing a black man traveling with white companions. He recorded "Bourgeois Blues," which recounted a trip to Washington, D.C., during which he could not find a hotel or a restaurant that would serve his party because he was in a mixed-race group. He wrote several other protest songs, including "Jim Crow Blues" and "The Scottsboro Boys."

Children's Songs. On several occasions, Leadbelly had the opportunity to perform for children, something he particularly enjoyed. Though he had a reputation for being rough and quick-tempered, he was more often gentle, and children loved him. In these appearances he played songs that accompanied old-fashioned children's games. In 1941 he recorded for Asch a collection of children's songs called Play Parties in Song and Dance, which included "Ha Ha Thisaway" and "Redbird."

Musical Legacy

Leadbelly's exhaustive recordings with the Lomaxes and Asch give a glimpse into Southern rural musical traditions that predate recorded music. While Leadbelly enjoyed some popularity in his lifetime, his importance to the American music tradition was only fully appreciated after his death. Although he performed and recorded tirelessly, he never made more than a meager living.

Leadbelly's influence touched musicians from Blind Lemon Jefferson, who became the first male blues star in 1926, to Kurt Kobain, who recorded Leadbelly's "Where Did You Sleep Last Night" in 1993. Guthrie and Seeger, both strongly influenced by Leadbelly, were committed to educating others about Leadbelly's greatness. They passed his influence along to the folk revivalists and rock musicians of the 1960's. Leadbelly has been covered by a wide variety of musicians, including Guthrie, Seeger, the Weavers, Cash, the Grateful Dead, Abba, Creedence Clearwater Revival, the Rolling Stones, Van Morrison, the Beach Boys, Led Zeppelin, Nirvana, Waits, Michelle Shocked, Tubb, Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Rod Stewart, the Doors, Karen Dalton, Ry Cooder, the White Stripes, and countless others. In 1988 Leadbelly was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Cara Lemon

Further Reading

Cowley, John H. "Don't Leave Me Here: Non-Commercial Blues, the Field Trips, 1924-1960." In Nothing but the Blues: The Music and the Musicians, edited by Lawrence Cohn. New York: Abbeville Press, 1993. This essay gives a chronological account of the relationship between Leadbelly and Lomax, starting in Angola Prison and continuing through their work together over the next several years. It contains performance and recording details.

Eder, Bruce. "Leadbelly." In All Music Guide to the Blues: The Definitive Guide to the Blues. 3d ed. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. This essay provides biographical and recording history with detailed descriptions of many of Leadbelly's albums.

Ledbetter, Huddie. Leadbelly: No Stranger to the Blues. Transcriptions by Harry Lewman. New York: Folkways Music, 1998. A great resource for musicians, this collection of sheet music includes transcriptions from Leadbelly's original recordings for the Library of Congress, ARC, Capitol Records, Musicraft, RCA Records, and Smithsonian Folkways Records.

_____. The Leadbelly Songbook: The Ballads, Blues, and Folksongs of Huddie Ledbetter. Edited by Moses Asch and Alan Lomax. New York: Oak, 1962. A collection of sheet music with writings by musicians and journalists who knew him, edited by one of his greatest collaborators.

Lomax, John A., Alan Lomax, and George Herzog. Negro Folk Songs as Sung by Leadbelly. New York: Macmillan, 1936. This rare book contains transcriptions of many of the songs recorded by John and Alan Lomax and is considered the first comprehensive biographical study of an American folk musician.

Wolfe, Charles, and Kip Lornell. The Life and Legend of Leadbelly. New York: Da Capo Press, 1992. An in-depth biographical study that covers Leadbelly's early life, his musical career, and his influence on modern American music.

See also: Cash, Johnny; Fogerty, John; Guthrie, Arlo; Guthrie, Woody; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Lomax, Alan; Morrison, Van; Odetta; Ritchie, Jean; Seeger, Pete; Sinatra, Frank; Terry, Sonny; Watson, Doc.

Peggy Lee

American popular music and musical-theater vocalist and songwriter

A jazz and pop artist, Lee developed a signature style of singing softly and intimately to capture listeners' attention.

Born: May 26, 1920; Jamestown, North Dakota
Died: January 21, 2002; Bel Air, California
Also known as: Norma Deloris Egstrom (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Rendezvous with Peggy Lee, 1952; Black Coffee, 1953; Selections from Irving Berlin's White Christmas, 1954 (with Bing Crosby and Danny Kaye); Songs in an Intimate Style, 1954; Songs from Pete Kelly's Blues, 1955; Songs from Walt Disney's Lady and the Tramp, 1955; Dream Street, 1957; The Man I Love, 1957; Sea Shells, 1958; Beauty and the Beat!, 1959 (with George Shearing); I Like Men!, 1959; Jump for Joy, 1959; Miss Wonderful, 1959; Things Are Swingin', 1959; All Aglow Again!, 1960; Christmas Carousel, 1960; Latin à la Lee!, 1960; Olé à la Lee!, 1960; Pretty Eyes, 1960; Blues Cross Country, 1961; If You Go, 1961; Sugar 'n' Spice, 1962; I'm a Woman, 1963; In Love Again, 1963; Mink Jazz, 1963; In the Name of Love, 1964; Pass Me By, 1965; That Was Then,

This Is Now!, 1965; Big Spender, 1966; Guitars à la Lee, 1966; Extra Special!, 1967; Somethin' Groovy!, 1967; Is That All There Is?, 1969; A Natural Woman, 1969; Bridge Over Troubled Water, 1970; Make It with You, 1970; Where Did They Go, 1971; Norma Deloris Egstrom from Jamestown, North Dakota, 1972; Let's Love, 1974; Mirrors, 1975; Close Enough for Love, 1979; You Can Depend On Me, 1981; Peggy Lee Sings with Benny Goodman, 1984 (with Benny Goodman); Miss Peggy Lee Sings the Blues, 1988; Jazz Collector Edition: Peggy Lee with the Dave Barbour Band, 1991; Love Held Lightly: Rare Songs by Harold Arlen, 1993; Moments Like This, 1993; Peggy Lee Sings for You, 1995.

MUSICAL THEATER (singer, librettist, and lyricist): Peg, 1983 (music by Paul Horner).

SINGLES (solo): "I Don't Know Enough About You," 1944; "It's a Good Day," 1946; "Golden Earrings," 1948; "Mañana (Is Soon Enough for Me)," 1948; "(Ghost) Riders in the Sky (A Cowboy Legend)," 1949; "Lover," 1952; "Johnny Guitar," 1954; "Let's Love," 1974.

SINGLES (with Benny Goodman): "Elmer's Tune," 1941; "I Got It Bad (and That Ain't Good)," 1941; Let's Do It," 1941; "Winter Weather," 1941; "Somebody Else Is Taking My Place," 1942; "Why Don't You Do Right?," 1942.

The Life

Peggy Lee was born Norma Deloris Egstrom in Jamestown, North Dakota, to Marvin and Selma Egstrom, who were of Scandinavian heritage. Her mother died when Lee was four, and her father married Min Schaumberg, with whom Lee had a bad relationship. Music proved her escape. Lee sang with local bands and on the KOVC and KRMC radio stations, and she was hired by WDAY in Fargo, where she was persuaded to change her name to Peggy Lee. In 1938 she left for Hollywood and Palm Springs. Frank Bering hired her to sing at the Buttery Room in the exclusive Ambassador West Hotel in Chicago. Here she frequented jazz clubs on Rush Street. Bandleader Benny Goodman discovered Lee at the Buttery Room, and he hired her as his lead singer. She recorded with the Benny Goodman Orchestra and toured with his band. She married guitarist David Barbour in March, 1943, and they divorced in 1951, after having a daughter, Nicki. Lee was called out of retirement by Capitol Records, contributing to the album New American Jazz (1943).

Lee became an award-winning singer, a songwriter, and a film actor, and she also was a painter, a sculptor, a poet, and a philanthropist. She was married again: to Brad Dexter from 1953 to 1954; to Dewey Martin from 1956 to 1957; and to Jack Del Rio in 1964.

The Music

Early Works. Lee began recording with the Benny Goodman Orchestra in 1941. She made her first radio broadcast singing "Daddy" on NBC. She appeared on Matinee at the Meadowbrook, a CBS radio show, singing "I Don't Want to Set the World on Fire." She recorded Duke Ellington's "I Got It Bad (and That Ain't Good)" and Cole Porter's "Let's Do It." Her song "Somebody Else Is Taking My Place" was her first record to reach number one. The Goodman Orchestra appeared in the film The Powers Girls (1941), in which Lee sang "The Lady Who Didn't Believe in Love." With Goodman's band, she sang at the Terrace Room of the Hotel New Yorker. Louis Armstrong, Count Basie, and Duke Ellington came to hear her, acknowledging that she had "soul." In 1942 she played the Paramount Theatre with Goodman and Frank Sinatra.

"Why Don't You Do Right?" Recorded with Columbia Records on July 27, 1942, "Why Don't You Do Right?" made Lee a star. Blues singer Lil Green had made an earlier version, and Goodman made a special arrangement for Lee, creating a hit record. Goodman used Barbour as guitarist. This was Lee and Goodman's greatest hit, premiering in January, 1943, and peaking at number four on the charts. Her first official Capitol album was Capitol Collectors Series, Vol. 1: The Early Years, recorded July 30, 1945, featuring "Waitin' for the Train to Come In," which reached the Top 10. This album showcased several songs written by Lee and Barbour, and it sold 750,000 copies. The Lee-Barbour team collaborated on "I Don't Know Enough About You," and Lee won Best Female Singer awards from Down Beat and Metronome in 1946. In May she appeared on Bing Crosby's NBC radio show Kraft Music Hall as his lead vocalist, which continued until 1954. She made her first appearance singing on television in 1946, on NBC's Hour Glass, a variety show.

"Mañana (Is Soon Enough for Me)." A Lee-Barbour composition, "Mañana (Is Soon Enough for Me)," sung by Lee, earned $750,000 in royalties in 1948, and it was filmed by Snader Telescriptions, a precursor to music videos. (Lee's Latin inspirations continued with Latin à la Lee, Olé à la Lee, and Guitars à la Lee.) She sang numerous signature film songs, such as "Bali Ha'i" from South Pacific (1949). Her version of "(Ghost) Riders in the Sky (A Cowboy Legend)" peaked at number two. In 1949 Billboard magazine voted Lee America's Number One Female Singer of the Year, and she was Capitol Records' Top Money-Making Female Vocalist.

"Lover." Lee moved to Decca to record "Lover," which she sang at Liederkranz Hall in New York on May 1, 1952. The song was written by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, and Lee worked out a new Latin arrangement, with bongos playing straight eights, congas playing six-eight, and the drummer playing a fast four. Lee won a film role in the remake of The Jazz Singer (1953), in which she sang "Lover" in her trademark white strapless gown. She collaborated with Victor Young in 1953, creating their greatest hit, "Johnny Guitar," inspired by Lee's love for Barbour. Black Coffee was the first Lee concept album offering a common mood. The recording speed was 33⅓ on a ten-inch disc holding eight songs instead of the former three-minute 78-rpm records. Black Coffee opened the door for popular singers to be heard on long-playing albums, formerly reserved for symphonic and operatic works.

Lady and the Tramp. With Sonny Burke, Lee coauthored the score and lyrics for Walt Disney's Lady and the Tramp (1955), and she did the singing voices of four characters—Darling (the mother), Si and Am (Siamese cats), and Peg (torch-singing chanteuse). Her joyous renditions endeared her to children and adults alike. In 1991 she successfully sued the Disney organization for a share of royalties from the sale of videos of this film, setting an important industry precedent in protecting performing artists' interests.

Pete Kelly's Blues. Lee's dramatic performance as an alcoholic singer in Pete Kelly's Blues (1955) earned her an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actress, an Audie Award, a Laurel Award, and the New York Film Critics Award. She returned to Capitol Records in 1957, recording The Man I Love with Frank Sinatra, who conducted the entire album of songs arranged by Nelson Riddle.

"Fever." In 1958 Lee modified the arrangement of "Fever" written by John Davenport and Eddie Cooley, adding verses referring to Romeo and Juliet and Captain Smith and Pocahontas. Her smoldering rendition became a trademark song. She played at the nightclubs Ciro's, Copacabana, and Basin Street East. Blues Cross Country, an album written with Quincy Jones, showcased "Kansas City." The Lee-Benny Carter album Mink Jazz debuted in 1963, and her Big Spender album was released in 1966. "Is That All There Is?"—written by Jerry Leiber and Mike Stoller, who had written "I'm a Woman" earlier—was prelude to Lee's A Natural Woman album, embracing rock.

Later Works. Norma Deloris Egstrom from Jamestown, North Dakota in 1972 was Lee's last album with Capitol Records, and it became a classic. The song "Let's Love" was written by Paul McCartney for Lee, and she recorded it with Atlantic Records in 1974. Peggy Lee—Live in London recorded her 1977 concert at the London Palladium at which she sang career signature songs for posterity. In 1983 she wrote the autobiographical Broadway musical Peg.

Musical Legacy

Lee is a legend for her stylistic singing in jazz, blues, pop, swing, and rock. She excelled as a composer of lyrics and musical scores, which influenced younger singers and actors, such as Madonna and McCartney. Lee received a Grammy Award for Best Female Vocalist for "Is That All There Is?" in 1969. Her efforts in obtaining royalties on video sales paved the way for other artists to benefit from their performances.

Barbara Bennett Peterson

Further Reading

Lee, Peggy. Miss Peggy Lee: An Autobiography. New York: Donald I. Fine, 1989. Lee tells the compelling story of her own life and of those who assisted her career.

Richmond, Peter. Fever: The Life and Music of Miss Peggy Lee. New York: Henry Holt, 2006. This excellent biography relies on personal interviews with many songwriters and performers who worked with Lee.

Strom, Robert. Miss Peggy Lee. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 2005. Chronologically arranged, this includes all important Lee works, reviews, and an appendix listing compact discs.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Basie, Count; Blackwell, Otis; Carter, Benny; Coleman, Cy; Davis, Sammy, Jr.; Ellington, Duke; Fitzgerald, Ella; Goodman, Benny; Jones, Quincy; Leiber, Jerry; Porter, Cole; Ronstadt, Linda; Sinatra, Frank; Stoller, Mike.

Michel Legrand

French film-score and musical-theater composer

Legrand was an important jazz artist in the 1950's and 1960's, but his film scores of the late 1960's and 1970's had a large impact on later composers and the development of the "hit song" movie.

Born: February 24, 1932; Paris, France

Principal works

FILM SCORES: Le Triporteur, 1957 (The Tricyclist); L'Amérique insolite, 1960 (America as Seen by a Frenchman); Une femme est une femme, 1961 (A Woman Is a Woman); Eva, 1962; Love Is a Ball, 1963; Bande à part, 1964 (The Outsiders); Les Parapluies de Cherbourg, 1964 (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg); La Vie de château, 1966 (A Matter of Resistance); Ice Station Zebra, 1968; Play Dirty, 1968; The Thomas Crown Affair, 1968; The Picasso Summer, 1969; Wuthering Heights, 1970; Brian's Song, 1971 (television); Summer of '42, 1971; Lady Sings the Blues, 1972; La Vielle Fille, 1972 (The Old Maid); Portnoy's Complaint, 1972; Cops and Robbers, 1973; A Doll's House, 1973; The Three Musketeers, 1973; Le Sauvage, 1975; Gable and Lombard, 1976; Gulliver's Travels, 1977; The Other Side of Midnight, 1977; Mon premier amour, 1978 (My First Love); Atlantic City, 1980; Les Uns et les autres, 1981 (Boléro); Best Friends, 1982; A Woman Called Golda, 1982 (television); Never Say Never Again, 1983; Yentl, 1983; Train d'enfer, 1985 (Hell Train); Switching Channels, 1988; Dingo, 1991; Prêt-à-Porter, 1994 (Ready to Wear); Les Enfants de Lumière, 1995; Les Misérables, 1995; Madeline, 1998; Cavalcade, 2005.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): Of Love Remembered, 1967 (libretto by Arnold Sundgaard); Amour, 2002 (libretto by Didier van Cauwelaert).

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: I Love Paris, 1954 (with Miles Davis); Legrand Jazz, 1958 (with Davis, Bill Evans and John Coltrane).

The Life

Michel Legrand (mih-SHEHL leh-GRAHND) was born in 1932. His father, Raymond Legrand, was a film composer who abandoned the family when Legrand was a boy. Legrand was a piano prodigy, and he studied at the Paris Conservatory with the famous pedagogue Nadia Boulanger. Legrand's first album, released in the United States in 1954 as I Love Paris, sold hundreds of thousands of copies. When Legrand arrived with Maurice Chevalier as the French singer's musical director on an American tour in 1955, Legrand discovered to his surprise that he was already a star.

In the late 1950's, Legrand scored many French films made by new wave directors such as François Reichenbach, Jean-Luc Godard, and Agnes Varda. Varda's husband, Jacques Demy, and Legrand were turned down by many producers before Mag Bodard agreed to produce their The Umbrellas of Cherbourg, in which all the dialogue is set to music. The film made Catherine Deneuve a star, and it won the Palme d'Or at Cannes in 1964.

Legrand's first big Hollywood success was The Thomas Crown Affair, which marked the beginning of a long collaboration with lyricists Alan and Marilyn Bergman. Legrand won his first Academy Award for Best Song for "The Windmills of Your Mind" from this film. He won two more, for Original Dramatic Score for Summer of '42 and for Original Song Score or Adaptation Score for Yentl. Legrand has received thirteen Academy Award nominations and five Grammy Award nominations.

Legrand never limited himself to one type of film. His scores run the gamut from the Cold War standoff Ice Station Zebra to an adaptation of Emily Brontë's Wuthering Heights, along with swashbuckling adventures such as The Three Musketeers, the biopic Gable and Lombard, a James Bond film Never Say Never Again, and director Robert Altman's Ready to Wear. Legrand ventured into television with his scores for Brian's Song and A Woman Called Golda. In 1989 he wrote and directed the film Cinq jours en juin (five days in June).

Legrand promoted his jazz and symphonic career at the same he worked as a film composer. He collaborated with such jazz greats as John Coltrane, Miles Davis, Stan Getz, Dizzy Gillespie, Stéphane Grappelli, and Sarah Vaughan. Legrand arranged and conducted most of Barbra Streisand's 1966 album Je m'appelle Barbra, and he collaborated with her on the film Yentl. His concert performances include appearances with many major American and European orchestras. Legrand's discography stretches across fifty years and many musical genres.

Legrand's first Broadway musical, Amour, ran for only seventeen performances in 2002, but it garnered five Tony Award nominations.

The Music

Legrand's musical style, heard in his recordings and in those he has arranged and produced for other performers, has a 1960's jazz sound. The composer never turned to rock and roll, and he never adopted some of the stylistic developments found in the Walt Disney films of the 1980's and 1990's or in the Broadway musicals of Stephen Sondheim, Jonathan Larson, and others. Legrand is noted for a spare use of thematic material, and in several films he used the music from one song for most of the music in the picture (for example, "The Summer Knows" from Summer of '42). He tends to let important bits of dialogue stand on their own without any underscoring. Although this may be a director's instructions rather than his own preference, it suggests that Legrand is more comfortable composing on a small scale rather than on a large scale.

Early Works. Legrand was only twenty-two when his album I Love Paris, which also featured Davis, became a best-selling instrumental recording. On a trip to the United States in 1958, he teamed up with Davis again, as well as Coltrane, Bill Evans, and other jazz greats for treatments of standards such as "'Round Midnight" and "Don't Get Around Much Anymore" on the album Legrand Jazz. Legrand composed the music for more than two dozen French-language films before his work on The Umbrellas of Cherbourg brought him to the attention of Hollywood.

The Umbrellas of Cherbourg. Demy and Legrand call their remarkable 1964 motion picture about the doomed love affair between a shopkeeper's daughter and an auto mechanic sent to fight in Algeria a musical, but it is more accurately described as an opera, since all the dialogue is sung in a light, parlando style reminiscent of the older opéra comique (French comic opera). Audiences had never seen auto mechanics singing before, and the somewhat predictable plot is redeemed by the striking final tableau as the now wealthy heroine drives away in the snow from her former boyfriend's gas station.

This is considered a masterpiece of late-twentieth century film music. The singsong vocal writing is conversational, with no grand ensembles or even duets, and it fits the petit bourgeois setting perfectly. Most of the time the vocal lines (which were dubbed for the actors) do not double lines in the orchestra, and there are few soaring moments aside from the song that became Legrand's first film hit,

Michel Legrand. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"I Will Wait for You." Legrand has aptly described the music as "a scoreful of hankies."

The Thomas Crown Affair. In his first big Hollywood success, Legrand won an Academy Award for the song "The Windmills of Your Mind," to lyrics by Alan and Marilyn Bergman, who became regular collaborators. They worked with Legrand on the songs for Yentl fifteen years later. Legrand's arching melody and minor inflections make this song well suited to the story of a doomed love affair between a wealthy bank thief and an insurance investigator. It famously is first heard as the hero is seen soaring overhead in a glider. The song is actually sung in the scene, which is not always the case with Legrand's later hit songs, where only the music is heard in the course of the film (for example, "The Hands of Time" in Brian's Song). Sting performed "The Windmills of Your Mind" in the 1999 remake of the motion picture.

Ice Station Zebra. Released the same year as The Thomas Crown Affair, this was one of Legrand's first big Hollywood blockbusters, a Cold War standoff in the Arctic starring Rock Hudson, Ernest Borgnine, and Patrick McGoohan. Legrand's music for the American submarine as it races to beat the Soviets to a downed spy satellite has a surging Victory at Sea (1952) sound, and his use of dissonant electronic techniques when the submarine is stuck under the ice conjures the weird, frozen underwater world. Legrand leaves most of the dramatic situations without underscoring, but his subtle scoring for the final Russian-American confrontation shows that he is able to do it effectively.

Brian's Song. This 1971 television motion picture tells the story of the friendship between Chicago Bears football players Brian Piccolo and Gayle Sayers as they confront racism toward Sayers and an aggressive cancer that sidelines and eventually kills Piccolo. The song "If the Hands of Time" became another hit for Legrand, although it is never sung in the film. The music for it, on the other hand, provides the majority of the underscoring. Monotony is avoided by Legrand's use of various instrumental settings, not just his trademark piano and light orchestral sound, and the use of some interesting thematic transformations not found in other films, where the hit song forms the basis for most of the score, such as Best Friends, with the underrated song "How Do You Keep the Music Playing?"

Lady Sings the Blues. This biopic about jazz singer Billie Holiday allowed Legrand to return to his jazz roots. Holiday's songs, such as "Strange Fruit," sung by Diana Ross, provide much of the music in the film. Legrand shows his light hand when it comes to underscoring dramatic scenes, though on occasion it seems that the director told him a scene needed music and the composer was not sure what to use (for example, the jazzy score when Holiday comes upon the lynching, or the almost ironic romantic strings in the scene where she is found shooting heroin and her lover leaves her). Although Holiday's life would seem to be ideal material for Legrand, ultimately his score for this film is not one of his most successful.

Yentl. Legrand's Academy Award-winning score for Streisand's 1983 musical setting of an Isaac Bashevis Singer story does not emphasize Jewish elements, aside from the funeral early in the film and the scene where Yentl cuts her hair and begins her transformation into a boy. Alert listeners can catch a suggestion of cantillation in the song that became one of Streisand's signature numbers, "Papa, Can You Hear Me?" On the whole, however, the songs are in Legrand's characteristic romantic style and would not have been out of place in any of his Hollywood films made in the previous two decades.

Musical Legacy

Legrand's many awards and nominations reflect the admiration his musical colleagues hold for him. In addition to his own scores and recordings Legrand has conducted, arranged, and produced recordings for many of his contemporaries over the past fifty years. Legrand's work in jazz enhanced his reputation, and he was an important influence on other jazz musicians in the 1950's and 1960's. However, the composer never developed a style beyond this early sound to attract younger musicians and audiences. Legrand is celebrated more for individual songs from his films than for the films' scores.

David E. Anderson

Further Reading

Cook, R. M., and Brian Norton. The Penguin Guide to Jazz Recordings. 8th ed. London: Penguin, 2006. Accessible reference for listings and reviews of Legrand's jazz recordings.

Marie, Michel. The French New Wave: An Artistic School. Translated by Richard Neupert. Oxford, England: Wiley-Blackwell, 2002. Although there is only a brief mention of Legrand, this book describes the world of early French cinema in which Legrand honed his craft.

Riggs, Thomas, ed. Contemporary Theatre, Film, and Television. Farmington Hills, Mich.: Gale, 1992. Detailed, standard biography of Legrand, with extensive list of works and discography.

Santopietro, Tom. The Importance of Being Barbra: The Brilliant, Tumultuous Career of Barbra Streisand. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2007. Detailed account of Legrand's collaborations with Streisand, including the making of Yentl.

See also: Bergman, Alan; Chevalier, Maurice; Davis, Miles; Grappelli, Stéphane; Horne, Lena; Mancini, Henry; Norman, Jessye; Vaughan, Sarah.

Lotte Lehmann

German opera singer

Renowned for her natural acting, impeccable diction, and warm, enthusiastic singing, Lehmann was one of the finest dramatic sopranos of the first half of the twentieth century.

Born: February 27, 1888; Perleberg, Germany
Died: August 26, 1976; Santa Barbara, California
Also known as: Charlotte Sophie Pauline Lehmann (full name)

Principal works

OPERATIC ROLES: Sophie in Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier, 1911; Elsa in Richard Wagner's Lohengrin, 1912; Ariadne in Strauss's Ariadne auf Naxos, 1913; The Composer in Strauss's Ariadne auf Naxos, 1913; Octavian in Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier, 1914; Eva in Wagner's Die Meistersinger, 1914; Sieglinde in Wagner's Die Walküre, 1914; Dyer's Wife in Strauss's Die Frau ohne Schatten, 1919; Marschallin in Richard Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier, 1924; Christine in Strauss's Intermezzo, 1924; Leonore in Ludwig van Beethoven's Fidelio, 1927; Elisabeth in Wagner's Tannhäuser, 1930; Arabella in Strauss's Arabella, 1933.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Anfang und Aufstieg, 1937 (Wings of Song, 1938); More Than Singing: The Interpretation of Songs, 1945; My Many Lives, 1948; Five Operas and Richard Strauss, 1964.

The Life

Charlotte Sophie Pauline "Lotte" Lehmann (LAHT-tee LAY-mahn) launched her operatic career in 1911 at the Hamburg Opera, achieving early success as Elsa in Wagner's Lohengrin (1848). In 1914 she sang the role of Sophie in Richard Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier (1911) at Drury Lane in London. Soon after, Hans Gregor, director of the Vienna Court Opera, offered her a contract. Her affiliation with Vienna would stretch from 1916 to 1938. In the Austrian capital, Lehmann attracted critical attention for her Manon, and she was picked by Strauss to sing the Composer in his revised Ariadne auf Naxos, a performance that caused a sensation in Vienna. She emerged as the first Straussian soprano, premiering the roles of the Dyer's Wife (Die Frau ohne Schatten, 1919) and Christine (Intermezzo, 1924), and singing in many productions of Arabella in the 1930's.

In 1924 Lehmann sang her first Marschallin, which became her most celebrated role. Her debut at New York's Metropolitan Opera in 1934 featured her widely admired portrayal of Wagner's Sieglinde (Die Walküre, 1870). Leaving behind the political turmoil in Austria in 1938, she immigrated to the United States and was affiliated with the Metropolitan Opera until 1945. Lehmann gave her final operatic performance in 1946 in San Francisco, reprising her beloved Marschallin. Her later years included frequent lieder recitals, and she taught voice at the Music Academy of the West in Santa Barbara, California, a summer music school she cofounded in 1947.

The Music

Lehmann's early career was dominated by lighter roles, but she gradually developed her voice to handle works requiring a large sound and great vocal endurance. Though best known for her interpretations of the works of Wagner and Strauss, Lehmann had in her repertoire songs from French operas such as Georges Bizet's Carmen (1875) and Jules Massenet's Manon (1884) as well as several of Giacomo Puccini's Italian operas. With its lyric quality, Lehmann's voice type prohibited her from singing heavy Wagnerian roles; she never gave full performances as Isolde or Brünnhilde. Lehmann was well-suited for Strauss, whose post-Elektra (1909) output often demands that the singer navigate lengthy passages in a carefree, conversational style. Throughout her career, Lehmann was a highly regarded recitalist whose sensitivity for textual nuances found a perfect medium in the genre of the lied.

Lotte Lehmann. (Library of Congress)

Sieglinde. Premiered during her fourth season at the Hamburg Opera on January 9, 1914, Lehmann's Sieglinde quickly became one of her most admired roles. The Wagnerian character was an ideal vehicle for her masterful acting, and her performances soon achieved great popularity in England. Lehmann later chose the role for two important debuts: her North American premiere at Chicago's Lyric Opera in 1930 and her first appearance on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera in New York. Critics and audiences ecstatically praised the pairing of Lehmann's Sieglinde and Lauritz Melchior's Siegmund as one of the best. Their 1935 recording of act 1 with Bruno Walter conducting the Vienna Philharmonic is legendary. The soprano's renditions of well-known passages such as Sieglinde's "Du bist der Lenz" and the love scene at the end of the act offer a uniquely feminine, impassioned, and unrestrained reading.

The Marschallin. A veritable pioneer of Strauss's most popular opera, Lehmann was the first to sing each of Der Rosenkavalier's three soprano roles. In Hamburg, she followed her breakthrough performance as Sophie in 1911 with a convincing Octavian in 1914. A decade later, on May 21, 1924, she premiered her definitive interpretation of the Marschallin at Covent Garden in London with Walter conducting. Commentators praised Lehmann's instinctual gift for communicating the many psychological layers of Hugo von Hofmannsthal's libretto. The 1933 studio recording featuring Elisabeth Schumann as Sophie, Richard Mayr as Ochs, and Robert Heger conducting the Vienna Philharmonic is widely cherished, despite several cuts needed to accommodate 78-rpm records. Especially memorable is Lehmann's performance of the Marschallin's act 1 monologue that dwells on the passage of time ("Da geht Er hin"). At once heartbreaking and dignified, Lehmann had a remarkable ability to convey the emotional substance of every line, setting the standard in the early recording era.

Leonore. Ludwig van Beethoven's Leonore was one of Lehmann's most challenging roles and one for which she received some of her highest praise. She premiered the part at the Salzburg Festival under the baton of Franz Schalk on March 26, 1927, the centenary of the composer's death. Lehmann quickly became a perennial favorite at the festival, and over the next ten years, she performed Leonore with many renowned conductors, including Walter and Arturo Toscanini. Her appearances with Toscanini in particular garnered tremendous critical acclaim; excerpts from a live performance in 1936 and a complete studio recording from 1944 capture Lehmann's insightful interpretation. Her vivid renditions of the famous act 1 aria "Komm, Hoffnung" are touchingly sung and admirably portray Leonore's struggle to liberate her imprisoned husband. The visceral emotion and heroism with which Lehmann sings the aria's final line, "I will not waver, strengthened by the duty of true conjugal love," perfectly embody Beethoven's "angel of freedom."

Musical Legacy

With long-term engagements in Germany, Austria, England, and the United States, Lehmann achieved true international fame in a career that spanned the 1910's to the 1940's. She is inextricably linked to five of Strauss's operas, and she played a central role in establishing his status as one of the most important opera composers of the twentieth century. Though she may be best known for her operatic roles, Lehmann's lieder recitals were highly respected for their warmth and meticulous attention to the text. In retirement, her master classes helped to advance the careers of innumerable singers, including Grace Bumbry and Marilyn Horne. The first to admit imperfections in her vocal technique, Lehmann always emphasized expression over mechanics in both her writing and teaching. She left an impressive recorded legacy that will inspire audiences and performers for generations.

Joseph E. Jones

Further Reading

Glass, Beaumont. Lotte Lehmann: A Life in Opera and Song. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Capra Press, 1988. The official centenary biography draws upon original manuscripts held at the Lehmann Archives in Santa Barbara. Includes photographs and discography.

Jefferson, Alan. Lotte Lehmann, 1888-1976: A Centenary Biography. London: Julia MacRae Books, 1988. Compiled from opera house archives in Vienna and Hamburg as well as from Lehmann's memoirs. Photographs, discography, performance history.

Kater, Michael H. Never Sang for Hitler: The Life and Times of Lotte Lehmann, 1888-1976. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2008. A thoroughly researched biography of wide scope. Revelations on Lehmann's relationship with the Nazis debunk the notion that she was a victim of the Third Reich.

Lehmann, Lotte. More than Singing: The Interpretation of Songs. Translated by Frances Holden. New York: Boosey & Hawkes, 1945. A guide for performing songs by Beethoven, Johannes Brahms, and Strauss, among others. A unique window into Lehmann's creative mind and warm personality.

See also: Melchior, Lauritz; Puccini, Giacomo; Strauss, Richard; Walter, Bruno.

Tom Lehrer

American pop singer/musical-theater composer and lyricist

Noted for his biting satire, sung to folk-song-inspired tunes, Lehrer was a "cult" figure whose songs commented on political and social movements of the 1960's.

Born: April 9, 1928; New York, New York

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (music and lyrics): Tomfoolery, 1980 (revue; adapted by Cameron Mackintosh and Robin Ray).

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Songs by Tom Lehrer, 1953; Song Satires, 1954; An Evening Wasted with Tom Lehrer, 1959; More of Tom Lehrer, 1959; Tom Lehrer Discovers Australia (and Vice Versa), 1960; That Was the Year That Was, 1965; The Electric Company, 1972 (songs from the children's television program); Songs and More Songs by Tom Lehrer, 1997; The Remains of Tom Lehrer, 2000.

The Life

Tom Lehrer (LEH-ruhr) was born to James Lehrer, a necktie manufacturer, and his wife, Anna Waller. As a child, Lehrer studied classical piano, but at his urging, his parents allowed him to switch to popular music, and by the age of eight he was writing his own songs. After graduating from the Loomis Chaffee School in Windsor, Connecticut, at the age of fourteen, he entered Harvard University, where he majored in mathematics. He graduated magna cum laude in 1947, when he was only eighteen. The following year he received his master's degree in mathematics at Harvard, and he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He then entered the doctoral program in mathematics at Harvard, and for the next sixteen years he worked intermittently on his doctorate.

While he was attending Harvard, he wrote several song parodies that were popular with Harvard students. Eventually, he paid for studio time to make his first album, Songs by Tom Lehrer, which he sold by mail order. The album quickly became a cult hit, selling 350,000 copies. Considering that no radio stations were willing to play his songs, those sales were outstanding.

During the summer of 1952, he was a researcher for the Atomic Energy Commission in Los Alamos, New Mexico, where the government was working on nuclear bombs. The following year he left Harvard to work at Baird-Atomic, a technical firm, where he was a theoretical physicist. When it appeared that he would be drafted, he enlisted in the Army, and from 1955 to 1957 he worked for the National Security Agency. After leaving the Army, he toured for three years, performing his songs throughout the United States and in England, Australia, and New Zealand. In 1960 he returned to Harvard to work on his doctorate and to teach, as a part-time instructor at Harvard Business School, where he taught calculus, and then at the Harvard School of Education, where he taught geometry. In 1965, with only his dissertation left to finish, he began teaching quantitative courses in political science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He also taught statistics at Wellesley College in 1965, just after he stopped his concert tours, and then he became a writer for That Was the Week That Was, a satiric television show on NBC modeled after a program in Britain. Always interested in politics, he campaigned for Democratic presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy and other liberal causes. Disillusioned by the country's conservative turn, Lehrer stopped writing political satire, since he believed that there was nothing comic about the conservative politicians who were running the country. According to Lehrer, "Satire was made obsolete when Henry Kissinger got the Nobel Peace Prize." He continued to write songs, however, but this time in the early 1970's for The Electric Company, a children's television show.

Tom Lehrer. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

After his years at Harvard, Lehrer taught mathematics, which he said he preferred to research. Beginning in 1972, he taught at the University of California at Santa Cruz, including a course in applying math to social science and, later, a course in musical comedy, one of his favorite subjects. He split his time between Santa Cruz and his home in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The Music

Lehrer's musical career began at Harvard, where he entertained friends and fellow students with the parodies he wrote of popular songs. Written in 1945, "Fight Fiercely, Harvard" is one of his earliest and best-known songs, and the Harvard Band still plays it at half-time at football games. Lehrer put his science background to work in a song he wrote that contains all the chemical elements, using the music of "The Major-General's Song" from William Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan's The Pirates of Penzance (1879). Lehrer also collaborated with some science colleagues to produce "Odes to a Physics Songbag," containing songs about the interplay between professor and students.

While Lehrer was at Harvard, he performed at a senior-year dinner with cartoonist Al Capp, who was so impressed that he hired Lehrer to work on a satiric television show Capp was doing in Boston. Unfortunately, the show lasted only four weeks. In 1950 Lehrer performed at a freshman smoker (a party suitable for men only) with Sally Rand, a famous striptease artist.

Early Works. Lehrer's first income from music was generated from the mail-order sales of his first album, Songs by Tom Lehrer, which cost him fifteen dollars to record at a studio. The four hundred copies he had printed were sold quickly, thanks in part to a laudatory review in the San Francisco Chronicle, and the album eventually sold more than 350,000 copies. Songs such as "Be Prepared" (about contraception) and "I Hold Your Hand in Mine" (featuring an amputated hand) were not suited for radio audiences, but collegians and other young people responded enthusiastically, leading Lehrer to issue in 1959 two albums featuring the same songs: More of Tom Lehrer (recorded in a studio) and An Evening Wasted with Tom Lehrer (recorded before a live audience).

The first of Lehrer's 109 concert performances (according to the British magazine The Spectator) on the road was at Hunter College in 1957, and his subsequent tours (including ones to England, Australia, and New Zealand) brought him more acclaim. However, Lehrer did not really enjoy touring; despite his success on the road, he never saw himself as a performer. Although he was a hit in coffeehouses and on college campuses, he was not played on radio because his humor was considered too risqué. As a result, he became known through word of mouth as students and left-leaning intellectuals shared his work with their contemporaries.

Satiric Lyrics. Any thorough discussion of political satire must allude to Lehrer's lyrics. He had no contemporary counterpart, and he became a unique commentator on the political and social changes of the 1960's. To describe President Lyndon Johnson's increasing involvement in the Vietnam War, he coined the word "escallatio," a clear reference to the word for oral sex. Such references made Lehrer's work too prurient for radio audiences, but combining such "blue" references with wit offered intelligent satire rather than mere ranting.

Religion was a frequent subject of Lehrer's satire. Some Catholics castigated "The Vatican Rag" as irreverent. Although Lehrer maintained that he was not making fun of Catholicism, only its rituals, and that the song was merely an extension of changes imposed by Vatican II that made the Church more "commercial," many Catholic critics were unswayed, and they still found the song objectionable.

Because he was not a mainstream performer whose songs received a great deal of air time, Lehrer remained an artist whose fame and relatively modest record sales reflected word-of-mouth praise and the enthusiasm of critics in avant-garde journals. His appeal has always been to educated, leftist intellectuals who rejoice in the skewering of authority and pretentiousness. As his fans have aged, they not only have passed their enthusiasms on to another generation but also have retained Lehrer's lyrics, which have remained amazingly appropriate to events and situations decades after they were written. A 1965 song about George Murphy, an actor turned politician, anticipated Ronald Reagan's success, and "Pollution" resonates with President Bill Clinton's statement that he tried marijuana cigarettes as a youth but did not inhale. "The Hunting Song," which contains a list, including two game wardens and seven hunters, of a hunter's daily kill, has been used in reference to Vice President Dick Cheney's hunting accident of 2006, when he shot a friend who was on a quail hunting trip with him.

After "Retirement." Although Lehrer stopped performing in public in 1965, he went on to perform in That Was the Week That Was, the NBC program satirizing politics that was modeled after a popular British television show. In 1965 his songs were recorded for Reprise Records, and in the 1970's he wrote some songs for The Electric Company, a children's television show.

Because his songs finally got some airtime on the radio, notably on Dr. Demento's popular nationwide radio program (which specializes in playing novelty songs), Lehrer had a spurt in popularity. That led to Tomfoolery, a touring show in England, which included many of his songs, modified and updated by Lehrer (although he did not appear in the show). Reprise Records reissued his recordings, which sold well.

Musical Legacy

Although Lehrer was not the only political satirist of his time, during the 1950's and the early 1960's he was alone in composing political songs and then performing them. For a generation hemmed in by conformity and a narrow definition of family values, his songs offered educated young people a welcome challenge to a world dominated by right-wing politics. In the 1960's, there was an upsurge of political optimism that was dampened by the assassinations of President John Kennedy, his brother Robert Kennedy, and Martin Luther King, Jr. Lehrer's decision to stop writing satire coincided with their deaths.

Lehrer's legacy is his persona as a talented, irreverent, creative, playful performer who delighted in offering his audiences another, darker but not bleak, perspective on their world. His music utilized his vast knowledge of musical genres, his scientific background, and his puckish enthusiasm for inventive rhymes and comic piano playing. Other satirists (notably comedian Lenny Bruce) tackled political issues, but they often resorted to scatological and obscene language. Lehrer was only risqué in his subject matter, not in his words.

Thomas L. Erskine

Further Reading

Bernstein, Jeremy. "Tom Lehrer: Having Fun." American Scholar 53 (Summer, 1984): 295-303. Written by a former student of Lehrer at Harvard, this interview contains a detailed description of Lehrer's personal life, and it is especially thorough on Lehrer's days at Harvard.

French, Sean. "Tom Lehrer." New Statesman 126 (June 20, 1997): 30. This essay discusses Lehrer songs, which depict a "hidden America," one full of corruption and hypocrisy. It includes lyrics for "My Home Town" and "I Got It from Agnes," with comments on both.

Holland, Bill. "Fifties Trailblazers Brought Social Satire to the Masses." Billboard 108 (September 28, 1996): 1-2. This article discusses Lehrer, Bruce, Mort Sahl, and Dick Gregory, satirists who were in touch with college students interested in jazz, rebelliousness, and modern art.

Lehrer, Tom. The Tom Lehrer Song Book. New York: Crown, 1954. The first twelve Lehrer songs with lyrics, piano accompaniment, and guitar chords. Introduction by cartoonist Capp, who provided Lehrer with significant help in his career.

_____. Tom Lehrer's Second Song Book. New York: Crown, 1968. Additional songs by Lehrer, including lyrics, piano accompaniment, and guitar chords.

_____. Too Many Songs by Tom Lehrer, with Not Enough Pictures by Ronald Searle. New York: Pantheon, 1981. Lyrics with piano and guitar accompaniment for thirty-four songs, some of them not previously published.

Taubert, Peter. "The Cynic Who Never Soured." The New York Times Magazine 147 (November 2, 1997): 50. High praise for Lehrer, especially for his innovative rhymes, such as "Viennese" and "peonies," "te deum and "ICBM."

See also: Cohen, Leonard; Seeger, Pete.

Jerry Leiber

American rock songwriter and producer

In collaboration with composer Mike Stoller, Leiber wrote some of the most successful rhythm-and-blues songs of the early 1950's, which crossed over to become rock and roll.

Born: April 25, 1933; Baltimore, Maryland
Also known as: Jerome Leiber (full name)

Principal works

SONGS (as producer; with Mike Stoller): "She Cried," 1962 (recorded by Jay and the Americans); "Tell Him," 1963 (recorded by the Exciters); "Chapel of Love," 1967 (recorded by the Dixie Cups); "Leader of the Pack," 1967 (recorded by Shangri-Las); "Stuck in the Middle with You," 1973 (recorded by Stealers Wheel).

SONG (as songwriter; with Phil Spector): "Spanish Harlem," 1961 (recorded by Ben E. King).

SONGS (as songwriter; with Mike Stoller): "Real Ugly Woman," 1950 (recorded by Jimmy Witherspoon); "Hard Time," 1952 (recorded by Charles Brown); "Hound Dog," 1952 (recorded by Willie Mae "Big Mama" Thornton; rerecorded by Elvis Presley, 1956); "K. C. Lovin'," 1952 (recorded by Little Willie Littlefield; rerecorded by Wilbert Harrison, 1959); "Black Denim Trousers and Motorcycle Boots," 1955 (recorded by the Cheers); "Riot in Cell Block #9," 1955 (recorded by the Robins); "Smokey Joe's Café," 1955 (recorded by the Robins); "Love Me," 1956 (recorded by Presley); "Ruby Baby," 1956 (recorded by the Drifters); "Jailhouse Rock," 1957 (recorded by Presley); "Loving You," 1957 (recorded by Presley); "Lucky Lips," 1957 (recorded by Ruth Brown; rerecorded by Cliff Richards and the Shadows, 1963); "Searchin'," 1957 (recorded by the Coasters); "Young Blood," 1957 (recorded by the Coasters); "Don't," 1958 (recorded by Presley); "Yakety Yak," 1958 (recorded by the Coasters); "Charlie Brown," 1959 (recorded by the Coasters); "Love Potion No. 9," 1959 (recorded by the Clovers); "Poison Ivy," 1959 (recorded by the Coasters); "Stand by Me," 1961 (written with and recorded by Ben E. King); "I'm a Woman," 1962 (recorded by Christine Kittrell; rerecorded by Peggy Lee, 1963); "On Broadway," 1963 (written with Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil; recorded by the Drifters); "Is That All There Is?," 1969 (recorded by Lee).

The Life

Jerome Leiber (LEE-bur) was born in Baltimore to a Polish immigrant; his father died when Leiber was five years old. His mother took the insurance money of one hundred dollars and opened a candy store, which later became a grocery store, in a Baltimore Jewish neighborhood that was near a black neighborhood. While making food deliveries, Leiber became interested in the music he heard being played in the black homes.

In 1945 he moved with his mother to California. At sixteen he started working at a music store, and he began writing rhythm-and-blues lyrics while searching for a composer. A drummer friend at high school told him about a boy his age who was studying composition, and his partnership with Mike Stoller began in the summer of 1950. By the following year they were writing songs for the Robins, who would later become the Coasters. In 1952, while still in their teens, Leiber and Stoller produced Big Mama Thornton's recording of their song "Hound Dog," which hit number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts, years before Elvis Presley heard it. Leiber was primarily the lyricist of the team, though he sometimes contributed melodic ideas to composer Stoller. They founded Spark Records in 1953, but they dissolved it three years later to return to the creative side of recording. When Presley discovered the duo's music, he wanted them to write for his films. In the decades that followed, Leiber and his partner produced enduring hits, many of which were memorialized in a 1995 Broadway revue, Smokey Joe's Café.

The Music

By his mid-twenties, Leiber and his partner Stoller were among the most successful songwriters in the record industry, their names appearing on more than forty million records. Rhythm-and-blues fans, they started their careers working with African American groups, primarily the Robins (Coasters), Thornton, and Wilbert Harrison. Leiber, who was considered an excellent blues singer himself, could have preceded Presley in bringing the rhythm-and-blues sound to white audiences, but he considered a white blues singer "inauthentic," and he refused to record.

"Hound Dog." This song helped Leiber and Stoller cross over into rock and roll (after it became a big rhythm-and-blues hit), and it also made them producers. Invited by Johnny Otis, one of the few white drummers in rhythm and blues, to write material for Thornton, Leiber and Stoller contributed "Hound Dog." When they attended the recording session, on August 13, 1952, they realized that the studio musicians were not getting the beat. The songwriters told Otis, who was running the control board for the session, that he would have to take over the drumming. This meant that Leiber and Stoller had to man the board, giving them total control over the sound, and thus Leiber became a record producer. Released in April of 1953, Thornton's recording hit number one in Cash Box, the rhythm and blues' equivalent of Billboard. Some suggested that Presley's 1956 version (in which Leiber had no part) toned down the suggestive lyrics, but mainly the alterations are adaptations of point of view, from a female singer to a male, a change that had occurred in lounge acts from which Presley first heard the song. Freddie Bell and the Bellboys recorded the altered version a year before Presley did.

"Yakety Yak." A great deal of Leiber's success as a lyricist involves his comedic sense, which reflects not only his wit but the satiric flair of the first rock-and-roll generation that bought his songs. From parodies of B-film Western plots in "Along Came Jones" and of detective films in "Searchin,'" to the high-school class clowning of "Charlie Brown," Leiber developed the ability to tell a comic story in a three-minute song. One of the best of this type was "Yakety Yak." Lyrically, it was simple: Each verse begins with a barrage of parental nagging, which ends with the teenager's dismissive answer, "Yakety yak," followed by the parental voice admonishing, "Don't talk back!" This introduction of a dramatic element into popular song, while familiar to rhythm-and-blues listeners as a version of the call-and-response pattern of jazz music, was new to rock and roll.

"On Broadway." This Leiber-Stoller hit from 1963 demonstrates how easily the duo collaborated with other composers: The version which hit number nine on the Billboard Hot 100 was a Leiber-Stoller rewrite of a Barry Mann-Cynthia Weil song. Lyrically, it shows Leiber's talent for matching verbal to musical rhythms. The melody, which Stoller had simplifed, contained a musical phrase repeated three times, the third time with three additional notes. The irregular line length presents a hardship for the lyricist, who depends upon rhymes appearing at equal intervals. Leiber solved this problem by placing the third rhyme in its expected position and allowing the extra notes to echo the title, "On Broadway."

Musical Legacy

Leiber worked behind the scenes with some of the greatest names in popular music for more than half a century. Even production styles outside the Leiber-Stoller formula—such as Phil Spector's "wall of sound"—owed something to the duo's pioneer work in the recording studio. Spector, in fact, learned production by assisting Leiber and Stoller, and it was Spector who played guitar on the 1963 Drifters recording of "On Broadway."

In 1985 Leiber was inducted into the Songwriters Hall of Fame and in 1987 into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Leiber and Stoller's role in influencing the direction of Peggy Lee's music in the late 1960's was commemorated in the 2005 compilation Peggy Lee Sings Leiber and Stoller. In 1995 the Broadway musical Smokey Joe's Café celebrated their hit songs.

John R. Holmes

Further Reading

Brown, Mick. Tearing Down the Wall of Sound: The Rise and Fall of Phil Spector. London: Bloomsbury, 2007. This meticulously documented biography of Spector refers to Leiber throughout, and the fourth chapter is especially useful.

Green, Joey. How They Met: Famous Lovers, Partners, Competitors, and Other Legendary Duos. New York: Black Dog & Leventhal, 2003. This book describes the history-making meeting of Leiber and Stoller.

Leiber, Jerry. Selected Lyrics, 1951-1981. New York: Aperture, 1980. A generous selection of Leiber's best lyrics, with an introduction by the author.

Leiber, Jerry, and Bob Spitz. A Hound Dog's Life: Gospel, Half-Truths, Rumors, and Outrageous Lies. London: HarperCollins, 1997. An autobiography of the lyricist, told in a lighthearted style.

Palmer, Robert. Baby, That Was Rock and Roll: The Legendary Leiber and Stoller. New York: Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, 1978. A biography of the legendary songwriting team. Includes photographs.

See also: Blackwell, Otis; Diamond, Neil; Lee, Peggy; Otis, Johnny; Presley, Elvis; Spector, Phil; Stoller, Mike.

John Lennon

English rock/pop singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Lennon's work with the Beatles in the 1960's defined the music, politics, and styles of a generation. His solo career in the 1970's further secured his legacy as one of the most widely known, respected, and beloved performers in contemporary popular music.

Born: October 9, 1940; Liverpool, England
Died: December 8, 1980; New York, New York

Also known as: John Winston Lennon (full name); John Ono Lennon
Member of: Beatles; Plastic Ono Band

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Imagine, 1971; Mind Games, 1973; Walls and Bridges, 1974; Rock 'n' Roll, 1975; Double Fantasy, 1980 (with Yoko Ono); Milk and Honey, 1984 (with Ono); Menlove Avenue, 1986.

ALBUMS (with the Beatles; songs written primarily with Paul McCartney): Introducing the Beatles, 1963; Please Please Me, 1963; With the Beatles, 1963; Beatles for Sale, 1964; Beatles '65, 1964; The Beatles Story, 1964; A Hard Day's Night, 1964; Meet the Beatles, 1964; Something New, 1964; Beatles VI, 1965; Help!, 1965; Rubber Soul, 1965; Revolver, 1966; Yesterday . . . and Today, 1966; Magical Mystery Tour, 1967; Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, 1967; The Beatles, 1968 (The White Album); Abbey Road, 1969; Yellow Submarine, 1969; Hey Jude, 1970; Let It Be, 1970.

ALBUMS (with the Plastic Ono Band): Unfinished Music No. 1: Two Virgins, 1968; Unfinished Music No. 2: Life with the Lions, 1969; Wedding Album, 1969; John Lennon/Plastic Ono Band, 1970; Yoko Ono/Plastic Ono Band, 1970; Some Time in New York City, 1972.

The Life

John Winston Lennon was born in Liverpool, England, in 1940. His father, a merchant seaman, was not present at his birth and would not be a significant presence in his formative years. His mother Julia entertained other male companions in her husband's absence, and eventually her sister, Mary "Mimi" Smith, petitioned for custody of John, citing the unwholesome nature of his mother's household. Smith was granted guardianship of John, whom she raised for most of his childhood. John attended public schools in Liverpool. An independent and often rebellious thinker, he received only average marks despite a keen, acerbic wit. However, he did display a strong aptitude for the arts; Lennon was well known in grammar school for his talents in writing and drawing and was granted admission to Liverpool College of Art in 1958.

Lennon did not complete a college degree, instead turning his focus to playing rock and roll. In the late 1950's he befriended Paul McCartney and George Harrison, and with them he formed two groups—the Quarrymen, then the Silver Beetles. They played gigs around Liverpool, including several at a club called the Cavern. In the early 1960's the band also performed extensively in Hamburg, Germany, before returning to Liverpool. Lennon blossomed as a guitarist and front man, and in 1963 the group—their name now amended and shortened to the Beatles—signed a major recording contract with Parlophone Records.

Between 1963 and 1970 the Beatles enjoyed unprecedented commercial success throughout the world, garnering a string of hit singles, million-selling albums, and sold-out tours. However, Lennon's 1969 marriage to Japanese artist Yoko Ono drove a wedge between Lennon and the other Beatles, and by the early 1970's he had formally split with the group and embarked on a successful solo career. He and Ono campaigned actively against U.S. involvement in Vietnam. Although Lennon lived in New York, the U.S. government initially threatened to deport him but later granted him a permanent visa. After releasing several albums, Lennon left the music business in 1975, opting to spend more time with Ono and their infant son Sean.

In 1980 John returned to music, releasing Double Fantasy, an album of songs he penned and performed with Ono. Although Lennon had made a number of media appearances shortly after the album's release, his much-celebrated comeback was short-lived. Lennon was shot and killed by a mentally ill fan, Mark David Chapman, in front of his New York apartment on December 8, 1980.

The Music

Although his Aunt Mimi tried to steer her young trustee toward a more conventional career, Lennon began listening to rock and roll and playing guitar while still in his early teens. His mother Julia, who had bought him his first instrument, died in a tragic accident when John was sixteen, an event he later claimed to be the most traumatic in his life. This contributed significantly to the bond he was forming at the time with schoolmate McCartney, whose mother had also died suddenly around the same time. In the mid-1950's the boys began practicing, then writing, then performing songs together. In 1958 guitarist George Harrison joined the group, which by 1960 had become one of the most popular in Liverpool, attracting fans to the Cavern Club with its raw, energetic live performances. After sharpening its chops in the bars of Hamburg, Germany, it returned to England in late 1962 as a polished and impressive act. After adding seasoned drummer Ringo Starr (born Richard Starkey), the Beatles signed with England's Parlophone Records and embarked on one of the most commercially successful careers ever enjoyed by any pop group.

John Lennon. (AP/Wide World Photos)

"Love Me Do." Although Lennon and the Beatles released singles in England previous to this bluesy Lennon-McCartney composition, "Love Me Do" is generally recognized as the Beatles' first major chart success. The single reached number one on the British pop charts and merited the band an opportunity to record the British album With the Beatles. The song features Lennon on vocals and harmonica—an instrument he played on other early Beatles hits "Please Please Me" and "She Loves You."

"I Want to Hold Your Hand." The Beatles' breakthrough U.S. hit, "I Want to Hold Your Hand," another Lennon-McCartney collaboration, featured the snappy tempo and soaring harmonies that came to define the band's sound and captivate music fans throughout the world. The Beatles performed the song on CBS's Ed Sullivan Show in February, 1964, and it proved to be one of the most highly rated and widely discussed musical performances ever to air on television. The single became a number-one Billboard pop hit and ushered in the British invasion, which dominated the American musical charts for much of the decade.

"A Day in the Life." The concluding track on 1967's revolutionary album Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, "A Day in the Life" is the first Lennon composition to display the change in stylistic direction that was to define much of his subsequent music. Boldly experimental in both lyrical and musical execution, the song combines dreamlike lyrics with orchestral instrumentation and groundbreaking studio effects. It is heralded by many as the first significant work of the psychedelic era of pop music, a genre heavily influenced by the hallucinogenic drug culture of the Vietnam era. Its chorus, "I'd love to turn you on," became a mantra for the counterculture.

"Revolution." One of the most politically overt Beatles's songs, "Revolution" was released in two versions. A swinging tongue-in-cheek version appears on the 1968 album The Beatles, while a harder and more sonically abrasive alternate take appears on the B-side of the multimillion-selling single "Hey Jude." Memorable for its uncompromising irony, the song lampoons the overzealous, unfocused hippie idealism that had come to plague the protest movement by the late 1960's. Lennon's sardonic lyrics imply that although reinventing social and political norms is something to be encouraged, it comes with a level of commitment few are able to give it.

Plastic Ono Band. Perhaps Lennon's most critically acclaimed solo album, John Lennon/Plastic Ono Band contains a group of songs so personal and thematically unified that the album sounds more like an unabashed emotional autobiography than it does a mere pop record. Songs such as "Mother," "My Mummy's Dead," and "I Found Out" explore Lennon's intimate, often achingly personal feelings about family, friends, and the consequences of worldwide fame. Lennon is joined on the album by a distinctive lineup that includes Beatles drummer Starr and bassist Klaus Voorman, a friend of Lennon from his days as a struggling club musician in Hamburg.

Double Fantasy. Subtitled A Heart Play, 1980's Double Fantasy was the last album Lennon completed. Unique in structure, it features alternating companion tracks from Lennon and Ono. Although Lennon's cuts such as "Woman" and "(Just Like) Starting Over" are more fully realized and listener friendly, Ono's songs provide a provocative and often complementary counterpoint. Perhaps nowhere else in Lennon's extensive body of solo work do listeners find more ebullient and accessible tracks than "Beautiful Boy," a tribute to his son Sean that McCartney later called one of his favorite Lennon songs.

Musical Legacy

Although Lennon generally spurned awards, he was given many impressive accolades during his lifetime. Perhaps his most noteworthy was Member of the British Empire (MBE), which was granted to him by Queen Elizabeth II in 1965 in recognition of the distinction with which the Beatles had represented Great Britain as cultural ambassadors. Lennon later returned his MBE as a gesture of protest against Britain's support of U.S. policy during the Vietnam War, a gesture that made headlines and brought attention to his antiwar efforts. On the musical front, Lennon received several Grammy Awards and an Academy Award for his recordings.

Commercially, few musical artists have achieved an amount of success that even remotely compares to that of the Beatles. They are estimated to be the largest-selling recording group of all time, with several hundred million copies of their albums and singles sold. The Beatles chalked up an unparalleled string of number-one hits throughout the world between 1963 and 1971, and their records continue to sell briskly. They have more gold and platinum releases than any other recording artists in history, due largely to Lennon's poignant lyrics and mastery of melody and song structure.

Perhaps only Elvis Presley rivals Lennon and the Beatles in terms of influence on modern popular music. Few contemporary musicians can deny their debt to Lennon, who was among the first pop songwriters to regard the popular song as an effective vehicle for serious emotional and political expression. The singer-songwriter genre that dominated pop music during the 1970's is the direct offshoot of the sparse, emotionally bare approach to songwriting that characterized Lennon's early post-Beatles solo work. Echoes of Lennon's unabashed directness and haunting sense of melody can be heard in the music of performers as distinctive as James Taylor, Joni Mitchell, Prince, and Kurt Cobain.

A unique tribute to Lennon is Strawberry Fields, a monument located in New York City's Central Park. In recognition of Lennon's indelible mark on music and culture, former New York City mayor Ed Koch worked extensively with Ono on this touching memorial to Lennon, one of the few musical artists to be commemorated in such a moving way.

Gregory D. Horn

Further Reading

Brown, Peter, and Steven Gaines. The Love You Make: An Insider's Story of the Beatles. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1983. One of several biographies of the Beatles, this is both well written and thorough. Written by a member of the band's personal staff, it emphasizes the relationship between Lennon and Beatles manager Brian Epstein.

Clayton, Marie, and Gareth Thomas. John Lennon: Unseen Archives. Bath, England: Parragon, 2003. Features scores of candid photographs and unique documents significant to Lennon's musical career. Also contains a lively companion text.

Jackson, John Wyse. We All Want to Change the World: The Life of John Lennon. London: Haus, 2005. A biography of Lennon targeted primarily at young adult readers. Noted for its engaging text, appealing design, and ample selection of photographs.

Lennon, John, Paul McCartney, George Harrison, and Ringo Starr. The Beatles Anthology. San Francisco: Chronicle Books, 2000. Filled with unique photographs and other never-before-seen treasures, this book was released as the companion to the popular Beatles Anthology compact disc collection. The text is a compilation of material taken exclusively from interviews with Lennon and his Beatle bandmates.

Rosen, Robert. Nowhere Man: The Final Days of John Lennon. Oakland, Calif.: Quick American Archives, 2000. A perceptive biography culled from interviews conducted with those who knew Lennon during his sparsely documented final years with Ono, between 1976 and 1980.

Sheff, David. All We Are Saying: The Last Major Interview with John Lennon and Yoko Ono. New York: St. Martin's Griffin, 2000. Includes the largely unexpurgated text of the extensive interviews Lennon and wife Ono granted to Playboy magazine shortly before his death.

See also: Everly, Don and Phil; Harrison, George; McCartney, Sir Paul; Martin, Sir George; Mitchell, Joni; Prince; Spector, Phil; Taylor, James; Waters, Roger; Webb, Jimmy.

Gustav Leonhardt

Dutch organist, harpsichordist, and conductor

Leonhardt used his impeccable scholarship and his energetic and passionate performance style to preserve and to promote early music.

Born: May 30, 1928; Graveland, Netherlands
Also known as: Gustav Maria Leonhardt (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as organist/harpsichordist): Blockflötenmusik auf originalinstrumenten um 1700, 1970 (Recorder Music with Original Instruments, 1700); J. S. Bach: Complete Harpsichord Concerti, Vol. 3, 1972; English Suites, 1973; Französische suiten, 1975; Die brandenburgische Konzerte, 1976; Hotteterre: Complete Wind Music, 1977; Domenico Scarlatti: Fourteen Sonatas for Harpsichord, 1986; Bach: Das wohltemperierte Klavier I, 1989 (The Well-Tempered Clavier I); Bach: Das wohltemperierte Klavier II, 1989 (The Well-Tempered Clavier II); J. S. Bach: Complete Harpsichord Concerti, Vol. 2, 1989; J. S. Bach: Goldberg Variations, 1990; J. S. Bach: Mass in B Minor, 1990; J. S. Bach: Matthäuspassion, 1990 (Passion According to St. Matthew); J. S. Bach: Organ Works, 1990; J. S. Bach: Six Sonatas for Violin and Harpsichord, 1990; Lully/Molière: Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Campra: L'Europe galante, 1990; Bach: Das Kantatenwerk, Vol. 44, 1991 (Complete Cantatas, Vol. 44); Forqueray: Suite in D; Suite in G, 1992; Henry Purcell: Odes to Queen Mary, 1992; J. S. Bach: Secular Cantatas, 1992; Jean-Philippe Rameau: Les Paladins, 1992; F. Valls: Missa Scala Aretina; H. I. F. Biber: Requiem, 1993; George Böhm: Keyboard Works, 1993; J. S. Bach: Art of Fugue, 1993; Jean Philippe Rameau: Pièces de clavecin en concert, 1993; North German Organ Music, 1993; C. P. E. Bach: Symphonies, 1994 (by Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach); Organ Music in France and Southern Netherlands, 1994; Bach: Harpsichord Concertos, 1995; Biber: Requiem; Steffani: Stabat Mater, 1995; Henry Purcell: Anthems and Hymns, 1995; The Arp Schnittger Organ at Saint Jacobi, Hamburg, 1996; J. S. Bach: Cantatas Nos. 27, 34, and 41, 1996; Historic Organs of Austria, 1997; J. S. Bach and C. P. E. Bach: Harpsichord Concertos in D Minor, 1997; J. S. Bach: Great Organ Works, 1997; Mozart: Sonatas for Piano and Violin, 1997; Telemann: Paris Quartets, 1-12, 1997 (by Georg Philipp Telemann); Veritas Portraits, 1997; Weckman, Froberger: Toccatas and Suites, 1997 (by Johann Jacob Froberger and Matthias Weckman); J. S. Bach: Italian Concerto; Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue; Toccatas and Suites, 1998; The Organ in the Renaissance and Baroque: Alpenländer, 1998; Bach: Inventions and Sinfonias, 1999; Bach: The Brandenburg Concertos, Vol. 1, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, 1999; Bach: The Brandenburg Concertos, Vol. 2, Nos. 4, 5, and 6, 1999; J. S. Bach: The French Suites, 1999; Bach: Harpsichord Concertos, 2000; L'Orgue Dom Bedos de Saint-Croix de Bordeaux, 2001; J. S. Bach: Organ Works, 2002; Toccate, canzoni, fantasia, capriccio, recercar, 2003 (by Girolamo Frescobaldi and Louis Couperin); William Byrd: Harpsichord Music, 2005.

The Life

Gustav Maria Leonhardt (GOO-stahv mah-REE-ah LEH-on-hahrt) was born into a Dutch-Austrian family, between World War I and World War II. His childhood home was in Graveland, a country town with stately homes near Hilversum, in the province of North Holland, The Netherlands. His parents were accomplished amateur musicians with eclectic tastes in music, and they encouraged the study of music in their children. Gustav and his sister, Trudelies, were given lessons on the piano and on a harpsichord that their parents had bought for occasions when they played the chamber music of Johann Sebastian Bach and George Frideric Handel. During wartime when school was cancelled, having a harpsichord at home provided the young Leonhardt with an opportunity to learn to regulate and to play the instrument.

Leonhardt's father was on the governing board of the Concertgebouw Orchestra and of the De Nederlandse Bachvereniging (The Netherlands Bach Society) known for its performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion (1727) it has given since 1922 in the Grote Kerk, Naarden. These performances under the direction of Anthon van der Horst were uncut, and he conducted from a facsimile of the original manuscript. Two organ continuo players were used, one of whom played from a thoroughbass rather than a written realization. This first experience of historical performing practice greatly impressed Leonhardt. A prolific composer and a prodigious keyboard player, van der Horst was Leonhardt's theory teacher in this early period. Recordings of Wanda Landowska played a part in shaping Leonhardt's interest in the harpsichord and his search for an expressive style of playing it.

Leonhardt spent his student years in Basel, Switzerland, and Vienna, Austria. He then returned to Holland, where he lived for many years in an eighteenth century canal house in Amsterdam. In 1979 he published a book about the house called Het huis Bartolotti en zijn bewoners. He married Marie, a violinist who was a native of Lausanne, Switzerland, and they had three daughters.

Leonhardt was on the faculty of the Sweelinck Conservatorium in Amsterdam, and he served as organist, first of the Waalse Kerk and later the Nieuwe Kerk in Amsterdam. During his twenty-five-year tenure at the Waalse Kerk, Leonhardt collaborated in the restoration of an important organ from the 1680's that had been rebuilt in 1734 by Christian Müller. Leonhard plays or conducts one hundred concerts per year, and he actively records new repertoire.

The Music

Having studied cello and piano in his early youth and theory with van der Horst in his teenage years, Leonhardt began his organ, harpsichord, and thoroughbass studies at the age of nineteen with Eduard Müller at the Schola Cantorum in Basel, where he received his soloist's diploma magna cum laude. Subsequently, he studied musicology and made his harpsichord debut in Vienna. Between 1952 and 1955, he was professor of harpsichord at the Vienna Music Academy, and he began a long teaching career at the Sweelinck Conservatorium in Amsterdam in 1954.

Recordings. Leonhardt began his extensive and influential recording career in the 1950's, both as a soloist playing the music of Bach and with the Leonhardt Baroque Ensemble, a group that included his wife, Marie Leonhardt, and Eduard Melkus on violins, Alice Hoffelner on viola, Nikolaus Harnoncourt on cello, and Michel Piguet on oboe. In 1954 the group recorded two Bach cantatas with Alfred Deller, for whom Leonhardt had great admiration. During his student years in Basel, Leonhardt had an English friend who owned a recording of Henry Purcell songs performed by Deller. Leonhardt was impressed by Deller's expressive singing and text delivery, and during a 1948 visit to London, the two friends boldly called to invite Deller to tea. Leonhardt subsequently asked Deller to make several radio recordings in Holland, and in 1954 a commercial recording was made in Vienna. The Leonhardt Consort, starting in 1955, went on to produce numerous concerts and recordings. The Library of Congress catalog lists more than 120 individual commercial recordings made by Leonhardt, not only as harpsichord, clavichord, fortepiano, and organ soloist but also as conductor. Many of these recordings were made on antique instruments found in churches, in museums, and in private collections.

In chamber music performances and recordings, Leonhardt collaborated with virtually every early music performer of note, as well as many who were considered to be more in the mainstream. His close colleagues in Holland and Belgium included Anner Bijlsma, Elly Ameling, Max van Egmond, René Jacobs, Frans Bruggen, and the brothers Wieland, Sigiswald, and Barthold Kuijken.

Film Roles. Leonhardt played the role of Bach in Jean-Marie Straub's film "The Chronicle of Anna Magdalena Bach" (1967), directed by Danièle Huillet. The film won a British Film Institute Award, and it included an appearance by the noted cellist and conductor Harnoncourt in the role of the Prince of Anhalt-Cöthen.

Bach Recordings. Between 1971 and 1990, the Leonhardt Consort, working jointly with Harnoncourt's Concentus Musicus, recorded all the Bach cantatas. This massive undertaking successfully created the first substantial representation of the historically informed performance movement that influenced playing styles in the last thirty years of the twentieth century. Leonhardt also recorded all the major keyboard works of Bach as well as his own harpsichord transcriptions of some of Bach's compositions for strings. He published a study of Bach's The Art of Fugue (1751) and numerous musicological articles, and he was the coeditor of a publication of the complete keyboard music of Jan Pieterszoon Sweelinck and of Girolamo Frescobaldi.

Organist and Teacher. Leonhardt had a parallel career as an organist, serving two Amsterdam churches, the Waalse Kerk and the Niewe Kerk, and he made several recordings on historical European organs. While his primary instrument for recitals was the harpsichord, he also had command of the organ and the fortepiano. In later years, he explored the claviorganum, a keyboard instrument combining organ pipes and plucked strings.

Students from all over the world traveled to Holland to study with Leonhardt, sometimes waiting several years. He attracted students who went on to have noteworthy performing careers, among them Bob van Asperen, Alan Curtis, Richard Egger, John Gibbons, Ketil Haugsand, Christopher Hogwood, Ton Koopman, Martin Pearlman, Frederick Renz, Skip Sempe, Menno van Delft, and Glenn Wilson. Others traveled for short-term study, and dozens of young musicians played for him in master classes at conservatories, universities, and festivals in many countries. His insights and suggestions were valued by singers and instrumentalists of all types, because of his ability to clarify the nature of a piece of music and to encourage a player to focus on and project that nature in a performance. His use of such expressive words as spicy, luscious, wild, pathetic, and bliss in teaching belied his reserved personal manner. He was in steady demand as an adjudicator for harpsichord competitions.

An impressive polyglot, Leonhardt taught and lectured with ease in several languages. He was Horatio Appleton Lamb Professor of Music at Harvard University in 1969-1970, an honor that was also conferred on Béla Bartók in 1943. Leohardt was awarded honorary doctorates by several universities, including Harvard in 1991. In 1980 Leonhardt and Harnoncourt were jointly awarded the Erasmus Prize by the Praemium Erasmianum Foundation in recognition of their contributions to European culture, notably the recordings of the cantatas of Bach.

In later years, Leonhardt was in increasing demand as a conductor, both in Europe and abroad. Aside from the Leonhardt Consort, among the groups he conducted were the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, La Petite Bande, and The Netherlands Bach Society. He conducted the inaugural concerts of the New York Collegium in 1998.

Musical Legacy

Leonhardt championed the cause of the music he played and respected rather than his own virtuosity. As a teacher and a conductor, he encouraged in his fellow musicians a sense of humility and curiosity about European music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. He taught them how to breathe life into a repertoire that was, at the time, being performed in an abstract and largely intellectual manner. His particular insight into the concept of Baroque music as speech and the role of rhetoric and articulation in creating that speech set his playing of the harpsichord apart from that of his contemporaries.

Never a flamboyant showman, Leonhardt was sometimes criticized for his cool and detached manner. He was a passionate performer: serious, witty, expressive, and thoroughly engaged with the music he played. He could clarify for a listener the contrapuntal and harmonic dimensions of a composer's creation, revealing its underlying structure as well as its elegant surface layers. His improvised ornamentation sounded spontaneous, and his keyboard playing had extraordinary rhythmic suppleness and variety.

As one of the founders of the historically informed performance movement of the twentieth century, Leonhardt helped to release music from the grip of overly dry scholarly interpretation and of Romantic self-indulgence, and his performances of lesser known works vastly increased the repertoire. Through collaborations with builders of early keyboard instruments, he also contributed to the revival of historical principles in instrument building.

Leonhardt's keen musicologist's mind and his lack of ostentation were as much a part of shaping his legacy as were his stunning abilities as a keyboard player. He taught respect for a composer's musical statement within its cultural context. Rather than assume that a puzzling element of a piece was a weakness, a mistake, or a copyist's error, he studied writings of the period, searching for the musical truth. Thus he discovered levels of subtlety, nuance, and design that won admiration for the music. His ability to use articulation and the concept of Baroque music as speech set a new standard in harpsichord playing throughout the world. However, his influence reached far beyond solo keyboard playing—his work with colleagues and students brought historically informed performance into the respected mainstream of classical music.

Frances Conover Fitch

Further Reading

Cohen, Joel, and Herb Snitzer. "Gustav Leonhardt." In Reprise: The Extraordinary Revival of Early Music. Boston: Little, Brown, 1985. Cohen addresses the contrast between Leonhardt's personal manner and music performance in a lucid and penetrating description. He argues that Leonhardt is "a Diogenes holding up the lantern of musical truth."

Leonhardt, Gustav. "In Praise of Flemish Virginals of the Seventeenth Century." In Keyboard Instruments: Studies in Keyboard Organology, 1500-1800, edited by Edwin M. Ripin. New York: Dover, 1977. An eloquent, concise, and thorough study and description of Flemish virginals and muselars, the particularities of their timbre, their construction, and their suitability to their repertoire.

_____. "Johann Jakob Froberger and His Music." L'Organo 6 (1968): 15-38. A study of Froberger that elucidates wider trends and influences in European music of the seventeenth century.

Schott, Howard. "'Ein Volkommener Music-Meister': Gustav Leonhardt in Profile." The Musical Times 133, no. 1796 (1992). A longtime acquaintance of Leonhardt talks about details of his life and musical legacy.

See also: Harnoncourt, Nikolaus; Hogwood, Christopher; Landowska, Wanda.

Alan Jay Lerner

American musical-theater lyricist and librettist

Lerner was a lyricist of extraordinary wit and intellect whose work memorably captured the romantic moods of his day.

Born: August 31, 1918; New York, New York
Died: June 14, 1986; New York, New York

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (lyrics and libretto): Life of the Party, 1942 (music by Frederick Loewe); What's Up?, 1943 (libretto with Arthur Pierson; music by Loewe); The Day Before Spring, 1945 (music by Loewe); Brigadoon, 1947 (music by Loewe); Love Life, 1948 (music by Kurt Weill); Paint Your Wagon, 1951 (music by Loewe); My Fair Lady, 1956 (music by Loewe); Camelot, 1960 (music by Loewe); On a Clear Day You Can See Forever, 1965 (music by Burton Lane); Coco, 1969 (music by André Previn); Gigi, 1973 (music by Loewe); 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, 1976 (music by Leonard Bernstein); Carmelina, 1979 (libretto with Joseph Stein; music by Lane); Lerner and Loewe: A Very Special Evening, 1979 (music by Loewe); Dance a Little Closer, 1983 (music by Charles Strouse).

The Life

Alan Jay Lerner came from an affluent family. Shortly before Lerner's birth, his father, Joseph, abandoned his dental practice to join his brothers in expanding a small blouse factory into a national chain of profitable clothing stores. Lerner attended private schools, including the Bedales School in Hampshire, England, and Choate, in Connecticut, from which he graduated.

Lerner was one of three sons. Richard was his older brother, Robert his younger. Lerner was clearly a favorite. Lerner's father frequently sent a chauffeur to fetch the boy after school, take him to dinner and then to the fights at Madison Square Garden or to a Broadway musical. Lerner's father especially liked musical comedy, and father and son attended most of the musicals that played on Broadway.

Lerner graduated from Harvard University in 1939. An active member of Harvard's Hasty Pudding Club, which presented an original musical every year, Lerner was a major contributor to the club's So Proudly We Hail in 1938 and to Fair Enough in 1939. In 1938 he collaborated with Stanley Miller on The Little Dog Laughed.

Alan Jay Lerner (right) with Frederick Loewe. (AP/Wide World Photos)

A member of Harvard's boxing team, Lerner sustained injuries during a match that destroyed the retina in his left eye and damaged his other retina. Precluded from military service because of his limited vision, Lerner worked as an elevator operator at the National Broadcasting Company's offices in New York. During this period, he wrote scripts for Your Hit Parade and other radio shows.

Lerner's career as a lyricist began in earnest in 1942 when he met Frederick Loewe, a transplanted Viennese composer who had been collaborating with Earle T. Crooker, with whom he staged Salute to Spring that had a promising run with the St. Louis Municipal Opera in 1937. With World War II raging, Crooker joined the U.S. Navy, leaving Loewe in need of another collaborator. Then Lerner and Loewe met by chance in New York City, and they began a collaboration that enriched musical theater. When Lerner succumbed to lung cancer in 1986, he was working on the lyrics for The Phantom of the Opera (1986).

The Music

Early Collaborations with Loewe. The first Lerner and Loewe collaboration was on a musical adaptation of Barry Connor's The Patsy (1925) presented by a Detroit acting company as Life of the Party. It ran for nine weeks, hardly a record but surely a promising beginning, sufficient to encourage the pair to work together again on Arthur Pierson's book, What's Up? This musical made it to Broadway in 1943, playing for a respectable run of sixty-three performances. The next Lerner and Loewe collaboration, The Day Before Spring, opened in November, 1945, for a five-month run of 167 performances, eliciting favorable reviews.

Brigadoon. Despite these productions, Lerner and Loewe did not have a runaway hit until 1947 when their Brigadoon, a romantic fantasy set in the Scottish Highlands, had an initial Broadway run of 581 performances over an eighteen-month period. Drama critic George Nathan accused Lerner of plagiarizing the play's basic story from Friedrich Wilhelm Gerstacker's Germelshausen (1902). The accusation was not substantiated, but it disturbed Lerner, who did acknowledge his debt to James M. Barrie in creating the play's general atmosphere.

Lerner wrote more than a half-dozen memorable songs for Brigadoon, notable among them "I'll Go Home with Bonnie Jean," "Come to Me, Bend to Me," "Almost Like Being in Love," "The Heather on the Hill," and "There But for You Go I." Brigadoon established Lerner and Loewe as dominant forces in American musical theater.

An American in Paris. In 1948 Lerner collaborated with Kurt Weill on Love Life, and in 1951 he worked with Burton Lane on a film version of Royal Wedding (1951), which paved the way for him to write the screenplay for the Arthur Freed production of An American in Paris (1951), which Vincente Minnelli directed. This screenplay brought Lerner his first Academy Award. Freed and Minnelli later collaborated with Lerner and Loewe on the film adaptation of Colette's Gigi, which received an astounding nine Academy Award nominations and won in every category.

Paint Your Wagon. Lerner and Loewe's musical about the California Gold Rush, Paint Your Wagon, had a respectable if not spectacular run in 1951. Lerner wrote the film version of the musical in 1968, by which time he and Loewe had temporarily ceased their collaboration. Lerner's screenplay, however, was so different from the Broadway version that a reunion was brought about in the hope that Loewe might help to rescue Lerner's script. Although Loewe declined to work on this rewrite (a task ultimately undertaken by André Previn), Lerner's reunion with Loewe in his Palm Springs home led the two to resume their fruitful collaboration.

My Fair Lady. Clearly the most successful Lerner and Loewe production was their adaptation in 1956 of George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion (1913) retitled My Fair Lady. This play created two of Lerner and Loewe's most memorable characters, Professor Henry Higgins and Eliza Doolittle, a Cockney flower vendor. It broke all attendance records on Broadway and in London, and it was made into a film in 1964, winning eight Academy Awards in that year.

Camelot. Lerner, who at Harvard was a friend of his fellow undergraduate John Fitzgerald Kennedy (who would become president of the United States), collaborated with Loewe in 1960 on the Arthurian romance Camelot. Following the Kennedy assassination in 1963, this fantasy gained special meaning after Jacqueline Kennedy, the wife of President Kennedy who had just been assassinated, compared the brief Kennedy Administration to Camelot. Although the strain of producing Camelot temporarily caused a breach in Lerner's collaboration with Loewe, this rupture was eventually healed, and the two collaborated on later productions, among them the Academy Award-winning Gigi.

Musical Legacy

The names Lerner and Loewe are inextricably joined in the annals of musical drama. These two giants of musical comedy set the standard for others writing for the musical stage. Lerner brought to the collaboration a remarkable fluency with words and a bristling intellect that provided meaningful depth to his beguiling lyrics.

R. Baird Shuman

Further Reading

Citron, Stephen. The Wordsmiths: Oscar Hammerstein II and Alan Jay Lerner. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995. An illuminating comparative study of two of the giants of twentieth century musical theater.

Jablonski, Edward. Alan Jay Lerner: A Biography. New York: Henry Holt, 1996. A useful study by the biographer of Irving Berlin, George Gershwin, and other modern musicians. This chronicles Lerner's dependence on amphetamines and his eight marriages.

Lees, Gene. Inventing Champagne: The Worlds of Lerner and Loewe. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1990. A detailed account about the long and significant collaboration of the lyricist and composer whose musicals dominated Broadway for more than four decades.

_____. The Musical Worlds of Lerner and Loewe. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2005. Highly recommended account of the Lerner and Loewe collaboration, with a look at how their personal lives affected their work.

Shapiro, Doris. We Danced All Night: My Life Behind the Scenes with Alan Jay Lerner. New York: William Morrow, 1990. A personal assistant to and trusted confidant of Lerner for fourteen years, Shapiro tells about some of the stage luminaries (such as Rex Harrison and Julie Andrews) who worked with Lerner, and she reveals details about his struggles with drugs.

See also: Andrews, Dame Julie; Bernstein, Leonard; Chevalier, Maurice; Kern, Jerome; Loewe, Frederick; Prado, Pérez; Previn, Sir André; Weill, Kurt.

James Levine

American classical conductor

Levine transformed New York City's Metropolitan Opera Orchestra into a world-class ensemble and revitalized the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Born: June 23, 1943; Cincinnati, Ohio
Also known as: James Lawrence Levine (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as conductor): Levine/Mahler: Symphonies No. 1 and 6, 1977; Puccini: La Bohème, 1977; Levine Conducts Mahler: Symphony No. 7, 1980; Puccini: Tosca, 1980; Mozart: Symphonies 40 and 41, 1981; Mozart: The Magic Flute for Children, 1982; Beethoven: The Five Piano Concertos, 1983; Berlioz: Les Troyens, 1983; Brahms: The German Requiem, 1983; Verdi: Don Carlos, 1983; Rossini: L'Italiana in Algeri, 1986; Donizetti: Lucia di Lammermoor, 1988; Mozart: Symphonies No. 35 and 36, 1989; Strauss: Concerto for Oboe in D Major, 1989; Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique, 1990; Mozart: Le Nozze di Figaro, 1990; Donizetti: L'Elisir d'Amore, 1991; Wagner: Siegfried Idyll, 1991; Giuseppe Verdi: La Traviata, 1993; Verdi: Otello, 1995; Verdi: Rigoletto, 1993; Brahms: The Four Symphonies, 1997; George Gershwin: Porgy and Bess, 1998; Opera—Rossini: Barber of Seville (Highlights), 2000; Strauss: Ariadne auf Naxos, 2002; Wagner: Der Ring des Nibelungen, 2002.

The Life

James Lawrence Levine (leh-VIN) was born to Helen Goldstein, an actress, and Lawrence (Larry), who played the violin and was a dance-band leader. At age three, Levine could pick out themes on the piano; he began formal lessons in 1947. He gave his first piano recital at age six. When he was ten, Levine was soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony, performing Felix Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto No. 2 (1837). While developing his passion for the piano, Levine was introduced to opera at the Cincinnati Zoo Opera. The family attended performances of the Metropolitan Opera while it was on tour in Bloomington, Indiana, and it traveled regularly to New York City to attend performances. At age thirteen, Levine studied with pianist Rudolf Serkin at the summer Marlboro (Vermont) Music School and Festival. When a chorus master was needed for a student production of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Così fan tutte (1790), Levine took the job. He later said this was the beginning of his career in opera.

The following summer Levine studied under pianist Rosina Lhevinne at the Aspen (Colorado) Festival and School of Music. He was a student for three summers, and in 1960 he became a performer as well. In 1961, at Aspen, he conducted his first opera, Georges Bizet's The Pearl Fishers (1863). That fall he moved to New York City and enrolled at the Juilliard School, studying conducting with Jean Morel and piano with Lhevinne. He was a finalist in the American Conductors Project, at which one of the judges was George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra. Szell invited Levine to become an apprentice in Cleveland, teaching him conducting. Following his apprenticeship, Levine became assistant conductor of the orchestra. In addition, Levine founded, managed, and conducted a student orchestra at the Cleveland Institute of Music, and he taught at Aspen. In 1970 he left the Cleveland Symphony to guest-conduct orchestras in the United States and Europe. From 1973 to 1993, he directed the Ravinia Festival, the summer home of the Chicago Symphony.

The Music

Levine regularly conducted at the Salzburg Festival (1975-1993) in Austria and at the Bayreuth

Festival (1982-1998) in Germany. He has guest-conducted world-class symphony orchestras, including the Vienna and Berlin Philharmonic Orchestras. Noted for his minimalist conducting style, Levine quietly establishes a rapport with his musicians. He continues to appear as a piano soloist and piano accompanist in recitals of singers, including Christa Ludwig and Jessye Norman. Levine also performs in chamber music groups and has recorded more than two hundred works, symphonic and operatic. His principal accomplishments are with the Metropolitan Opera and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Metropolitan Opera. In June, 1971, Levine made his Metropolitan Opera debut, conducting Giacomo Puccini's Tosca (1900). Levine had a guest-conducting contract for the 1972-1973 season, and the next season was named principal conductor. He then transformed an orchestra that had suffered neglect under a series of guest conductors into a world-class ensemble, setting the standard for how opera is to be performed. His style both supports and challenges the musicians. Through rehearsing and working on technique and details of the score, Levine patiently and enthusiastically molded the musicians into an ensemble capable of playing for the concert hall. Consequently, the orchestra has performed around the world. His artistic vigilance reflects that of Arturo Toscanini, whom Levine greatly admires. Toscanini's dictum of playing the piece as the composer intended has been neglected by some, but not by Levine. Levine also revitalized the orchestra by including new works, some by Mozart and others by contemporary composers. In 1975 Levine was appointed music director and, in 1986, was named the first artistic director of the Metropolitan Opera.

Levine also earned the respect of singers. Baritone Sherrill Milnes remarked on Levine's keen insight into a singer's range and potential vocal problems. His concise, direct suggestions have helped singers, and many, among them soprano Kathleen Battle, paid tribute to him in a televised gala on April 27, 1996, celebrating Levine's twenty-five years at the Metropolitan Opera. Levine is also noted for developing American singers, including Neil Shicoff and Dawn Upshaw. At the Metropolitan Opera, Levine has conducted more than 2,260 performances of eighty operas.

Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 2002 Seiji Ozawa, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stepped down after twenty-nine years. Levine had appeared as guest conductor with the orchestra since April, 1972, and he had won the respect of Boston's audiences. Following a worldwide search, in 2001 Levine was named music director designate. Once he had completed contract obligations as chief conductor of the Munich Philharmonic (1999-2004) in Germany and had stepped down from artistic director at the Metropolitan Opera to music director, Levine assumed the directorship in Boston in the fall of 2004. He had already been working on programming, selecting new orchestra members, and doing what he excels in: transforming an orchestra. The Boston Symphony provided Levine the opportunity to commission and present new works, something he had not been able to do often at the Metropolitan Opera, and Boston audiences have been receptive to works by such contemporary composers as Elliott Carter and John Harbison. In addition, Levine has programmed concert versions of opera, including Giuseppe Verdi's Don Carlos (1867) and Richard Wagner's Der Fliegende Hollander (1843). As music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Levine conducts at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Massachusetts. At the Tanglewood Music Center, he coaches student conductors and works with the student orchestra. Levine, who finds working with students "incredibly rewarding," includes student musicians in Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, and he conducts student players and singers in staged operas.

Musical Legacy

Levine re-created the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, and he found and nurtured such world-class singers as Battle and bass-baritone James Morris. Levine developed the orchestra to perform at more than a background level for the singers, and it eventually merited concert performances at Carnegie Hall and at European venues. He created the Live from the Met television opera series in 1977 for the Public Broadcasting System, bringing opera to a wider audience. In Boston, with his attention to detail and innovative programming, he renewed a legendary orchestra. He continues the legacy of Serge Koussevitzky by commissioning new works to be introduced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. With his artistic vigilance and appetite for challenge, Levine has encouraged superior performances from musicians and singers.

Marcia B. Dinneen

Further Reading

Dobkin, Matt. "Hey Baby, It's Jimmy." New York (January 16, 2006): 51. This article discusses Levine's conducting style and his rapport with musicians.

Driscoll, Paul F. "Double Duty." Opera News (July, 2005): 12-17. This article describes Levine's challenge of revitalizing the Boston Symphony Orchestra while continuing his deep involvement at the Metropolitan Opera.

Hart, Philip. Conductors: A New Generation. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1979. This book includes a lengthy chapter on Levine and a critique of some of his recordings.

Marsh, Robert C. Dialogues and Discoveries: James Levine, His Life and His Music. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1998. This resource includes a series of interviews with Levine, along with a discography covering Levine's recordings from 1979 to 1998 and a list of operas Levine conducted at the Metropolitan.

Tommasini, Anthony. "The Boston and the Met." The New York Times, May 30, 2004. This story provides details on the history of Levine's career and describes his enthusiasm for new challenges in Boston.

See also: Carter, Elliott; Cliburn, Van; Norman, Jessye; Puccini, Giacomo; Serkin, Rudolf; Szell, George; Toscanini, Arturo.

Jerry Lee Lewis

American rock singer, songwriter, and pianist

Lewis is celebrated for his energetic piano playing and fiery rock persona.

Born: September 29, 1935; Ferriday, Louisiana
Also known as: John Aaron Lewis (full name); the Killer

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Jerry Lee Lewis, 1957; Jerry Lee's Greatest, 1961; Country Songs for City Folks, 1965; The Return of Rock, 1965; Breathless, 1967; Soul My Way, 1967; Got You on My Mind, 1968; In Demand, 1968; Unlimited, 1968; All Country, 1969; Another Place, Another Time, 1969; Country Music Hall of Fame, Vol. 1, 1969; Country Music Hall of Fame, Vol. 2, 1969; She Still Comes Around (To Love What's Left of Me), 1969; Old Tyme Country Music, 1970; She Even Woke Me Up to Say Goodbye, 1970; Taste of Country, 1970; Together, 1970 (with Linda Gail Lewis); The Golden Cream of the Country, 1971; Roots, 1971; There Must Be More to Love Than This, 1971; Touching Home, 1971; The Killer Rocks On, 1972; Rockin', 1972; Southern Roots Radio Special, 1972; Who's Gonna Play This Old Piano, 1972; Would You Take Another Chance on Me, 1972; I-40 Country, 1973; The Session, 1973; Sometimes a Memory Ain't Enough, 1973; Southern Roots, 1974; Sunstroke, 1974 (with Carl Perkins); Boogie Woogie Country Man, 1975; I'm a Rocker, 1975; Odd Man In, 1975; Country Class, 1976; Country Memories, 1977; In Loving Memories, 1978; Jerry Lee Lewis Keeps on Rockin', 1978; Jerry Lee Lewis, 1979; When Two Worlds Collide, 1980; My Fingers Do the Talkin', 1983; I Am What I Am, 1984; I'm on Fire, 1985; Young Blood, 1995; Last Man Standing, 2006.

The Life

Jerry Lee Lewis was born on September 29, 1935, to parents Elmo and Mamie Lewis in the small town of Ferriday, Louisiana. Lewis grew up in a conservative religious family, and he would find himself at constant odds with religious figures and religion throughout most of his life.

When the household acquired a piano, Lewis learned to play by ear. In addition to playing gospel songs, he spent hours listening to boogie-woogie, country, swing, and blues music on the radio. Lewis played along with all of the styles, showing an exceptional instrument proficiency and an aptitude for improvisation. At night, Lewis sneaked off to the African American blues club Haney's Big House to hear and to perform with other local musicians with whom he would have been forbidden to interact in the conservative separatist Southern culture of the 1940's.

Jerry Lee Lewis. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Lewis later enrolled in the Southwestern Assemblies of God University located in Waxahachie, Texas. His stay at the school was short-lived: He was expelled for playing a boogie-woogie version of a religious song during a church service. To earn money, Lewis returned to the Ferriday area of Natchez, Mississippi. There he played local nightclubs and sold vacuum cleaners door-to-door. This arrangement was cut short when the ambitious Lewis decided to pursue a career in music.

When Lewis moved to Nashville, Tennessee, in 1955, he was turned away from the Grand Ole Opry and rejected by numerous record executives, who said that the piano did not sell records. Upon hearing the music being produced by Sun Records, he packed up his belongings and headed west to the label's home, Memphis, Tennessee.

When Lewis arrived in Memphis, Elvis Presley's contract had been sold to RCA Records, and Sun Records was looking for its next superstar. Because the owner of Sun Records, Sam Phillips, was on vacation, Lewis auditioned for producer Jack Clement. The audition was a success, and Lewis soon signed a contract with Sun Records. With his piano-pounding fireworks and bad-boy attitude, Lewis was a perfect addition to Sun Records' stable of artists. He began playing piano for such rock-country legends as Billy Lee Riley and Carl Perkins.

By 1957 Lewis's success with "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and "Great Balls of Fire" had made him popular with fans and in the country-rock business. His success, however, stalled. While he was on a European tour in 1957, the British press got word that Lewis had married his thirteen-year-old cousin, Myra Brown, and the bad publicity forced him to cancel the rest of the tour. Lewis returned to the United States, and he was shunned by most of the music industry. Deejays refused to play his records, and the budding superstar found himself forced to play nightclubs in order to make financial ends meet.

The 1960's and early 1970's were difficult for Lewis. He was released from his Sun Records deal in 1963, and he suffered a devastating personal blow when his son Steve drowned in a swimming pool. By 1970, Lewis's marriage was over, and he divorced Myra. Tragedy struck again in 1973 when Lewis's eldest son, Jerry Lee, died in a car crash. During this period, Lewis became addicted to alcohol and illegal drugs.

The 1980's proved to be good years for Lewis. In 1980 Lewis entered the Betty Ford Center, successfully completing a drug rehabilitation program. Lewis was later inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and he was portrayed in the successful biographical film Great Balls of Fire (1989). Now divorced from his sixth wife, Lewis tours and records.

The Music

Lewis grew up in a gospel music culture, and he performed with his cousins Mickey Gilley and Jimmy Swaggart at church events. In addition to his religious music exposure, Lewis was highly influenced by the radio performances of Hank Williams, Jimmie Rodgers, and Al Johnson.

"Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On." The subject matter and the title of this song were so suggestive that it almost was not released. Phillips was not sure the song would work, but Lewis pressured him to release it. Fortunately for Lewis, the gamble paid off, and Lewis's first hit single reached number three on the pop charts, number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts, and number one on the country charts. The song incorporates Lewis's signature manic piano playing complete with numerous glissandos, rhythm-and-blues bass line, and a brisk rock tempo. The piece is important because it showed the world that the guitar did not have a monopoly on rock.

"Great Balls of Fire." When this song was released on Sun Records, it reached number two on the pop charts, number three on the rhythm-and-blues charts, and number one on the country charts. The song even enjoyed international success, reaching the number-one spot in England. "Great Balls of Fire" embodies many of Lewis's attributes. Rocking piano licks, driving bass and drum rhythms, and controversial subject matter all added to the success of the 1957 single. The song's title references biblical scripture about the apostles speaking in tongues, a controversial subject matter.

"What's Made Milwaukee Famous (Has Made a Loser Out of Me)." Written by Glenn Sutton, this song took Lewis to the Top 10 on country-music charts with his version released in 1968. The song illustrates Lewis's slow acceptance back into the music world after his controversial marriage to Brown. Country-music fans welcomed him back to the spotlight faster than rock fans and the general public.

Set in a slow tempo, the song has a distinct blend of several musical styles: blues, gospel, and country. The instrumentation is traditional country, including fiddle, piano, bass, drums, steel and electric guitar, and it features female backing vocals. The song was recorded by other musicians, such as Lynn Anderson, Rod Stewart, Del McCoury Band, and Flogging Molly.

Musical Legacy

Lewis's pounding piano work, rebellious attitude, and outspoken demeanor secured him a place among the most influential rock musicians. Although fast piano playing and upbeat numbers anchor Lewis's music in the rock genre, he features other styles, such as gospel and country. His slurred Southern singing voice resonates with country and rock fans. In 2005 the Library of Congress chose "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" for permanent preservation in the National Recording Registry.

Delbert S. Bowers

Further Reading

Escott, Colin, and Martin Hawkins. Good Rockin' Tonight: Sun Records and the Birth of Rock 'n' Roll. New York: St. Martin's Griffin, 1992. A unique look at the pioneering record label, its artists, and its staff, as well as discovery of such greats as Lewis, Presley, Perkins, Johnny Cash, and Roy Orbison.

Friedlander, Paul, and Peter Miller. Rock and Roll: A Social History. New York: Westview Press, 2006. Covering the first thirty years of rock and its celebrities, this book looks at the rock music scene and traces the roots of rock.

Gordon, Robert, and Peter Guralnick. It Came From Memphis. New York: Atria Books, 2001. A look at the lesser known Memphis music artists who were important in shaping rock-and-roll history, with historical information on the city.

Lewis, Linda G. The Devil, Me, and Jerry Lee. New York: Longstreet Press, 1998. Lewis's rise to stardom is recounted eloquently by his sister. Unrestrained, this book offers a wealth of insight to Lewis, his family, and his friends.

Lewis, Myra. Great Balls of Fire: The Uncensored Story of Jerry Lee Lewis. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989. The unabridged life of Lewis from childhood until 1989, by one of his wives.

Tosches, Nick. Hellfire: The Jerry Lee Lewis Story. New York: Grove Press, 1998. A look at the life of Lewis in a biography that features Tosches's excellent flair for prose.

See also: Blackwell, Otis; Cash, Johnny; Domino, Fats; Garfunkel, Art; Haley, Bill; Howlin' Wolf; Jagger, Sir Mick; Orbison, Roy; Perkins, Carl; Presley, Elvis; Professor Longhair; Reed, Jimmy; Rodgers, Jimmie; Sibelius, Jean; Williams, Hank.

John Lewis

American jazz pianist and composer

Lewis was instrumental in developing Third Stream music, a blend of European classical music and jazz improvisation. He found a creative outlet for his musical ideas in the influential Modern Jazz Quartet.

Born: May 3, 1920; La Grange, Illinois
Died: March 29, 2001; New York, New York
Member of: Modern Jazz Quartet; Orchestra U.S.A.

Principal works

FILM SCORES: No Sun in Venice, 1957 (with the Modern Jazz Quartet); Odds Against Tomorrow, 1959; A Milanese Story, 1962.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Modern Jazz Society, 1955; Afternoon in Paris, 1956 (with Sacha Distel); Grand Encounter, 1956 (with others); The John Lewis Piano, 1956; European Windows, 1958; Improvised Meditations and Excursions, 1959; John Lewis Presents Jazz Abstractions, 1960 (with others); Wonderful World of Jazz, 1960; Original Sin, 1961; Animal Dance, 1962; Essence, 1962; European Encounter, 1962 (with Svend Asmussen); P. O. V., 1975; Sensitive Scenery, 1976; Evening with Two Grand Pianos, 1979 (with Hank Jones); Piano Play House, 1979; Kansas City Breaks, 1982; Bach Preludes and Fugues, Vol. 1, 1984; Bach Preludes and Fugues, Vol. 2, 1984; Bach Preludes and Fugues, Vol. 3, 1984; The Bridge Game, 1984; The Chess Game, Vol. 1, 1987; Delaunay's Dilemma, 1987; The Garden of Delight, 1987; The Chess Game, Vol. 2, 1988 (with Mirjana Lewis); Midnight in Paris, 1988; The American Jazz Orchestra, 1989; Evolution, 1999; Bach Preludes and Fugues, Vol. 4, 2000.

ALBUMS (with the Modern Jazz Quartet): The Quartet, 1951; The Artistry of the Modern Jazz Quartet, 1952; M. J. Q., 1952 (with the Milt Jackson Quintet); The Modern Jazz Quartet, 1952; The Modern Jazz Quartet Plays for Lovers, 1952; The Modern Jazz Quartet Plays Jazz Classics, 1952; Modern Jazz Quartet, Vol. 1, 1952 (with Milt Jackson); Django, 1953; Modern Jazz Quartet, Vol. 2, 1954; Concorde, 1955; Fontessa, 1956; The Modern Jazz Quartet: 1957, 1957; One Never Knows, 1957; Third Stream Music, 1957 (with others); Odds Against Tomorrow, 1959; Pyramid, 1959; The Comedy, 1960; The Modern Jazz Quartet and Orchestra, 1960; Patterns, 1960; Lonely Woman, 1962; A Quartet Is a Quartet Is a Quartet, 1963; The Sheriff, 1963; Collaboration with Almeida, 1964 (with Laurindo Almeida); John Lewis Plays George Gershwin's Porgy and Bess, 1964; Jazz Dialogue, 1965 (with the All-Star Jazz Band); Place Vendôme, 1966 (with the Swingle Singers); Under the Jasmin Tree, 1967; Space, 1969; Plastic Dreams, 1971; Blues on Bach, 1973; In Memoriam, 1973; Little David, 1974; Reunion at Budokan, 1981; Echoes, 1984; Topsy: This One's for Basie, 1985; Three Windows, 1987 (with the New York Chamber Symphony); For Ellington, 1988; Rose of the Rio Grande, 1989; Celebration, 1992; Night at the Opera, 1994.

ALBUMS (with Orchestra U.S.A.): Jazz Journey, 1963; Orchestra U.S.A.: The Debut Recording, 1963; The Sextet of Orchestra U.S.A., 1965; Sonorities, 1965.

The Life

John Lewis was born in La Grange, Illinois, where his father was an optometrist and his mother pursued her interests as a trained singer of classical music. He was raised and received his early education in Albuquerque, New Mexico, and, at age seven, he began piano studies. His enthusiasm for jazz was enhanced when, in the late 1920's, he met the brilliant saxophonist Lester Young, who was on a tour of the Southwest. At the University of New Mexico, Lewis studied anthropology and music, and he formed a jazz band that played some of his early arrangements. When he was a senior, his education was interrupted when Pearl Harbor was bombed in December, 1941, and soon he began a three-year service in the U.S. Army. He played in a military band, and there he met the drummer Kenny Clarke, who had already had a distinguished musical career through his work with Louis Armstrong, Coleman Hawkins, and Ella Fitzgerald. Lewis collaborated with Clarke in forming a jazz ensemble, and when Clarke had to leave for Heidelberg, Germany, they agreed to meet in New York after World War II.

Lewis intended to complete his degree at the University of New Mexico when he was discharged, but, following a teacher's advice, he enrolled in the Manhattan School of Music in 1945, and he began listening to the bebop musicians who were creating a new style in jazz. In 1946 he reunited with Clarke, who introduced him to Dizzy Gillespie, and Lewis and Clarke became part of Gillespie's big band. Lewis began as an arranger, but, after Thelonious Monk left, Lewis became the band's pianist. In 1947 Gillespie introduced Lewis's first major work, Toccata for Trumpet and Orchestra, in Carnegie Hall. Lewis toured with the Gillespie band in the United States and Europe, but he also played, for varying lengths of time, with a series of influential jazz musicians, including Young, Charlie Parker, and Illinois Jacquet. In 1948 he participated, as pianist and arranger, in the creation of Davis's important Birth of the Cool album.

In the early 1950's Lewis helped form the Modern Jazz Quartet, which evolved from the Gillespie band's rhythm section, and its principal members were Clarke, Lewis, and vibraphonist Milt Jackson. Clarke, Jackson, Lewis, and bassist Percy Heath later discovered that they enjoyed working with each other, and in August, 1951, they christened their group the Modern Jazz Quartet. Although the group had no official leader, Lewis was its musical director. They agreed to make the Modern Jazz Quartet different from all other combos. They wore tuxedos, and they played in concert halls rather than nightclubs. They wanted to revivify the respect that concert big bands enjoyed during the Swing Era. Through a series of concerts and recordings, the Modern Jazz Quartet gradually achieved great success, first in Europe and then in the United States. In 1955 Connie Kay replaced Clarke on drums, providing the group with a smoother, more uniform sound. Lewis's compositions constituted the basis of the Modern Jazz Quartet's success, but Jackson created such important pieces as "Bluesology" and "Bags's Groove" (Jackson's nickname was Bags). In 1957 European critics voted the Modern Jazz Quartet the group of the year.

Lewis's talents were not confined to the Modern Jazz Quartet. After receiving his master's degree in 1953, he began to explore jazz education and enhancement as well as new ways to develop jazz arranging and composition. From 1959 to 1982 he was music director of the annual Monterey Jazz Festival, and during summers in the late 1950's he was head of the School of Jazz at Music Inn in Lenox, Massachusetts. During this time he also conducted the Stuttgart Symphony Orchestra in a series of his compositions and arrangements. He composed film scores; music for a ballet, Original Sin (1961), danced by the San Francisco company; and music for a Broadway play, William Inge's Natural Affection (1963).

With Gunther Schüller, Gary McFarland, and others, Lewis helped found a movement in jazz and classical music called Third Stream. He was also an academic, holding teaching positions at the City College of New York and at Harvard University. With Gary Giddins and Roberta Swann he founded the American Jazz Orchestra in 1985, and in 1992 he participated with Gerry Mulligan and others in the Rebirth of the Cool sessions. Through reunions with the Modern Jazz Quartet and many concert appearances, he remained active in America and Europe until his death. He died in New York City in 2001, after a long battle with prostate cancer.

The Music

In music, Lewis was a man of many loves. He loved European classical music, especially from the Baroque period. He loved early jazz, from its beginnings through the swing era. In addition, he loved bebop and other avant-garde jazz. He once said that all his work was deeply rooted in jazz, and he experimented with European art music to create variety in his and the Modern Jazz Quartet's concerts and recordings. Two big bands were especially influential in realizing Lewis's jazz vision—those of Duke Ellington and Count Basie. Lewis attended an Ellington concert in 1939, and it revealed to him that jazz could be more than music for dancing: It could be dramatic, contemplative, exploratory, and exciting, while simultaneously expanding the listener's mind and emotions. After World War II, Lewis attended an Ellington concert in Carnegie Hall, in which Ellington played a new composition, "Fugue-a-ditty," whose use of Baroque counterpoint deeply impressed Lewis.

As a pianist, Lewis emulated Basie both as an instrumentalist and as a bandleader. Like Basie's, Lewis's style was deceptively simple, mainly using single notes and silences to tell a story. For Lewis, improvisation was a graceful way of moving from note to note, phrase to phrase, and section to section. Basie's improvisations were generally integrated into his band's creative playing, and Lewis, too, believed in the virtues of collective improvisation. To those who complained that Lewis's playing was informed by Baroque or classical-era music, he responded that jazz itself was rooted in European melodies, harmonies, and rhythms, as was the classical American popular song, all of which provided material for Lewis's compositions and arrangements.

Django. This composition is among the most highly praised of those in Lewis's extensive oeuvre. National Public Radio selected it as one of the hundred most important American recordings of the twentieth century. Several jazz critics have called it a classic, and it is the piece most closely associated with Lewis and the Modern Jazz Quartet. Lewis composed "Django" in commemoration of the great Belgian-Gypsy guitarist Django Reinhardt, whom Lewis first heard and then befriended during World War II. Lewis was impressed by Reinhardt's unique style, a combination of Gypsy rhythms, unusual harmonies (devised by a left hand that had been deprived, through a fire, of the use of two fingers), and evocative melodies. When Reinhardt died tragically young in 1953, Lewis was inspired to transform his grief into a composition that has been characterized as a memento, a musical eulogy, a cortege, and a New Orleans-like funeral ceremony. The piece features a sensitive blend of sadness and joy, consolation and celebration, traditional and modern jazz, simplicity and complexity. It also has the ability to inspire excellent improvised solos, both by other musicians and by members of the Modern Jazz Quartet, who recorded it several times and always found fresh things to say about its themes. The Modern Jazz Quartet's first recording merited the prestigious Prix du Disque award, which Lewis accepted at the American Embassy in Paris. Some critics prefer the later version, in the Pyramid album.

Odds Against Tomorrow. Although Lewis composed other film scores, Odds Against Tomorrow, according to several critics, in both the musical and film communities, was the most accomplished. While his earlier score for the French film, Sait-on jamais (released in the United States as No Sun in Venice), contains an impressive triple fugue, "Three Windows," the film, which Lewis scored unseen, was a failure with the public and with Lewis, when he eventually saw it. On the other hand, Robert Wise's Odds Against Tomorrow, released in 1959, was a critical success, and it has grown in significance over the years. The film centered on a robbery scheme complicated by racial tensions between the characters played by Harry Belafonte and Robert Ryan. Belafonte, whose company produced the film, played a singer and vibraphonist. This time, Lewis saw the film before scoring it, and Wise guided him through the details of synchronizing, with the use of a click track, his score with the events in the motion picture. The result, which some termed one of the finest film scores of all time, contains set pieces, such as "No Happiness for Slater," that later became showcases for the Modern Jazz Quartet (Slater was the name of the Ryan character). Schüller, the composer, conductor, and author, praised Lewis's score as creatively serving the purposes of the film's story while also being able to stand alone as absolute music.

John Lewis. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Third Stream Music. In 1957, at a lecture at Brandeis University, Schüller coined Third Stream to describe music that synthesizes Western classical music with various ethnic music, such as jazz. Some liked the term, while others criticized it as a misnomer, since jazz and classical music were unblendable. Lewis, whose musical evolution led him to a heightened awareness of these two traditions, found his and others' experiments in this new trend congenial. The album Third Stream Music contains some of Lewis's experiments in this new genre. In his composition "Sketch," the Modern Jazz Quartet plays with the Beaux Arts String Quartet. Some praised the piece for bringing out the best in both the jazz and classical groups, whereas others believed that the classical musicians sounded uncomfortable in the jazz idiom and the Modern Jazz Quartet members failed to play like classicists. "Exposure" was an adaptation of a work that Lewis had originally composed for a United Nations film on refugees. In the album this piece is played by the Modern Jazz Quartet and a sextet, with carefully programmed roles for each instrumentalist. Some listeners suggested that this piece, despite its complexities, communicated the musicians' compassionate feelings for the downtrodden of the world.

The Comedy. For many years, Lewis had been intrigued by commedia dell'arte, a type of comedy developed in Renaissance Italy that used standard plots and stock characters, such as Columbine and Harlequin. He began his musical explorations of these characters as early as 1956, in the Fontessa album. What especially interested him in this historical form was that, like jazz, the performances were largely improvised. When Lewis completed and recorded his compositions constituting The Comedy, the work consisted of seven movements: Spanish Steps, Columbine, Pulcinella, Pierrot, La Cantatrice, Harlequin, and Piazza Novona. While some critics considered The Comedy the Modern Jazz Quartet's greatest single achievement, others found the composition ponderous and mechanical, with uninspired and inhibited improvisations.

Concorde. Although Lewis had experimented with the fugue for decades, many listeners regarded Concorde as significantly superior to his earlier compositions. In this piece, Lewis combined fugal techniques with polyphonic jazz so that the structural underpinnings supported the melodies and harmonies. Some critics believed that Lewis had largely succeeded in transforming and assimilating the Baroque language of the fugue into the jazz idiom. This album was not the end of Lewis's interest in the fugue. He wrote Fugue in A Minor for his collaboration with the guitarist Laurindo Almeida, and in the 1980's Lewis created a series of Bach adaptations, some of which he played alone and others of which he played with his wife, the harpsichordist Mirjana Lewis.

For Ellington. Ever since Lewis first heard Ellington play, he had been in awe of the composer-pianist. Throughout the 1940's he listened to Ellington's compositions, finding them "all masterpieces." In For Ellington, Lewis and the Modern Jazz Quartet paid homage to this great jazz composer. Lewis chose such Ellington standards as "Jack the Bear," "Prelude to a Kiss," "Ko-ko," and "Come Sunday," for reconception in terms of the Modern Jazz Quartet members' talents and Lewis's own improvisatory skills. It was a case of one master composer and improviser building on the works of another, and, like Isaac Newton, Lewis may have seen farther by standing on the shoulders of a giant.

Musical Legacy

Thoroughly schooled in classical European music and having played with such jazz immortals as Parker and Davis, Lewis was well prepared to create a unique body of work, especially through his arrangements and compositions for the Modern Jazz Quartet. More than any other group since World War II, the Modern Jazz Quartet, through its melodic inventiveness, its harmonic beauties, and its rhythmic subtleties, was able, through its many concerts, to please audiences in America and Europe for more than forty years. That legacy continues through the group's many recordings. This success is due in part to the craftsmanship and creativity of the group's musical director, as well as the collective improvisatory abilities of the members, especially between Lewis, with his Mozartean economy, clarity, and transparency, and Jackson, with his complex, soulful, and blues-informed playing. Like Basie's band, the Modern Jazz Quartet created such a profound integration of ensemble playing that it was difficult to distinguish the spontaneous from the structured. Despite the musical intimacy achieved by Modern Jazz Quartet members, the group was not averse to experimenting with other musicians, for example, Oscar Peterson, Sonny Rollins, and Jimmy Giuffre. These collaborations helped to expand and deepen the group's creativity.

During the final decades of his life, Lewis was a symbol of how diverse and interpenetrative music had become, and he played a leading role in breaking down barriers between big band and small-group jazz, between traditional and avant-garde jazz styles, between European classical music and jazz, and between European and American musicians. His dedication to good music, no matter what its source and form, continued to motivate his many activities until just before his death, when he conducted a retrospective concert with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, founded to preserve and continue the legacy of such great jazz creators as Lewis.

Robert J. Paradowski

Further Reading

Feather, Leonard. The Pleasures of Jazz: Leading Performers on Their Lives, Their Music, Their Contemporaries. New York: Horizon Press, 1976. Jazz scholar Feather surveys developments in the 1960's and 1970's through the careers and activities of a number of musicians, including Lewis. Illustrated with black-and-white photographs.

Teachout, Terry. "Jazz and Classical Music: To the Third Stream and Beyond." In The Oxford Companion to Jazz, edited by Bill Kirchner. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000. Lewis's contributions to the development of Third Stream are helpfully discussed. Selected bibliography, with an index of names and subjects.

Williams, Martin. Jazz Masters in Transition, 1957-1969. London: Macmillan, 1970. Several chapters chronicle Lewis's achievements, with discussions of European tours, Third Stream music, the School of Jazz, and Lewis's collaboration with Rollins.

_____. "John Lewis and the Modern Jazz Quartet." In The Jazz Tradition. New York: Oxford University Press, 1970. Williams analyzes the history of jazz through the careers of fifteen jazz giants, with one chapter focused on Lewis. Includes discographical notes.

See also: Basie, Count; Davis, Miles; Ellington, Duke; Jones, Hank; Kirk, Rahsaan Roland; Parker, Charlie; Peterson, Oscar; Reinhardt, Django; Rollins, Sonny.

György Ligeti

Romanian classical composer

Ligeti rejected the dogmatism of the 1960's avant-garde to embrace a cosmopolitan approach to composition, retaining ties to his native language and absorbing influences from non-Western music.

Born: May 28, 1923; Diciosânmartin (now Tîrnăveni), Transylvania, Romania
Died: June 12, 2006; Vienna, Austria
Also known as: György Sándor Ligeti (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Andante and Allegro, 1950; Balada şi joc, 1950 (for two violins); Six Bagatelles for Wind Quintet, 1953; Sonata, 1953; String Quartet No. 1, 1954 (Métamorphoses nocturnes); String Quartet No. 2, 1968; Ten Pieces, 1968; Chamber Concerto, 1969-1970; Hommage à Hilding Rosenberg, 1982; Trio, 1982 (for violin, horn, and piano).

CHORAL WORKS: Idegen földön, 1946; Three Weöres Songs, 1947 (for voice and piano); Lakodalmas, 1950; Hortobágy, 1951; Haj, ífjúság!, 1952; Inaktelki nóták, Pápáiné, 1953; Mátraszentimrei dalok, Éjszaka, Reggel, 1955; Aventures, 1963; Nouvelles Aventures, 1965; Lux aeterna, 1966; Síppal, dobbal, nádihegedüvel, 2000 (for mezzo-soprano and four percussionists).

ELECTRONIC WORKS: Glissandi, 1957; Artikulation, 1958.

OPERA (music): Le Grand Macabre, 1978 (libretto by Michel de Ghelderode).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Régi magyar társas táncok, 1949; Concert Românesc, 1952; Apparitions, 1959; Atmosphères, 1961; Requiem, 1965; Lontano, 1967;

Ramifications, 1969; Melodien, 1971; Clocks and Clouds, 1973; San Francisco Polyphony, 1974; Piano Concerto, 1985-1988; Violin Concerto, 1992; Hamburg Concerto, 1998-1999, revised 2003 (for horn and chamber orchestra).

PIANO WORKS: Induló, 1942; Allegro, 1943; Polifón etüd, 1943; Capriccio No. 1, 1947; Capriccio No. 2, 1947; Invention, 1948; Három lakodalmi tánc, 1950; Sonatina, 1950; Musica ricercata, 1953; Trios Bagatelles, 1961; Études pour Piano, Book 1, 1985; Études pour Piano, Book 2, 1994; Études pour Piano, Book 3, 2001.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Gesammelte Schriften, 2007.

The Life

György Sándor Ligeti (LIHG-eh-tee) was born in Transylvania, the son of Sándor and Ilona, secular Hungarian Jews from Budapest. Because university study was restricted for students of Jewish background, Ligeti traded a career in science for one in music, entering Kolozsvár Conservatory. He studied with Ferenc Farkas and Pál Kadosa until 1943, when the Nazis sent Ligeti to a work camp in Szeged, Hungary. He eventually escaped, but his father and brother died in the concentration camps.

Ligeti entered the Liszt Academy in 1945 alongside György Kurtág and studied with Farkas, Pál Járdányi, Sándor Veress, and Lajos Bárdos. While a student, Ligeti met the poet Sándor Weöres and studied folk music in Romania. He joined the academy's faculty after graduation, but his compositional and personal pursuits were constrained by communist censorship and the extreme privation of postwar Budapest. During the revolution of 1956, Ligeti escaped from Hungary with his second wife, Vera, and they went to Vienna. In 1957 Karlheinz Stockhausen arranged a fellowship for him at the electronic studio of the West German Radio in Cologne. There Ligeti studied electronic and serial music, published articles in the German music journal Die Reihe, and composed. He stepped to the forefront of the avant-garde with the premiere of Atmosphères, which took first prize at the Donaueschingen Music Festival in 1961.

Although based in Vienna, Ligeti taught regularly in Stockholm and at the Darmstadt Summer Courses for New Music. He came to the attention of a mainstream audience when film director Stanley Kubrick excerpted four unlicensed works by Ligeti in the sound track to 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968). Ligeti lived in Berlin off and on between 1969 and 1973, visiting the United States in 1971 as composer-in-residence at Stanford University. While Ligeti was in California, he was introduced to recent advances in computer music as well as to the work of Terry Riley, Steve Reich, and Harry Partch.

In 1973 Ligeti accepted a post in the Hamburg Hochschule für Musik und Theatre, where he taught for seventeen years and wrote his only completed opera, Le Grande Macabre. Three discoveries of the early 1980's profoundly influenced his later music: the polyrhythmic compositions of Conlon Nancarrow, Simha Arom's recordings of Central African polyphony, and fractal geometry.

Ligeti's growing importance was recognized when his Études pour Piano won the prestigious Grawemeyer Award in 1986. The 1989 South Bank Centre Festival in London paved the way for Sony Classical's groundbreaking decision (with support from Vincent Meyer) to issue Ligeti's complete oeuvre (the project was abandoned in 1999 but was continued by Teldec in 2001). Subsequent awards include the Ernst-von-Siemens Music Prize (1993), the UNESCO International Music Council Prize (1996), the Sibelius Prize (2000), the Kyoto Prize (2000), the Theodor W. Adorno Prize (2003), and the Polar Music Prize (2004). Complications from a neurological illness forced Ligeti to stop composing in 2002. He died in his home in Vienna on June 12, 2006, survived by his wife Vera and son Lukas, a composer and percussionist.

The Music

Ligeti's early works owe a great debt to Béla Bartók, but they were also influenced by Renaissance polyphony, Hungarian literature, and the Second Viennese School. Experience in the analog electronic studio affected Ligeti's treatment of orchestral timbre, while his study of serialism led him to search for precise but nondeterministic compositional methods. His micropolyphonic technique—the superimposition of highly chromatic canons, each with a different durational pattern—became a palpable sign of Ligeti's aesthetic: the "blossoming of isolated structural details into a transforming global structure."

A flirtation with the Fluxus movement, which advocated blending different artistic media, and immersion in music-theatrical works occupied the early 1960's. Subsequent multimovement chamber and orchestral works included micropolyphonic, meccanico (machinelike), and kaleidoscopic textures and demonstrated the growing importance of the lament theme and nontempered tuning to Ligeti's evolving style.

His postopera chamber works for piano and harpsichord incorporated additive rhythmic principles, while the later works reflected an increasing rhythmic sophistication influenced by chaotic processes and non-Western music. Ligeti characterized his harmonic language in these works as nonatonal but nondiatonic. His final works combined new influences with his earliest concerns: the large work composed of short, succinct movements (Hamburg Concerto), the poetry of Weöres (Sippal, dobbal, nádihegedüvel), and strict canon (Étude No. 18).

Early Works. Ligeti's earliest songs and choral works show the influence of folk and Renaissance music, set to plaintive traditional or poetic Hungarian texts. Solo piano works are neo-Baroque (Invention) or neoclassical (Capriccio No. 1 and Capriccio No. 2) in style. Under communist strictures Ligeti wrote publicly performed choral works, including Inaktelki nóták, Pápáiné and Mátraszentimrei dalok, Éjszaka, Reggel, as well as compositions "for the desk drawer," such as the String Quartet No. 1. The eleven-part Musica ricercata for piano builds a new musical language from a single note. The first movement ends with two notes; each subsequent movement adds a pitch and a new style to close with a twelve-note ricercar dedicated to Girolamo Frescobaldi.

Lontano. The micropolyphonic technique of Apparitions, Atmosphères, and the kyrie of the Requiem came to fruition in Lux aeterna for sixteen-part chorus and its contrafact Lontano, for large orchestra, based on the same canon. Lontano begins on a single A-flat played almost inaudibly from which multiple canonic lines fan out, each with a unique durational series. Pillar tones and trichords trisect the twelve-minute form, with individual chromatic lines subsumed by a slowly rising, shimmering cloud, shaped by timbre, dynamics, and extreme registral shifts.

Chamber Concerto. The Chamber Concerto for thirteen musicians is based on a Baroque model, but it refines ideas explored in the String Quartet No. 2 and Ten Pieces. Whereas Lontano begins with a single pitch, the Chamber Concerto begins on a soft five-note cluster, elaborated by distinct lines with different rhythms. Sustained E-flat octaves announce a second half with varied texture and dynamics. The second movement is subdued, with varied series drawn from a repertoire of pitches. Clusters and energetic melodic lines disturb the initial calm, as each line descends toward a sustained close. The third movement features Ligeti's meccanico texture, reminiscent of ticking clocks which—as in Poème symphonique for a hundred metronomes—wind down separately to close. The final movement combines shimmering repeated patterns with clearly stated melodies that pass from horn to strings, oboe, and piccolo, capped by a humorous riposte from trombone.

Le Grand Macabre. Ligeti's first attempt at opera (a nonnarrative retelling of the Oedipus myth) stalled with the death of its commissioning director, Göran Gentele of the Royal Swedish Opera. Ligeti decided that rather than an "antiopera," he would compose an "anti-antiopera" based on the surreal, expressionistic La Balade du grand macabre by Flemish dramatist Michel de Ghelderode. The opera's theme of a decadent and barely functioning world on the brink of an apocalypse allowed Ligeti to incorporate musical allusions within "comic-striplike" musical and dramatic action. He wrote the libretto in German with Michael Meschke, who directed the Swedish premiere in April, 1978. The original two acts were revised in 1996 to produce a leaner, more dramatically satisfying four-act structure.

Trio. The Trio for violin, horn, and piano was widely hailed as a return to tradition, if not tonality proper. Its four movements achieve a new expressiveness and exploit the texture and intonation of natural horn on a modern double horn. A warped version of Ludwig van Beethoven's Lebewohl motive signals the traditional thematic logic and aba form of the first movement. In the second movement, an ostinato in aksak 3+3+2 meter recalls Bartók, and it also evokes the rhythmic drive of Latin American music. A third movement, recalling Beethoven, sketches a three-part march: A cyclic pattern with piano and violin in hocket is interrupted by the linear trio, with horn joining the reprise. The final Lamento was the first of Ligeti's lament-ostinato movements, in which a lament topic reminiscent of Baroque and East European folk idioms forms the basis of continuous variations.

Études pour Piano. Ligeti's first book of piano études was widely praised for its deft combination of diverse influences. In the tradition of the nineteenth century étude, each foregrounds a compositional device and introduces one or more technical challenge. Désordre maps a recursively structured melody onto both white (right hand) and black (left hand) key collections, against the background of a steady eighth-note pulse. Both hands move out of phase as the cyclic melody repeats at different pitch levels, to reflect a chaotic process that Ligeti calls tempo fugue. Subsequent études combine open fifths, blocked-key technique, ostinato, and the lament topic, with musical (jazz pianist Bill Evans in Arc-en-ciel) and extramusical ("Warsaw Autumn" and Boris Vian in "Automne à Warsaw") allusions. The pieces in Études pour Piano, Book 2 demand high levels of performer virtuosity (the original version of No. 14 was published for player piano) and betray an even wider range of influences, from the music of the Indonesian gamelan ("Galamb Borong") to the computer phenomenon of Shepard tones ("Vertige"). Three of the four works in Études pour Piano, Book 3 are canons, but they all are based on modal themes and proceed in even-note values that, in the manner of a proportional canon, shift value and tempo to create formal divisions emphasized by terraced dynamics.

György Ligeti. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Violin Concerto. The final version of the Violin Concerto continues the polyrhythmic and timbral explorations of the Piano Concerto, to produce a hybrid work indebted to Guillaume de Machaut and Dmitri Shostakovich in turn. A solo violin and viola tuned to match the seventh and fifth partials of the double bass respectively create piquant discrepancies in tuning, evident in the subtly beating arpeggios of the opening Praeludium. The second movement begins with an Aria adapted from Six Bagatelles for Wind Quintet, No. 3 followed by Hoquetus and Choral sections in which ocarinas, slide whistles, and the retuned strings gradually join soloist and orchestra. The third movement, Intermezzo, features a keening violin solo over a barely perceptible chromatic descent in strings, with echoes of String Quartet No. 1 and the ninth piano étude. The quiet beginning of the fourth movement, Passacaglia, builds to an intense climax that spans six and a half octaves and recalls the final scene of Le Grande Macabre. The final Appassionato combines the lament motive with spectral harmonies and rhythmic cycles in percussion and brass to culminate in a furious cadenza.

Musical Legacy

Ligeti eschewed all ideologies, but he held to a modernist aesthetic. Ligeti was criticized for retreating from progressive ideals after 1982, and he often spoke of feeling trapped between the strictures of the avant-garde and the past. He found a third way in non-Western indigenous music, which offered novel rhythmic and formal models and new types of intonation (and of tonality). Ligeti's music evinced nostalgia for the European classical tradition even as it acknowledged the pluralism and complexity of contemporary culture.

Ligeti was widely lauded for combining intellectual sophistication with a respect for the sensual attributes of his materials, a perception supported by his writings and interviews. The championing of his music by leading performers such as pianist Pierre-Laurent Aimard and conductor Esa-Pekka Salonen contributed to the growing influence of his music.

Amy M. Bauer

Further Reading

Griffiths, Paul. György Ligeti. 2d ed. London: Robson Books, 1983. A renowned critic's brief but engaging account of Ligeti's life and works.

Ligeti, György. Gesammelte Schriften. Edited by Monika Lichtenfeld. Mainz, Germany: Schott Music, 2007. A two-volume collection of Ligeti's articles, essays, and program notes.

Richart, Robert. György Ligeti: A Bio-Bibliography. New York: Greenwood, 1990. An annotated bibliography of works by and about Ligeti.

Sallis, Friedemann. An Introduction to the Early Works of György Ligeti. Berliner Musik Studien 6. Köln: Studio, 1996. This study of Ligeti's early works unearthed forgotten manuscripts and shed new light on Ligeti's influences. Includes English translations of Ligeti's articles published in Hungary.

Steinitz, Richard. György Ligeti: Music of the Imagination. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 2003. This definitive look at the composer's life and works reflects the author's long acquaintance with Ligeti. Includes biographical and professional details absent from earlier accounts.

Toop, Richard. György Ligeti. London: Phaidon Press, 1999. This fine introduction to Ligeti's work sets it in the context of his avant-garde contemporaries.

Willson, Rachel Beckles. Ligeti, Kurtág, and Hungarian Music During the Cold War. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 2007. Situates Ligeti's work alongside that of his compatriot Kurtág from the perspective of Hungarian nationalist and Cold War politics.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Evans, Bill; Kodály, Zoltán; Nancarrow, Conlon; Partch, Harry; Reich, Steve; Schnittke, Alfred; Schreker, Franz; Shostakovich, Dmitri; Stockhausen, Karlheinz; Watts, André; Wolfe, Julia.

Gordon Lightfoot

Canadian folksinger, songwriter, and guitarist

An impressive singer and songwriter, Lightfoot produced more than three hundred songs that are firmly rooted in the folk-music idiom, with references to rock, blues, and country styles.

Born: November 17, 1938; Orillia, Ontario, Canada

Also known as: Gordon Meredith Lightfoot, Jr. (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Lightfoot!, 1966; The Way I Feel, 1967; Back Here on Earth, 1968; Did She Mention My Name, 1968; Sit Down Young Stranger, 1970 (re-released as If You Could Read My Mind, 1970); Summer Side of Life, 1971; Don Quixote, 1972; Old Dan's Records, 1972; Sundown, 1974; Cold on the Shoulder, 1975; Summertime Dream, 1976; Endless Wire, 1978; Dream Street Rose, 1980; Shadows, 1982; Salute, 1983; East of Midnight, 1986; Waiting for You, 1993; A Painter Passing Through, 1998; Harmony, 2004.

The Life

Gordon Meredith Lightfoot, Jr., was born in the small Ontario town of Orillia in 1938. At an early age, he began singing in the church choir. He continued to sing as a young teenager, competing in music competitions sponsored by the local radio station. After graduation, he attended the Westlake College of Modern Music in Los Angeles for fundamental training in harmony.

Upon his return to Canada, Lightfoot moved to Toronto, and he gained experience performing in small venues. He became involved in folk music, and he began to attract the attention of some influential artists, including Peter, Paul, and Mary, Elvis Presley, and Marty Robbins, who had success with Lightfoot's early songs. Lightfoot quickly rose to the top of the folk music scene in Canada and the United States, performing concerts consisting of his own songs. As his recording career began to flourish, Lightfoot's fame spread throughout the 1960's, reaching a peak in popularity with several hit songs in the 1970's and 1980's. Following a health scare in 2002, Lightfoot took some time off, but he returned to the stage and recording studio successfully in 2004.

He is the recipient of many awards, including seventeen Juno Awards, and he is a member of the Canadian Music Hall of Fame, the Canadian Country Music Hall of Fame, and the Canadian Songwriters Hall of Fame. In 2003 Lightfoot was made Companion of the Order of Canada.

The Music

Set in the genre of the American popular song, Lightfoot's compositions number more than three hundred songs, and more than two hundred have been recorded. Most of Lightfoot's songs can be classified into three broad categories: love ballads, historical epic ballads, and songs on the human condition.

Gordon Lightfoot. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Lightfoot's texts stand as poetry, independent of his music. His lyrics are in rhyme and in simple meter. His subjects include the pain of unrequited love and observations on the human experience. Pastoral themes account for a large percentage of his output. Many texts function as social commentary, prophetic in warnings about waste and abuse of resources, particularly human resources. A few songs are intended to stoke a sense of national pride or to serve as educational reminders of historic events, events with which Lightfoot felt a personal connection. Lightfoot's songs usually reflect the typical folk-song form (verses and refrain). In some cases the epic nature of the text required a more sectional approach, but even there Lightfoot tended to reuse musical material.

Musically, the texture of the songs is the typical melody-accompaniment common to folk songs. The harmony is mostly diatonic, with some chromatic shading. Lightfoot's impressive singing ability, fostered by his years as a choral singer in his youth, allows for a long melodic line. His baritone vocal range gives him great melodic flexibility, with resonant lower notes and sweet-sounding upper notes.

Lightfoot accompanies his vocal melodies on the guitar, both six- and twelve-string varieties. In a Lightfoot song, the guitar functions as the harmonic background onto which the vocal melody is cast. Typically, the twelve-string guitar strums a repetitive, rhythmic figure of chords, while the six-string guitar is played fingerstyle, using a repeated arpeggio pattern with alternating bass notes and outlining the chords. Early in his career, Lightfoot formed a band consisting of a bass player and an additional guitar player, and he later added a keyboardist and a drummer. These instruments complemented the basic guitar accompaniment. Often the sound of an orchestral string section was included in recordings, and Lightfoot sometimes uses a synthesized version (played by the keyboardist) in live performances. The drums are usually employed for atmospheric purposes; Lightfoot tends to avoid the primal-beat concept of contemporary rock music.

Love Ballads. A prototypical Lightfoot love ballad, "If You Could Read My Mind" rose to the top of the U.S. charts in 1971. The text has a regular meter, and it is rhymed. The form is typical of popular songs, with verses and a refrain. It tells the story of an intimate relationship damaged by infidelity, expressed from the view of one member of the couple. The melody is provided by Lightfoot's baritone voice, and the accompaniment is multilayered: A six-string guitar played by Lightfoot provides the arpeggiated chordal pattern, while a second guitar weaves a virtuosic yet complementary solo line into the texture. There is a bass, providing harmonic and rhythmic clarity, and in performances a string section is synthesized. The tempo is quick, but the atmosphere of the song is soft and quiet. Other songs in this style are "Talkin' in Your Sleep" (1971), "Beautiful" (1972), "I'm Not Supposed to Care" (1976), and "Spanish Moss" (1976).

Historical Epic Ballads. Lightfoot is well known for his song "The Wreck of the Edmund Fitzgerald" (1976), which tells the story of one of the most tragic maritime disasters in U.S. history. The form of the song is simple: seven verses, each followed by a repeated instrumental refrain, with an instrumental introduction and ending. The text is rhymed, and it is in regular meter. The melody incorporates a short, repeated rhythmic figure, taken from one of the folk-song types of the maritime tradition, the sea chanty. The accompaniment, with loud drums and a blues-oriented solo electric guitar, contributes to the overall atmosphere, creating a musical picture of the great storm encountered by the ship and its crew on their fateful voyage. Other historical epic ballads by Lightfoot are "Ballad of the Yarmouth Castle" (1969), "Black Day in July" (1968), and "Canadian Railroad Trilogy" (1967), written on commission for the Canadian National Railroad in honor of its one hundredth anniversary.

Songs on the Human Condition. "Sundown" reached number one on the Billboard chart in the summer of 1974. The song departs from Lightfoot's usual style with its reference to the blues idiom, complete with an improvised guitar solo. Nevertheless, it retains the typical folk-song verse-and-refrain structure. The text is about loneliness. In "Sundown," Lightfoot indirectly criticizes the social climate of the 1970's sexual revolution, developing the poetic symbol of sundown into a metaphor for loneliness. The connection with the blues underscores the general apprehension portrayed in the song. Other songs on the human condition by Lightfoot are "Summer Side of Life" (1971), "Circle of Steel" (1972), "Don Quixote" (1972), and "Rainy Day People" (1974).

Musical Legacy

Lightfoot's performing career spans more than six decades, and during that time many performing artists have recorded his songs. In 2004 a group of Canadian performers collaborated on a tribute album, titled Beautiful: A Tribute to Gordon Lightfoot, each choosing one Lightfoot song for the project.

Richard Allen Roe

Further Reading

Collins, Maynard. Lightfoot: If You Could Read His Mind. Ottawa, Ont.: Deneau, 1988. A broad biographical sketch, with emphasis on personal anecdotes.

Fetherling, Douglas. Some Day Soon: Essays on Canadian Songwriters. Kingston, Ont.: Quarry Press, 1991. A large section of the book is devoted to Lightfoot, along with other well-known Canadian songwriters.

Gabiou, Alfrieda. Gordon Lightfoot. Crescent City, Fla.: Gage, 1979. Lightfoot's career up to 1977, featuring newspaper and magazine articles and many rare photograhs.

See also: Cohen, Leonard; Denny, Sandy; Presley, Elvis; Taylor, James.

Little Richard

American rock singer, songwriter, and pianist

A 1950's rock and roller, Little Richard is noted for his hit songs ("Tutti Frutti" and "Long Tall Sally") and for his hard-driving performances, which included outlandish costumes, heavy make-up, and wild stage antics.

Born: December 5, 1932; Macon, Georgia
Also known as: Richard Wayne Penniman (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Here's Little Richard, 1957; Little Richard, 1958; The Fabulous Little Richard, 1959; Clap Your Hands, 1960; Pray Along with Little Richard, Vol. 1: A Closer Walk with Thee, 1960; Pray Along with Little Richard, Vol. 2: I'm Quitting Show Business, 1960; King of the Gospel Singers, 1962; Little Richard Sings Spirituals, 1963; Little Richard Sings Gospel, 1964; Little Richard Is Back, 1965; The Wild and Frantic Little Richard, 1965; The Explosive Little Richard, 1967; Rock 'n' Roll Forever, 1967; Good Golly Miss Molly, 1969; Little Richard, 1970; Rock Hard Rock Heavy, 1970; Mr. Big, 1971; King of Rock and Roll, 1971; The Rill Thing, 1971; Friends from the Beginning: Little Richard and Jimi Hendrix, 1972 (with Jimi Hendrix); The Second Coming, 1972; You Can't Keep a Good Man Down, 1972; Talkin 'bout Soul, 1974; Keep a Knockin', 1975; Little Richard Sings, 1976; Lifetime Friend, 1986; Shake It All About, 1992.

The Life

Born in the Deep South with several Baptist preachers for relatives, Little Richard found his roots in gospel music and in religion. He was always singing as a child, and he performed in a family gospel group. In addition, he studied the Bible, and he wanted to be a preacher. Little Richard learned to play the saxophone in school, and he learned to play piano from the flamboyant performer Esquerita (Eskew Reeder), whose outrageous outfits and pompadour hairstyle Little Richard imitated. Still in his teens, he toured in Georgia with various bands, and he made some recordings as early as 1951. His first great success was in 1955, recording "Tutti Frutti" and other hits with the producer Robert "Bumps" Blackwell at Specialty Records.

For the next two years, Little Richard was successful, but in 1957, in the middle of an Australian tour, he decided to quit show business to pursue his interests in religion. He made several gospel albums, and, except for appearing in some gospel concerts with Mahalia Jackson, he stayed away from the stage until 1962, when he went on tour in England and started performing rock and roll in his traditional flamboyant manner.

During his comeback, which produced no new major hits, he became dependent on drugs and alcohol. In 1977, declaring that rock and roll was demoniac, he again gave up show business for religion. However, he began performing again in the late 1980's, appearing on television and in the 1986 film Down and Out in Beverly Hills. In 1986 he was in the first group inducted into the new Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and in 1993 he won a Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award.

The Music

Coming from a gospel tradition, Little Richard brought "shouting" into his performances. He was known for pounding the piano, singing at top speed, and yelling "whoo-oo." He also favored wild stage behavior and outrageous costumes and make-up.

"Tutti Frutti." At his first recording session with Blackwell, Little Richard was not impressive, singing gospel and blues in an inhibited way. Concerned, Blackwell called a lunch break, during which Little Richard started playing "Tutti Frutti," a song of his own that he had not planned to record. He played it with such wild abandon that Blackwell had him record that instead. The song begins with the nonsense phrase "awop bop-a-loo mop alop bam boom." In its original version, this was followed by some off-color lyrics that Blackwell had a local songwriter clean up. It was its driving intensity, and not the lyrics, that made the song a hit. The song was covered by both Elvis Presley and Pat Boone, and these performances by white artists helped open the door to playing the work of a black performer such as Little Richard on white radio stations.

"Long Tall Sally." "Long Tall Sally" originated in three lines written by a fan, a girl named Enortis Johnson, who wanted Little Richard to turn it into a song. Though initially reluctant, Little Richard and Blackwell did build a song around the lines about Uncle John ducking into an alley with Sally to get away from his wife, Aunt Mary. According to Blackwell, he pushed Little Richard to sing the key phrase—"ducked back in the alley"—as fast as possible, so that it would be hard for a singer such as Boone to cover it. Although Boone and many others did cover it, it was Little Richard's original version that went highest in the charts, despite the reluctance of some white radio stations to play it. It became Little Richard's second big hit.

Atlantic City Pop Festival. In August, 1969, Little Richard appeared at one of the many pop festivals that year, closing the show after a performance by Janis Joplin. Joplin put on such a frenetic, apparently unsurpassable performance that the organizers suggested to Little Richard that he not go on. Little Richard insisted, and he worked the crowd into a frenzy with his act, which included appearing in a sparkly glass suit and singing an old 1950's hit, "Lucille." He ended up throwing his shoes and other parts of his expensive outfit into the crowd, something he often did at his concerts. Although Little Richard's appearance was a triumph, it indicated that he was part of an earlier era. Significantly, later that month, he did not appear at the famous music festival at Woodstock, the iconic festival that defined 1960's music.

Little Richard. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Little Richard was a leading figure in the first generation of rock, when it was still called rock and roll and when its leading instrument was the piano and not the guitar. His boisterous piano playing and wild vocals, along with his stage antics and outrageous costumes, are another part of his legacy. This new approach to music became more fully formed in the rebellious and irreverent 1960's, and in the 1970's, such bands as Kiss, featuring extreme make-up and costumes, followed in his footsteps. On a musical level, both the Beatles and the Rolling Stones paid homage to Little Richard's musical influence. Little Richard was noted for helping to bring the sound of black rhythm and blues and gospel into the mainstream of popular music, becoming one of the first black musicians to win a large white audience.

Sheldon Goldfarb

Further Reading

Brooks, Tilford. America's Black Musical Heritage. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1984. This reference briefly discusses Little Richard in the context of other black musical forms, notably rhythm and blues and soul.

Dalton, David. "Little Richard, Child of God." Rolling Stone (May 28, 1970): 29-34. In this extended interview, Little Richard comments on other artists, politics, race relations, and religion.

Gulla, Bob. "Little Richard." In Icons of R and B and Soul. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2008. This discusses Little Richard's connection to rhythm and blues. Includes a brief discography and a brief bibliography.

Helander, Brock. "Little Richard." In The Rockin' Fifties: The People Who Made the Music. New York: Schirmer Books, 1998. This source has a short biography and musical analysis. Includes discography.

Puterbaugh, Parke. "Little Richard." Rolling Stone (April 19, 1990): 50-54. In a long interview, Little Richard discusses his life and musical career.

White, Charles. The Life and Times of Little Richard: The Authorised Biography. 3d ed. London: Omnibus, 2003. First published in 1984 as The Life and Times of Little Richard: The Quasar of Rock, this is less a biography than a series of interviews with Little Richard and people who knew him. It focuses on his inner conflict between religion and rock and roll. Includes illustrations and discography.

See also: Burke, Solomon; Domino, Fats; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Haley, Bill; Hendrix, Jimi; Jackson, Mahalia; Jagger, Sir Mick; Joplin, Janis; Lennon, John; McCartney, Sir Paul; Pickett, Wilson; Presley, Elvis; Professor Longhair; Redding, Otis; Seeger, Bob; Valens, Ritchie; Vincent, Gene.

LL Cool J

American rapper

LL Cool J was one of the first hip-hop stars to reach mainstream popularity, and his music helped establish Def Jam Records, the first label dedicated to hip-hop.

Born: January 14, 1968; Bay Shore, Long Island, New York
Also known as: James Todd Smith (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Radio, 1985; Bigger and Deffer, 1987; Walking with a Panther, 1989; Mama Said Knock You Out, 1990; Fourteen Shots to the Dome, 1993; Mr. Smith, 1995; Phenomenon, 1997; G. O. A. T. Featuring James T. Smith: The Greatest of All Time, 2000; Ten, 2002; The DEFinition, 2004; Todd Smith, 2006; Todd Smith, Pt. 2: Back to Cool, 2007.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: I Make My Own Rules, 1997 (with Karen Hunter); L. L. Cool J's Platinum Workout, 2006 (with Dave Honig).

The Life

LL Cool J (ehl ehl kewl jay) was born James Todd Smith. He began rapping at age nine, and he started making demo tapes under the name LL Cool J (for Ladies Love Cool James). In 1984 LL Cool J dropped out of high school after his song "I Need a Beat" caught the attention of Rick Rubin and Russell Simmons of the newly formed Def Jam Records, which they released as the label's first single. In 1985 his first album, Radio, produced several hits, and it was certified platinum. His 1987 follow-up, Bigger and Deffer, was even more successful, being certified double platinum and producing the first rap ballad, "I Need Love," which reached number one on the rhythm-and-blues charts. He suffered a minor setback with his 1989 album, Walking with a Panther, but he reestablished himself with 1990's Mama Said Knock You Out. The popularity of this recording led to a performance at Bill Clinton's 1993 presidential inauguration ceremony. Fourteen Shots to the Dome, released in 1993, took a turn toward the West Coast gangsta style.

LL Cool J expanded beyond music into acting and fashion in the early 1990's, appearing in the films The Hard Way (1991) and Toys (1992) and in the television situation comedy In the House. In 1996 he helped launch the FUBU clothing line, and later he started the upscale Todd Smith line.

LL Cool J returned to the recording studio in 1995 to work on the double-platinum Mr. Smith, which also brought him a Grammy Award for Best Rap Solo Performance in 1996 for the song "Hey Lover," featuring Boyz II Men. In 1997 he released Phenomenon and his autobiography I Make My Own Rules.

The Music

LL Cool J was one of the first hip-hop artists to structure his work in pop style, with distinct verses and refrains. While his early music had a distinctive pop appeal, he is also known as a champion of the hardcore rap style that eschews traditional party themes and sounds in favor of more confrontational ones. "Mama Said Knock You Out" is an example of this approach. Throughout his career LL Cool J has effectively utilized hardcore rap, party rap, and even ballads, adapting effectively to the many changes in the genre over the past decades.

"Rock the Bells." The most successful song from LL Cool J's debut Radio, "Rock the Bells" rose to number seventeen on the rhythm-and-blues charts. It is hardcore bragging typical of rappers establishing themselves in the business. The backing track contains samples from Trouble Funk's "Pump Me Up," Bob James's "Take Me to Mardi Gras," and AC/DC's "Flick of the Switch."

"Goin' Back to Cali." This was the first single from LL Cool J's third album, Walking with a Panther. It peaked at number twelve on the rhythm-and-blues charts and number thirty-one on the Billboard Hot 100. It was also featured on the sound track to the film Less than Zero (1987). The backing track was a slow jam featuring a jazzy horn section. The lyrics talk about cars and women, presaging themes common in West Coast rap. The rock band Sevendust covered the song for the compilation Take a Bite Outta Rhyme: A Rock Tribute to Rap.

"Mama Said Knock You Out." The title track to the 1990 album marked a departure from the sound that made LL Cool J popular. Rather than the upbeat music and party lyrics, "Mama Said Knock You Out" is hardcore. The backing track includes samples from Sly and the Family Stone's "Trip to Your Heart" and "Sing a Simple Song" and from James Brown's "Funky Drummer." The song is in many ways a rebuttal to those who proclaimed that LL Cool J's career was over after the failure of his previous album. The opening lyrics cut across a fake news report of LL Cool J's comeback, admonishing the listener not to call it a comeback because he has not gone anywhere. The song received the Grammy Award for Best Rap Solo Performance in 1992, and it has been covered by a diverse group of performers, from rapper Busta Rhymes to hardcore band Hoods and thrash metal band Scatterbrains. It appears in the video game Def Jam: Fight for NY and the film Kangaroo Jack: G'Day USA (2004), and it was the theme song for professional wrestler Samoa Joe on the television series Ring of Honor.

"Father." The third single from Phenomenon, "Father" was the best-performing single from the album, climbing to number one on the rap chart, number twelve on the rhythm-and-blues chart, and number eighteen on the Billboard Hot 100. Semi-autobiographical, the song describes the abuse LL Cool J and his family members suffered at the hands of his father, and in it he laments growing up without a father figure. The backing track includes a sample from George Michael's "Father Figure" accented by a choir.

Musical Legacy

Along with Run-DMC, Kurtis Blow, and Public Enemy, LL Cool J paved the way for such hip-hop artists as Jay-Z, the Notorious B.I.G., and Sean Combs. His appealing pop-song approach and street-tough image helped open the door for hip-hop to be accepted by mainstream listeners. He helped to establish the legacy of Def Jam Records, one of the first record labels dedicated to hip-hop music, by providing its first single and album. In addition, LL Cool J paved the way for Jay-Z and Sean Combs to become hip-hop artists-turned-entrepreneurs. His work with the FUBU and Todd Smith clothing lines was an early example of the hip-hop artist branching out into other elements of culture.

LL Cool J. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Eric S. Strother

Further Reading

George, Nelson. Hip-Hop America. New York: Penguin, 2005. This book discusses the role of hip-hop in American society.

Gueraseva, Stacy. Def Jam, Inc.: Rick Rubin, Russell Simmons, and the Extraordinary Story of the World's Most Influential Hip-Hop Label. New York: One World-Ballantine, 2005. This history of Def Jam

Records focuses mainly on Rubin and Simmons, but it also contains references to other artists, including LL Cool J.

Light, Alan. The Vibe History of Hip-Hop. Medford, N.J.: Plexus, 1999. These essays trace the development of hip-hop.

Ogbar, Jeffrey O.G. Hip-Hop Revolution: The Culture and Politics of Rap. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas, 2007. This history of hip-hop refutes some popular perceptions of hip-hop culture.

Smith, James Todd, and Karen Hunter. I Make My Own Rules. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1998. LL Cool J's autobiography offers a candid account on his troubled childhoood and of the music industry.

See also: Brown, James; Combs, Sean; D. M. C.; Hammer, M. C.; Jay-Z; Latifah, Queen; Simmons, Joseph "Run"; Stone, Sly.

Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber

English musical-theater and film-score composer

Lloyd Webber created theatrical pieces that combine the seemingly incompatible musical approaches of classical opera, rock, and English music hall songs into unified, provocative, and exceedingly popular productions.

Born: March 22, 1948; London, England

Principal works

CHORAL WORK: Requiem Mass, 1985 (for chorus and orchestra).

FILM SCORES: Gumshoe, 1971; The Odessa File, 1974.

MUSICAL THEATER (music): The Likes of Us, composed 1965, first performed 2005 (lyrics by Tim Rice); Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, 1968 (lyrics by Rice); Jesus Christ Superstar, 1971 (lyrics by Rice); Jeeves, 1975 (lyrics by Alan Ayckbourn; based on stories by P. G. Wodehouse); Evita, 1978 (lyrics by Tim Rice); Tell Me on a Sunday, 1980 (lyrics by Don Black); Cats, 1981 (lyrics by Richard Stilgoe and Trevor Nunn; based on T. S. Eliot's poetry collection Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats); Song and Dance, 1982 (lyrics by Black); Starlight Express, 1984 (lyrics by Stilgoe; based on Wilbert Vere Awdry's Railway series books); The Phantom of the Opera, 1986 (lyrics by Charles Hart and Stilgoe; based on Gaston Leroux's novel); Aspects of Love, 1989 (lyrics by Black and Hart; based on David Garnett's novel); Sunset Boulevard, 1993 (lyrics and libretto by Christopher Hampton and Black; based on the 1950 film); Whistle Down the Wind, 1998 (lyrics by Jim Steinman; libretto by Webber, Patricia Knop, and Gale Edwards; based on the 1961 film); The Beautiful Game, 2000 (lyrics by Ben Elton; libretto by Webber and Elton); The Woman in White, 2004 (lyrics by David Zippel; libretto by Charlotte Jones; based on Wilkie Collins's novel).

SONGS (music; lyrics by Tim Rice unless otherwise stated): "Down thru' Summer," 1967; "Probably on Thursday," 1967; "Believe Me I Will," 1968; "What a Line to Go out On," 1972; "Christmas Dream," 1974; "It's Easy for You," 1977; "Magdalena," 1977; "Friends for Life," 1994 ("Amigos para siempre," Barcelona Olympic Games anthem; lyrics by Don Black).

Principal recordings

ALBUM: Variations, 1978.

The Life

Andrew Lloyd Webber is the son of composer William Lloyd Webber, who taught composition at the Royal College of Music, and Jean Lloyd Webber, author, singer, violinist, and teacher at the Royal College of Music. Andrew began playing the violin when he was three, and at the age of nine he composed and published, in the magazine Music Teacher, a suite of six pieces. Andrew's Aunt Viola, a professional actress and singer, encouraged his interest in theater. Together they built a toy theater for which he created productions. His aunt also took him to see her shows and to experience events happening backstage.

Lloyd Webber became a Queen's Scholar at Westminster and entered Oxford, where he studied history. His love for theater, however, led him to forsake school and join with the young lyricist, Tim Rice. They wrote a number of popular songs, and in 1968 they created Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat for performance at Colet Court preparatory school. The piece was a fifteen-minute retelling of the biblical story of Joseph and his coat of many colors. Later the piece was recreated as a full-length musical and opened in London's West End. It was a success, and Lloyd Webber was established as a professional theater artist.

Lloyd Webber and Rice would continue as a team into the early 1970's, creating such works as J*esus Christ Superstar*. In 1972 Lloyd Webber married Sarah Hugill, and the couple had two children: Imogene and Nicholas. In 1976 Lloyd Webber and Rice composed Evita, which became a major hit in London and on Broadway in 1978. Now an international figure and a man of increasing wealth, Lloyd Webber formed a financial company, the Really Useful Group, in 1977, and through this company he bought the Palace in London in 1983. He would go on to acquire six more London theaters, including the Theatre Royal Drury Land and the London Palladium.

In 1983 Lloyd Webber divorced his first wife, and in 1984 he married the singer and dancer Sarah Brightman, who played leads in some of his shows. In 1990 Lloyd Webber divorced Brightman and in 1991 married Madeleine Gordon, with whom he had three more children: Alastair, William, and Isabella. In 1992 he was knighted and in 1997 he was created a baron of the realm.

Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

Lloyd Webber began his musical career in partnership with lyricist Rice, and the two wrote a number of popular songs recorded on singles labels. In 1965, when Lloyd Webber was seventeen and Rice twenty-one, they created their first musical, The Likes of Us, which was not performed until 2005. In 1968 the team created Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, which was the success that launched Lloyd Webber's career. One year later the two young men put together Jesus Christ Superstar and became internationally famous.

Jesus Christ Superstar. Rice and Lloyd Webber's controversial retelling of the last days of Christ was first released as a concept album and then staged in New York, where it played for eighteen months. While billed as a rock opera, Jesus Christ Superstar contains music of a classical quality, especially the score that accompanies the Crucifixion scene. There is no doubt that Jesus Christ Superstar made the rock musical an acceptable form in the commercial theater. When the production opened at the Palace Theatre in London in 1972, it ran for eight years and became England's longest running show. The Broadway production won five Tony Awards, including Best Music. There have been several revivals and tours, including a 1992 American tour that ran for five years.

Early Film Scores. In the early 1970's Lloyd Webber composed scores for two major films: Gumshoe (1971) and The Odessa File (1974). In 1975 he composed, with Alan Ayckbourn as lyricist, the musical Jeeves, based on the novels of P. G. Wodehouse. Jeeves ran for only three weeks, but revised as By Jeeves, it had respectable runs in London and New York.

Evita. In 1976 Lloyd Webber rejoined Rice to create Evita, presenting the life of Evita Perón, who rose from an unknown struggling actress to become the wife of the president of Argentina. Evita, featuring the song "Don't Cry for Me, Argentina," was a major hit in London and transferred to Broadway, starring Patti LuPone, in 1979. Both productions ran for many years, and Lloyd Webber was firmly established as England's foremost musical-theater composer.

Variations. Musical theater was not Lloyd Webber's only contribution. In 1978 he created the album Variations, a set of musical variations based on Niccolò Paganini's Caprice in A Minor. The album, featuring rock musicians and his brother, cellist Julian Lloyd Webber, made number two on England's popular album chart. Further variety came in 1985 when, for his father's funeral, he composed Requiem Mass, for which he won a Grammy Award.

Cats. In 1981 Andrew Lloyd Webber turned to T. S. Eliot's poems in Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats and composed, in conjunction with Trevor Nunn, a musical that ran for more than twenty years in London. The New York production of Cats ran for fourteen years, setting a Broadway record only to be broken by Lloyd Webber's later work, The Phantom of the Opera. In addition to the United States and England, Cats has been presented around the world, including in Hungary, Austria, Canada, Japan, Mexico, Holland, Spain, Poland, Russia, and Australia. The songs "Gus: The Theatre Cat" and "Macavity" were popular with audiences, but the song "Memory" is embraced internationally by music lovers, even those who have never seen Cats. Lloyd Webber followed Cats in 1984 with Starlight Express, which was not especially well received, but in 1986 came what many consider to be Lloyd Webber's major work.

The Phantom of the Opera. Starring his second wife, Sarah Brightman, as Christine, The Phantom of the Opera is based upon the novel by Gaston Leroux about a deformed musical genius who lives in the bowels of the Paris Opera House and lures female audience members to his embrace and their death. The Phantom of the Opera's music may be said to take a serious turn toward opera. The song "Music of the Night," for instance, could be described as an aria, with four-four meter, which moves from D-flat major to E major. It requires the singer to possess a low baritone range and also a strong falsetto. The song may sound romantic, but it has a sinister implication, for it is sung by the Phantom after he lures the beautiful and innocent Christine into his deadly lair. Other well-received songs in the musical are "All I Ask of You," "Wishing You Were Somehow Here Again," and the title song, "The Phantom of the Opera." The New York production set a record as Broadway's longest-running show. Like Cats, Phantom of the Opera has been produced throughout the world.

Later Works. After Phantom of the Opera, Lloyd Webber wrote more musicals, among them Whistle Down the Wind, The Beautiful Game, and The Woman in White. Of these, only The Woman in White enjoyed some success.

In addition to theater, Lloyd Webber's works have appeared in film, including Jesus Christ Superstar (1973) and Evita (1996), starring Madonna. A video of Cats was made in 1998. In 1999 came the film of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat. The Phantom of the Opera was released as a motion picture in 2004.

Musical Legacy

Lloyd Webber is the most successful and popular composer for the musical theater of the late twentieth century, with productions that had records for longest-running shows in New York and London. His management company, the Really Useful Group, owns many of London's important theaters, and he is also a significant figure in the British and American film industries. Among his many honors are seven Tony Awards, six Laurence Olivier Awards, three Grammy Awards, an Academy Award, an International Emmy, and the Kennedy Center Honors. He has shown other composers the way in uniting popular, rock, and classical music.

August W. Staub

Further Reading

Citron, Stephen. Stephen Sondheim and Andrew Lloyd Webber: The New Musical. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001. Citron compares the two major contributors to the modern musical in terms of their similar backgrounds and their highly divergent approaches.

Kershaw, Baz, ed. The Cambridge History of British Theatre. Vol. 3. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 2002. This basic work on modern British theater contains considerable information on Lloyd Webber and his relation to the twentieth century British entertainment industry, as well as his international activities.

Rice, Tim. Oh, What a Circus. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1999. This detailed and witty autobiography covers Rice's early years, including a fascinating presentation of the time and hard work spent on collaborating with Lloyd Webber in the creation of their three great musicals. Considerable attention is given to the issues of marrying words to music.

Snelson, John. Andrew Lloyd Webber. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2004. Biography of Lloyd Webber and an informative examination of his contribution to British, American, and international music. Includes analysis of Lloyd Webber's dramaturgy, his musical structures, and their relation to both popular and classical formats, and how he brings his classical training to popular idioms.

Walsh, Michael. Andrew Lloyd Webber: His Life and Works. New York: Abrams, 1997. Careful and detailed presentation of Lloyd Webber's life with an insightful discussion of his various works and their importance to the culture of the twentieth century.

Wilmeth, Don, and Christopher Bigsby, eds. The Cambridge History of American Theatre. Vol. 3. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2000. Lloyd Webber figures prominently in essays on modern American theater.

See also: Rice, Sir Tim; Sondheim, Stephen.

Frank Loesser

American musical-theater composer and lyricist

Loesser was a prolific lyricist and composer who found success on Broadway as well as in film music and in independent song writing. His music is noted for clever lyrics and for the employment of classical musical elements such as fugue and counterpoint.

Born: June 29, 1910; New York, New York
Died: July 28, 1969; New York, New York
Also known as: Frank Henry Loesser (full name)

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (music and lyrics): Where's Charley?, 1948 (libretto by George Abbott); Guys and Dolls, 1950 (libretto by Abe Burrows and Joe Swerling); The Most Happy Fella, 1956 (libretto by Frank Loesser); Greenwillow, 1960 (libretto by Loesser); How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, 1961 (libretto by Burrows, Jack Weinstock, and Willie Gilbert); Perfectly Frank, 1980 (libretto by Kenny Solms).

SONGS: "In Love With the Memory of You," 1931; "Heart and Soul," 1938; "Two Sleepy People," 1938; "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition," 1942; "Roger Young," 1943; "What Do You Do in the Infantry?," 1943; "Baby, It's Cold Outside," 1949.

The Life

Born in New York City into a family of German-Jewish heritage, Frank Henry Loesser (fraynk LEH-sur) had music in his life from the start. His father, Henry Loesser, taught piano, and his older half brother, Arthur Loesser, a renowned pianist, taught at the respected Cleveland Institute of Music in Ohio for many years. Despite the prevalence of musical talent in his family, Loesser was never formally trained. When his father died unexpectedly in 1926, Loesser entered the work force, and he held a variety of jobs, including restaurant reviewer, process server, and city editor for a newspaper. Despite his wide variety of employment, Loesser intended to succeed as a lyricist in Tin Pan Alley. He signed several contracts with music publishers early in his career that were eventually terminated.

In 1936 Universal Studios offered him a six-month contract, and Loesser moved to Hollywood. Although that partnership was not enduring, Paramount Pictures offered Loesser a contract the following year, thus launching his career in film music. He remained with Paramount Pictures until 1949. During his first year in Hollywood, Loesser married Mary Alice Blankenbaker, better known by her stage name, Lynn Garland, whom he had met in New York. They had two children, Susan and John. Lynn became an important partner in Loesser's business, helping him to demonstrate his songs, to test lyrics, and to cast and produce some of his Broadway musicals. In 1942 Loesser enlisted in the Army, and he spent three years writing songs for the troops and military radio broadcasts, all the while continuing to write for Hollywood.

By the late 1940's, Loesser was ready to try his hand at Broadway. He found success there as well, and for many years he split his time between California and New York. In 1950 Loesser started his own publishing company, Frank Music Corporation, as a means to control and to publish his own work. Eventually the company grew to support other songwriters, such as Richard Adler, Jerry Ross, and Meredith Willson. Loesser and Lynn divorced in 1956, as he began a new relationship with Jo Sullivan, who was playing a leading role in The Most Happy Fella. He and Jo, who stayed together for the remainder of Loesser's life, had two children, Hannah and Emily. In 1969 Loesser, an avid smoker, succumbed to lung cancer in New York City.

The Music

Loesser's work is recognized for its witty lyrics and clever musical devices. Loesser's first song, "In Love with the Memory of You," with music by William Schuman, was published in 1931, and that led to a decade-long career as a lyricist. During that time he wrote many songs that rose to the top of the charts to become classics, including "Heart and Soul" and "Two Sleepy People." In the early 1940's, Loesser began to compose his own music for his lyrics. Although Loesser did not formally follow in the path of his classically trained family, he could not avoid the influence of classical music in his composing. One of his creations, "Baby, It's Cold Outside," which won an Academy Award in 1948, demonstrates his use of classical conventions. The song is a duet that uses extensive counterpoint between the two voices, an unconventional device in most popular music. When Loesser began to write for Broadway, he brought the same sophisticated style of composition to his scores. His effective, effortless way of merging classical techniques with popular style and outstanding lyrics led to the enduring popularity of Loesser's music.

"Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition." Although Loesser spent the first decade of his career as a lyricist, he often wrote music to accompany his lyrics to demonstrate them to the publisher or studio until a composer could be chosen to write the final music. In 1942 Loesser, pressed by colleagues and friends, tried his hand at writing music. His first attempt, "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition," was a huge success, and it encouraged Loesser to continue composing. The song was based on an incident during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, and its accessible melodic line as well as its heroic lyrical tale greatly appealed to the public during the time of crisis, as the United States was entering World War II. Although "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition" is by far the most noteworthy, it marks the first of many songs that Loesser wrote during World War II in support of the military. Among other popular hits are "What Do You Do in the Infantry?" and "Roger Young." However, "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition" is significant because it marked Loesser's transition to composer.

Frank Loesser. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Guys and Dolls. Although Loesser brought his first work as a composer to Broadway in 1948 with Where's Charley?, he made a name for himself in 1950 with the premiere of Guys and Dolls. Based on a book by Damon Runyon, the plot revolves around the lives and love affairs of tinhorn gamblers and members of the Salvation Army. The original production overflowed with talented collaborators: Abe Burrows and Joe Swerling wrote the book, Michael Kidd choreographed, and George S. Kaufman directed.

Musically speaking, Loesser's score is full of showstoppers, and several of the songs, such as "If I Were a Bell," have become standards. A notable feature of the score for Guys and Dolls is Loesser's use of classical-music conventions: He employs counterpoint, a practice almost entirely foreign to the Broadway stage at that time. His "Fugue for Tinhorns," which opens the musical, is a perfect example of Loesser's use of complex musical conventions as well as wit. The piece is not a fugue but a simple round form. This musical humor correlates perfectly with the gamblers singing "Fugue for Tinhorns," because they are pretending to be sophisticated. In this way, Loesser's music brilliantly aids in the depiction of the personalities of the characters.

When Guys and Dolls premiered at the Forty-sixth Street Theatre, it received unanimously positive reviews, and it claimed the 1951 Tony Award for Best Musical. It continues to be a cherished piece of musical theater, performed frequently by college and amateur theaters. It enjoyed two Broadway revivals, in 1976 and 1992.

The Most Happy Fella. This musical was one of the crowning achievements of Loesser's life and work. Beginning in 1952, he labored on the project for four years, writing the book, music, and lyrics. Loesser adapted the book from a play by Sidney Howard. While there are still humorous moments in The Most Happy Fella, it is essentially a drama about the genuine love that grows between Tony and his mail-order bride, Rosabella, despite their human flaws and mistakes.

Over the years, critics have been tempted to refer to The Most Happy Fella as an operatic work since a great majority of the dialogue is sung, not spoken, though Loesser was insistent that it is a musical. The score contains a mixture of catchy show tunes such as "Standing on the Corner" and of Italian, operatic-sounding music such as "Rosabella." When the musical premiered in 1956, some criticized its operatic sound and the juxtaposition of that sound to the standard Broadway style. Loesser's use of various styles once again aided in the depiction of his characters. Not surprisingly, the use of counterpoint can be found in the score as well as in songs such as "Abbondanza" and the reprise of "I Like Ev'rybody."

How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying. Based on a guide to the business world by Shepherd Mead, How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying was Loesser's most successful Broadway production, enjoying more than fourteen hundred performances after its premiere in 1961. Once again, Burrows was involved, in directing and in writing the book. Bob Fosse was in charge of the musical staging, and his stylized movement was an essential element of the success of the show. The plot follows the endeavors of the young J. Pierrepont Finch as he attempts to rise to the top of the World Wide Wicket Company.

In comparison with his other Broadway productions, Loesser's score produced few songs that became popular hits independent of the musical. Humor and satire are truly the focus of How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, and Loesser used his mastery of musical humor to enhance the production rather than draw attention to the music itself. The production won several Tony Awards, including for Best Musical, and in 1962 it was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Drama.

Musical Legacy

During his lifetime, Loesser wrote the lyrics and music to hundreds of songs. While many of his songs for film have endured, he made his greatest contribution to the Broadway stage. His work introduced a more complex artistic style that shaped the development of the Broadway musical. By challenging the standard compositional approaches of Broadway, Loesser opened the door for later composers to further expand and develop the genre.

Claire D. Maiers

Further Reading

Block, Geoffrey. "Guys and Dolls and The Most Happy Fella: The Great Loesser." In Enchanted Evenings: The Broadway Musical from Show Boat to Sondheim. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997. Block presents a thorough examination of the history and music of Guys and Dolls and The Most Happy Fella.

Ewen, David. "Frank Loesser." In American Musical Theater: A Guide to More than Three Hundred Productions of the American Musical Theater from the Black Crook (1866) to the Present, with Plot, Production History, Stars, Songs, Composers, Librettists, and Lyricists. New York: Henry Holt, 1958. Ewen overviews the professional life of Loesser, with a focus on his contributions to musical theater.

Flinn, Denny Martin. "Music." In Musical! A Grand Tour: The Rise, Glory, and Fall of an American Institution. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. Presents a brief description of the Broadway productions of Loesser, with an emphasis on factual information and some analysis.

Green, Stanley. "Frank Loesser, Richard Adler and Jerry Ross, Meredith Willson." In The World of Musical Comedy: The Story of the American Musical Stage as Told Through the Careers of Its Foremost Composers and Lyricists. 3d ed. London: A. S. Barnes, 1974. Green describes the career of Loesser and other songwriters that he nurtured through his publishing company.

Loesser, Susan. A Most Remarkable Fella: Frank Loesser and the Guys and Dolls in His Life. New York: Donald I. Fine, 1993. From her unique perspective, Loesser's eldest daughter reflects on his personal and professional life.

Riis, Thomas L. Frank Loesser. Foreword by Geoffrey Block. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2008. Riis provides an examination of Loesser's career with a focus on his Broadway compositions. Includes a crucial closing chapter that details Loesser's legacy.

See also: Arlen, Harold; Kern, Jerome; Styne, Jule; Willson, Meredith.

Frederick Loewe

German musical-theater composer

Loewe composed musicals that were closer to the traditions of the European operetta than to the jazz and pop styles popular in the United States.

Born: June 10, 1901; Berlin, Germany
Died: February 14, 1988; Palm Springs, California

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (music; lyrics and libretto by Alan Jay Lerner unless otherwise stated): Saint Louis, 1937; Salute to Spring, 1937 (lyrics and libretto by Earle T. Crooker); Great Lady, 1938 (lyrics and libretto by Crooker and Lowell Brentano); Life of the Party, 1942; What's Up?, 1943 (libretto by Alan Jay Lerner and Arthur Pierson); The Day Before Spring, 1945; Brigadoon, 1947; Paint Your Wagon, 1951; My Fair Lady, 1956 (based on George Bernard Shaw's play Pygmalion); Camelot, 1960 (based on the legend of King Arthur); Gigi, 1973; The Little Prince, 1974.

The Life

Frederick Loewe (loh) was the son of a noted Austrian singer, Edmund Loewe, and his wife, Rosa, a Viennese actress. Loewe was born on June 10, 1901, in Berlin, where his father was performing. Loewe spent his early years in Germany, but the Austrian influences of his parents made him feel more Austrian than German.

Because his parents traveled widely to meet their professional commitments, Loewe lived from age five to age thirteen in a Prussian military academy that he hated. By age eight, when he began to show an affinity for music, playing by ear most of the musical numbers his father was rehearsing, he was enrolled in Stern's Conservatory, where he was the youngest student. Although he was constantly teased by older students, he learned to defend himself, and he distinguished himself as a musician.

A gifted pianist, Loewe was a solo player with the Berlin Symphony Orchestra at age thirteen. By the time he was fifteen, he had written a song about the girl with the best legs in Berlin, "Katrina," which was popular in Germany. The sheet music sold a remarkable two million copies, although his substantial royalties were quickly consumed by Germany's runaway inflation.

Despite his remarkable achievements, Loewe felt like an unwanted child. He was forced to spend the Christmas holidays alone in his dormitory, an experience that made him resentful. During World War I, from 1914 until 1918, food was scarce, and in an interview Loewe said that he was hungry for those four years.

Loewe came to New York with his father, who was performing, in 1925, and he decided to stay. He supported himself as a prizefighter and a riding instructor until his musical skills enabled him to earn a living playing the piano and the organ. He played musical accompaniments for silent films, often composing on the spot pieces that he felt were appropriate to what was happening on the screen.

At one point, deciding he should see the West, he went to Montana, where he earned his living by delivering mail on horseback to remote places. By 1931 he was back in New York, married to Ernestine Zwerlein, and enjoying improved prospects. He was writing songs for Broadway musicals, including "Love Tiptoed Through My Heart," which was featured in Petticoat Fever (1935).

At about that time, Loewe began to collaborate with lyricist Earle T. Crooker. They placed their song "A Waltz Was Born in Vienna" in The Illustrators' Show (1936). In 1937 their Salute to Spring opened in St. Louis, but it failed to reach Broadway. Their next collaboration, Great Lady, opened on Broadway in 1938, but it was not well received, closing shortly after it opened. With the onset of World War II, Crooker enlisted in the U.S. Navy, and Loewe met Alan Jay Lerner.

Loewe, invited to rework some of the songs from Salute to Spring, asked Lerner, sixteen years his junior, to write new lyrics. The result was a musical, Life of the Party, that closed before it could reach Broadway, but the collaboration continued with another musical, What's Up?, that made it to Broadway, running for sixty-three performances. In 1945 Lerner and Loewe brought The Day Before Spring to Broadway, where it played for 167 performances. Although the musical was not a notable success, and the production lost money, its run encouraged the collaborators.

From this humble beginning, the Lerner-Loewe collaboration was born, and it lasted for some three decades, during which the pair collaborated on such highly successful musicals as Brigadoon, Paint Your Wagon, My Fair Lady, and Camelot. My Fair Lady, which ran for 2,717 performances, had the longest run of any Broadway show in its day.

Loewe suffered a heart attack in 1959, so after working on Camelot he decided to retire. He lived in retirement for a decade before being lured back into collaborating on a musical, Gigi, the film version of which received nine Academy Awards and a Tony Award for best score, but it was not a financial success.

The final Lerner-Loewe collaboration, The Little Prince, also failed financially, although it was an artistic success. Loewe retired again, living for nearly fifteen more years and dying on February 14, 1988, after suffering a heart attack at his home in Palm Springs, California.

The Music

Brigadoon. Lerner and Loewe's early success came in 1947 with Brigadoon, a musical with such memorable songs as "The Heather on the Hill," "Come to Me, Bend to Me," and "Almost Like Being in Love." Brigadoon is a fantasy set in a Scottish hamlet that comes to life for just one day every century. The dreamlike quality of its music delighted audiences. The play had a run of 581 well-attended performances. In 1954, it was made into a film starring Gene Kelly.

Paint Your Wagon. Following Brigadoon, Lerner collaborated with other musicians, but in 1951, he and Loewe resumed their collaboration with Paint Your Wagon, a musical about the California Gold Rush. It lasted for a disappointing 289 performances on Broadway, but one song from it, "They Call the Wind Maria," was a hit, bringing them a great deal of money in royalties. In 1969 the musical was made into a film starring Lee Marvin and Clint Eastwood. The film version, which cost twenty million dollars to produce, underwent considerable revision by Lerner, and it included five new songs written by André Previn. Despite brisk sales of the film's sound track, the film was not a financial success.

My Fair Lady. Finally, in 1956, Lerner and Loewe enjoyed their greatest success with My Fair Lady, an adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion (1916), the story of a linguist convinced that he can, in a short time, teach a poor flower girl to replace her Cockney accent with cultivated English and become a refined lady. The basic idea for the musical came to the collaborators in 1952, but they could not figure out how to adapt it, so they separated for two years before coming up with an idea for making the adaptation succeed artistically.

My Fair Lady, starring Rex Harrison and Julie Andrews, was a rousing success. The critical appraisals of the play following its opening on March 15, 1956, were universally enthusiastic. The play won a Tony Award for best musical. It contained some of the most memorable songs of the twentieth century, including "Get Me to the Church on Time," "I Could Have Danced All Night," "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "With a Little Bit of Luck," and "On the Street Where She Lives."

Eight years after its Broadway opening, My Fair Lady was made into a popular film starring Harrison in his Broadway role and Audrey Hepburn (with her songs sung by Marni Nixon and dubbed in) playing Eliza Doolittle. The film, which ran just short of three hours, garnered eight Academy Awards, but its high production costs made it a financial failure.

Camelot. The next Lerner-Loewe collaboration, Camelot, a musical about King Arthur and the Round Table based on T. H. White's novel, The Once and Future King (1958), had a strange trajectory. The initial reviews of it were scathing, but some of the cast, along with Lerner and Loewe, were scheduled to appear on The Ed Sullivan Show, with the cast members singing a few numbers from the play.

The results were astounding: The morning after the Sullivan show was aired, people flocked to the box office to buy tickets, and the show became an immediate success, largely through that brilliant marketing strategy. As a musical it was technically strong, but the Sullivan show gave it the exposure required to make it a resounding popular success.

The Little Prince. The final Lerner and Loewe collaboration was on The Little Prince, a musical version of Antoine de Saint-Exupéry's heartwarming 1943 novel that had completely captivated Loewe. Lerner and Loewe's score, simple and direct, captured the spirit of the original story, but the musical production, once it was out of its composers' hands, was overdone, becoming an artistic disaster. The Little Prince, through no fault of their own, was Lerner and Loewe's most significant failure.

Musical Legacy

Loewe wrote some of the most beguiling music ever to be heard in American theater. In a departure from most of the composers writing for theater from the late 1930's until the 1970's, Loewe was not greatly influenced by jazz or the music of the black community, with its strong overtone of spirituals.

Unlike many composers who came to the United States from Europe, Loewe—twenty-four when he arrived in New York—was fairly well set in his musical ways. His heritage was more closely related to the light operettas of his native Germany and Austria than they were to American music. In his musical scores, Loewe built on the traditions with which he had grown up. His work was more comparable to the operettas of Sigmund Romberg than to the musicals of Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II.

R. Baird Shuman

Further Reading

Brantley, Ben, ed. The New York Times Book of Broadway: On the Aisle for the Unforgettable Plays of the Last Century. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2001. An interesting overview of the best twentieth century Broadway plays. Worthwhile comments on the musicals of Lerner and Loewe.

Everett, William A., and Paul R. Laird, eds. The Cambridge Companion to the Musical. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2002. Most relevant are chapters seven and eight, which focus on the musicals of Rodgers and Hammerstein but relate Lerner and Loewe to the development of the modern Broadway musical.

Garebian, Keith. The Making of "My Fair Lady." Buffalo, N.Y.: Mosaic Press, 1998. A clear and useful analysis of how Lerner and Loewe turned Shaw's Pygmalion into a musical that became their most celebrated collaboration.

Lees, Gene. Inventing Champagne: The Worlds of Lerner and Loewe. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1990. The authoritative study of the musicals of Lerner and Loewe, meticulously researched and clearly presented.

_____. The Musical Worlds of Lerner and Loewe. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2005. An updated version of Lee's Inventing Champagne, offering useful additional insights into the collaboration.

Lerner, Alan Jay. The Musical Theater: A Celebration. New York: McGraw Hill, 1986. A comprehensive study of musical theater in the United States that at times is not wholly accurate in the small details.

McLamore, Alyson. Musical Theater: An Appreciation. Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 2004. Considerable analysis of the musicals of Lerner and Loewe and of their contributions to musical theater.

Shapiro, Doris. We Danced All Night: My Life Behind the Scenes with Alan Jay Lerner. New York: William Morrow, 1990. An insider's view of the Lerner and Loewe collaboration by the woman who was Lerner's secretary and assistant for a decade and a half.

See also: Andrews, Dame Julie; Chevalier, Maurice; Hammerstein, Oscar, II; Kern, Jerome; Lerner, Alan Jay; Previn, Sir André; Rodgers, Richard; Romberg, Sigmund.

Alan Lomax

American musicologist, producer, and author

A driving force in the folk and blues boom of the 1950's and 1960's, Lomax discovered such artists as Leadbelly, Pete Seeger, and Muddy Waters. By recording them, he preserved folk songs from England, Scotland, Ireland, the Caribbean, Spain, Italy, and the United States.

Born: January 31, 1915; Austin, Texas
Died: July 19, 2002; Safety Harbor, Florida

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as producer): The Grey Goose, 1934 (with James Baker and John Avery Lomax); The Gypsy Davey, 1940 (with Woody Guthrie); Sod Buster Ballads: Folk Songs of the Early West, 1941 (with the Almanac Singers, including Pete Seeger and Guthrie); Afro-American Spirituals, Work Songs, and Ballads, 1942 (with others); Listen to Our Story: A Panorama of American Ballads, 1947 (with others); Negro Prison Songs from the Mississippi State Penitentiary, 1947; Alan Lomax Presents Folk Song Saturday Night, 1950 (with others); Darling Corey, 1950 (with Pete Seeger); Irish Folk Songs, 1950 (with Seamus Ennis); Mountain Frolic, 1950; Take This Hammer: Huddie Ledbetter Memorial Album, 1950; English Folk Songs, 1954 (with Peter Kennedy); French Folk Songs, 1954; Spanish Folk Music, 1954; Alan Lomax Sings Great American Ballads, 1958; American Song Train, 1958 (with others); Music and Song of Italy, 1958 (with Diego Carpitella); Texas Folk Songs, 1958 (with Guy Carawan and John Cole); Blues in the Mississippi Night, 1959 (with others); American Folk Songs for Children, 1960 (with others); Sounds of the South, 1960 (with others); Animal Songs, 1961 (with Kennedy); The Child Ballads, Vol. 1, 1961 (with Francis James Child); The Child Ballads, Vol. 2, 1961 (with Child); Folk Songs of the Ozarks, 1961 (with others); Georgia Sea Islands, Vol. 1, 1961; Georgia Sea Islands, Vol. 2, 1961; Heather and Glen, 1961; Jack of All Trades, 1961 (with Kennedy); Negro Church Music, 1961; Sailormen and Servingmaids, 1961 (with Kennedy); Songs of Christmas, 1961 (with Kennedy); Songs of Courtship, 1961 (with Kennedy); Songs of Seduction, 1961 (with Kennedy); White Spirituals, 1961; Brown Girl in the Ring, 1962; Hootenanny 2, 1963 (with others); Hootenanny 3, 1963 (with others); Raise a Ruckus and Have a Hootenanny with Alan Lomax and the Dupree Family, 1963 (with the Dupree Family); The Wayfaring Stranger, 1963 (with Burl Ives); Animal Songs, 1964 (with Kennedy); Italian Folk Songs, 1965 (with Carla Bianco); Andalusia, 1969; The Spanish Basques, 1969; Woody Guthrie Remembered, 1971 (with others); Cowboy Songs of the Old West, 1994 (with Ed McCurdy); The Spanish Recordings: Mallorca—The Balearic Islands, 2007.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Negro Folk Songs as Sung by Leadbelly, 1936 (with John Avery Lomax); American Ballads and Folk Songs, 1941 (with John Avery Lomax); Our Singing Country, 1941 (with John Avery Lomax); American Folk Song and Folklore, 1942 (with Sidney Robertson Cowell); Folk Songs of the United States, 1942; Cowboy Songs and Other Frontier Ballads, 1945 (with John Avery Lomax); Folk Song: U.S.A., 1947 (with John Avery Lomax); The People's Songbook, 1948 (with Waldemar Hille); Tribal Voices in Many Tongues, 1949; Mister Jelly Roll, 1950; Columbia World Library of Folk and Primitive Music, 1955-1964; Folk Songs of North America, 1960; Folk Songs of Great Britain, 1961; Hard-Hitting Songs for Hard-Hit People, 1967; Folk Song Style and Culture, 1968 (with Edwin E. Erickson); The Penguin Book of American Folk Songs, 1968; Three Thousand Years of Black Poetry: An Anthology, 1970 (with Raoul Abdul); The Land Where the Blues Began, 1993; Alan Lomax: Selected Writings, 1934-1997, 2003 (with Ronald D. Cohen).

The Life

Alan Lomax (LOH-max) was the son of John Avery Lomax, a onetime banker who became a preeminent collector of cowboy songs and Southwestern American folklore, and Bess Baumann Brown. Growing up in Texas, Lomax listened to the songs in his father's collection, he became an advocate of America's folk-music traditions. Lomax often acted as his father's assistant. Subsequently, the Lomax family moved to Washington, D.C., so Lomax's father could work full time for the Library of Congress. With his father, Lomax began collecting folk music for the Library of Congress, lugging a five-hundred-pound recording machine through the South and West, as they collected the songs of cowboys, plantation workers, prisoners, and others who were rarely heard. Lomax attended Choate and spent a year at Harvard, but he left in 1933 to enroll at the University of Texas, from which he graduated in 1936. Later, he did graduate work in anthropology at Columbia University.

Lomax was appointed to head the Archive of American Folk Song (now the American Folklife Center), which he and his father helped establish at the Library of Congress. He married Elizabeth Lyttleton Harold in February, 1937, and they went to Haiti for their honeymoon to do field research; they soon had a daughter. Later that year, he joined his father, who was an honorary curator for the Library of Congress, as the first federally funded employee of that government office. In 1939 Lomax began a weekly radio program on CBS Radio, American School of the Air, and then he was given a network program, Back Where I Come From. In 1948 he was the host of On Top of Old Smokey, a radio show on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

In the early 1940's, Lomax made extensive recordings of songs and stories by Woody Guthrie, both for the Library of Congress and for commercial release on RCA Victor as Dust Bowl Ballads. In 1941 he made the first recordings of McKinley Morganfield, a cotton picker and blues singer better known by his nickname, Muddy Waters.

After leaving the Library of Congress, Lomax continued his career as a musicologist, author, radio broadcaster, filmmaker, concert and record producer, and television host. He made films about dance with Forrestine Paulay, a movement analyst, in the 1970's. He wrote, directed, and produced a documentary, The Land Where the Blues Began, in 1985, and he wrote, directed, narrated, and produced American Patchwork, a series of programs on American traditions shown on public television in the early 1990's. For such efforts, he was awarded the National Medal of the Arts.

In the 1990's, he started work on the vast Alan Lomax Collection, which presented songs that he collected throughout his entire career, with Rounder Records. He traveled globally, making documentary recordings, and he founded the Association for Cultural Equity at Hunter College in New York City, now directed by his daughter, Anna Lomax Wood. In 1986 he received the National Medal of Arts from the National Endowment for the Arts, and in 1993 he received the National Book Critics Circle award for nonfiction for his book, The Land Where the Blues Began.

He married his second wife, Antoinette Marchand, in 1961. After suffering a massive stroke in 1996, Lomax largely retired. In 2002 he died at the age of eighty-seven in a nursing home in Safety Harbor, Florida.

The Music

Collecting Southern Folk Music. Thomas Edison's widow gave Lomax's father an old-fashioned Edison cylinder machine, so that he might record Negro tunes for a forthcoming book of American ballads. In the summer of 1933, Lomax accompanied his father on a trip for the Library of Congress, during which they recorded a prisoner in Angola, Louisiana, named Huddie Ledbetter, known as Leadbelly.

Lomax's father helped secure Leadbelly's release in 1934, and Lomax produced Leadbelly's albums Negro Sinful Songs (1939) and The Midnight Special (1940), prison songs performed with the Golden Gate Quartet. Lomax and his father held part of the copyright to Leadbelly's song "Goodnight Irene," and the royalties they received when the Weavers' recording of it became a huge pop hit in 1950 helped finance their research trips.

Lomax also recorded hours of interviews with the New Orleans jazz composer Jelly Roll Morton in the 1930's, an early oral-history project that resulted in a classic twelve-volume set of recordings and an influential book on early jazz, Mister Jelly Roll (1950). The result of this music "archaeology" was the songs they gathered for the book American Ballads and Folk Songs.

The Caribbean and Florida Coast. During the 1930's, Lomax was on the road regularly, gathering songs across rural America and in the Caribbean. He recorded gospel songs, Cajun fiddle tunes, country blues, calypsos, New Orleans jazz, Tex-Mex music, and Haitian voodoo rituals. The Great Depression and labor-organizing songs he collected were released in 1967 as Hard-Hitting Songs for Hard-Hit People.

In 1935 Lomax traveled with the writer Zora Neale Hurston and the folklorist Mary Elizabeth Barnicle to collect music from the Georgia Sea Islands and along the Florida coast. The music of black migrant workers in the Sea Islands led Lomax and Barnicle to the Bahamas in 1935. While recording work songs from sponge fishermen on Andros Island, Lomax interviewed them about their jobs. When he returned to Nassau, the capital of the Bahamas, he was expelled by officials who believed he was stirring up worker unrest.

Working ceaselessly, Lomax and his partner released more song collections in the ensuing years, including Cowboy Songs and Other Frontier Ballads, Negro Folk Songs as Sung by Leadbelly, Our Singing Country, and Folk Song: U.S.A. Lomax and his father changed the popular perception of folk music from archival nostalgia into a living expression of the common man and contemporary culture. In the process, they unearthed musical artists whose work would become enduring contributions to the musical landscape of the United States.

The War Years. In 1943 the Library of Congress had decided it could no longer fund the Lomax father-and-son song-gathering expeditions, which were mostly done on a shoestring budget. Lomax joined the U.S. Army, where he was assigned to the U.S. Office of War Information, the wartime propaganda agency, and to the Army's Special Services until the end of World War II. As a civilian, he continued his prewar activities, exploring the origins of the blues with Sonny Boy Williamson, Memphis Slim, and Big Bill Broonzey; hosting a folk music series On Top of Old Smokey for the Mutual Network; and supporting the developing folk music revival by signing on as the director of folk music at Decca Records.

Europe. During the era of McCarthyism, from the late 1940's to the late 1950's, when left-wing performers were blacklisted because of their political views, Lomax left the country. He received a Guggenheim Fellowship to study British folk music, and he lived in England from 1950 to 1957. He compiled an archive of British folk songs, and he created programs for English radio and television. From 1951 to 1957, he served as the editor for the Columbia Records World Library of Folk and Primitive Music, and he released his findings on the ten-album Folk Songs of Great Britain. Lomax also collected folk music in Spain in 1953-1954 and in Italy in 1955, helping to spur folk revivals in those countries. Those collecting trips also resulted in two ten-part BBC radio series, on Spanish and Italian folk music. From 1955 to 1964, Columbia Records issued the eighteen-volume Columbia World Library of Folk and Primitive Music, a pioneering survey of world music that included songs from French Africa, Indonesia, Korea, Formosa, and Venezuela. Folk Songs of the United States, a five-album set, was drawn from Lomax's field recordings for the Library of Congress.

Back to the South. When he returned to the United States, Lomax revisited the Deep South, where he continued documenting African American culture. Along the way, he discovered country bluesman Mississippi Fred. On a 1962 trip to the Caribbean, Lomax recorded calypsos, Indo-Caribbean chaupai songs, work songs, children's songs, and steel-band music. He left an archive of Caribbean music at the University of the West Indies, which also shared in the royalties on recordings.

University Career. Lomax became a research associate in Columbia University's department of anthropology and Center for the Social Sciences in 1962, where he began research in cantometrics and choreometrics. These are systems for notating and studying music and dance to discover broad patterns correlating musical styles to other social factors, from subsistence methods to attitudes about sexuality. He was associated with Columbia University until 1989, when he moved his work to Hunter College.

World Travel. Funded by numerous grants, Lomax continued to travel the world, documenting music in Spain, Africa, France, the Caribbean, the West Indies, and various prisons around the world. The results of these trips have been steadily released by Rounder Records, which has produced more than a hundred albums. In 1966 Lomax began to work in film, and he accumulated enough footage to make several documentary films, including the 1990 public television series American Patchwork.

The Global Jukebox. In the 1980's, Lomax began work on the Global Jukebox, a database of thousands of songs and dances cross-referenced with anthropological data. With video, text, and sound, the Global Jukebox lets users trace cross-cultural connections and seek historical roots. The MacArthur Foundation and the National Science Foundation gave Lomax grants to create the Global Jukebox, and in 1989 he set up the Association for Cultural Equity at Hunter College to work on the project.

In 2004 public television told the story of some of his extensive travels with its documentary Lomax the Song Hunter (2004), a Dutch film directed by Rogier Kappers and produced by Joost Verhey for MM Filmprodukties in coproduction with Netherlands Programmes Service. When director Kappers visited him in 2001, Lomax could no longer speak because of the effects of a stroke, so Kappers portrayed him through the commentary of family, friends, and colleagues. The director retraced, in an identical van, Lomax's journeys made decades earlier in Scotland, Spain, and Italy, to film the songs and dances of people he recorded in those places. The documentary, which has won several awards, was aired on the public television series POV in 2006.

Musical Legacy

In a 1991 interview with Charles Kuralt, Lomax spoke of his work and how it changed the lives of the artists he recorded:

> The incredible thing was, when you could play this material back to the people, it changed everything for them. They realized that their stuff and they were just as good as anybody else. Then I found out that what I was really doing—and what my father was really doing—was giving an avenue for these people to express themselves and their side of the story.

Lomax dedicated his entire life to collecting and recording the world's folk music. From the time he left his position at the Library of Congress in 1942 through the end of his long and productive career as an internationally known folklorist, author, radio broadcaster, filmmaker, concert and record producer, and television host, Lomax amassed one of the most important collections of ethnographic material in the world. Acting on his belief that folklore and expressive culture are essential to human continuity and adaptation, he made it his lifelong goal to create a public platform for their continued use and enjoyment as well as a scientific framework for their further understanding. His efforts ensured that people everywhere could share the priceless heritage of music. Lomax's groundbreaking work allowed hundreds of performers to carry folk tradition into the twenty-first century, and he preserved the flavor and integrity of the original work.

Lomax's substantial collection of sound recordings, motion picture recordings, photographs, journals, field notes, and other material was acquired by the Library of Congress in 2004. The Alan Lomax Collection comprises the unparalleled ethnographic documentation collected by Lomax over a period of sixty years, and it joins the material collected during the 1930's and early 1940's for the Library's Archive of American Folk Song. In 1997 Rounder Records began issuing its Alan Lomax Collection, a series of more than a hundred albums recorded by Lomax in the Deep South, the Bahamas, the Caribbean, the British Isles, Spain, and Italy. A recording Lomax made in Mississippi in 1959 of a prisoner, James Carter, singing the work song "Po' Lazarus," opens the Grammy Award-winning sound track of the 2000 film O Brother, Where Art Thou?

Martin J. Manning

Further Reading

Lomax, Alan. The Land Where the Blues Began. New York: New Press, 2002. In this memoir, Lomax surveys the blues, introduces some of the genre's great artists, and reveals the soul of American black music: its history, its poetry, and its connections to African culture. The book earned a National Book Critics Circle Award for nonfiction in 1993.

_____. Selected Writings, 1934-1997. Edited by Ronald D. Cohen. New York: Routledge, 2005. Drawing on the Lomax Archives in New York, this book brings together articles from the 1930's onward. It is divided into four sections, each capturing a distinct period in the development of Lomax's career: the original years as a collector and promoter; the period from 1950 to 1958 when Lomax was recording throughout Europe; the folk-music revival years; and finally his work in academia.

Porterfield, Nolan. Last Cavalier: The Life and Times of John A. Lomax, 1867-1948. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1996. Although the book is a biography of Lomax's father, there is information on Lomax's early years and his start as a folklorist on his father's expeditions for the Library of Congress.

See also: Guthrie, Woody; House, Son; Ives, Burl; Jefferson, Blind Lemon; Johnson, Robert; Leadbelly; Ritchie, Jean; Sandburg, Carl; Seeger, Charles; Seeger, Pete; Seeger, Ruth Crawford; Waters, Muddy.

Lyle Lovett

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Lovett is an influential force on the songwriting scene, with his assortment of humorous, quirky, cynical songs and heartfelt, sensitive ballads. His musical range extends far beyond a country band setting, incorporating big band jazz, soul, and gospel elements.

Born: November 1, 1957; Klein, Texas
Also known as: Lyle Pearce Lovett (full name)
Member of: Lyle Lovett and His Large Band

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Lyle Lovett, 1986; Pontiac, 1987; Joshua Judges Ruth, 1992; I Love Everybody, 1994; The Road to Ensenada, 1996; Step Inside This House, 1998; Doctor T and the Women, 2000; My Baby Don't Tolerate, 2003; Smile: Songs from the Movies, 2003.

ALBUMS (with Lyle Lovett and His Large Band): Lyle Lovett and His Large Band, 1989; Live in Texas, 1999; It's Not Big It's Large, 2007.

The Life

Bernell and William Pearce Lovett welcomed their only child, Lyle Pearce Lovett (LUH-veht), into the world on November 1, 1957. He grew up on his family's farm in Klein, Texas, a town founded by German immigrant Adam Klein, Lovett's great-grandfather. After spending most of his childhood on the farm, Lovett graduated from high school and began his postsecondary studies at Texas A&M University. He completed his academic career with degrees in German and journalism, having spent time studying abroad in Rothenberg, Germany. During college Lovett began singing and writing songs, and when his early demo recordings wound up in the hands of MCA executive Tony Brown, Lovett was soon signed to MCA Records in 1984.

In 1993 Lovett made national headlines by announcing his marriage to actress Julia Roberts. The marriage was fairly short-lived, however, and the two divorced in 1995. In addition to his musical career, Lovett has acted in many films, including

The Player (1992) and Short Cuts (1993), both directed by Robert Altman.

The Music

Lyle Lovett. Lovett's self-titled debut album is a country record that foreshadows the increase in genre-borrowing that would mark many of his subsequent releases. Such tunes as "This Old Porch" and the popular "Closing Time" represent the straightforward, well-crafted country style, while "Cowboy Man" and "God Will" represent the humorous, unpredictable songwriting that provides Lovett with his eccentric reputation. The album was produced by Brown and featured many Nashville session musicians providing a solid foundation, with backing vocals from Rosanne Cash and guitar and backing vocals from Vince Gill.

Pontiac. Pontiac picked up where Lyle Lovett left off, though more heavily influenced by blues and jazz, again balancing well-crafted country songs ("If I Had a Boat," "L.A. County") with quirky jazz-blues selections ("She's No Lady," "M-O-N-E-Y"). Most reviews of Pontiac labeled it an improvement over Lovett's debut, a musically shifting yet thematically cohesive set of songs that left critics desirous of upcoming material. Lovett absorbed this praise and nurtured his inclination to incorporate a wide array of musical influences into his country background. His career, however, would be marked by consistently high critical praise and the marketing uncertainty of whether Lovett should be presented as a country or pop artist.

Lyle Lovett. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Lyle Lovett and His Large Band. Lovett formed a big band for his third release, Lyle Lovett and His Large Band. From the opening notes of the Clifford Brown instrumental that begins the record ("The Blues Walk"), it is clear that Lovett had no intention of performing within the boundaries of a single musical genre. The first original Lovett tracks on the record—"Here I Am," "Cryin' Shame," and "Good Intentions"—are all swinging numbers complete with brass hits and witty Lovett lyrics. The second half of the record is quite different in that it returns to a more country-influenced sound for such tunes as "I Married Her Just Because She Looks Like You" and "Nobody Knows Me." Lovett's career is one of musical risk-taking, and the formation of his Large Band was a critical and popular success.

Joshua Judges Ruth. In pure Lovett fashion, Joshua Judges Ruth departed from both the jazz influence of Lyle Lovett and His Large Band and the country influence of Lyle Lovett. This release was a set of blues-gospel songs that included "I've Been to Memphis," "Church," and "She Makes Me Feel Good." These blues tunes are contrasted with vocal-dominated ballads such as "Baltimore" and "North Dakota," making for an album with less outward humor and stylistic variation.

I Love Everybody. The next three releases—I Love Everybody, The Road to Ensenada, and Step Inside This House—all follow the Lovett path of dramatically changing paths with every record. I Love Everybody is a collection of previously written Lovett material, featuring the witty, unconventional country-influenced songwriting that was largely absent from Joshua Judges Ruth. Songs most representative of this album's style include "Skinny Legs," "Fat Babies," "Creeps Like Me," and "Penguins."

The Road to Ensenada. The Road to Ensenada brought the return of Lovett's traditional country influence that had not consistently been heard since his self-titled debut. The album is consistent from beginning to end, with standout tracks "Don't Touch My Hat," "Her First Mistake," "That's Right (You're Not from Texas)," and "Private Conversation."

Step Inside This House. Step Inside This House is a collection of rare country covers that was surely a personal restatement of his dedication to country music (along with the country leanings of The Road to Ensenada). Artists whose work is covered on Step Inside This House include, among others, Townes Van Zandt, Robert Earl Keen, and Steve Fromholz.

Later Albums. Live in Texas and It's Not Big It's Large reunited the Large Band, with Live in Texas showcasing the talent of the Large Band members on a collection of Lovett's greatest hits. Lovett's stylistically diverse My Baby Don't Tolerate features a combination of country, gospel, and jazz-blues songs rather than a concentration on one style. Lovett also composed, arranged, and performed on the sound track to Robert Altman's film Dr T and the Women.

Musical Legacy

Lovett's legacy falls in line with fellow songwriters Randy Newman and Tom Waits. All three have penetrated into uncharted musical territories in creating settings for their exceptional lyrical talents. Lovett's desire to incorporate many musical styles into his country-music upbringing (big band, gospel, folk, blues, rock) has made him an influential figure to all musicians who wish to cross musical boundary lines and take stylistic chances with their work. Lovett has won four Grammy Awards: Best Country Album in 1996 for The Road to Ensenada, Best Country Male Vocal in 1989 for Lyle Lovett and His Large Band, Best Country Performance for Duo-Group with Vocal in 1994 for Asleep at the Wheel's Blues for Dixie, and Best Pop Vocal Collaboration in 1994 for "Funny How Time Slips Away," a duet with soul legend Al Green.

Eric Novod

Further Reading

Bogdanov, Vladimir, Chris Woodstra, and Stephen Thomas Erlewine. All Music Guide to Country: The Definitive Guide to Country Music. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. A comprehensive guide to country-music recordings, with more than thirty Lovett references.

Evans, Nick, and Jeff Horne. Song Builder: The Life and Music of Guy Clarke. Roeland Park, Kans.: Amber Waves, 2002. Lovett wrote the foreword to this book about one of his musical influences.

Reid, Jan. "The Improbable Rise of Lyle Lovett." Texas Monthly 26, no. 10 (October, 1998): 94. A Lovett interview discussing his country-music influences and songwriting style.

_____. The Improbable Rise of Redneck Rock. New ed. Austin: University of Texas Press, 2004. This book on Texas country-roots-rock musicians offers a brief section on Lovett.

Wilkinson, Alex. "Homeboy: The World of Lyle Lovett." New Yorker, March 1, 2004. An in-depth interview with Lovett about his music and life in Klein, Texas.

See also: Brown, Clifford; Green, Al; Lang, K. D.; Newman, Randy; Van Zandt, Townes; Waits, Tom; Wynette, Tammy.

Alvin Lucier

American experimental composer

Lucier is a seminal figure in the history of electronic music, expanding traditional concepts by exploring the musicality of natural sound phenomena and by using technologies intended for scientific study to musical ends.

Born: May 14, 1931; Nashua, New Hampshire
Also known as: Alvin Augustus Lucier (full name)

Principal works

EXPERIMENTAL WORKS: Fragments for Strings, 1961; Action Music, 1962; Music for Solo Performer, 1965; Chambers, 1968; Vespers, 1968; I Am Sitting in a Room, 1970; The Queen of the South, 1972; Outlines of Persons and Things, 1975; Still and Moving Lines of Silence in Families of Hyperbolas, 1975 (revised as Eleven Solos and a Duet, 1984; comprising twelve pieces: clarinet; marimba; viola; voice; xylophone; violin duets; flute; glockenspiel; cello; horn; vibraphone; violin solo); Music on a Long Thin Wire, 1977; Clocker, 1978; Directions of Sounds from the Bridge, 1978; Solar Sound, 1979; Music for Pure Waves, Bass Drums, and Acoustic Pendulums, 1980; Sferics, 1980; Sound on Paper, 1985; Silver Street Car for the Orchestra, 1988; Nothing Is Real (Strawberry Fields Forever), 1990; Spira Mirabilis, 1994; Opera with Objects, 1996; Skin, Meat, Bone, 1997 (with Robert Wilson); Wave Song, 1997; Diamonds, 1999; Piper, 2000; Ovals, 2001; Ever Present, 2002; Just Before Dark, 2002; The Exploration of the House, 2005; Music with Missing Parts, 2007.

The Life

Alvin Augustus Lucier (loo-SYAY) was born in Nashua, New Hampshire, in 1931. He was named after his father, a classically trained violinist and a lawyer who was elected mayor of Nashua in 1937. His mother, Kathryn Lemery Lucier, played popular songs on the piano. Some of Lucier's earliest musical memories are of his mother and father playing music together.

Lucier studied drums beginning around age nine, performing with the school band and later as a substitute in the New Haven Symphony. His early interest was jazz, including the big bands of Stan Kenton and Count Basie.

He attended Portsmouth Priory preparatory school in Rhode Island, and upon graduation he entered Yale University in 1950, where he became interested in classical music, studying composition with Richard Donovan, David Kraehenbuehl, and Quincy Porter. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Yale College in 1954, and he briefly attended the Yale School of Music from 1955 to 1956.

In 1958 Lucier entered a master's degree program at Brandeis University, studying with Arthur Berger, Irving Fine, and Harold Shapero. In 1959 he attended the Tanglewood courses, studying composition with Aaron Copland and Lukas Foss.

He completed his master of fine arts degree at Brandeis in 1960, and he was awarded a Fulbright fellowship to study in Italy, where he spent two years. He enrolled in the Benedetto Marcello Conservatory in Venice, and he studied with Giorgio Federico Ghedini. During the second year, Lucier moved to Rome to study with Boris Porena. He attended the Darmstadt International Summer Courses for New Music in Germany, where he was first exposed to the music of John Cage and David Tudor.

In 1963 Lucier was invited to join the Brandeis University faculty as a choral director. In that position, he performed and recorded works by Earle Brown, Morton Feldman, Robert Ashley, Pauline Oliveros, and others. In 1970 Lucier joined the faculty of Wesleyan University as the John Spencer Camp Professor of Music.

The Music

Lucier's earliest music, composed while a student at Yale University, was written in the style of Igor Stravinsky. During his time in Italy, Lucier delved into the compositional approaches of the European avant-garde, composing Fragments for Strings for string quartet and Action Music for piano. He also experimented with tape music, composing at the electronic music studios in Milan. Upon his return to the United States, Lucier realized that the European styles in which he had been studying and composing were not his natural aesthetic voice.

Inspired in part by his colleagues, Tudor and Cage, Lucier reinvented himself with a composition for amplified brainwaves, Music for Solo Performer. In 1966 Lucier formed an electronic music group with composers Robert Ashley, David Behrman, and Gordon Mumma called the Sonic Arts Union, and together they developed a uniquely American style of live electronic music. They toured widely until 1976. Lucier's subsequent work continued to explore sound phenomena, such as Vespers, which used Sondol echolocation devices to musical ends.

In the mid-1970's, Lucier returned to composing for acoustic instruments, applying his approach to sonic phenomena in a series of works called Still and Moving Lines of Silence in Families of Hyperbolas. Other pieces from this era came closer to gallery installations than standard concert pieces, such as Music for Pure Waves, Bass Drums, and Acoustic Pendulums, which used sweeping sine tones to cause Ping-Pong balls hanging in front of bass drums to move wildly, striking the drumheads in indeterminate rhythms based on their unique vibratory properties.

Since the 1990's, Lucier has followed his exploratory path, writing pieces that consider the sonic properties of resonant vessels such as the teapot, in Nothing Is Real (Strawberry Fields Forever), and that examine acoustic interference patterns with bagpipes, in Piper.

Music for Solo Performer. Composed in 1965, Music for Solo Performer was a self-proclaimed conceptual turning point in Lucier's work. While teaching at Brandeis University, Lucier was approached by Edmond Dewan, a scientist who had developed equipment that could be used to amplify brainwaves, and Dewan asked Lucier if he would compose a piece of music using the equipment. Lucier's colleagues encouraged him to make a tape piece with prerecorded brainwaves, but he decided instead to perform live, placing percussion instruments throughout the venue with speakers behind them. During the performance, as Lucier sat motionless in a chair with electrodes attached to his head, the highly amplified low-frequency pulses of his alpha waves caused the percussion instruments to sound. This was an early example of what would later be called biofeedback music. This meditative, nonreactive approach to music characterizes much of Lucier's work, singular in the otherwise overtly expressive 1960's American arts scene.

I Am Sitting in a Room. This piece begins with a recording of Lucier's voice intoning the words, "I am sitting in a room, different than the one you are in. . . ." The recording was played back into the same room, and it was rerecorded fifteen times. With each iteration, the resonant frequencies of the room are gradually reinforced, filtering the original speech through the room's acoustics to eventual incomprehensibility. Lucier returned to this conceptual ground, composing The Exploration of the House and Music with Missing Parts, both of which record live orchestras playing standard repertoire, then project and recycle the recording into the space until the sounds reinforce the acoustic properties of the concert venue while blurring the original recording.

Still and Moving Lines of Silence in Families of Hyperbolas. This collection of pieces marked Lucier's return to composing for acoustic instruments, and it charted an approach that he continued to explore. Using sine wave oscillators, Lucier has acoustic instruments play notes that are slightly above or below the pure tones, creating rhythmic beating patterns normally associated with being out of tune. This interaction of the sound waves gives the pieces their rhythmic character and their sense of spatiality, as the colliding waves occasionally create the illusion of sounds spinning around a listener.

Musical Legacy

Lucier's work has influenced musicians and composers from many genres. His aesthetic exploration of the physics of sound and his use of scientific principles and instruments for musical purposes have had wide-reaching implications for music performance and composition. By eliminating the need for a composer to express sound, and instead attempting to reveal its mysteries, Lucier has expanded upon philosophical tenets put forth by his colleague, Cage, and Lucier has taken those conceptual advancements to further conclusions.

Andrew Raffo Dewar

Further Reading

DeLio, Thomas. Circumscribing the Open Universe: Essays on Cage, Feldman, Wolff, Ashley, and Lucier. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1984. Thought-provoking and creative analyses of works by Lucier and his contemporaries.

Lucier, Alvin. "Origins of a Form: Acoustical Exploration, Science, and Incessancy." Leonardo Music Journal 8 (1999): 5-11. Important article by the composer on his role in the development of live electronic music.

_____. Reflections: Interviews, Scores, Writings. Cologne, Germany: MusikTexte, 1995. Comprehensive collection of interviews, scores, and essays by the composer.

Lucier, Alvin, with D. Simon. Chambers. Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan University Press, 1980. An early anthology of scores and writings by the composer.

Mumma, Gordon. "Alvin Lucier's Music for Solo Performer." Source 2 (1968): 68-69. An historic article by a member of the Sonic Arts Union, who discusses a pivotal Lucier work.

See also: Basie, Count; Cage, John; Copland, Aaron; Stravinsky, Igor.

Witold Lutosławski

Polish classical composer

An important Polish composer, Lutosławski is best known for his lush orchestral sound, his command of gesture and proportion, and introducing aleatoric, or chance, principles within a tightly controlled formal environment.

Born: January 25, 1913; Warsaw, Poland, Russian Empire (now in Poland)
Died: February 7, 1994; Warsaw, Poland

Principal works

CELLO WORK: Sacher Variation, 1975.

CHAMBER WORKS: Symphonic Variations, 1938; Trio, 1945 (for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon); Mala suita, 1950 (Little Suite); Preludia taneczne, 1954 (Dance Preludes; for clarinet and piano); Gry weneckie, 1961 (Venetian Games); String Quartet, 1964; Epitaph, 1979 (for oboe and piano); Double Concerto, 1980 (for oboe, harp, and chamber orchestra); Mini Overture, 1982 (for brass quintet); Partita, 1984 (for violin and piano); Chain II, 1985 (for violin and chamber orchestra); Przezrocza, 1989 (Slides); Subito, 1992 (for violin and piano).

CHORAL WORKS: Lacrimosa, 1937 (for soprano, optional chorus, and orchestra); Trois Poèmes d'Henri Michaux, 1963 (Three Poems by Henri Michaux; for chorus and orchestra).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Suita Warszawska, 1946 (Warsaw Suite); Symphony No. 1, 1947; Overture for Strings, 1949; Concerto, 1954; Muzyka zalobna, 1958 (Funeral Music; for string orchestra); Three Postludes, 1963; Symphony No. 2, 1967; Livre, 1968; Cello Concerto, 1970; Preludes and Fugue, 1972 (for thirteen solo strings); Mi-parti, 1976; Novelette, 1979; Grave: Metamorphoses, 1981 (for cello and string orchestra); Chain I, 1983; Symphony No. 3, 1983; Chain II, 1986; Chain III, 1986; Fanfare for Louisville, 1986 (for woodwind, brass, and percussion); Partita, 1988 (for violin and orchestra); Piano Concerto, 1988; Interlude, 1989; Prelude for G.S.M.D., 1989; Symphony No. 4, 1992.

PIANO WORKS: Wariacje na temat Paganiniego, 1941 (Variations on a Theme of Paganini); Melodie Ludowe, 1945 (Folk Melodies); Bukoliki, 1952 (Bucolics).

VOCAL WORKS: Piesni walki podziemnej, 1944 (Songs of the Underground Struggle; for voice and piano); Dwadziescie koled, 1946 (Twenty Polish Christmas Carols; for voice and piano); Children's Songs, 1949 (for violin, voice, and piano); Tryptyk Slaski, 1951 (Silesian Triptych; for soprano and orchestra); Five Songs, 1957 (for soprano and piano); Paroles tissées, 1965 (Woven Words; for tenor and chamber orchestra); Les Espaces du sommeil, 1975 (Spaces of Sleep; for baritone and orchestra); Chantefleurs et chantefables, 1991 (for soprano and chamber orchestra).

The Life

The younger son of Jósef Lutosławski and Maria Olszewska, Witold Lutosławski (VEE-tohlt loo-toh-SWAWF-skee) at an early age lost his father. Having demonstrated musical talent, he began taking piano lessons at the age of six, first with Helena Hoffman and later with Jozef Smidowicz, and he also studied the violin with Lidia Kmitowa, followed by composition studies with Witold Maliszewski, both privately and at the Warsaw Conservatory. In the early 1930's he studied mathematics at the University of Warsaw. Upon his graduation from the Warsaw Conservatory, he intended to further his composition studies in Paris, a tradition for Polish composers going back to Frédéric Chopin, since the musical scene in Poland had not much to offer, especially in contemporary music. Instead, because of the political situation in Poland, he went through military training and German imprisonment, escaping back to Warsaw. At the time the city was culturally deprived by wartime occupation, and he experienced a period of hardship, playing piano in cafés, as this was the only way to make a living from music. After the war Lutosławski married Maria Danuta Bogusławska, and they settled in a small, noisy apartment in Warsaw in 1946. Lutosławski supported them at first by composing utilitarian music for Polish radio, as well as scores for theater and film, an activity he continued until 1960 and that sustained him also during the years of Communist censorship (1949-1954), when his Symphony No. 1 was banned as formalist and decadent. He continued to develop his contemporary idiom mostly in secrecy. He was active in the Polish Composers' Union and a co-organizer of the Warsaw Autumn Contemporary Music Festival. After 1955, having already traveled briefly to the West for festivals and conferences, his reputation abroad started gaining momentum, and his Funeral Music was performed widely in Europe and the United States. By 1961 his international success was rapidly growing with many important performances (especially of Venetian Games) and guest lectures.

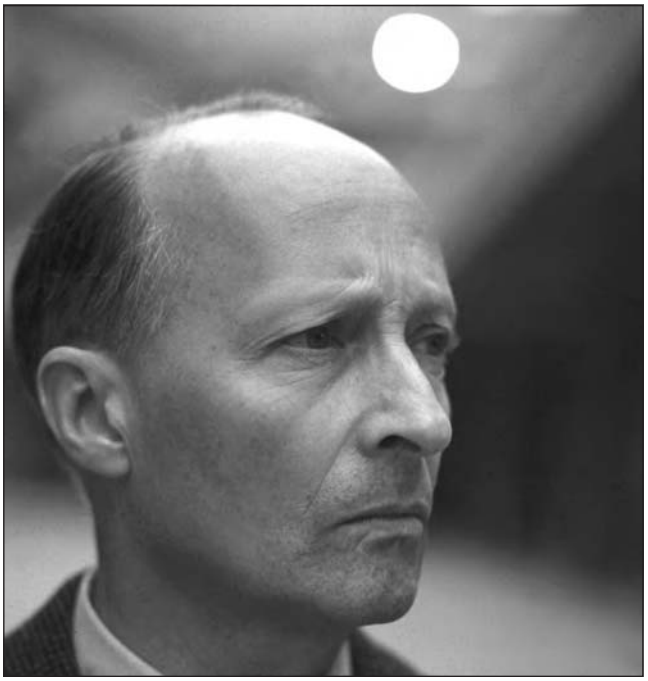
Lutosławski was not drawn to teaching, considering himself weak in that area, and he never held a permanent teaching appointment, but he participated in several composition festivals and workshops, most notably at Tanglewood in the Berkshires of Massachusetts, at the Royal Swedish Academy of Music, at the University of Texas at Austin, and in Arhus, Denmark. During the 1970's and 1980's, he gave several guest lectures on his music around the world. Many universities have granted Lutosławski honorary doctorate degrees, including, among others, the universities of Warsaw, Chicago, Cambridge, Jagiellonian in Kraków, and McGill in Montreal. Though he was always involved in conducting his own music, as far back as the early radio and film scores, starting in 1963 Lutosławski embarked on an international conducting career of his own music that took him to France, Czechoslovakia, The Netherlands, Norway, Austria, and the United States, leading such prestigious orchestras as the Los Angeles Philharmonic, San Francisco Symphony, BBC Symphony, London Sinfonietta, Orchestre de Paris, and others. He also remained active as a pianist, and the piano always featured prominently in his compositions.

Lutosławski enjoyed wide success and received many prizes and honors. Among his accolades were the UNESCO Prize (1959, 1968); the French order of Commandeur des Arts et des Lettres (1982); the Royal Philharmonic Society Gold Medal (1986); the Koussevitzky Prize (1964, 1976, 1986); the Maurice Ravel Prize (1971); the Jean Sibelius Prize (1973); and the Award of the Polish Composers' Union (1959, 1973). In the last year of his life, Lutosławski was awarded the highest state prize in Poland, the Order of the White Eagle. Beginning in 1990 the National Philharmonic in Warsaw has held the Lutosławski International Competition for Composers.



Witold Lutosławski. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

The Music

Constant development and shifts in Lutosławski's stylistic nuances throughout his career reveal a maturing musical language, manifested by marked differences among the works in his oeuvre. Nevertheless, his body of work maintains a remarkably cohesive unity of personal character and individuality. Partly because of his earlier cultural isolation from the Western avant-garde, and partly because of personal choice, he did not surrender to musical trends or schools, maintaining a healthy mix of tradition and innovation, guided by his refined artistic sense. His works are balanced between form and content, driven by a strong dramatic sense, both intellectual and enjoyable at the same time. His form is usually in two large sections, and often there is a catastrophic climax that determines what will happen to the material.

Lutosławski's output can be divided into several periods, in regard to his stylistic development and ways of organizing pitch material. While his control of all other parameters was always tight and mature, even in his early works, it is interesting to note that it was in the realm of pitch organization that the composer constantly evolved. As he discovered new techniques, he did not abandon his old ways but rather incorporated the new into the existing and intensified the contrast for formal reasons.

Early Works. Among these, pieces such as Symphonic Variations, Symphony No. 1, and Overture for Strings are mostly neoclassical. He then developed a clear, fresh tonality inspired by Polish folklore and clearly related to late Béla Bartók, manifested in his Little Suite, Dance Preludes, and Concerto. The high level of discipline exemplified in these pieces explains the composer's relatively small output during these years. The use of opposing, unrelated harmonic areas for dramatic potential was a principle he used throughout his life.

Dodecaphonic Pieces. Lutosławski's Five Songs and Funeral Music belong to his serial-technique-dominated period. Funeral Music is clearly a culmination of sorts. It was composed for the tenth anniversary of Bartók's death and took Lutosławski four years to complete, marking an artistic crisis for the composer, mostly spent deciding on his own relationship to the twelve-tone technique. His solution eventually involved treating the twelve tones as a harmonic field, with tight intervallic control, without letting go of his earlier sense of proportion, in this piece manifested with formal designs around a golden section. From then on, another common technique was to segregate pitch sets into a harmonic and melodic set, each with a different number of elements. Lutosławski was always aware of the total chromatic set of pitches, but he generally rejected the idea of using ordered sets (tone rows). One could argue that this concept of tone collections rather than tone rows transferred to the vertical dimension was the inspiration for his controlled aleatoric principle, his next and most important innovation.

Controlled Aleatorism Period. Beginning with Venetian Games, Lutosławski's compositional technique, influenced by the works of John Cage, adopted an element of controlled chance in rhythmic structure, which, unlike Cage, did not relinquish tight control of musical parameters to the performers, but merely allowed for some limited freedom in the order or density of pitches played, always within a precise temporal framework.

Symphony No. 2 and Livre. These works represent a summary of his attempts to develop his own formal model. Formally, these works are mostly organized in two parts: an introduction followed by the development of the main idea. With this stylistic milestone, Lutosławski reached a maturity within his own work and a stylistic stability for the rest of his composing life that built upon synthesizing his different technical resources into his late style. Most of his subsequent works were set for large forces, fully chromatic, finely orchestrated in a manner suggesting French impressionist composers and formally emerging from an opposition between aleatory and metrical textures.

The Chain Principle. The work Mi-parti exhibits another structural concept typical for Lutosławski, based on the introduction of several interlocking themes that create a chain structure. This formal principle is clearly present in three consecutively numbered works titled Chain, and the composer found it useful in writing concerti-type pieces, where he could maximize the opposition between a soloist and an ensemble and maintain more than one musical narrative.

Chantefleurs et chantefables. Orchestral song cycles hold a special place in Lutosławski's oeuvre. The composer set poems by the French surrealist Robert Desnos twice (the other one being Spaces of Sleep), drawn by the poet's arresting simplicity of language. Lutosławski's settings are colorful, demonstrating his mastery of handling the fragile equilibrium between the vocal and orchestral texture.

Musical Legacy

Lutosławski has secured a prominent place among twentieth century composers because of his artistic integrity and honesty and because of the technical command of his own compositional language. His sense of proportion and dramatic conflict generate an incredibly fluid yet tightly controlled form. His sensitivity to sound as an entity directly relate to and affect all other aspects of form. His ability to unite all these complex elements organically into a musical dialectic that is not based on preexisting syntactical systems is what distinguishes Lutosławski from a number of his peers who embraced, even if skillfully so, trends of their times. His music, however, is not perceived as removed from the tradition in which he was nourished. That is because he transcended his heritage by renewing and developing its very essence: the idea of a dramatic form that comes from opposition and conflict, the idea of a division into unequal yet complementary forces striving to reunite, and the very essence of treating material organically for its own sake, in a unique way every time.

Yiorgos Vassilandonakis

Further Reading

Nikolska, Irina, and Witold Lutosławski. Conversations with Witold Lutosławski, 1987-1992. Stockholm: Melos, 1994. An informative round of discussions about the composer's views and aesthetic choices, addressed to the general reader. The composer discusses his approach to composing as it developed in relation to specific works.

Rae, Charles Bodman. The Music of Lutosławski. London: Omnibus Press, 1999. An in-depth biographical and analytical look into Lutosławski, covering all of his works, addressed to the musically educated reader. Rae's insight is enhanced by access to the composer and his sketches.

Skowron, Zbigniew, ed. Lutosławski Studies. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 1999. A collection of essays by prominent Lutosławski scholars, writing on various topics and works of the composer.

Stucky, Stephen. Lutosławski and His Music. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1981. The quintessential comprehensive study of Lutosławski's music by Cornell professor and renowned composer Stucky. Includes analyses, diagrams, excerpts, and a comprehensive list of available scholarship on Lutosławski in several languages.

See also: Argerich, Martha; Bartók, Béla; Cage, John; Koussevitzky, Serge; Mutter, Anne-Sophie; Schreker, Franz.

Loretta Lynn

American country singer and songwriter

Born into a hardscrabble life, Lynn used her background to infuse her songs with emotions that were appreciated by fans of country music as well as pop music.

Born: April 14, 1935; Butcher Hollow, Kentucky
Also known as: Loretta Webb (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Loretta Lynn Sings, 1963; Before I'm Over You, 1964; Ernest Tubb and Loretta Lynn, 1965 (with Ernest Tubb); Hymns, 1965; Songs from My Heart, 1965; A Country Christmas, 1966; I Like 'Em Country, 1966; You Ain't Woman Enough, 1966; Don't Come Home a Drinkin' (with Lovin' on Your Mind), 1967; Ernest Tubb and Loretta Lynn Singin' Again, 1967 (with Tubb); Singin' with Feelin', 1967; Fist City, 1968; Here's Loretta Lynn, 1968; Who Says God Is Dead!, 1968; If We Put Our Heads Together, 1969 (with Tubb); A Woman of the World, 1969; Your Squaw Is on the Warpath, 1969; Loretta Lynn Writes 'Em and Sings 'Em, 1970; Wings upon Your Horns, 1970; Coal Miner's Daughter, 1971; I Wanna Be Free, 1971; Lead Me On, 1971 (with Conway Twitty); One's on the Way, 1971; We Only Make Believe, 1971 (with Twitty); You're Lookin' at Country, 1971; Alone with You, 1972; God Bless America Again, 1972; Here I Am Again, 1972; Louisiana Woman, Mississippi Man, 1973 (with Twitty); Story, 1973 (with Tubb); Country Partners, 1974 (with Twitty); Back to the Country, 1975; Blue-Eyed Kentucky Girl, 1976; I Remember Patsy, 1977; Lookin' Good, 1980; Two's a Party, 1981 (with Twitty); Making Love from Memory, 1982; Lyin' Cheatin' Woman Chasin' Honky Tonkin' Whiskey Drinkin', 1983; Loretta Lynn, 1984; Just a Woman, 1985; Making Believe, 1988 (with Twitty); I'll Just Call You Darlin', 1989; Who Was That Stranger, 1989; Peace in the Valley, 1990; Loretta Lynn Sings Patsy Cline's Favorites, 1992; The Old Rugged Cross, 1992; Hey Good Lookin', 1993; Honky Tonk Angels, 1993 (with Dolly Parton and Tammy Wynette); An Evening with

Loretta Lynn, 1995; Still Country, 2000; Van Lear Rose, 2004.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Loretta Lynn: Coal Miner's Daughter, 1976 (autobiography; with George Vecsey).

The Life

Loretta Lynn was born Loretta Webb, the second of eight children, in Butcher Hollow, Kentucky, a small coal-mining town. Her parents were Clara, who was of Cherokee descent, and Melvin, who was a coal miner and part-time farmer of Cherokee and Scotch-Irish descent. The family was poor but happy. Because Clara loved to sing, on Saturday nights the family listened to the Grand Ole Opry on the radio, and Lynn memorized all the songs. She attended a one-room schoolhouse and left after completing the eighth grade. When Lynn was thirteen, she baked a pie for a social to raise money to purchase new windows for the school. At that social, Mooney (a nickname related to his bootlegging activities) Lynn outbid other admirers for the pie she had baked, winning the opportunity to walk her home. With her parents' permission, they were married when she was fifteen.

After working for about seven months at various jobs locally and in Wabash, Indiana, Mooney moved Lynn to Custer, Washington, some three thousand miles away. From the start the marriage was rocky, primarily because of Mooney's drinking, womanizing, and physical abuse of Lynn (although she acknowledged that she also attacked him). The couple had four children in Washington: Betty, Jack, Ernest, and Clara.

Lynn and Mooney worked at a variety of jobs until Mooney persuaded her to learn how to play the guitar he had bought her for her eighteenth birthday. She also began to read country-music magazines and write her own songs. Although she was reluctant to sing in public, Mooney tried to persuade a bandleader at a local club to let Lynn sing with the band. Although the bandleader declined the offer, he did provide her an audition for a radio show he hosted. She was a hit, becoming a regular on his show. With the money she made from the radio show and from singing at a nightclub on Saturday nights and at a local Grange Hall, she bought a new guitar, wrote more songs, and formed her own band, the Trail Blazers. After winning a television talent contest in Tacoma, Washington, she was contacted by Zero Records and made her first record, "I'm a Honky-Tonk Girl." To promote the record, she and Mooney packed up the kids and traveled eighty thousand miles, visiting radio stations and disc jockeys before they got to Nashville, Tennessee, and the Grand Ole Opry in 1962.

Lynn signed a contract with Decca Records, and she continued touring. While on tour in 1964, she had twin girls, Peggy and Patsy. Since the 1960's she has had tremendous success in country music, and she has also branched out in other fields. She owns a chain of Western clothing stores, and at one time she and Mooney owned a rodeo. The couple owned most of Hurricane Mills, a town near Nashville, and they lived in a plantation-style mansion there. Mooney died from complications of diabetes on August 6, 1996.

The Music

Finding a Voice. Although she had grown up singing and listening to country music on the Grand Ole Opry, Lynn's musical career began when her husband bought her a thirty-dollar guitar for her eighteenth birthday. After she learned to play the guitar and had written some songs, Mooney, who was convinced that his wife could make it in show business, took her to a club that featured country-and-western music. The bandleader had her audition for his radio show, and she won a spot. A second break occurred when she entered and won a television talent show for country singers which was hosted by Buck Owens.

The television exposure led Zero Records to sign her to a contract. The first song she recorded was her own, although originally it had been intended to be sung by Kitty Wells, reigning Queen of Country Music. Of course, since Lynn had never met Wells, the song, "I'm a Honky-Tonk Girl," had not been recorded. It became Lynn's first hit, but not until she and Mooney promoted the song by visiting a number of radio stations, urging them to play her record.

When the couple got to Nashville, Lynn recorded some "demo tapes" and submitted them to record companies. Because Owen Bradley of Decca Records (now MCA) liked one of the songs, "Fool Number One," so much, he signed Lynn in order to get the song, which was then recorded by Brenda

Loretta Lynn. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Lee. Bradley believed that Lynn sounded too much like Wells. Lynn realized that she had to work on developing a distinctive style. She wrote songs for Doyle and Teddy Wilburn's Sure-Fire music publishing company, and she befriended some important country performers, notably Patsy Cline. Lynn subsequently made some guest appearances on the Grand Ole Opry, and she became a regular cast member in 1962.

Lynn toured and recorded songs, becoming Decca Records's number-one female recording artist. In 1967 Billboard named her Female Country Artist of the Year, and the following year she received a similar award from the National Association of Record Manufacturers. "You Ain't Woman Enough" and "Fist City" won awards for her songwriting.

Collaborations and Success. Ernest Tubb, a legendary country singer and fellow Decca artist, approached Lynn about recording duets. "Sweet Thang" and several other hits resulted from this collaboration. Her recording of the autobiographical "Coal Miner's Daughter" was such a hit that the song was later made into a film starring Sissy Spacek in 1980. (Spacek, who sang Lynn's songs, won every major Best Actress Award, including the Academy Award, for her performance.) In 1971 Lynn's duet with Conway Twitty won the Country Music Association Vocal Duo of the Year award, and Lynn was Female Vocalist of the Year. The following year, breaking the gender barrier, she was named Entertainer of the Year by the Country Music Association.

During the 1970's, Lynn enjoyed great success. Her duets with Twitty and Tubb won several awards, from the Country Music Association and from the Academy of Country Music. Her duets were extremely successful, because of the "chemistry" created with another singer and because the songs often related to her personal life. She was the Academy of Country Music's Artist of the Decade in 1979, and two years later the National Songwriters Association inducted her into the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

Music and Business. Despite the accidental death of her son Jack Benny Lynn in 1984, Lynn continued to make personal appearances. However, between 1984 and 2000, only five of her songs made the country charts. In 1988 she was inducted into the Country Music Association Hall of Fame. Four years later, she and Mooney decided to stop touring and move to Branson, Missouri, where other country artists had established theaters. Lynn performed there in the Loretta Lynn Theater. After Mooney's death in 1996, Lynn stopped performing for a while, but in 1997 she went back to the Grand Ole Opry for an appearance. She did some shows in Florida, and then after doing a gospel album for Heartland Records in 1997 she went back on the road, performing in the Middle East during the Gulf War. In 2001 she recorded a single, "I Can't Hear the Music Anymore," as a tribute to Mooney, who had uttered the words shortly before his death.

Musical Legacy

Lynn wrote many of her songs, some with strong feminist themes, although she did not consider herself a feminist. "The Pill," "One's on the Way, and "Pregnant Again" addressed women's rights to control their own bodies. "Fist City" and "Don't Come Home a Drinkin' (With Lovin' on Your Mind)" addressed the issues of domestic violence and women's sexual rights. Because of the success of the book and film Coal Miner's Daughter, Lynn became a recognizable personality, and she often appeared on television, in magazines (Newsweek had her on the cover of its June 18, 1973, issue), and in newspapers (the New York Post had a feature on her life in its August 16, 1975, issue). In 1981 readers of the Ladies' Home Journal voted her one of the 100 Most Important Women.

Lynn's folksy manner, her gospel roots, and her ability to bare her emotions in a song made her a legend in the world of country music. After Lynn, other female country singers became increasingly willing to sing about difficult subjects that had been ignored in the past.

Thomas L. Erskine

Further Reading

Dew, Joan. Singers and Sweethearts: The Women of Country Music. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1977. This book describes Lynn as a spokesperson for women who married too young, got pregnant too often, and felt trapped by domestic life.

Krishef, Robert K. Loretta Lynn. Minneapolis, Minn.: Lerner, 1986. This short biography focuses on Lynn's personality, her charitable work, and her relations with her family and newcomers to show business.

Lynn, Loretta, with George Vecsey. 2d ed. Loretta Lynn: Coal Miner's Daughter. Cambridge, Mass.: Da Capo Press, 2001. This book was the basis for the film starring Spacek as Lynn. It provides a good discussion of Lynn's early years in Appalachia, and Lynn comments on her husband, her kids, her health, death threats, her fans, and other topics. Included is a diagram of the bus in which she tours.

Lynn, Loretta, with Patsi Bale Cox. Still Woman Enough. New York: Hyperion, 2002. This book picks up where Loretta Lynn: Coal Miner's Daughter left off, and it provides details on her tumultuous relationship with her husband, on her experience with domestic violence, on her reaction to Mooney's death, and information about her children's lives and careers. Includes a list of awards and a discography.

Zanderbergen, George. Nashville Music: Loretta Lynn, Mac Davis, Charlie Pride. New York: Crestwood House, 1976. This resource includes a short biography supplemented by photographs, anecdotes, and comments by Lynn.

See also: Cline, Patsy; Dorsey, Thomas A.; Parton, Dolly; Tubb, Ernest; Twitty, Conway; Wynette, Tammy.

M

Yo-Yo Ma

Chinese American cellist

A cello virtuoso, Ma has won international acclaim for his brilliant technique, rich tone, and artistic sensitivity in concert performances and recordings.

Born: October 7, 1955; Paris, France

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Beethoven: Sonatas for Cello and Piano Nos. 1 and 2, 1982; Bach: The Unaccompanied Cello Suites, 1982; Brahms: Sonatas for Cello and Piano, 1985; Elgar: Cello Concerto, Op. 85, 1985; Beethoven: Cello Sonata No. 4, Variations, 1986; Beethoven: Complete Sonatas for Piano and Cello, 1987; Boccherini: Cello Concerto, 1987; Bolling: Suite for Cello and Jazz Trio, 1987; Japanese Melodies, 1987; Schumann: Cello Concerto, 1988; Dvorak: Great Cello Concertos, 1989; Portrait of Yo-Yo Ma, 1989; Shostakovich: Trio No. 2, 1989 (for violin, cello, and piano); Saint-Saëns: Concertos, 1991; Tchaikovsky: Variations on a Rococo Theme, 1991; Yo-Yo Ma, Bobby McFerrin: Hush, 1992 (with Bobby McFerrin); Faure: Piano Quartets Nos. 1 and 2, 1993; Chopin: Polonaise Brillante, 1994; Appalachia Waltz, 1996; Goldenthal: Fire Water Paper, a Vietnam Oratorio, 1996; Lieberson: King Gesar, 1996; From Ordinary Things, 1997; Tan Dun: Symphony 1997 (Heaven Earth Mankind), 1997; Liberty, 1997; Music for Strings and Piano Left, 1998; Soul of the Tango: The Music of Astor Piazzolla, 1998; Tavener: The Protecting Veil, Wake Up . . . and Die, 1998; Lulie the Iceberg, 1999; Simply Baroque, 1999; Solo, 1999; Phantasmagoria (The Fantasy Album), 2000.

The Life

Yo-Yo Ma (yoh yoh mah) was born into a musical family. His father, Hiao-Tsiu Ma, was a violinist, conductor, and musicologist who had taught at Nanjing University but emigrated to Paris in 1936. His mother, Marina, was a vocalist who left China for France in 1949. They were married in Paris, where Ma's older sister, Yeou-Cheng, and Ma were born. Yeou-Cheng studied violin and piano. At the age of four, Ma began learning the cello, and soon he had memorized the unaccompanied Bach suites (1717-1723). Violinist Isaac Stern recognized Ma's talent, becoming a mentor and a friend. Ma made his public debut at the age of five at Paris University. The family soon moved to New York.

At the age of seven, Ma performed on television with conductor Leonard Bernstein in a concert at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C. Stern arranged for Ma to study with the great cellist and teacher Leonard Rose at the Juilliard School of Music's preparatory division from 1964 to 1971. When Ma was fifteen, he made his Carnegie Recital Hall debut. A fellow music student and pianist, Emmanuel Ax, heard that concert, and at Juilliard Ma heard Ax play Maurice Ravel's Gaspard de la nuit (1909). Impressed with each other's talent, they began a lasting friendship, eventually becoming an internationally renowned music duo.

In 1972 Ma entered Harvard University, where he studied liberal arts. His music mentor at Harvard was Leon Kirchner. For four summers, he attended pianist Rudolf Serkin's Marlboro Festival in Vermont. He graduated from Harvard in 1976. In 1978 Ma married Jill Hornor, a violinist. Their first child, Nicholas, was born in 1983, and a daughter, Emily, was born in 1985.

Ma won the coveted and prestigious Avery Fisher Prize in 1978, and he began his celebrated career, performing and recording chamber and solo works with the world's leading musicians, orchestras, and conductors. He has also performed and recorded nonclassical music, such as jazz, bluegrass, Brazilian, and electronic.

In 1998 Ma founded the Silk Road Project to study the cultural traditions along that ancient trade route. In 2006 Ma won the Léonie Sonning Music Prize, Denmark's top music award. By 2007 Ma had recorded more than seventy-five albums and won fifteen Grammy Awards.

The Music

Beethoven and Brahms Sonatas. After meeting at Juilliard and becoming close friends, Ax and Ma played at a fundraiser in 1971 for Ma's father's ensemble, the Children's Orchestra of New York, and in 1973 they performed together again at the Marlboro Music Festival. In 1979 they formed a partnership to give concerts together and collaborate on recordings. In 1982 they released their first recording, Beethoven: Sonatas for Cello and Piano Nos. 1 and 2, which was well-received. Later they released Brahms: Sonatas for Cello and Piano and Beethoven: Cello Sonata No. 4, Variations. The Beethoven album received a Grammy Award in the Best Chamber Music Performance category. In 1991 they recorded Brahms's piano quartets with Isaac Stern and Jamie Laredo. In 1992,Ax and Ma recorded Brahms's remaining cello sonatas. Both recordings won Grammy Awards in the Best Chamber Music Performance category. During the 1995-1996 season, they celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their partnership with a concert tour and a concert, "An Evening of Hausmusik," on public television's Live from Lincoln Center.

Yo-Yo Ma. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Unaccompanied Cello Suites. Because of their technical difficulty and emotional depth, Bach's six suites are usually not recorded by a cellist until later in life. However, Ma had learned these pieces as a child, so in 1983, while still in his twenties, he recorded the suites. The three-record set earned him rave reviews and his first Grammy Award, for the Best Classical Instrumental Solo Album.

Yo-Yo Ma Inspired by Bach. Ma released the Bach suites again, with a series of six films interpreting Bach's music from the perspective of other disciplines. For this project, Yo-Yo Ma Inspired by Bach, Ma collaborated with garden designer Julie Messervy for the first film, The Music Garden (1997). In the second film, The Sound of the Carceri (1997), director François Girard used the engravings of the eighteenth century architect Giovanni Battista Piranesi for a computer-generated backdrop. Choreographer Mark Morris made the third film, Falling Down Stairs (1997). The fourth film, Sarabande (1997), was a fictional work by director Atom Egoyan. The fifth film, Struggle for Hope (1997), was a collaboration with the Japanese Kabuki actor, Tamasaburo Bando. Ice-skating champions Jane Torvill and Christopher Dean helped created the sixth film, Six Gestures (1997).

Jazz, Tango, and Bluegrass. With sincere respect for all kinds of music, Ma explored numerous nonclassical styles and traditions. He performed with legendary jazz violinist Stéphane Grappelli at Carnegie Hall in 1988, and in 1989 they made a recording of Cole Porter's music. In 1992 Ma and improvisational singer Bobby McFerrin released Hush, a unique thirteen-track recording combining McFerrin's impressionistic jazz-pop scat vocals with Ma's formalized, classical cello playing. The album was an immediate success, remaining on the Billboard classical crossover chart for two years. In 1998 Ma released Soul of the Tango: The Music of Astor Piazzolla, featuring the tangos of the late Argentine composer Piazzolla, Ma also played Piazzolla's "Libertango" in the music video for director Sally Potter's feature film, The Tango Lesson (1997). To prepare for the recordings, Ma traveled to Buenos Aires to learn the music firsthand in tango clubs. In 1999 Soul of the Tango: The Music of Astor Piazzolla won the Grammy Award for the best classical crossover album. In 1996 Ma released Appalachia Waltz, with classical-bluegrass bassist Edgar Meyer and Appalachia-country fiddler Mark O'Connor. For Ma it meant a complete cultural change in terms of style, intonation, and rhythm. Whereas rubato and the bending of time are common in classical music, the Appalachian music required absolute rhythmic precision and little vibrato.

Tan Dun: Symphony 1997 (Heaven Earth Mankind). This recording is the premiere performance of a work commissioned for the reunification of Hong Kong with mainland China. Although other sections of this piece are very tonal, the cello solo is extremely dissonant and in a fully modernist Western idiom. In terms of the traditional Chinese eight timbres, the cello's association with the "wood" category serves to bridge this movement with traditional Chinese elements in the work as a whole. As the two most prominent musicians of Chinese ancestry living outside of China, Ma and Tan represented the presence of the Chinese diaspora at the ceremonial event. Ma played on Tan's sound track for the film Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon (2000). They collaborated again in 2003, with Ma as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the world premiere of Tan's The Map Concerto for Cello, Video, and Orchestra.

Silk Road Music. Based on the premise that music is transnational, Ma established the Silk Road project in 1998, with ethnomusicologist Theodore Levin as executive director. After much travel and research, they had collected music by composers from Central Asia, China, and Mongolia. In 2000 they invited musicians to the Tanglewood Music Center in Massachusetts for a workshop. In addition to those from the West, there were musicians from Mongolia, Iran, China, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan, and other countries. In this crosscultural exchange, musicians learned to play other instruments as well as new music. For instance, Ma played the Mongolian morin khuur (horse-head fiddle). Possibly a precursor of the viol family, this instrument has onlytwo strings, tuned to F and B-flat, and no fingerboard. Many of the musicians later formed the Silk Road Ensemble to give concerts and workshops worldwide. The group released its first recording, Silk Road Journeys: When Strangers Meet, in 2001. In October, 2007, Ma and the Silk Road Ensemble's concert tour in China and Hong Kong included performances and cultural-exchange workshops.

Musical Legacy

Ma's Silk Road Project has helped bridge cultural differences among countries, and it fostered new artistic and multicultural connections. On September 21, 2006, the International Day of Peace, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan appointed Ma a U.N. Messenger of Peace.

Through his commissions of new works and collaborations with artists and composers from diverse media and styles, Ma has revitalized classical music and significantly expanded the cello repertoire. Composers whose works he has premiered include: John Williams, Leon Kirchner, Richard Danielpour, Bright Sheng, Elliott Carter, Dun, Stephen Albert, Chen Yi, Ennio Morricone, Christopher Rouse, Osvaldo Golijov, and John Harbison. He has been an avid supporter and performer of jazz and the music of Appalachia and South America.

Ma has also influenced new generations of young musicians worldwide through his master classes, work at music camps, and personal mentoring. In 2002 the U.S. Department of State appointed Ma as a CultureConnect Ambassador to officially teach and train thousands of students worldwide. Ma has worked to create more programs for family audiences, starting a family music series at Carnegie Hall. He has also brought music to young audiences in his appearances on children's programs such as Arthur, Mister Rogers' Neighborhood, and Sesame Street.

Winner of several Grammy Awards, Ma has become a best-selling recording artist, and he has attained the status of an international celebrity. In 2001 he was on People magazine's Sexiest Men Alive list. In 2002, Ma received a National Medal of the Arts; in a performance at the end of the award ceremony at Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C., he was accompanied by Condoleezza Rice (then U.S. National Security Adviser) on piano.

Alice Myers

Further Reading

Attanas, John. Yo-Yo Ma: A Life in Music. Evanston, Ill.: John Gordon Burke, 2003. This comprehensive and readable biography covers Ma's life and music career. Illustrated, with a discography, a bibliography, and an index.

Epstein, Helen. Music Talks: Conversations with Musicians. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1987. This contains material from newspapers and magazines written between 1971 and 1986. Includes a profile of Ma.

Everett, Yayoi Uno, and Frederick Lau, eds. Locating East Asia in Western Art Music. Middletown, Conn.: Wesleyan University Press, 2004. The resource includes an account of Ma's collaboration with composer Dun.

Grotenhuis, Elizabeth Ten. "A Conversation with Yo-Yo Ma." In Along the Silk Road. Washington, D.C.: Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, 2002. Levin, executive director for the Silk Road Project, and Ma discuss Ma's reasons for founding the Silk Road Project in 1998 and musical and cultural traditions and convergences. Beautifully illustrated. Notes.

Lynn, Stacey. Twenty-first Century Cellists. San Anselmo, Calif.: String Letter, 2001. A collection of interviews with the century's preeminent cellists. Ma's interviewer was Edith Eisler, violinist, teacher, and editor for Strings magazine. Their conversations occurred in 1991 and 2001. Illustrated.

Ma, Marina, and John A. Rallo. My Son, Yo-Yo. Hong Kong: Chinese University Press, 1995. Biography of Ma by his vocalist mother covers events from his birth until he entered Harvard at the age of seventeen. Includes accounts of family conversations and Ma's musical development. Illustrated, including many family photographs.

Pincus, Andrew L. "Yo-Yo Ma: Marco Polo Totes a Cello." In Musicians with a Mission: Keeping the Classical Tradition Alive. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 2002. This book is based on extensive interviews through the years with six musicians who have significantly helped to revitalize music. This chapter describes Ma's contributions, including his support of new composers, his Silk Road project, his mentoring, his concerts, and his television projects. Illustrated. Bibliographic notes and index.

See also: Barenboim, Daniel; Carter, Elliott; Casals, Pablo; du Pré, Jacqueline; Golijov, Osvaldo; Grappelli, Stéphane; McFerrin, Bobby; Morricone, Ennio; Piazzolla, Astor; Previn, Sir André; Ravel, Maurice; Serkin, Rudolf; Stern, Isaac; Tan Dun; Taylor, James; Williams, John.

Sir Paul McCartney

English rock singer, songwriter, bassist, and guitarist

As a member of the Beatles, McCartney wrote rock songs that were intelligent, provocative, and worthy of critical analysis. With the help of producer George Martin, McCartney and the Beatles expanded the boundaries of rock music, experimenting with studio technology, classical instrumentation, and non-Western musical forms.

Born: June 18, 1942; Liverpool, England
Also known as: James Paul McCartney (full name)
Member of: The Beatles; Wings

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): The Family Way, 1967 (with the George Martin Orchestra); McCartney, 1970; Ram, 1971 (with Linda McCartney); Thrillington, 1977 (instrumental version of his album Ram; released under the pseudonym Percy Thrillington); McCartney II, 1980; Tug of War, 1982; Pipes of Peace, 1983; Give My Regards to Broad Street, 1984; Press to Play, 1986; Flowers in the Dirt, 1989 (with Elvis Costello); CHOBA B CCCP, 1991; Liverpool Oratorio, 1991 (with Carol Davis); Off the Ground, 1993; Strawberries Oceans Ships Forest, 1994 (released under the pseudonym the Fireman); Flaming Pie, 1997; Standing Stone, 1997; Rushes, 1998 (released under the pseudonym the Fireman); Run Devil Run, 1999; Working Classical: Orchestral and Chamber Music by Paul McCartney, 1999 (with the London Symphony Orchestra and Loma Mar Quartet); Liverpool Sound Collage, 2000; Driving Rain, 2001; Chaos and Creation in the Backyard, 2005; Ecce Cor Meum, 2006 (Behold My Heart); Memory Almost Full, 2007; Electric Arguments, 2008 (released under the pseudonym the Fireman).

ALBUMS (with the Beatles): Please Please Me, 1963; With the Beatles, 1963; Beatles for Sale, 1964; The Beatles' Second Album, 1964; Beatles '65, 1964; The Beatles' Story, 1964; A Hard Day's Night, 1964; Introducing the Beatles, 1964; Meet the Beatles, 1964; Something New, 1964; Beatles VI, 1965; Help!, 1965; Rubber Soul, 1965; Revolver, 1966; Yesterday . . . and Today, 1966; Magical Mystery Tour, 1967; Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, 1967; The Beatles, 1968 (The White Album); Abbey Road, 1969; Yellow Submarine, 1969; Let It Be, 1970.

ALBUMS (with Wings): Wild Life, 1971; Band on the Run, 1973; Red Rose Speedway, 1973; Venus and Mars, 1975; Wings at the Speed of Sound, 1976; London Town, 1978; Back to the Egg, 1979.

The Life

James Paul McCartney was born on June 18, 1942, in Liverpool, England, to James and Mary McCartney. A second son, Michael, was born in 1944. His father worked as a cotton salesman, and his mother was a nurse. McCartney learned to enjoy music at an early age, and he taught himself to play piano and guitar. An avid musician, his father played piano in a local Liverpool band. Tragically, McCartney's mother died of breast cancer in 1956. With the help of the extended McCartney family, his father did his best to keep his young sons cared for and loved.

On July 6, 1957, McCartney met John Lennon at St. Peter's Parish Church, in the Woolton section of Liverpool, when Lennon's band the Quarry Men were performing there. After discovering that they liked the same music, McCartney and Lennon quickly established a friendship. Lennon was impressed with McCartney's ability to tune a guitar and to memorize the lyrics of several songs. Forming a group as the Beatles, they played in Hamburg, Germany, in 1960, and at the Cavern Club in Liverpool in 1961. By 1963 the Beatles (comprising McCartney, Lennon, George Harrison, and Ringo Starr) were on their way to unprecedented success. By the end of the 1960's, the Beatles had changed the face of rock and popular music, although they were falling apart.

McCartney married Linda Eastman on March 12, 1969. With the breakup of the Beatles in 1970, McCartney continued as a solo artist. As vegetarians, McCartney and his wife were strong supporters of animal rights. In 1996 they were honored with a special award by the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) for their tireless work against cruelty to animals. Over the years, both of them were involved with charities and social causes. McCartney founded the Liverpool Institute for Performing Arts in the mid-1990's. In addition to music, he gained critical acclaim for his painting.

Tragically, McCartney's wife died of breast cancer in 1998. He married Heather Mills in 2002. After a highly contentious separation, the couple divorced in 2008.

The Music

McCartney and John Lennon rightfully are considered one of greatest songwriting partnerships in the history of popular music. As a team, they constantly challenged each other. While they did not always write songs together, they would consult each other. Each became a sounding board for the other. In this creative environment, the pair wrote some of the most respected popular music of the twentieth century.

McCartney continued to be a popular recording artist after the breakup of the Beatles. According to the Guinness Book of World Records, McCartney is the most successful popular songwriter in the history of music. He has cowritten or written more than fifty Top 10 singles. Along with producing solo albums, McCartney has challenged himself by writing classical music.

Beatlemania and Beyond. By 1963 the Beatles had become the number-one group in England. With Brian Epstein as their manager, the Beatles launched their first U.S. tour in 1964. With such songs as "Love Me Do," "Please Please Me" and "I Want to Hold Your Hand," the Beatles placed repeatedly on the record charts. The group became even more popular with the release of Richard Lester's film A Hard Day's Night in 1964. Over the next few years the Beatles would release such remarkable recordings as Rubber Soul, Revolver, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, The Beatles (The White Album), Abbey Road, and Let It Be. By the time the group disbanded, they had changed not only popular music but also popular culture.

Sir Paul McCartney. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

A Hard Day's Night. With this album, the Beatles reached the zenith of their early years. The songs written for this album by Lennon and McCartney showed significant growth. The album became the sound track for the film of the same name. Primarily written by McCartney, "Can't Buy Me Love" went to number one in March of 1964. Remarkably, on April 4, 1964, the Beatles had the top five singles on the Billboard charts, with "Can't Buy Me Love" at number one, "Twist and Shout" at number two, "She Loves You" at number three, "I Want to Hold Your Hand" at number four, and "Please Please Me" at number five. In the film A Hard Day's Night, the four lads from Liverpool came across as intelligent, charming, witty, and lovable, and their image struck a positive chord with millions of devoted fans.

"Yesterday." McCartney stated that this tune came to him after waking up from a dream. The touching ballad was recorded with McCartney playing acoustic guitar and Martin employing a string quartet for background music. "Yesterday" has become one of the most recorded songs in the history of music, appearing in two thousand versions. The song was included on the Beatles album Help!

Revolver. For this 1966 album, the Beatles crafted more sophisticated songs and made innovative use of studio technology. Many critics consider this is their favorite Beatles album. Three memorable songs—"Eleanor Rigby," "Here, There, and Everywhere," and "Got to Get You into My Life"—were largely written by McCartney.

Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. If the Revolver album showed how much the Beatles had matured as musicians since their days as the lovable "moptops," this album shattered all expectations. Thanks to the efforts of Martin, the Beatles translated their ideas into a musical language that had not been heard before on a rock album. While the songwriting team still remained intact, it was McCartney who was becoming the stronger musical force. Of the thirteen tracks on the album, McCartney was the primary songwriter on eight of them, including the title song, "With a Little Help from My Friends," "Getting Better," "When I'm Sixty-Four," and "Lovely Rita." The album ends with the powerful song "A Day in the Life." For this song, Lennon wrote the verse and the chorus, while McCartney was responsible for the bridge. Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band remains one of the most influential rock albums ever made.

Going Solo. After the breakup of the Beatles, McCartney sought security in family life. In 1970 he released the solo album McCartney, which he recorded in his home studio. While the album was hugely popular—and especially the song "Maybe I'm Amazed"—critics were taken aback by its casual approach. McCartney produced the album and played all the instruments. The criticism stung, and he became defensive about his musical choices. The far more ambitious solo album Ram included his wife and three other musicians. Popular with the public, Ram included the Beatlesque "Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey," which became a number-one hit in America. Even with such potent songs as "Too Many People" and "Dear Boy," Ram exhibited a relaxed style.

Wings. For his next creative venture, McCartney formed a new band, Wings. They released their first album, Wild Life, in late 1971. While this album was considered a failure, it included the touching ballad "Dear Friend," which addresses the lost friendship between McCartney and Lennon. During the 1970's, Wings produced several popular albums. The 1973 album Band on the Run was a critical and commercial high point.

Although McCartney's musical output since the breakup of the Beatles has been uneven, he never lost his ability to write striking songs. Some of the memorable songs of his solo years can be found on such albums as Tug of War (1982), Flowers in the Dirt, Flaming Pie, Chaos and Creation in the Backyard, and Memory Almost Full. During the 1990's, McCartney challenged himself by writing classical pieces. In 2007 his classical album Ecce Cor Meum won best album at the Classical Brit Awards.

Band on the Run. For this album, McCartney, his wife, and Denny Laine traveled to Lagos, Nigeria, to record. (The other members of Wings decided against continuing with the band.) While recording in Lagos was a harrowing experience, the resulting album became a commercial and a critical success. The album was well received, even by critics who previously had criticized McCartney for wasting his musical talents. Several songs on the album are outstanding examples of McCartney's mastery of songcraft, including "Band on the Run," "Jet," "Helen Wheels," "Let Me Roll It," and "Nineteen Hundred and Eighty-Five."

Memory Almost Full. The mature McCartney is in a profoundly meditative mood for this 2007 album. Ever the distinguished craftsman, he has written some of his finest solo material for Memory Almost Full. Mortality on his mind, McCartney takes stock of where he has been and what he values in life. Reminiscent of the song cycle found on Abbey Road, the album finishes with such haunting songs as "That Was Me," "Feet in the Clouds," "House of Wax," and "The End of the End."

Musical Legacy

The Beatles were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1988, and McCartney was honored in 1999. He received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences in 1990. In 1992 McCartney was awarded by Sweden the first Polar Music Prize, considered the Nobel prize for music. For his "services to music," he was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II in 1996. On May 26, 2008, McCartney was awarded an honorary doctorate in music from Yale University, as the citation noted, for his "musical genius."

McCartney has played an integral part in shaping not only popular music but also popular culture. As a member of the Beatles and as a solo artist, he altered the musical landscape, proving that rock music is an art form worthy of respect and critical consideration.

Jeffry Jensen

Further Reading

Dowlding, William J. Beatlesongs. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1989. A detailed study of all the Beatles songs, arranged chronologically, with information on who sang them, who played what instruments, and how the song performed on the charts.

Gould, Jonathan. Can't Buy Me Love: The Beatles, Britain, and America. New York: Harmony Books, 2007. A totally engrossing look at the Beatles' music and what it has meant to popular culture.

Sandford, Christopher. McCartney. New York: Carroll and Graf, 2006. A thoroughly engaging portrait of the man behind the music by a rock journalist who considers McCartney a musical visionary.

Spitz, Bob. The Beatles: The Biography. New York: Little, Brown, 2005. A riveting account of what it was like to be a Beatle, beginning with the group's early days fueled by drugs and ending with agonizing disagreements.

See also: Costello, Elvis; Domino, Fats; Everly, Don and Phil; Galway, Sir James; Harrison, George; Jackson, Michael; Jamerson, James; Jones, Quincy; Lee, Peggy; Lennon, John; Martin, Sir George; Paul, Les; Perkins, Carl; Rice, Sir Tim; Willson, Meredith; Wonder, Stevie.

Bobby McFerrin

American popular music, musical theater, and jazz vocalist and songwriter; classical conductor

McFerrin, with his masterful vocal range, diction, and intonation, promotes the voice as an instrument.

Born: March 11, 1950; New York, New York
Also known as: Robert McFarien (birth name)
Member of: Voicestra

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER: Bobby McFerrin's Voicestra on Broadway, 1990.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Bobby McFerrin, 1982; The Voice, 1984; Spontaneous Inventions, 1985; Elephant's Child, 1987 (with Jack Nicholson); Don't Worry, Be Happy, 1988; Simple Pleasures, 1988; How the Rhino Got His Skin/How the Camel Got His Hump, 1990 (with Nicholson); Medicine Man, 1990; Play, 1990 (with Chick Corea); Hush, 1991 (with Yo-Yo Ma); Many Faces of Bird, 1991 (with others); Sorrow Is Not Forever—Love Is, 1994 (with others); Bang! Zoom, 1995 (with the Yellowjackets); Paper Music, 1995 (with the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra); The Mozart Sessions, 1996 (with Corea); Circlesongs, 1997 (with Voicestra); Mouth Music, 2001; Beyond Words, 2002.

The Life

Robert McFarien's parents, Robert and Sara, were opera singers, and opera was the music most often played in their household. McFerrin (mk-FEHR-rihn) was first trained as a pianist, and he studied at the preparatory division of the Juilliard School. By the mid-1970's he was working as an accompanist and as a pianist and singer in popular groups. During this period, he formed the Bobby Mac Jazz Quartet. By 1977 improvised singing had become McFerrin's main interest. McFerrin continued his studies in California at Sacramento State College and later at Cerritos Junior College in Norwalk, where he wrote arrangements for the college's big band.

In 1979 McFerrin worked with the famous singer and lyricist Jon Hendricks in New York. After a period of time in New Orleans, where he worked with a modern jazz group, Astral Project, McFerrin moved to San Francisco, where he met actor and comedian Bill Cosby. Cosby arranged for McFerrin to debut at the Playboy Festival in Hollywood in 1980. A year later McFerrin had another great success at the Kool Jazz Festival in New York. During the same year he was a member of a vocal group heard on tenor saxophonist Pharoah Sanders's album Journey to the One.

During the mid- to late 1980's, McFerrin began to mix solo work with improvised and composed dialogues in his concerts. Often he was joined by musicians from various styles, among them Wynton Marsalis, Wayne Shorter, Robin Williams, Manhattan Transfer, Chico Freeman, and Herbie Hancock. The result of the collaboration with Hancock was a recording of "'Round Midnight" for the 1986 film of the same title. In 1984 and 1985 McFerrin won the Down Beat poll for Best Male Vocalist, and in 1986 he won the Grammy Award for Best Male Jazz Vocalist. His first international big success came in 1988 with the song "Don't Worry, Be Happy."

Voicestra, an ensemble featuring twelve singers with experiences ranging from classical and jazz to musical-theater backgrounds, was founded by McFerrin in 1986. Its purpose was to explore interactive group singing. The music performed by the ensemble is completely improvised and captures all different aspects of the performance.

During the 1990's McFerrin began to focus on conducting, and in April of 1994 he joined the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra as its creative chair. His conducting activities with the orchestra include subscription series, tours, and special concerts. McFerrin has also been active in the development of Connect, the orchestra's educational and outreach program.

The Music

In the early 1980's, McFerrin's music began to evolve in a new direction, departing from the one fostered by his mentor Hendricks. Hendricks was famous for inventing Vocalese, a singing style in which Hendricks would write new lyrics for already existing jazz-bebop songs, and the songs would be performed by his group in three-part voice harmony. An example of this style is found in a recording of McFerrin with Manhattan Transfer, "Another Night in Tunisia," in which the soloist sings an already written text instead of the typical scat syllables.

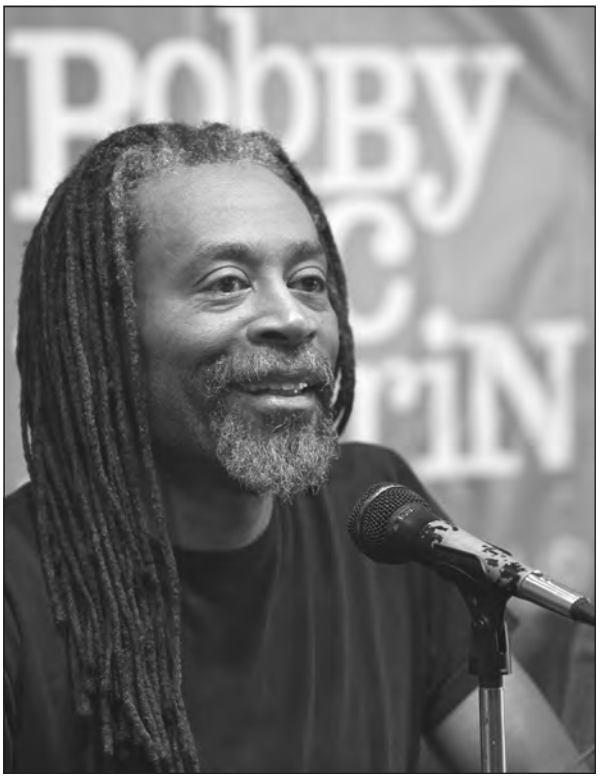
Improvisation. As McFerrin advanced this style, he started singing mostly improvised lines, while at the same time exploring timbre, attack, and resonance within established harmonies. In addition, he worked with various meters and repetitive rhythmic patterns to create these sounds with his whole body. (While performing and singing a bass line, McFerrin positions his body in a way that suggests he is holding the instrument and playing it.)

In order to achieve diversity on many levels in one song, McFerrin uses a variety of vocal styles. The unaccompanied songs are usually structured from consecutive parts of multipartite texture (percussion, bass, solo voice, inner-harmony voices) and application of various kinds of vocal sounds. The latter encompasses anything from popping noises and grunts to swooping falsetto. McFerrin's range covers D to F-sharp, and his control in all registers is remarkable. Often, McFerrin will involve audiences in his performances, asking them to repeat a rhythmic pattern or sing a simple melodic line. In the lyrics to his song "I'm My Own Walkman," McFerrin expresses the idea that everyone is capable of making his or her own music, without relying on outside elements to experience the power of music.

Debut. In 1982 McFerrin recorded his debut album, Bobby McFerrin. On it, McFerrin was supported by a rhythm section, led by the pianist Victor Feldman, and the song "You've Really Got a Hold on Me" features the vocalist Phoebe Snow. Spontaneous Inventions features Hancock, Hendricks, Manhattan Transfer, Shorter, and Williams. For his arrangement of "Another Night in Tunisia," McFerrin won a Grammy for Best Jazz Vocal and Best Vocal Arrangement in 1986.

The Voice. McFerrin's groundbreaking album was The Voice, recorded on a tour in Germany in 1984. During this time, McFerrin began performing solo in his concerts, and this album marked a milestone in jazz history: For the first time a jazz singer recorded an album without any accompaniment or support from other musicians. This album was lauded for McFerrin's virtuosic performance, his voice alternating between low and high registers in quick succession.

"Don't Worry, Be Happy." A last-minute addition to McFerrin's album, Simple Pleasures, recorded in 1988, this song was the first a cappella piece to become widely popular, reaching number one on the Billboard Hot 100 chart. For the production of the song's eight tracks, only McFerrin's voice was used, without instruments or percussion. Each track of McFerrin's voice was layered on top of the others. The song's structure includes the main melody, a secondary melody running in thirds, inner voices consisting of an ostinato rhythm and creating an additional harmonic structure, a bass line, and an independent rhythm, which is produced with mouth percussion. The title of the song was taken from a quote by the spiritual master Meher Baba. The song won a Grammy Award for Song of the Year, and the album won two: Record of the Year and Best Pop Vocal.



Bobby McFerrin. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Medicine Man and Play. In the following years, McFerrin recorded a number of albums highlighting his various talents. In 1990 Medicine Man was produced; in it McFerrin is featured as an orchestrator and a vocalist, and for the first time his vocal ensemble, Voicestra, and his father are featured on two songs, "Sweet in the Morning" and "Discipline."

The result of six concerts McFerrin performed with Chick Corea at Carnegie Hall and at Washington, D.C.'s Wolf Trap Amphitheater was the album Play. The artists designed the concerts to present the most basic form of music making, with childlike spontaneity. McFerrin's first classical album, Paper Music, followed in 1995. In it, McFerrin serves as a singer and as a conductor, with the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra.

The Mozart Sessions. Following the previous classical album, McFerrin and Corea recorded Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20 in D Minor (1785) and Piano Concerto No. 23 in A Major (1786) in 1996. The interpretation of the two concerti was supposed to revive the long-abandoned art of improvising, which was typical and traditional for Mozart's style. Corea plays his own cadences and adds material to the piano part (often he will play orchestra parts that are not notated in the piano score and embellish the melody in unexpected sections), and he and McFerrin perform individual improvisations before the first movement of each concerto, leading the listener into the piece. Both musicians express their artistic styles while improvising, not trying to adjust to the compositional style. McFerrin and Corea, with the Orchestra of St. Luke's, were featured in a concert titled Classic Innovations. McFerrin performed in and conducted the concert, which also featured cellist Yo-Yo Ma, jazz pianist Marcus Roberts, violinist Mark O'Connor, and double bassist Edgar Meyer.

Later Works. The first album completely made with Voicestra is Circlesongs, a solo and group exploration that evolved into McFerrin's version of chant and religious music. Every moment in a composition is created anew, and there are no preconceptions to the direction of music.

McFerrin's album Beyond Words includes collaboration with Corea, Taylor McFerrin, Richard Bona, Omar Hakim, and Cyro Baptista. In it, every piece is inspired by various world music styles, and, as the title suggests, no lyrics have been written. In 2000 McFerrin was a featured guest on the album Cosmopoly by Swiss harpist Andreas Vollenweider. The album falls into category of New Age music, and it shows McFerrin's ability to explore every musical style.

Musical Legacy

Through his experimentation in every aspect of music performance, mainly those of vocal production, McFerrin set a new level for vocal performance, while closing the gaps between jazz and classical musicians. Although musicians from jazz and classical have always influenced each other, artists from both streams have been inspired by McFerrin's innovative melding of the two genres. An active advocate for music education, McFerrin led a workshop at Carnegie Hall in April, 2008, titled Instant Opera! Its purpose was to develop and to create an original and improvised a cappella work with twenty singers from a variety of musical backgrounds.

Daniela Candillari

Further Reading

Gourse, Leslie. Louis' Children: American Jazz Singers. New York: Cooper Square Press, 2001. This book is based on various interviews with musicians who have been influenced by Louis Armstrong, a pioneer of vocal jazz. Among the artists covered are McFerrin, Cassandra Wilson, and Tony Bennett.

Randel, Don Michael. The Harvard Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Cambridge, Mass.: Belknap Press of Harvard University, 1996. This wonderful reference offers biographical information on five thousand people—composers, performers, and instrument makers—who made significant contributions to music. It includes a short biography of McFerrin.

Zwerin, Michael. The Parisian Jazz Chronicles: An Improvisational Memoir. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2005. Written in an improvised style, this memoir covers the development of jazz music, and it includes a quote from McFerrin.

See also: Corea, Chick; Hancock, Herbie; Ma, Yo-Yo; Shorter, Wayne.

Roger McGuinn

American singer, guitarist, and songwriter

A major figure in folk rock, McGuinn and his band, the Byrds, were an effective American challenge to the British Invasion of the early 1960's.

Born: July 13, 1942; Chicago, Illinois
Also known as: James Joseph McGuinn III (full name)
Member of: The Byrds

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Roger McGuinn, 1973; Peace on You, 1974; Roger McGuinn and Band, 1975; Cardiff Rose, 1976; Thunderbyrd, 1977; McGuinn-Hillman, 1981 (with Chris Hillman); Back from Rio, 1990; Born to Rock 'n' Roll, 1991; Treasures from the Folk Den, 2001.

ALBUMS (with the Byrds): Mister Tambourine Man, 1965; Turn! Turn! Turn!, 1965; Fifth Dimension, 1966; Younger than Yesterday, 1967; The Notorious Byrd Brothers, 1968; Sweetheart of the Rodeo, 1968; Ballad of Easy Rider, 1969; Dr. Byrds and Mr. Hyde, 1969; Preflyte, 1969; (Untitled), 1970; Byrdmaniax, 1971; Farther Along, 1971; The Byrds, 1973; Never Before, 1989.

ALBUMS (with McGuinn, Clark, and Hillman): McGuinn, Clark, and Hillman, 1979; City, 1980; Return Flight I, 1992; Return Flight II, 1994; Three Byrds Land in London, 1997.

The Life

James Joseph McGuinn (mk-GWIHN) III was born in Chicago to James and Dorothy McGuinn. Initially impressed by Elvis Presley, McGuinn got his first guitar at fourteen, and immediately upon graduating from high school, he played briefly with the Limelighters, the Chad Mitchell Trio, and finally Bobby Darin.

When the Beatles achieved overwhelming popularity, McGuinn moved to California, and eventually he formed the Byrds with David Van Cortlandt Crosby and Harold Eugene "Gene" Clark. They were the first significant interpreters of Bob Dylan's songs, beginning with their version of "Mr. Tambourine Man." The band developed a distinctive sound, with McGuinn's Rickenbacker guitar as the centerpiece, and they had success with a series of albums throughout the 1960's and 1970's. The membership of the Byrds underwent various reconfigurations, and it was among the first rock bands to experiment with country music. Because of his involvement with Subud, a spiritual group, McGuinn changed his name to Roger in 1965. Beginning in 1973, he released several solo albums before reuniting with two former Byrds to record as McGuinn, Clark, and Hillman, and in 1995 he started producing folk-based albums, which are available on the Internet.

The Music

Mr. Tambourine Man. By the 1965 release of its first album, Mr. Tambourine Man, the band had developed a polished sound (with the use of some studio musicians). The title song went to the top of the pop charts, and it established the band's commercial and critical viability.

Turn! Turn! Turn! The band's second album, Turn! Turn! Turn!, produced another major hit, and it featured the increasingly strong songwriting of both Clark and McGuinn. The album revealed the band's ability to take traditional folk songs and work them into rock hits, the most surprising of which was "Oh! Susannah." Fifth Dimension, released the next year, featured another major hit in "Eight Miles High," a psychedelic anthem with a remarkable guitar solo inspired by John Coltrane's saxophone style. Although the album has other notable songs, it was too experimental for wide popularity.

Younger than Yesterday. Younger than Yesterday (1967) marked another departure, with four country-influenced songs and two more stellar hits, "So You Want to Be a Rock 'n' Roll Star" and Dylan's "My Back Pages." During this period, tensions in the band increased, and after its appearance at the Monterey Pop Festival Crosby was fired. The recording of The Notorious Byrd Brothers, during which drummer Michael Clarke left, was tempestuous, but it did result in other successful singles, such as "Goin' Back" and "Wasn't Born to Follow."

Sweeheart of the Rodeo. Searching for band members and a sense of direction, McGuinn added Gram Parsons, and he released the first true country rock album, Sweetheart of the Rodeo. This featured a pair of Dylan tracks, "You Ain't Goin' Nowhere" and "Nothing Was Delivered." In spite of strong performances by McGuinn and bassist Christopher Hillman, Parsons became the dominant voice and leader of this new version of the band. More tension followed, with Parsons and later Hillman leaving. McGuinn hired three new players, and he produced Dr. Byrds and Mr. Hyde, a commercial disaster in spite of two excellent Dylan songs and a number of solid country offerings. Two of the songs were used for the sound track of the film Candy (2006), but the band appeared to have reached its end.

Easy Rider through The Byrds. McGuinn contributed a couple more songs to the sound track of Easy Rider (1969), and later, with the release of Ballad of Easy Rider, the band regained some popularity and considerable critical success. Once more, the collection featured another Dylan song as well as various country and folk songs. Untitled showcased one of McGuinn's most enduring songs, "Chestnut Mare," a piece he had been developing for a number of years.

Released in 1971, Byrdmaniax was dismal. Orchestration was added without the band's knowledge, and later that same year, in an attempt to regain its popularity, the band released another weak effort, Farther Along. A reunion with the other original band members produced The Byrds, which included no Dylan songs but two by Neil Young.

Solo Career. McGuinn embarked on a solo career, playing on Dylan's Rolling Thunder Review tour and issuing seven albums of varying quality: Roger McGuinn, Peace on You, Roger McGuinn and Band, Cardiff Rose, Thunderbyrd, Back from Rio, and the compilation Born to Rock and Roll. In the late 1970's, he released three records with former Byrd bandmates: McGuinn, Clark, and Hillman; City; and McGuinn-Hillman. In 1995 McGuinn became involved in a project to preserve folk music, and he has released a collection of privately produced albums featuring traditional folk tunes and live recordings from his entire career.

Musical Legacy

McGuinn was an innovator in early 1960's rock and roll. After leaving Darin's employ, he knew that the popularity of folk music would wane, and he was among the first musicians to create an effective American response to the dominance of British rock and roll. His melding of folk lyrics with rock rhythms became instantly recognizable, and it opened the door for many imitators, few as accomplished as he.

Technically, McGuinn was also an innovator, discovering a way to enhance the sound of a Rickenbaker twelve-string guitar through banjo-style picking and the addition of a compressor. This created a distinctive ringing sound that became the trademark of the Byrds and his solo work. He was also one of the first to work with a Moog synthesizer, and he included experimental songs on nearly every album. Additionally, McGuinn became a premier interpreter of Dylan's songs, bringing Dylan's music to a wide audience.

David W. Madden

Further Reading

Hoskyns, Barney. Waiting for the Sun. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996. In this comprehensive, yet partisan, history of Southern California rock and roll, McGuinn figures prominently as the leader of the Byrds, but no consideration is given to his solo career.

Menck, Ric. The Byrds' Notorious Byrd Brothers (33 1/3). New York: Continuum, 2007. The book recounts the stormy relationships in the band and the sessions that eventually led to one member being fired and another quitting. Menck examines the band's history and its conflicting personalities, and he presents a track-by-track analysis of the album.

Rogan, Johnny. The Byrds: Timeless Flight Revisited, the Sequel. London: Rogan House, 1998. In this authoritative biography of the band, a leading Byrds expert examines the lives of each of the members, centering on McGuinn as founder and leader of the band for ten years. An indispensable resource.

Unterberger, Richie. Turn! Turn! Turn! The Sixties Folk-Rock Revolution. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2002. This is a copiously researched, richly detailed history of the evolution of the folk-rock genre. While the study covers a range of performers, the Byrds and Dylan receive extended treatment as the seminal influences on this time in the evolution of rock and folk.

Walker, Michael. Laurel Canyon: The Inside Story of Rock and Roll's Legendary Neighborhood. New York: Faber & Faber, 2006. This book traces the migration of scores of Los Angeles musicians to a rustic neighborhood north of Sunset Boulevard, where residents escaped the city and collaborated with and influenced one another. McGuinn and Hillman figure significantly in these reminiscences from a host of sources.

See also: Coltrane, John; Dylan, Bob; Lennon, John; McCartney, Sir Paul; Odetta; Parsons, Gram; Presley, Elvis; Seeger, Pete; Young, Neil.

Marian McPartland

English jazz pianist, violinist, and composer

One of the first female jazz pianists at a time when the field was dominated by men, McPartland made jazz accessible through her performances, her recordings, and her radio show, Piano Jazz.

Born: March 20, 1918; Windsor, England
Also known as: Margaret Marian Turner (birth name); Marian Page

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: At the Hickory House, 1954; After Dark, 1956; With You in Mind, 1957; Marian McPartland Plays the Music of Leonard Bernstein, 1960; Bossa Nova and Soul, 1963; Ambiance, 1970; A Delicate Balance, 1971; A Sentimental Journey, 1972 (with Jimmy McPartland); Maestro and Friend, 1973 (with Joe Venuti); Marian McPartland Plays the Music of Alec Wilder, 1973; Now's the Time, 1977; From This Moment On, 1978; Let It Happen, 1978; Portrait of Marian McPartland, 1979; Alone Together, 1981 (with George Shearing); Personal Choice, 1982; Willow Creek and Other Ballads, 1985; Marian McPartland Plays the Benny Carter Songbook, 1990; Live at Maybeck Recital Hall, Vol. 9, 1991; With Guest Lee Konitz, 1991 (with Lee Konitz); In My Life, 1993; Marian McPartland Plays the Music of Mary Lou Williams, 1994; Silent Pool, 1996; Just Friends, 1998 (with others); Reprise, 1999; On Fifty-second Street, 2000; Twilight World, 2008.

The Life

Margaret Marian Turner began her musical education on the violin, but she soon switched to the piano. She studied classical music at the Guildhall School in London, and when realized that she preferred jazz, she took Marian Page as her stage name. During World War II, while entertaining the troops, McPartland met and subsequently married an American cornet player, Jimmy McPartland. They performed together in his Dixieland band, but the professional relationship was short-lived. They divorced, although they remained friends and later remarried. In the 1950's, McPartland played briefly at Birdland, a jazz club in New York City, but she is better remembered for her time at the Hickory House, from 1952 to 1960, working mostly with Joe Morello on drums and Bill Crow on bass. Later, she had the distinction of being the first woman to perform with Benny Goodman's band.

In 1971 McPartland formed her own record company called Halcyon, and she often helped other women get recorded. She now records for Concord Records. McPartland has given numerous workshops and clinics, often for young people with limited exposure to jazz, and she has performed at festivals to showcase the contributions of women. In 1979 McPartland began a new venture, one for which she is noted, her Piano Jazz radio show. Each week she invites a noted musician to come on the show and explain various aspects of technique. The highlight of the program occurs when the two pianists showcase their skills in duets.

The Music

McPartland's style was influenced by Fats Waller, George Shearing, Alec Wilder, Teddy Wilson, and especially Bill Evans. She plays well in all jazz styles, but she especially favors ballads. This fondness is evident in her compositions, which are notable for their lyrical quality. She is no stranger to classical music, as evidenced by her many improvisations in the styles of various composers. She is equally comfortable playing solos, duets, or working in a jazz combo.

Among McPartland's recordings are her numerous interpretations of jazz standards and her own pieces. She has made hundreds of recordings; some consist of her performances from her Piano Jazz show and others are reissues of earlier albums.

Marian McPartland. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

On Fifty-second Street. This recording, featuring music from McPartland's early years at the Hickory House, showcases her mastery of jazz standards, including "A Foggy Day," "The Lady Is a Tramp," and "Embraceable You." Here, McPartland demonstrates not only her deft command of the piano but also her keen ability as a leader of a jazz combo, which, in this recording, includes Morello on drums and Vinnie Burke and Bob Carter on bass. The primary focus is on the melody, often executed as arpeggios, in the right hand and extended tertian harmonies in the left.

Alone Together. This 1981 recording features McPartland and her fellow Englishman George Shearing acting as true partners, much like the format of her radio show. This performance has something for everyone: down-and-dirty blues ("Born to Be Blue"), ballads ("To Bill Evans"), Latin jazz ("O Grande Amor"), and improvisation ("Improvisation on a Theme of Carl Edward Jefferson"). In addition, her own composition, "There'll Be Other Times," is another ballad work that focuses on modes and Debussy-inspired whole-tone and pentatonic scales. This trait frequently surfaces in many of McPartland's compositions, probably influenced by her classical training.

Live at Maybeck Recital Hall, Vol. 9. There is a wide variety of styles in this performance, including a good balance of standards, modern jazz, and McPartland's compositions. One of the most interesting in the last category is "Theme from Piano Jazz," which shows McPartland is not afraid to experiment. This piece is immediately familiar when heard by fans of her NPR show. With its fast seventh chord arpeggios and progressive quartal harmonies, this work clearly shows McPartland's familiarity with the music of John Coltrane and other later jazz composers. "Twilight World," included here, is one of her best compositions, with its primary focus on timbre, again reflecting Debussy. This work, found on several other recordings as well, is true to McPartland's style, with its melody-based right hand and chordal left. It is also typical of her compositions in its use of a colorful, semiprogrammatic title. McPartland also performs "My Funny Valentine," which might be considered a cliché in the jazz world. However, McPartland manages to produce an inventive interpretation while remaining true to the original Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart tune.

Musical Legacy

McPartland continues to perform, record, and present jazz workshops to people of all ages, including novices and experienced improvisers. She has showcased new talent and established performers on her award-winning radio show with gracefulness and graciousness. Genuinely pleased and even surprised by her success, McPartland frequently promotes the music of her friends and colleagues. She will be remembered as a champion of women in jazz.

Ann Glazer Niren

Further Reading

Balliett, Whitney. American Musicians II: Seventy-two Portraits in Jazz. New York: Oxford University Press, 1986. In one chapter, Balliett provides four scenes in the life of McPartland.

Enstice, Wayne, and Janis Stockhouse. Jazzwomen: Conversations with Twenty-one Musicians. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 2004. The authors devote a sizable chapter to McPartland, and include a well-written overview of her life and career. Includes discography.

Gourse, Leslie. Madame Jazz: Contemporary Women Instrumentalists. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995. This book contains a chapter on McPartland, as an important female figure in jazz.

McPartland, Marian. Marian McPartland's Jazz World: All in Good Time. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2003. McPartland offers portraits of fellow jazz artists, including Goodman, Morello, Evans, and Mary Lou Williams.

Shipton, Alyn. Handful of Keys: Conversations with Thirty Jazz Pianists. New York: Routledge, 2004. The chapter devoted to McPartland gives a good overview of her life.

See also: Coltrane, John; Costello, Elvis; Debussy, Claude; Evans, Bill; Goodman, Benny; Waller, Fats.

Madonna

American singer and songwriter

Madonna set stylistic trends in music and fashion, her concert tours are notable for their innovative production values and spectacle, and her elaborate music videos set precedents for the MTV era.

Born: August 16, 1958; Bay City, Michigan
Also known as: Madonna Louise Ciccone (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Madonna, 1983; Like a Virgin, 1985; True Blue, 1986; Who's That Girl?, 1987; You Can Dance, 1987; Like a Prayer, 1989; I'm Breathless, 1990; Erotica, 1992; Bedtime Stories, 1994; Something to Remember, 1995; Evita, 1996; Ray of Light, 1998; Music, 2000; American Life, 2003; Confessions on a Dance Floor, 2005; I'm Going to Tell You a Secret, 2006; Hard Candy, 2008.

The Life

The third of eight children, Madonna Louise Ciccone (she later added Veronica as a second middle name) grew up in the suburbs of Detroit with parents Silvio "Tony" Ciccone and Madonna Louise Fortin. Her father was an engineer in the Chrysler factory, and her mother died from breast cancer at age thirty in 1963, when Madonna was still a child.

Madonna's original ambition was to be a ballet dancer, which she pursued while attending Rochester Adams High School (where she was also a cheerleader and strong student). Though she continued her studies at University of Michigan, she left following her sophomore year and moved to New York to pursue dance full time. She took a series of jobs—from working at a doughnut shop to posing as a nude model—while performing with various dance troupes.

The first big break came in 1979, when she landed a role in the Patrick Hernandez Revue, known primarily for its disco smash "Born to Be Alive." After embarking on his tour (which included time in Paris), Madonna met musician Dan Gilroy, and they formed the rock band Breakfast Club. That band was short lived, leading her to form her next group, Emmy, in 1980. Emmy was successful in local clubs, and it interested representatives from record companies.

Madonna signed a contract with Sire Records in 1982, and she committed to building her career as a recording artist. In 1985 she married actor Sean Penn, though the relationship ended in divorce in 1989. Madonna dated actor Warren Beatty, rapper Vanilla Ice, and basketball player Dennis Rodman.

With personal trainer Carlos Leon, Madonna had her first child, Lourdes Maria Ciccone Leon, in 1996; the couple broke up the following year. Madonna's second child, Rocco John Ritchie, was born in 2000, and she married the child's father, filmmaker Guy Ritchie, later that year. In 2006 the couple adopted a baby from Malawi, and he was named David Banda Mwale Ciccone Ritchie. In 2008 Madonna and Ritchie divorced. Madonna follows the tenets of Kabbalah, which follows some of the spiritual traditions of Judaism.

The Music

Signing with Sire Records, a division of Warner Bros., in 1982, gave Madonna the momentum to gain a national reputation. Her first two singles, "Everybody" and "Physical Attraction," started moving up the dance charts late that year and into 1983 (to coincide with her self-titled debut). Her third track, "Holiday," reached the Top 40, and its follow-up tracks, "Borderline" and "Lucky Star," were in the Top 10 by 1984. Her next seventeen singles placed in the Top 10.

Like a Virgin. Like a Virgin was noted for its sexual innuendo in the title and its propulsive dance beats courtesy of Chic's Nile Rodgers. The album also featured a string of smash singles, from "Material Girl" (backed by a glamorous music video filled with colorful costume changes) to the equally upbeat "Dress You Up" and "Into the Groove."

True Blue. In 1985 Madonna appeared in the film Desperately Seeking Susan, a performance that helped sales for her third record, True Blue. It was liked by fans and critics alike, and the slow but stormy "Live to Tell" went to number one, followed by "Papa Don't Preach." ("Papa Don't Preach" had a music video that featured Madonna playing a character who is breaking the news of an out-of-wedlock pregnancy to her father.)

Her next film, Shanghai Surprise (1986), in which she costarred with her husband Penn, was poorly received. Following that trend was her film Who's That Girl? (1987), although she went on a massive tour to support the sound track (known primarily for the hit "Causing a Commotion"). When the tour stopped in Italy, Pope John Paul II advised fans to boycott her concert because of its sexually suggestive material and its negative references to religion.

Like a Prayer. The artist took a much-needed break after the tour, releasing the remix project You Can Dance, and she focused on her impending divorce from Penn. In 1989 she released Like a Prayer, backed by an international tour. The project is best regarded for its title cut, with its provocative music video featuring burning crosses and an interracial kiss on a church altar. Undaunted by the outrage caused by the video, Madonna made Dick Tracy (1990), starring with Beatty, and she released the greatest-hits project, The Immaculate Collection. Between studio recordings, Madonna made the concert documentary Truth or Dare (1991), and she had a part in the film A League of Their Own (1992).

Sex and Erotica. In 1992 Madonna released the book Sex, showing several suggestive images of the entertainer posed with other celebrities. It was generally panned by book reviewers, but the accompanying compact disc, Erotica, with Madonna singing in a sensuous style, generated considerable interest. Some dedicated fans were less supportive of this project and its follow-up, Bedtime Stories, in 1994. In 1996 Madonna starred in the film Evita, and her nearly flawless portrayal of Eva Perón earned her a Golden Globe for Best Actress in a Musical or Comedy. Taking another creative turn, Madonna released a dance-oriented album in 1998, Ray of Light, which was followed by the electronic sounds of Music in 2000.

Later Work. Madonna worked with her husband Ritchie on Swept Away (2002), which was not well received, and her album American Life, which included the singer rapping, was a critical disappointment. Returning to her dance roots of the early 1980's and the electronic style that made Ray of Light and Music popular, Madonna released Confessions on a Dance Floor (which featured the dance single "Hung Up," known for its sample of ABBA's "Gimme! Gimme! Gimme!"). The project led to 2007's The Confessions Tour DVD and compact disc, and it marked her return to worldwide popularity and commercial and critical success. In 2008 Madonna adopted a hip-hop beat in Hard Candy, which featured Justin Timberlake, Timbaland, and Pharrell Williams.

Musical Legacy

With her diverse blend of pop arrangements, dance beats, and ballads, Madonna has a reputation for being ahead of the trends and for setting the standards for other artists. Madonna presents her music in recordings as well as in the form of videos, with vivid story lines and lavish productions. With her experience in music videos, the singer utilized her dramatic talents in films, which have met with varying degrees of critical acclaim. Thriving on the concert stage, Madonna builds each tour with innovative, impressive, and unpredictable production values. Beyond the music, Madonna has set trends in fashion, popularizing over the years lace, bustiers, fishnet stockings, and jewelry (notoriously wearing a crucifix around her neck). Madonna has remained firm in her convictions, even though her outspoken views on sexuality, gender, ethnicity, and other matters have garnered her criticism.

Andy Argyrakis

Further Reading

Andersen, Christopher. Madonna Unauthorized. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1991. Though unauthorized, this thoroughly researched, account describes Madonna's upbringing, her rise to fame, and her life as one of the biggest pop stars of all time.

Clerk, Carol. Madonna Style. London: Omnibus Press, 2007. This coffee table book is full of photographs tracing Madonna's ability to set fashion trends, from the early 1980's through the 2000's.

Fouz-Hernandez, Santiago. Madonna's Drowned Worlds: New Approaches to Her Cultural Transformations, 1983-2003. Hampshire, England: Ashgate, 2004. An assessment of Madonna's impact on American pop culture, especially in the context of gender, religion, sexuality, and ethnicity.

Madonna. Sex. New York: Warner Books, 1992. This controversial book about sexuality features Madonna posed in a variety of provocative positions and representing a variety of orientations.

Morton, Andrew. Madonna. London: Michael O'Mara Books, 2001. A celebrity biographer examines Madonna's life, from her childhood and Catholic upbringing through her various projects as an entertainer. He assesses the controversies created throughout her career, and he relates anecdotes about her friendships and relationships with a colorful cast of celebrities.

Rooksby, Rikky. The Complete Guide to the Music of Madonna. London: Omnibus Press, 2004. A detailed account of Madonna's top singles and albums.

Sexton, Adam, ed. Desperately Seeking Madonna: In Search of the Meaning of the World's Most Famous Woman. New York: Delta, 1993.A compilation of compelling articles about Madonna on a variety of topics, from such sources as The New York Times and America.

Victor, Barbara. Goddess: Inside Madonna. New York: Cliff Street Books, 2001. The author interviewed Madonna's father, stepmother, grandmother, extended family members, and friends to present this portrait of the pop star, with details from her private life to her highly public life. The text exhaustively covers her career, including her entrance into the musical arena, her tours, and her roles in film.

See also: Babyface; Blackwell, Otis; Harry, Deborah; Lee, Peggy; Lloyd Webber, Sir Andrew; Nicks, Stevie; Prince; Smith, Michael W.; Smith, Patti; Streisand, Barbra; Styne, Jule; Summer, Donna; Wonder, Stevie.

Gustav Mahler

Austrian classical composer

As a composer, Mahler enlarged and deepened the expressive power of the symphony, and his compositions served as a bridge between Romanticism and modernism. As a conductor, he expanded the repertoire and improved opera productions, both artistically and musically.

Born: July 7, 1860; Kalischt, Bohemia, Austrian Empire (now Kaliště, Czech Republic)
Died: May 18, 1911; Vienna, Austro-Hungarian Empire (now in Austria)

Principal works

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Symphony No. 1 in D Major, 1888 (Titan); Symphony No. 2 in C Minor, 1895 (Resurrection; for mixed chorus and orchestra); Symphony No. 3 in D Minor, 1897 (for solo voice, female chorus, male chorus, and orchestra); Symphony No. 4 in G Major, 1900; Das klagende Lied, 1901 (for mixed chorus and orchestra); Symphony No. 5, 1904; Symphony No. 6 in A Minor, 1906 (Tragic); Symphony No. 7 in E Minor (Walk by Night), 1908; Symphony No. 8 in E-flat Major, 1910 (Symphony of a Thousand; for mixed chorus and orchestra; Symphony No. 9 in D Major, 1912; Symphony No. 10 in F-sharp Minor, 1924 (Adagio).

PIANO WORK: Piano Quartet in A Minor, 1878.
VOCAL WORKS: Drei Lieder, 1880 (Three Songs; for tenor and piano); Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, 1885 (Songs of a Wayfarer; for voice and piano or orchestra); Lieder und Gesänge, 1890 (fourteen songs for voice and piano); Lieder aus "Des Knaben Wunderhorn," 1896 (The Youth's Magic Horn; for voice and piano or orchestra); Rückert Lieder, 1902 (for voice and piano or orchestra); Kindertotenlieder, 1904 (Songs on the Death of Children; for voice and orchestra); Das Lied von der Erde, 1911 (The Song of the Earth; for two voices and orchestra; based on Hans Bethge's poetry collection The Chinese Flute).

The Life

Gustav Mahler (GEW-stahv MAH-lur) was the second of fourteen children born to Bernhard and Marie Mahler, but the first of only six who survived to adulthood. He later described himself as "thrice homeless": a Bohemian in Austria, an Austrian among Germans, and a Jew throughout the world. He spent his childhood and youth in Jihlava, Moravia (called Iglau by Germans), where, at an early age, he heard military and folk music that he reproduced on his accordion and piano. Through formal studies he quickly mastered the piano, giving his first public recital at the age of ten. By the time he was fifteen his prodigious musical knowledge and pianistic proficiency gained him admittance to the Vienna Conservatory, where he continued his piano studies while growing increasingly enamored of composition. Influenced by such composers as Johann Sebastian Bach, Ludwig van Beethoven, and Richard Wagner, he created works for piano quintet and piano quartet, and he began composing an opera. He also took courses in history, philosophy, and music at the University of Vienna, and he published a piano-duet arrangement of Symphony No. 3 of Anton Bruckner, whose lectures he attended.

After leaving the conservatory in 1879, he worked as a music teacher while composing the cantata Das klagende Lied, the first work that contained passages indicative of his developed style. Unable to earn a living from teaching and composing, he began a conducting career in the summer of 1880 at a theater in Bad Hall, Austria. For the next decade Mahler's career as a conductor prospered as he assumed progressively more prestigious positions at a series of opera houses, including Laibach (now Ljubljana), Olmütz (now Olomouc), Kassel, Prague, Leipzig, and Budapest. His discovery of Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Youth's Magic Horn), a collection of folkish texts, provided him with material for most of his songs. In turn, his songs influenced the symphonies he was beginning to compose.

His first long-term appointment was at the Hamburg Opera, from 1891 to 1897. Because of his heavy duties as a conductor, he was able to compose only in the summers, during which he completed his Symphony No. 2 in C Minor and Symphony No. 3 in D Minor. The premiere of Symphony No. 2 in Berlin in 1895 was his first great public success. However, this success was tempered by personal tragedy when his youngest brother committed suicide. The earlier deaths of his parents meant that he had to support his two remaining sisters. He very much wanted to become the director of the Vienna Court Opera (Hofoper), whose director was ill, but his Jewish background created an obstacle in heavily Roman Catholic Vienna. He removed this impediment by being baptized a Catholic in February, 1897. Two months later, he was appointed the Hofoper's kapellmeister.

During his decade-long tenure at the Vienna Court Opera, he made an already excellent institution even better. In 1901 he had a home built in the Austrian Alps where he spent summers composing several of his symphonies and the Songs on the Death of Children. In 1902 he married Alma Schindler, the talented daughter of an artist and nineteen years his junior; they had two daughters, Maria (born in 1902) and Anna (born in 1904). Maria's death at the age of five, along with increasingly hostile criticisms of his opera productions and orchestral compositions, led Mahler to move to New York City, where he conducted the Metropolitan Opera and New York Philharmonic orchestras. In 1911, at the end of an exhausting concert season, he fell seriously ill and returned to Vienna, where he died prematurely at age fifty.

The Music

Although Mahler achieved fame as an opera conductor, he was most passionate about his compositions of songs and symphonies. Some scholars have characterized him as a song symphonist, since several of his symphonies make use of the human voice, and those that do not often have their themes rooted in his songs. Mahler felt that, as a symphonist, he must create new worlds of sound, for example, in Symphony No. 6 cowbells were an important part of the musical texture he was creating. With his intimate knowledge of traditional and nontraditional instruments, he was able to find correlatives for specific emotions in melodies, harmonies, and rhythms, from the most profound despair in Symphony No. 9 in D Major to the joyful, heaven-storming music of Symphony No. 8 in E-flat Major. Even though some scholars emphasize the great diversity in Mahler's compositions, others believe that this diversity exists within an underlying unity, since all his works are informed by what he called the "mystic force of love."

Early Works. Apart from his juvenilia, Mahler's musical evolution really began with Das klagende Lied, in which he felt that he had discovered his individualistic style. The subject is the rivalry of two brothers for the hand of a queen. Its music exhibits Brucknerian and Wagnerian influences, though these have been incorporated into Mahler's unique orchestral voice. His next work, Songs of a Wayfarer, has been called the masterpiece of Mahler's early years. It is a song cycle whose unity derives from the theme of "artist as hero." Mahler used themes from some of these songs in his Symphony No. 1 in D Major. Some scholars interpret this symphony as autobiographical, saturated with Mahler's ironic attitude toward death (in the third movement's funeral march) and his triumphant affirmation of life (in the fourth movement).

The Wunderhorn Works. Scholars have often grouped together Mahler's second, third, and fourth symphonies together because his musical settings of poems from the Wunderhorn anthology formed the basis of several of their movements, for example, the Ulricht (primeval light) movement of Symphony No. 2 and O Mensch! Gib Acht! (oh man! pay attention) in Symphony No. 3. Also influential in these symphonies was the Christianity that Mahler had embraced, though his faith was filtered through his personal struggles to make sense of the eschatological last things—death, judgment, hell, and heaven. For example, in the first movement of Symphony No. 2, which originally bore the title Todtenfeier (funeral rites), Mahler viewed death with what he called "a spiritual eye," but in the finale he created an apocalyptic vision of Judgment Day followed by the resurrection of the dead. Symphony No. 3, in which he created a musical representation of his hierarchical cosmology, moves from inanimate nature through the plant, animal, and human worlds to the angelic world, which he ecstatically depicted as the most sublime force in the universe. Similarly, Symphony No. 4 ends with a childlike treatment of "the heavenly life," based on a Bavarian folk song, "Heaven Is Full of Violins."

Middle-Period Trilogy. A common characteristic of the fifth, sixth, and seventh symphonies is the absence of the human voice, but Mahler was still able to mine his songs for themes in this trilogy. For example, the Adagietto of Symphony No. 5 is related to the second song of his Kindertotenlieder. Symphony No. 6 in A Minor, sometimes called the Tragic, deals with somber themes, and the coda to its finale contains the much-debated hammer blows. Mahler intended them to have "a supernatural, crushing effect," since they down his hero like a felled tree. Many critics consider Symphony No. 7 in E Minor the weakest of the nine, or a problem piece, but Mahler thought it one of his best. The night-music movements have led some to subtitle this symphony Walk by Night, while others believe that Mahler constructed it around the poetic idea of nocturnal nature. The movements progress through various shades of darkness toward the light of the finale.

Gustav Mahler. (Library of Congress)

Symphony No. 8 in E-flat Major. This was an immense success in Mahler's lifetime, requiring a gigantic group of instrumentalists and singers and acquiring the label Symphony of a Thousand, bestowed on it by a contemporary concert agent for its Munich premiere, which had 858 singers and 171 instrumentalists. The work is a combination of a medieval Catholic hymn, Veni Creator Spiritus ("Come Holy Spirit, Creator"), and the final scene from Johann Wolfgang von Goethe's Faust, which deals with Faust's redemption. Through his passionate understanding of these texts, Mahler was able to unify these apparently disparate parts. He called his Symphony No. 8 "my Mass," and he thought of it as his gift to the Austrian nation.

Das Lied von der Erde. Das Lied von der Erde, which Mahler composed after he learned that he had heart disease, represents in music his struggles to discover the true meaning of life, and this struggle informed both his conception and articulation of this song symphony based on Chinese poems. He superstitiously refrained from calling it Symphony No. 9, because he believed that no great composer lived beyond nine symphonies. Themes of farewell, death, and resignation haunt this work, as they do in what came to be called his Symphony No. 9 in D Major, which turned out to be his final completed work. Mahler left orchestral sections and drafts of movements for his Symphony No. 10 in F-sharp Minor. but it remained unfinished at the time of his death. The performance versions created by others lack the master's touch, particularly the finale, which some feel would have been his most remarkable achievement.

Musical Legacy

The preservation of Mahler's oeuvre began with his earnest supporters. For example, after Mahler's death, conductor-composer Bruno Walter conducted the first performances of Das Lied von der Erde and Symphony No. 9, and he helped keep Mahler's music alive by programming the other symphonies in his concerts and recordings. During the Nazi period Mahler's works could not be played in Germany and Austria, and they were largely ignored in the rest of the world. After World War II, because of advocates such as Jewish composer-conductor Leonard Bernstein, Mahler's music found an ever-widening audience, and now his compositions are part of the standard repertoire of most symphony orchestras.

Mahler also influenced composers, who saw him as the precursor of modern music. For example, Arnold Schoenberg revered Mahler as "a saint," and Mahler's influence can be heard in Schoenberg's Gurrelieder. Mahler's music also affected the next generation of composers. Benjamin Britten in England and Dmitri Shostakovich in the Soviet Union knew and loved Mahler's works and made use of them in some of their compositions.

Mahler also had his critics. For instance, Igor Stravinsky, whose views on music were radically different, found Mahler's compositions unappealing. Others characterized Mahler's music as overblown and mawkish. However, even his critics had to admit that his accomplishments not only represented his own time, when Romanticism modulated into modernism, but also foreshadowed the Age of Anxiety.

In public, Mahler refused to explain his music programmatically, but scholars have discovered copious evidence in his personal papers that he used his music to express personal, philosophical, and religious ideas dear to him. Alma Mahler saw her husband's music as ethical and mystical, symbolic of the modern human being's status as a lonely creature looking for God. Mahler, too, believed that his music stood for something preeminently human, and this profound humanity means that his music will endure.

Robert J. Paradowski

Further Reading

Feder, Stuart. Gustav Mahler: A Life in Crisis. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2004. Feder takes a psychoanalytical approach to Mahler, who was once Sigmund Freud's patient. Index.

Floros, Constantin. Gustav Mahler: The Symphonies. Translated by Vernon and Jutta Wicker. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1993. German musicologist gives a detailed explication of Mahler's symphonic works, with copious musical examples. Selected bibliography and index.

La Grange, Henry-Louis de. Gustav Mahler, Volume 1. New York: Doubleday, 1973.

_____. Gustav Mahler, Volume 2: Vienna: The Years of Challenge, 1897-1904. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995.

_____. Gustav Mahler, Volume 3: Vienna: Triumph and Disillusion, 1904-1907. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999. Important sources for Mahler's life and works. Each volume contains an appendix, extensive bibliography, and index.

Mitchell, Donald. Gustav Mahler: The Early Years. Rev. ed. Edited by Paul Banks and David Matthews. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1980.

_____. Gustav Mahler: The Wunderhorn Years. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1985.

_____. Gustav Mahler: Songs and Symphonies of Life and Death. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1985. This trilogy of studies has been called an "enduring monument" of Mahlerian scholarship. Each volume contains extensive musicological analysis, bibliography, and index.

Mitchell, Donald, and Andrew Nicholson, eds. The Mahler Companion. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002. Updated paperback edition makes this well-reviewed book available to general audiences. Up-to-date research explores all areas of Mahler's life and works. Extensive sources section, index of works, and general index.

See also: Berg, Alban; Berio, Luciano; Bernstein, Leonard; Britten, Benjamin; Golijov, Osvaldo; Ives, Charles; Klemperer, Otto; Norman, Jessye; Salonen, Esa-Pekka; Schoenberg, Arnold; Shostakovich, Dmitri; Sibelius, Jean; Solti, Sir Georg; Steiner, Max; Stokowski, Leopold; Thomas, Michael Tilson; Walter, Bruno; Webern, Anton von.

Miriam Makeba

South African singer and songwriter

Makeba introduced South African folk songs into the African jazz musical style that swept Europe and the United States in the 1950's, and her appearances spotlighted declining conditions for black South Africans during the years of apartheid.

Born: March 4, 1932; Prospect, South Africa
Died: November 10, 2008; Castel Volturno, Caserta Province, near Naples, Italy
Also known as: Miriam Zenzi Makeba (full name); Mama Africa

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Miriam Makeba, 1960; The Many Voices of Miriam Makeba, 1962; The World of Miriam Makeba, 1963; The Voice of Africa, 1964; The Click Song, 1965; An Evening with Belafonte/Makeba, 1965 (with Harry Belafonte); Makeba Sings, 1965; All About Miriam, 1966; Comme une symphonie d'amour, 1966; The Magic of Makeba, 1966; The Magnificent Miriam Makeba, 1966; Pata Pata, 1967; Keep Me in Mind, 1970; Country Girl, 1975; Sangoma, 1988; Welela, 1989; A Promise, 1974; Eyes on Tomorrow, 1991; Sing Me a Song, 1994; Meet Me at the River, 1996; Country Girl, 1997; Folk Songs from Africa, 1997; Homeland, 2000; Sabelani, 2001; Reflections, 2004.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: The World of African Song, 1972 (edited by Jonas Gwangwa and E. John Miller, Jr.); Makeba: My Story, 1987 (with James Hall).

The Life

Born to a Swazi mother and Xhosa father, Miriam Zenzi Makeba (MIH-ree-uhm mah-KEH-bah) was eighteen days old when she was imprisoned with her mother, who was found guilty of brewing beer. South Africa's apartheid government was established in 1948, and with the Group Areas Act, it separated housing for all South Africans based on race. Required relocation and separation of job opportunities based on race forced Makeba to leave school at the age of sixteen to work full time as a domestic servant.

Her first marriage resulted in the birth of a daughter, Bongi. In 1948 Makeba began singing in Johannesburg, and she was touring and performing full time throughout southern Africa by 1950. Performances in the United States, including an appearance on television's The Steve Allen Show, helped make Makeba a star. Through her long-standing friendship with Harry Belafonte, she met Duke Ellington, Pearl Bailey, and other well-known jazz musicians and performers.

Makeba performed for and was received by leaders all over the world, among them Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, Fidel Castro of Cuba, and John F. Kennedy of the United States. Makeba married two famous figures, South African jazz trumpeter Hugh Masekela and, later, Black Power activist Stokely Carmichael. The latter association harmed her career in the United States, causing revocation of her U.S. residency permit in 1968. She relocated to the coastal African nation of Guinea, as a guest of the President Sékou Touré, until his death in 1984. In Guinea she served as a U.N. diplomatic delegate, speaking against South African oppression of blacks. In 1987 she participated in Paul Simon's Graceland tour, and she eventually returned to South Africa after thirty-one years in exile. She died on November 10, 2008, of an apparent heart attack after performing at a concert in Italy.

Miriam Makeba. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

South Africa, 1948-1959. In 1948 Makeba began her South African singing career in a band called the Cuban Brothers. In 1950 she joined the African Jazz and Variety touring review as a member of the Manhattan Brothers, sponsored by Gallotone Records. The record company created an all-women singing group the Skylarks, and Makeba performed in the cast of the touring jazz opera King Kong (1959). Makeba earned recognition for her powerful voice with a repertoire that included folk songs in tribal languages, jazz standards, and original songs. While touring, Makeba was invited to perform in a 1959 documentary called Come Back, Africa, in which she sang two songs that would change her life forever.

Lives of professional black South African musicians during the apartheid era included dangerous travel and frequent incarceration because of the strict regulations on permits and on segregation in all activities. While traveling to Venice, Italy, to receive an award for the film, Makeba had her South African citizenship revoked, and she was exiled from 1959 until 1990. Her recordings were banned, rendering her music illegal inside South Africa.

United States, 1959-1968. Makeba's recording career in the United States included more than twenty albums featuring her original music. She is most noted for the 1967 song and album entitled Pata Pata, which reflected the South African dance style of her youth, and the hit "The Click Song," a wedding song that includes vocal clicks found in the Xhosa language.

As a star performer in Belafonte's shows and as a successful recording artist for RCA, Reprise, and Mercury recording studios, Makeba embodied a new musical style known as African jazz. The music reflected Makeba's early touring repertoire, and it was supported with powerful vocals and African instrumentalists. The release of An Evening with Belafonte/Makeba signaled the international integration of music and politics with an album that included in the liner notes strong language of support for the liberation of black South Africans. As Belafonte's protégé, Makeba became the first African to receive a Grammy Award, for the album An Evening with Belafonte/Makeba, in 1966.

Citizen of the World, 1968-1990. During her years in Guinea she earned the nickname Mama Africa, and in 1977 she performed at Festac, a festival of arts for black people from all over the world. She persuaded Stevie Wonder to accept his Grammy Award in Nigeria by satellite, again bringing national attention to the plight of black South Africans. Makeba continued performances and contacts with American musicians and activists. In Europe her concerts continued, and in 1988 she released Sangoma with Warner Bros. Records, which consisted entirely of Xhosa folk songs and which was dedicated to her mother's role as a sangoma, a highly regarded African healer.

In 1987 Makeba toured with Simon, demonstrating her commitment to interracial unity and to her African heritage. In 1990 she was permitted to return to South Africa, and she collaborated musically with Dizzy Gillespie, Nina Simone, and Hugh Masekela.

South Africa, 1990. At home in South Africa, Makeba performed in the film version of the musical Sarafina! (1992). Shot in Soweto and Johannesburg, the film portrayed the student-driven Soweto Riots of 1976. She appeared in the film Amandla! (2003), highlighting the role of music and musicians in the struggle for South African social justice. Her career as a international performer continued until 2005, when she began farewell performances to formally end her role as a public figure.

Musical Legacy

Makeba's music and her presence at international conferences helped to expose apartheid's oppressive tactics. Her recordings brought the folk music of the Xhosa and other tribal cultures into the mainstream, and her integration of Western, jazz, and tribal folk music defined a new genre known as African jazz.

In a career that spanned six decades, Makeba continued to earn worldwide recognition for her international service as well as for her musical accomplishments. She won the Dag Hammarskjold Peace Prize in 1996, Otto Hahn Peace Medal in Gold in 2001, and she shared (with Sophia Gubaidulina) the Polar Music Prize in 2002. In 2004 she was voted number thirty-eight on the list of the Top 100 Great South Africans. In 2004 she was appointed South African President Thabo Mbeki's Goodwill Ambassador to the United Nations, she was awarded the Gold Class Commander of the Legion of Honor from French President Jacques Chirac.

Susan W. Mills

Further Reading

Cooper, Carol. "The Sound of the City: The Road Leads Home." The Village Voice 45, no. 22 (June 6, 2000): 135. This performance review describes Makeba's musical blend of ballads with African jazz repertoire.

Johnson, Brett. "Mama Afrika." Vibe 8, no. 7 (September, 2000). In this article, Makeba discusses the changes in South Africa's political landscape as well as the challenges the country faces during reconstruction.

Makeba, Miriam. My Story. New York: New American Library, 1987. Makeba's autobiography includes personal information about her family life, about social conditions in South Africa during the apartheid era, and about her performing career, from its start until 1987.

Williamson, Nigel. "Mama Said." Folk Roots 22, no. 1 (July 1, 2000): 33-35. This article profiles Makeba, focusing on the long years she spent in exile during apartheid, and her homecoming.

See also: Belafonte, Harry; Ellington, Duke; Gillespie, Dizzy; Masekela, Hugh; Simon, Paul; Simone, Nina; Wonder, Stevie.

Henry Mancini

American film-score composer

An Academy Award-winning film composer, Mancini incorporated jazz and popular music into his compositions, abandoning the classical Hollywood practice of primarily using symphonic music for scores.

Born: April 16, 1924; Cleveland, Ohio
Died: June 14, 1994; Los Angeles, California

Also known as: Enrico Nicola Mancini (full name); Hank Mancini

Principal works

FILM SCORES: The Raiders, 1952; All American, 1953; Ain't Misbehavin', 1955; A Day of Fury, 1956; Touch of Evil, 1958; Breakfast at Tiffany's, 1961; Days of Wine and Roses, 1962; Experiment in Terror, 1962; Charade, 1963; The Pink Panther, 1963; Dear Heart, 1964; A Shot in the Dark, 1964; The Great Race, 1965; Arabesque, 1966; Two for the Road, 1967; I Girasoli, 1970; The Night Visitor, 1971; The Thief Who Came to Dinner, 1973; That's Entertainment!, 1974; The White Dawn, 1974; Once Is Not Enough, 1975; The Return of the Pink Panther, 1975; The Pink Panther Strikes Again, 1976; Revenge of the Pink Panther, 1978; Ten, 1979; A Change in Seasons, 1980; Mommie Dearest, 1981; Trail of the Pink Panther, 1982; Victor Victoria, 1982; Curse of the Pink Panther, 1983; The Man Who Loved Women, 1983; The Thorn Birds, 1983 (television); The Great Mouse Detective, 1986; The Glass Menagerie, 1987 (television); Physical Evidence, 1989; Skin Deep, 1989; Ghost Dad, 1990; Switch, 1991; Son of the Pink Panther, 1993.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: The Music from "Peter Gunn," 1959; Music from Mr. Lucky, 1960; Our Man in Hollywood, 1963; A Merry Mancini Christmas, 1966; Mancini Plays the Theme from "Love Story," 1970; Henry Mancini Conducts the London Symphony Orchestra in a Concert of Film Music, 1976; Cinema Italiano: Music of Ennio Morricone and Nino Rota, 1991.

The Life

At the age of eight, Enrico Nicola Mancini (mahn-SEE-nee) began his music training with his father, who taught him piccolo and flute. After the family moved from Cleveland, Ohio, to the steel town of West Aliquippa, Pennsylvania (near Pittsburgh), in 1936, Mancini took up the piano. A year later he joined the Pennsylvania All-State Band. During that time, Mancini became interested in jazz, particularly the swing style of Glenn Miller's and Benny Goodman's big bands, and he taught himself arranging. His formal training in orchestration, arranging, and theory started at the age of fourteen, when he studied with theater conductor and arranger Max Adkins in Pittsburgh. After high school he continued his education at the music school of Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh. In 1942 he was accepted at the Juilliard Graduate School of Music in New York, but he had studied there less than a year when he was drafted in the Army for a tour of duty in Europe.

During his service, first with Air Force and then with infantry military bands, Mancini met musicians from Miller's Army Air Corps Band. They were instrumental in providing Mancini with a position as pianist and arranger for the newly formed Glenn Miller Orchestra under the direction of Tex Beneke in 1946. During his residence with the orchestra, Mancini met Ginny O'Connor, a member of the Mello-Larks, who sang with the orchestra and whom he married in 1947. When O'Connor became a session singer in Los Angeles in the same year, Mancini moved with her to Los Angeles, where he worked freelance as an arranger and composer for radio shows, bands and nightclub performers until 1952. At the same time, he took courses at the Westlake School of Music, and he privately studied composition with Ernst Krenek, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and Alfred Sendry. An engagement of the Mello-Larks for a short film featuring Jimmy Dorsey was the springboard for Mancini, who was hired as the arranger for the film, to work at the Universal-International Studios music department. He joined the staff in 1952, working under music director Joseph Gershenson and alongside such experienced composers as Frank Skinner, Herman Stein, David Tamkin, and Hans Salter. In 1958 Mancini had the opportunity to score Orson Welles's Touch of Evil. Shortly after, after being laid off from a financially ailing Universal Studio, he signed up with Blake Edwards—a director, formerly employed at Universal—to score the music for a television series.

The Music from "Peter Gunn." The sound track for this television series became so popular that Mancini also wrote the music to Edwards's next television series, Mr. Lucky, yet another success.

From that time to the late 1980's, Mancini regularly scored an average of three to four films a year. Among this copious output are more than twenty-five film scores for Edwards, culminating in Victor

Victoria. Mancini was not able to complete its musical-theater adaptation, which premiered on Broadway in 1995, because he died of pancreatic cancer in 1994.

For his work, Mancini was nominated for eighteen Academy Awards (receiving four: two for Best Score and two for Best Song) and for seventy-two Grammy Awards (receiving twenty, including the Lifetime Achievement Award in 1995). In addition, he received several career achievement awards.

The Music

The Universal Years. Mancini's career as a film composer began in 1952, when he was hired for a two-week assignment to cowrite music for the Abbott and Costello comedy Lost in Alaska (1952). After that, he was promoted to staff member of the Universal music department. During the next six years he composed or co-composed (often uncredited) the scores for around ninety films, from which music was reused for fourteen films as stock music. These films were primarily B-pictures, belonging to the Western, musical, comedy, mystery, or monster film genres. During these assignments, Mancini familiarized himself with a clichéd use of film music. Besides such assembly-line assignments, his affinity for swing jazz and his previous involvement with the Miller orchestra made him the right choice to adapt the music and compose the tune "Too Little Time" for Anthony Mann's biopic The Glenn Miller Story (1953). Two years later, Mancini was asked to write additional music for a similar film, The Benny Goodman Story (1955). Another important film Mancini was able to work on as an uncredited second composer—next to the experienced Frank Skinner—was Douglas Sirk's melodrama Imitation of Life (1959).

In 1958 Mancini scored his first important film, Orson Welles's Touch of Evil. Mancini abandoned the usual studio orchestra configuration, and he concentrated his forces on a big band lineup with an emphasis on percussion instruments. The music in Touch of Evil describes the locale (a U.S. town near the Mexican border) and mood (criminal), and it also depicts the psychology of the leading characters. These purposes manifest themselves in the opening of the film, during the notorious three-and-a-half-minute-long take. The unmistakably Afro-Cuban-influenced music, with cutting brass chords and the superimposition of other diegetic music (rock and roll and swing), prepares the audience for the sudden explosion of a car bomb.

Scoring Style. Mancini used Afro-Cuban and cha-cha music again in his first feature film collaboration with Blake Edwards. The fifteen-minute party scene in Breakfast at Tiffany's (1961) is underscored with four different Latin tunes showcasing extended jazz solos. Breakfast at Tiffany's can be regarded as Mancini's first composition exhibiting the scoring practices that would become his trademark. Mancini generally prefers a multithematic to a leitmotivic or monothematic approach for the overall musical design of a score. He also exhibits an affinity for popular music, eliminating nearly completely symphonic film scoring. Furthermore, Mancini explored novel concepts on how music interacted with the image, through simple melodic construction, unambiguous harmonic progression, and economical, lucid orchestration. All these features are responsible for the cool, light touch Mancini's music conveys, representing and shaping an urban, sophisticated, upper-class zeitgeist of the 1960's. Instead of creating complex through-composed cues (a praxis that many film composers of the 1950's, such as Elmer Bernstein and Bernard Herrmann, carried out), Mancini modeled his scores on popular song structures and jazz tunes. Jazz ballads with a bossa nova rhythm accompany romantic scenes (The Pink Panther), cool jazz-influenced upbeat numbers accompany urban scenes (Breakfast at Tiffany's) or suspense scenes (The Pink Panther) and—as already stated—Afro-Cuban big band tunes accompany party scenes and tension scenes. The most notable feature that Mancini explored, however, was the interpolation of a memorable song with a cantabile melody in many of his films, beginning with "Moon River" in Breakfast at Tiffany's, the title tune in Days of Wine and Roses, Charade, Dear Heart, and Two for the Road, and "Meglio Stasera" in The Pink Panther as well as "The Sweetheart Tree" in The Great Race. Other films have instrumental, songlike themes such as A Shot in the Dark, Arabesque, and I Girasoli (Sunflower). These songs were not only placed into a film for the purpose of a new musico-dramaturgical approach to film scoring, but also for commercial purposes, as vehicles to produce and promote albums of the film sound tracks.

Henry Mancini. (© Bettmann/CORBIS)

The Mancini Sound. Much of the Mancini sound was achieved by utilizing a uniquely personal orchestration. Unlike most other Hollywood film composers, Mancini orchestrated the major part of his music himself. He preferred warm string pads, sustained French horn chords, sharp staccato brass interjections, and colorful woodwind sections. He often scored passages for two alto flutes, for solo bass flute, for solo trombone, for small jazz vocal ensemble (as in Breakfast at Tiffany's, Charade, and Two for the Road), and for ethnic-sounding instrument combinations (as in Experiment in Terror and Arabesque). He also featured vibraphone chords (often at the ends of cues), harp arpeggios, unembellished piano melodies, and sparse harmonic accompaniment. The jazz solos that Mancini incorporated into his scores were usually performed by a few selected musicians (such as trumpeters Pete and Conte Candoli and saxophonist Plas Johnson), whom the composer would rehire repeatedly. Based on this formula, Mancini composed music for more than seventy films. Most memorable are his scores for That's Entertainment!, The Return of the Pink Panther, Edwards' musical Victor Victoria, the television miniseries The Thorn Birds (with flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal as soloist), and The Glass Menagerie (directed by Paul Newman).

Musical Legacy

Mancini was instrumental in changing the direction of film scoring at the beginning of the 1960's. He used jazz and popular music as the base of his compositions, and to a large extent he avoided the cliché tropes with which jazz was associated in the 1940's and 1950's, such as crime, nightlife, drugs, and prostitution. He also embedded a song in the narrative fabric of a nonmusical film, accenting key plot moments, and he used song structure as the paradigm for many of his scores. In the early 1960's, Mancini was not the only composer moving toward a different aesthetic in film scoring. Composers such as Michel Legrand, Lalo Schifrin, Neal Hefti, Quincy Jones, and Johnny Mandal increasingly began using jazz- and pop-oriented orchestration, integrating pop songs at prominent places in the film, and utilizing idioms from popular music as the foundation for their scores.

Mancini was not only a prolific film composer but also a conductor, performing primarily his music and that of other film composers up to fifty times a year, for more than six hundred performances throughout his career. Beginning in the late 1950's, he reworked many of his film scores for recording, resulting in an output of ninety albums. His first album, The Music from "Peter Gunn" (1959), proved to be successful, topping the charts in February, 1959, and going gold. Other album hits were Music from Mr. Lucky, Our Man in Hollywood, A Merry Mancini Christmas, Mancini Plays the Theme from "Love Story," Henry Mancini Conducts the London Symphony Orchestra in a Concert of Film Music, Cinema Italiano: Music of Ennio Morricone and Nino Rota, and more.

Michael Baumgartner

Further Reading

Bernstein, Elmer. "A Conversation with Henry Mancini." Film Music Notebook 4, no. 1 (1978): 9-21. An informative conversation between two renowned film composers.

Brown, Royal S. Overtones and Undertones: Reading Film Music. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1994. Brown's seminal book on film music contains a long interview with Mancini.

The Cue Sheet. Henry Mancini. The Cue Sheet 9, no. 2 (1992). This special issue of the trade magazine The Cue Sheet, dedicated to Mancini, contains excellent articles on the composer's music, including an annotated bibliography and an overview of the Mancini collection of scores and ancillary material at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Elhaïk, S., and D. Mangodt. "A Filmography/Discography of Henry Mancini." Soundtrack! 34/35: 12-15. This is probably the best available filmography and discography on Mancini.

Mancini, Henry. Sounds and Scores: A Practical Guide to Professional Orchestration. Miami, Fla.: CPP/Belwin, 1986. A prime source for the student of Mancini's orchestration techniques. It includes music examples from many of his scores up to 1963 (notably from Mr. Lucky and Peter Gunn).

Mancini, Henry, and Gene Lees. Did They Mention the Music? New York: Cooper Square Press, 2001. An autobiography, cowritten with Lees, is a good primary source for information about Mancini's life, although it is heavily anecdotal.

Marmorstein, G. "A Passing Breeze Filled with Memories: Henry Mancini, from Universal to International." In Hollywood Rhapsody: Movie Music and Its Makers, 1900 to 1975. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. This short article offers a good overview of Mancini's career.

Smith, Jeff. The Sounds of Commerce: Marketing Popular Film Music. New York: Columbia Univeristy Press, 1998. Written by an eminent film music scholar, this book contains a long chapter on how Mancini reutilized his film scores for album releases and offers an in-depth analysis of Breakfast at Tiffany's.

See also: Andrews, Dame Julie; Bergman, Alan; Bernstein, Elmer; Eddy, Duane; Goodman, Benny; Grusin, Dave; Herrmann, Bernard; Jones, Quincy; Legrand, Michel; Mercer, Johnny; Miller, Glenn; Tormé, Mel; Valens, Ritchie; Williams, John; Zimmer, Hans.

Bob Marley

Jamaican reggae singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Marley and his group, the Wailers, allowed local Jamaican artists to transcend the island sound of ska and move toward the globally recognized genre of reggae.

Born: February 6, 1945; Nine Mile, St. Ann Parish, Jamaica
Died: May 11, 1981; Miami, Florida
Also known as: Robert Nesta Marley (full name)
Member of: Bob Marley and the Wailers

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (with the Wailers): Soul Rebel, 1971; African Herbsman, 1973; Burnin', 1973; Catch a Fire, 1973; Natty Dread, 1974; Rasta Revolution, 1974; Birth of a Legend, 1976; Rastaman Vibration, 1976; Exodus, 1977; Reflection, 1977; Babylon by Bus, 1978; Kaya, 1978; Bob Marley and the Wailers, 1979; In the Beginning, 1979; Survival, 1979; Uprising, 1980; Confrontation, 1983.

The Life

Robert Nesta Marley (MAHR-lee) was born to Norval Sinclair Marley, a white Jamaican, and Cedella Booker, a black Jamaican. Marley's father was a plantation overseer, but he was rarely at home. To some extent, he did support his family financially. When Marley was ten years old, his father died, and his mother moved with her son to Kingston to find work. Marley was often teased because of his mixed racial parentage; this would play a part in his music later.

At fourteen, Marley left school to become an apprentice welder. It was at this time that he began pursuing music. During this period, Marley met Jimmy Cliff, and Marley was introduced to Cliff's record producer, Leslie Kong. Marley recorded his first record with Kong, but he soon split with Kong. He changed his musical style from ska to reggae with his band the Wailers. Originally the Wailing Wailers, they signed with Coxsone Dodd's label, and the group topped the charts in Jamaica in 1964.

In 1966 Marley married Rita Anderson, and in that same year he converted to Rastafarianism. Although the Wailers had started a record label, Tuff Gong (after Marley's nickname), they primarily recorded with JAD Records until 1974, when the band broke up. Marley went on to record under the name Bob Marley and the Wailers, but the band was composed of different members.

By 1975 Marley had topped the Billboard charts in the United States, and he was a success internationally as well. In 1976 Marley became more political. He agreed to play at the Smile Jamaica Concert, which was designed to unite the violently feuding political parties of Jamaica. Two nights before the concert, Marley, his wife, and his bassist were shot. Despite his injuries, Marley did perform the concert. Marley returned to Jamaica for another political peace concert in 1978 after being charged with possession of marijuana while recording in England. In 1979 Marley worked to raise awareness of the plight of Africans with his music and support.

Marley's health began to fail in 1977. Diagnosed with skin cancer, he refused to have his affected toe amputated. Stating Rastafarian religious beliefs for his refusal, Marley went untreated until after he collapsed while jogging in 1980. By the time Marley had decided to be treated, the cancer had spread throughout his body. His last concert was played in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in September of 1980. Marley was awarded the Jamaican Order of Merit in April of 1981. A month later, he was hospitalized in Miami, where he succumbed to cancer.

The Music

Marley began his musical career in Kingston, teaming with Neville "Bunny" Livingston and Peter McIntosh. He began in the music industry as a solo act, recording for Kong. His first recording featured the song "Judge Not," which was released on the Beverley Records label. After the rest of the recordings he had made for Kong failed to get airtime, Marley moved back to working with a group. McIntosh and Livingston joined him to create the Wailing Wailers.

The Wailing Wailers. The Wailing Wailers were introduced to Dodd, a prestigious sound system man, by drummer Alvin Patterson. Sir Coxsone, as Dodd was called, auditioned the group, and he eventually produced their single "Simmer Down," accompanied by ska greats the Skatelites, on his Coxsone's Studio One label. The song held its position at the top of the Jamaican charts for the first two months of 1964. At the time, the Wailing Wailers consisted of Marley, McIntosh, Livingston, Junior Braithwaite, Cherry Smith, and Beverly Kelso. The group's early ska influence led it to release about thirty tracks during its Studio One years, 1964 to 1967. The songs were musically and lyrically influenced by the Rude Boy (American gangster film imitators and hooligans of the Jamaican streets) and dancehall cultures.

Rastafarianism. The important turning point for Marley musically, and perhaps the downfall of the ska genre, occurred in 1966. When Marley returned to Jamaica after visiting his mother, who had moved to Delaware, the Rastafarian movement was flourishing. Marley was soon swept up in the fervor. Marley, McIntosh, and Livingston re-formed as the Wailers; they moved their sound toward the slower reggae beat. With this move, they ran into a conflict with Dodd, who was still supporting the ska sound and Rude Boy culture anthems.

The Wailers' new sound was significant in converting popular music from ska to rocksteady and later to reggae. Along with the beat, the topics of the group's songs began to change. Without Rude Boy culture, Marley moved to songs about social conflict and unity, and this would eventually make him famous. Adding Aston and Carleton Barrett as the rhythm section, the Wailers produced such songs as "400 Years," "Small Axe," and "Soul Rebel" in this style with the recording expertise of producer Lee "Scratch" Perry.

Beyond Jamaica. Marley became a writer for popular American singer Johnny Nash. This led to Marley's first success outside Jamaica, when Nash covered his song, "Stir It Up," in 1972. In 1972 Marley signed with Chris Blackwell of Island Records. Blackwell recognized Marley's unique ability to bring reggae out of the backwaters of Jamaican music and into the global market. He funded the group's next album, Catch a Fire, in 1973. Blackwell also sent the Wailers on tour in England and the United States. However, Livingston became disillusioned with the touring lifestyle, and he refused to go on the U.S. tour. The group would record its last album, Burnin', before McIntosh and Livingston would leave the group the next year. Marley and McIntosh had written and recorded "I Shot the Sheriff" on Burnin', which Eric Clapton covered in 1974. The success of the song would help promote Marley's next album.

Natty Dread. After the loss of two core members, Marley reformed the Wailers as Bob Marley and the Wailers. He added the I-Threes as the backup vocalists, one of which was his wife Rita. In 1974 they recorded Natty Dread; an album that marks Marley's departure from his former bandmates and his coming completely into his own style. Natty Dread ran the gambit of topics, and the title track itself is an ode to the Rastafarian movement. Perhaps the most famous song on the album is "No Woman, No Cry," which speaks about the harsh life of the Kingston ghettos. Marley also provided political commentary on the album, with such songs as "Them Belly Full (But We Are Hungry)" and "Revolution." Natty Dread was significant because it showcased Marley as a solo performer and defined him as one of the best songwriters of his generation.

Rastaman Vibration. Marley's next album was his most successful album at release, climbing into the Top 10 of the Billboard 200 charts in 1976. Notable songs from this album include "Roots, Rock, Reggae" and "War," which quotes Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie I. His next album, Exodus, includes perhaps the most famous and influential reggae song ever recorded, the powerful "One Love/ People Get Ready." It has gone on to become an unofficial theme song for supporters of peace and unity causes. Kaya, which was recorded at the same time as Exodus, was released the next year. Both albums feature songs from the Studio One years.

Survival. Marley's next album was meant to be the first of a trilogy. Survival was a politically charged album in which Marley pleads for African unity. Many of its songs, such as "Africa Unite," became important anthems to African independence movements at the time. Uprising, Marley's last album released before his death, was a spiritual endeavor. It ended with the folk tune "Redemption Song," a statement of Marley's mortality. The posthumously released Confrontation includes works that were unreleased by Marley during his lifetime. Its most famous song is "Buffalo Soldier," about the African American cavalry units of the nineteenth century American West.

Bob Marley. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Marley was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1994. In 1998 Time proclaimed Exodus the album of the century. Rolling Stone lists Catch a Fire, Burnin', Exodus, Natty Dread, and Legend (a compilation released in 1984) in its 500 Greatest Albums of All Time. Numerous covers have been made of Marley's songs, many in his genres of ska and reggae. However, his music transcends categories, and it has influenced artists in genres from hip-hop to country. Marley was a foundational contributor to reggae, which was defined in his confrontational although encouraging words. He helped transform Jamaican music into world music.

Marley's heartfelt lyrics and voice—encouraging people to set aside their differences—led to his immense popularity. He continues to be popular today because his songs bring out the best of the human experience. Marley influenced such diverse musicians and groups as Rancid, OutKast, Eric Clapton, and U2.

Perhaps Marley's most significant legacy is the bridges he built between musical genres, encouraging other artists to be wide-ranging in their work.

The musical connections between rock and punk, punk and ska, and hip-hop and rock can be traced to Marley's transcending of traditional genres. Without Marley, it is doubtful that such mixed-pedigree bands as No Doubt could have risen to popularity. Marley made dreadlocks a popular statement, and he was one of the first to become an activist, with his politically empowering songs.

Daniel R. Vogel

Further Reading

Boot, Adrian. Bob Marley: Songs of Freedom. New York: Viking Studio Books, 1995. This is one of the few sources of information sanctioned by the Marley estate. It has a good collection of photographs and covers his life from beginning to end.

Farley, Christopher John. Before the Legend: The Rise of Bob Marley. New York: Amistad, 2006. This book primarily talks about the early years of Marley's life. It concentrates on the beginnings of his musical career, and it covers the period of Marley's transition between ska and reggae.

Marley, Rita. No Woman, No Cry. New York: Hyperion, 2004. Written by his wife, this book takes a more critical look at Marley and his lifestyle while he lived with her. Primarily her own story, this work covers some of the tribulations of Marley during his career, and it offers a firsthand account of his life.

Moskowitz, David. The Words and Music of Bob Marley. Westport, Conn.: Praeger, 2007. This book goes through the lyrics and history behind Marley's songs. It presents a good timeline, so readers may put Marley's expressions in a chronological order and match them with current events at the time.

White, Timothy. Catch a Fire: The Life of Bob Marley. New York: Holt, Rinehart, and Winston, 1983. This well-researched biography accurately explains the roots of Rastafarianism, the Kingston ghettos, and the problems of Africa, which Marley often sang about. This book gives the reader a sense of where Marley was coming from in his songwriting.

See also: Blow, Kurtis; Bono; Cliff, Jimmy; Gil, Gilberto; Tosh, Peter.

Wynton Marsalis

American jazz composer and trumpeter

Through his recordings, books, and television appearances, Marsalis has revitalized interest in traditional jazz.

Born: October 18, 1961; New Orleans, Louisiana
Also known as: Wynton Learson Marsalis (full name)
Member of: Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers; the Wynton Marsalis Septet

Principal works

ORATORIO (music): Blood on the Fields, 1994.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): All American Hero, 1980; Wynton, 1980; Wynton Marsalis, 1981; Think of One, 1983; Hot House Flowers, 1984; Baroque Music: Wynton Marsalis, Edita Gruberova, Raymond Leppard, and the English Chamber Orchestra, 1985 (with others); Black Codes (From the Underground), 1985; J. Mood, 1985; Live at Blues Alley, 1986; Marsalis Standard Time, Vol. 1, 1986; Carnaval, 1987; Standard Time, Vol. 2: Intimacy Calling, 1987; Baroque Music for Trumpets, 1988 (with the English Chamber Orchestra); Levee Low Moan: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 3, 1988; The Majesty of the Blues, 1988; Thick in the South: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 1, 1988; Uptown Ruler: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 2, 1988; Crescent City Christmas Card, 1989; Standard Time, Vol. 3: The Resolution of Romance, 1990; Trumpet Concertos, 1990; Twenty-four, 1990; Blue Interlude, 1991 (with the Wynton Marsalis Septet); Citi Movement, 1992 (with the Wynton Marsalis Septet); In This House, on This Morning, 1992 (with the Wynton Marsalis Septet); On the Twentieth Century, 1993 (with Judith Lynn Stillman); Joe Cool's Blues, 1994 (with Ellis Marsalis); In Gabriel's Garden, 1996; Jump Start Jazz, 1996 (with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra); Standard Time, Vol. 5: The Midnight Blues, 1998; At the Octoroon Balls: String Quartet No. 1, 1999 (with the Orion String Quartet); Big Train, 1999; Elefantes, 1999

(with Arturo Sandoval); Fiddler's Tale, 1999; The Marcias Suite, 1999; Reeltime, 1999; Standard Time, Vol. 4: Marsalis Plays Monk, 1999; Standard Time, Vol. 6: Mr. Jelly Lord, 1999; Sweet Release and Ghost Story, 1999 (with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra); All Rise, 2002; Angel Eyes, 2003; The Magic Hour, 2004; Unforgiveable Blackness: The Rise and Fall of Jack Johnson, 2004; From the Plantation to the Penitentiary, 2007; Two Men with the Blues, 2008 (with Willie Nelson).

ALBUMS (with Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers): Live at Montreaux and Northsea, 1980; Album of the Year, 1981; Art Blakey in Sweden, 1981; Straight Ahead, 1981; Keystone Three, 1982.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Sweet Swing Blues on the Road, 1994; Jazz in the Bittersweet Blues of Life, 2001.

The Life

Wynton Learson Marsalis (WIHN-ton LEER-suhn mahr-SAHL-ihs) grew up in a musical family. His father, Ellis, is a well-known jazz pianist, and several of his brothers (Branford, Delfayo, and Jason) are professional musicians. Marsalis studied both classical music and jazz from an early age; by the age of fourteen, he was playing in various groups around New Orleans and had been invited to play with the New Orleans Philharmonic. After high school, Marsalis attended the Juilliard School of Music for a brief time before becoming a member of Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers in 1980. A few years later, Marsalis left to form his own quintet, and he has been leading his own groups ever since.

While Marsalis has spent much of his time since 1980 touring and playing with small groups, as he recounts in his books Sweet Swing Blues on the Road and Jazz in the Bittersweet Blues of Life, he is perhaps best known for his work with Jazz at Lincoln Center in New York City. He cofounded the group and has been its director since its inception. Through this, he has helped bring traditional jazz back into the public eye.

Marsalis's position with Jazz at Lincoln Center has allowed him to profess his philosophies on music and culture to a large audience, and some of these views have made Marsalis a controversial figure. His positions on the role of race in the history and reception of jazz and on what types of music constitute jazz have made him unpopular with some critics and other jazz musicians.

The Music

Marsalis has performed both a classical and a jazz repertoire in addition to composing several works for jazz ensemble. In his jazz performances as well as in his compositions, he considers himself to be a proponent of classical jazz, favoring such artists as Louis Armstrong, John Coltrane, and early Miles Davis and eschewing free jazz and fusion. These influences can often be heard clearly in his performances. His classical tastes tend to encompass a wide range of styles, though he is usually the soloist in whatever he plays.

Blood on the Fields. Marsalis's oratorio Blood on the Fields, written for large jazz band and three vocalists (two males and one female), was first performed by the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra on April 1, 1994, then subsequently recorded by Columbia Records. In 1997 it became the first jazz work to win the Pulitzer Prize.

The entire work is massive, lasting more than three hours and consisting of more than twenty-one movements. The story follows two African slaves,

Wynton Marsalis. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Jesse and Leona, from the boat that brings them to the New World to their attempted escape. (It is not clear whether or not they succeed.) This plot contributes significantly to the unification of the work, with the music designed to represent as many different aspects of classical jazz as possible. For example, the sections in which the character of Juba sings sound similar in style to that of certain New Orleans groups, particularly the Dirty Dozen Brass Band. The first movement starts off with a trumpet solo reminiscent of Armstrong's, and then it develops into a style of playing resembling avant-garde art music. The first two-thirds of the work appear to be through-composed, with little improvisation; it is only after Jesse learns that he needs to change his attitude that the music opens up, allowing the players more freedom (especially in the section entitled "Back to Basics.")

Blood on the Fields represents many of Marsalis's philosophies, especially on the issue of race in America. He uses a pastiche of musical styles rather than a unified style, and he relates the music to the text, suggesting extramusical meaning (as heard in "Back to Basics," when the listener believes that Jesse is on the right track). Blood on the Fields provides insight into Marsalis's philosophies.

Baroque Music for Trumpets. Though best known for his jazz playing, Marsalis has also been praised for his performances of classical music. His recording of Michael Haydn's Concerto for Trumpet and Orchestra in D Major (1779) that appears on Baroque Music for Trumpets exhibits strong technique and a keen sense of rhythm. In addition, his tone is gorgeous throughout his range, showing no breaks or strain, even in the high notes. More controversial is the musicality of his performance; some find it to be mechanical and dull, while others believe it is highly emotionally charged.

Marsalis Standard Time, Vol. 1. This album won the Grammy Award for Best Jazz Instrumental Performance Group, and in it Marsalis plays with Marcus Roberts on piano, Bob Hurst on bass, and Jeff "Tain" Watts on drums. The tile plays an important role in the album: each of the tunes is a standard, and the concept of time appears in the form of shifts and changes applied to the rhythm (offsetting the beat and melodic emphases) and meter (altering the large-scale organization of phrases and time signatures).

Marsalis and the rest of his quartet enjoy playing with the metric expectations of the typical jazz listener in "Caravan," which is evident from the opening of the work, when Marsalis delays the entry of some of the eighth notes in the first phrase. While the rhythm changes only slightly in the chorus, so the tune is easily recognized, once the solos begin, the rhythmic and metric ambiguity increases significantly. Often, this is accomplished by playing a short phrase (less than a measure long) multiple times in sequence without the usual rests in between that would allow the melody to keep its original metric shape. Occasionally (especially in Roberts's solos), the soloist will change the tempo of his own line while the rhythm section stays at the original tempo, thereby creating a metric mixture for a brief portion of the piece. Indeed, the quartet's rhythmic play helps distinguish its performances from other jazz ensembles.

Musical Legacy

Marsalis's influences on jazz education, and music education in general, will be felt for years to come. He had made contributions in his involvement with various public television shows, with numerous master classes, and with the development of young jazz musicians.

Marsalis has composed several works for jazz ensembles of various sizes that will be standards in the repertoire. In particular, his jazz oratorio, Blood on the Fields, which won the first Pulitzer Prize given to a jazz work, will become a staple in the large jazz ensemble literature.

His position with Jazz at Lincoln Center in New York City has allowed him to promote his roles as educator, composer, and performer. In return, Marsalis's talent and charisma have provided Jazz at Lincoln Center with a powerful advocate for classical jazz. For his trumpet playing, Marsalis has won numerous Grammy Awards, for classical and jazz recordings, which have been influential for promising young trumpet players.

Elizabeth Scoggin

Further Reading

Gourse, Leslie. Wynton Marsalis: Skain's Domain, A Biography. New York: Schirmer Books, 1999. This book covers all aspects of Marsalis's life, personal and professional, in an unbiased and scholarly fashion. It is particularly useful in learning about his early years and his life outside music. Includes illustrations, discography, videography, and select bibliography.

Marsalis, Wynton. Marsalis on Music. New York: W. W. Norton, 1995. This book, designed for children and produced as a companion to the public television series of the same name, presents Marsalis's approach to teaching music. Includes illustrations, select musical dictionary, and compact disc of musical examples.

Marsalis, Wynton, and Frank Stewart. Sweet Swing Blues on the Road. New York: W. W. Norton, 1994. This book is a combination of pictorial essay and stream-of-consciousness writing about Marsalis's music, his life on the road, and his overall philosophies. No index.

Marsalis, Wynton, and Carl Vigeland. Jazz in the Bittersweet Blues of Life. New York: Da Capo Press, 2001. This book is written as a memoir with flashbacks, focusing on the tours Marsalis made with his septet and covering many aspects of his life, both musical and extramusical. No index.

Marsalis, Wynton, with Selwyn Seyfu Hinds. To a Young Jazz Musician: Letters from the Road. New York: Random House, 2004. Despite the title, the content of this book is not designed for children. In the book, Marsalis expounds on his music and life philosophies and he responds to critics on the topics of race and jazz styles. No index, but the table of contents presents a summary of each chapter.

Zabor, Rafi, and Vic Garbarini. "Wynton vs. Herbie: The Purist and the Crossbreeder Duke It Out." In The Jazz Musician, edited by Mark Rowland and Tony Scherman. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1994. This article, which originally appeared in Musician magazine, reveals the reasons why Marsalis is considered controversial. Marsalis and Herbie Hancock are interviewed, and they comment on each other's positions.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Blakey, Art; Coltrane, John; Davis, Miles; Hancock, Herbie; McFerrin, Bobby.

Frank Martin

Swiss classical composer

Martin developed a highly original compositional style that incorporated numerous influences, ranging from Johann Sebastian Bach, French Impressionism, serial techniques, and folk music.

Born: September 15, 1890; Geneva, Switzerland
Died: November 21, 1974; Naarden, Netherlands

Principal works

BALLET: Das Märchen vom Aschenbrödel, 1942 (libretto by Marie-Eve Kreis; based on Cinderella by Wilhelm and Jacob Grimm).

CHAMBER WORKS: Sonata No. 1, Op. 1, 1915; Piano Quintet, 1919; Trio sur des mélodies populaires irlandaises, 1926; Sonata No. 2, 1932; Quatre pièces brèves, 1934 (Four Short Pieces); Ballade for Flute, 1939; Ballade for Trombone and Tenor Saxophone, 1940; Eight Preludes, 1950; String Quartet, 1968.

CHORAL WORKS: Les Dithyrambes, 1918 (lyrics by Pierre Ronsard); Le Vin herbé, 1942 (lyrics by Joseph Bédier); Golgotha, 1949 (text from the Bible); Ballade for Voice, 1950 (lyrics by August Wenzinger and Paul Baumgartner); Ode à la musique, 1962 (lyrics by Guillaume de Machaut); Mass, 1963; Requiem, 1973.

OPERAS: La Nique à Satan, 1933 (Thumbing Your Nose at Satan; libretto by Albert Rudhardt); Ein Totentanz zu Basel im Jahre, 1943 (A Dance of the Dead in Basel; libretto by Mariette de Meyenbourg); Le Mystère de la nativité, 1959 (based on Le Mystère de la passion by Arnoul Greban); Monsieur de Pourceaugnac, 1963 (based on the play by Molière).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Symphonie burlesque sur des mélodies populaires savoyardes, 1916; Piano Concerto No. 1, 1936; Symphony, 1938; Petite symphonie concertante, Op. 54, 1946; Concerto for Seven Wind Instruments, 1949; Harpsichord Concerto, 1952; Violin Concerto, 1952; Piano Concerto No. 2, 1970.

The Life

Frank Martin was the youngest of ten children born to a clergyman in Geneva, Switzerland. He displayed musical talents from an early age, playing the piano and composing. In 1906 he studied privately with Joseph Lauber in Geneva, learning the conservative Germanic style. Later studies with Hans Huber and Frederic Klose furthered his conservative musical upbringing. Martin developed a close relationship with the conductor Ernest Ansermet, who mentored the younger composer. Ansermet played a considerable role in Martin's musical development, and he conducted premieres of many of Martin's works.

Martin left Geneva in 1919, moving to Zürich, then in 1921 to Rome, and finally in 1923 to Paris. While in Paris, he became indoctrinated into mainstream European music of the early twentieth century. In 1926 he enrolled in the Jacques Dalcroze Institute in Geneva, eventually becoming an instructor. Martin also taught at the Geneva Conservatory, and he was director at the Technicum Moderne de Musique.

After World War II, he moved to Amsterdam with his third wife, Maria Boeke, a flutist, in part to escape the demands he faced in Switzerland. In 1956 they moved to the suburb of Naarden, where Martin devoted himself to composing for the remainder of his life. He was active with commissions until his death at eighty-four.

The Music

Martin was an eclectic composer, adopting musical traits from figures as diverse as Arnold Schoenberg and Claude Debussy. Stylistically, his music is difficult to place because of the wide array of influences and because of a long period of maturation. Martin's compositions include nearly all genres, and they consistently reflect the highest quality.

The early works display Martin's veneration for Johann Sebastian Bach along with influences of César Franck and Gabriel Fauré. These works are characterized by smooth voice leading and an emphasis on harmony and counterpoint. By the 1930's, Martin had adopted a serial technique that differed from Arnold Schoenberg's in its more confined approach. Martin's mature works are driven by a gliding harmony, in which chords result from well-crafted lines. Strong thematic motives are absent, replaced by a steady, if austere, chromaticism. Tonality, though present in his music, is often blurred, and a piece seldom ends in the same key in which it was begun.

Mass. Though the mass was completed in 1926, it premiered in 1963 and was not published until 1972. Martin believed that his sacred works were personal communications between himself and God. Consequently, he withdrew these works until later in his life. Despite its early date of composition, the mass exhibits traits that characterized Martin's mature style, with its melodic beauty and sublimely colorful harmonies. Martin's counterpoint is flawless, resulting in a rich harmonic flavor.

Le Vin herbé. Martin was approached by Robert Blum in 1938 to create a choral piece for his small madrigal group. The resulting work, completed in 1941, was a secular oratorio generally considered Martin's breakthrough. The text is based on Joseph Bédier's The Romance of Tristan and Iseult (1900). Scored for twelve voices with piano and string accompaniment, the voices supply both solo and choral parts. The choir provides commentary on the soloists' dialogue. Martin employs serial techniques liberally, joining melodic rows with triadic harmonies. Tone rows are presented in one voice at a time, often in equal note values, with little or no development. He also uses parlando to present the text, a technique he probably derived from Debussy's opera Pelléas et Mélisande (1902) and continued to develop in later vocal works.

Petite symphonie concertante. Commissioned by Paul Sacher and premiered by him in 1946, the work is scored for solo harp, harpsichord, and piano with double string orchestra. Martin blends a personal brand of neoclassicism with twelve-tone melodic content. The opening is a slow introduction with an expressive melody leading into an allegro section that develops each of the solo instruments singularly and in combination. A lively march follows, leading to a grand finale.

Piano Concerto No. 2. Finished in 1968 and first performed in 1970 with Paul Badura-Skoda as the soloist with the Vienna Philharmonic, the concerto represents a resurgence in Martin's popularity in that city. The work begins with twelve-tone passages, leading to a rhythmic fugato. The second movement is a passacaglia, and the finale is a scherzo. The work is technically demanding on the soloist with its dense counterpoint and rhythmic vitality. Martin maintains traditional thematic development and tonality within a modernistic setting.

Musical Legacy

Martin excelled in almost every musical genre, writing high-quality masses, concerti, operas, instrumental and chamber works, and vocal music. His style reflected many of the modernist trends of the twentieth century, but his music never relinquished its Romantic roots. He adopted Schoenberg's twelve-tone system, but he adapted it to his style by using it largely as a melodic tool. Though his works tend to lack lyric melodic characteristics, his harmonic and contrapuntal writing places him among the best composers of the time. Despite his teaching and performing activities, Martin never developed a following or established a school of composition. Because of his unique style—one that could not be pigeonholed into any trend—it is difficult to assign his music to any musical lineage. His compositions have been compared to similar works by composers such as Igor Stravinsky and Paul Hindemith.

Brian Doherty

Further Reading

Ansermet, Ernest, and Frank Martin. Correspondence, 1934-1968. Neuchâtel: A la Baconnière, 1976. Presents valuable insight on Martin's views of his music and the works of others and a unique perspective into his life through a collection of letters written over a thirty-four year period.

King, Charles W. Frank Martin: A Bio-Bibliography. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1990. Exhaustive bibliography of biographic and analytical works about Martin. Includes a discography, worklist, and brief biographical sketch.

See also: Debussy, Claude; Hindemith, Paul; Schoenberg, Arnold; Stravinsky, Igor; Szigeti, Joseph; Wenzinger, August.

Sir George Martin

English rock pianist and arranger

An extraordinary record producer, Martin worked with the Beatles, encouraging the group to experiment with a variety of instruments and enhancing their songs with distinctive arrangements and innovative electronic studio manipulation.

Born: January 3, 1926; London, England
Also known as: George Henry Martin (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (with the Beatles): Please Please Me, 1963; With the Beatles, 1963; Beatles for Sale, 1964; The Beatles' Second Album, 1964; Beatles '65, 1964; The Beatles' Story, 1964; A Hard Day's Night, 1964; Introducing the Beatles, 1964; Meet the Beatles, 1964; Something New, 1964; Beatles VI, 1965; Help!, 1965; Rubber Soul, 1965; Revolver, 1966; Yesterday . . . and Today, 1966; Magical Mystery Tour, 1967; Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, 1967; The Beatles, 1968 (The White Album); Abbey Road, 1969; Yellow Submarine, 1969; Let It Be, 1970.

The Life

Born to an impoverished family, George Henry Martin formed a band at the age of fifteen after attending a BBC Symphony Orchestra concert at his school. Despite his desire to pursue an artistic career, he enlisted in the Royal Navy, serving as an officer and a pilot until 1947. Following his military service, Martin attended the prestigious Guildhall School of Music until 1950, where he studied oboe and piano.

After graduation, Martin briefly worked for the BBC Music Library before becoming the assistant to Oscar Preuss, head of EMI's Parlophone Records. When Preuss retired in 1955, Martin was appointed to oversee the label at the young age of twenty-nine. While he began his career at EMI recording classical music, Martin also produced regional music, original cast albums, and various comedy records. In 1962 he was introduced to the Beatles, and he hesitantly offered them a recording contract. Despite his initial reservations at the group's seeming lack of musical promise, Martin later recounted that he was initially impressed by both the sense of humor and the charm of the band members and their manager, Brian Epstein. Martin served as the sole producer of the Beatles for the majority of the group's career, providing guidance by means of his own classical training and acting as an arranger and keyboardist for the group. In addition, Martin contributed orchestral underscore to a number of films, including Yellow Submarine (1968), The Family Way (1966), and Live and Let Die (1973).

Martin later became a crucial proponent of the monumental Beatles Anthology project of the 1990's, and he directed his son Giles in the remixing of eighty minutes of Beatles music that served as the sound track for the Cirque du Soleil stage show, Love, commercially released in 2006.

The Music

As the producer of the Beatles, Martin contributed to their distinctive sound at every stage of their career. His role in the band's success became apparent in 1965, when he overdubbed his original music for string quartet onto the Paul McCartney track "Yesterday." During the creative height of the Beatles' output, Martin contributed extensively by composing original music, creating tailored arrangements, providing advice regarding instrument selection, and pioneering studio manipulation for some of their most celebrated songs.

Rubber Soul. With the Beatles' sixth studio album, Rubber Soul (1965), Martin's contribution began to rise, corresponding to the increasingly introspective and varied nature of the material he was provided by the group. In the case of the reminiscent ballad "In My Life," Martin satisfied John Lennon's desire for a Baroque-like quality by composing an ornate keyboard solo in the vein of Johann Sebastian Bach, which he performed himself. While he originally played the striking interlude on a Hammond organ, he eventually chose to record it at half-speed on a Steinway piano and speed it electronically, creating a unique timbre that combined the rich tone of the piano and the agility of the harpsichord. The Beatles would later revisit a Bach-like serenade in their renowned single "Penny Lane" (1967), utilizing a trumpet solo that Martin helped McCartney to realize after the songwriter was inspired by a performance of Bach's Brandenberg Concerto No. 2.

Revolver. Following the success of Rubber Soul, the Beatles sought to achieve new artistic heights with their next studio album, Revolver (1966). Martin facilitated the creative forces of the band in realizing their musical potential. In the case of the psychedelic sermon "Tomorrow Never Knows," he chose to record George Harrison's guitar solo backward through a Leslie speaker, also taping Lennon's voice track through the amplifier in order to achieve an omnipresent quality that matched the lyrics. The producer famously supplied music for string octet in the track "Eleanor Rigby," achieving an eerie quality that he later attributed to the influence of film composer Bernard Herrmann. Throughout the song, the strings both counter and accompany McCartney's vocal melody, adding chilling melancholy by doubling the voice when the priest wipes dirt from his hands as he departs from the lonely heroine's grave.

Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. With Martin's assistance, the Beatles next recorded the album that many consider to be their magnum opus, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band (1967). Some rock historians consider this the first concept album, and the striking cover art depicts the Beatles in psychedelic garb standing alongside icons of both high and popular culture, including Edgar Allan Poe, Karl Marx, Bob Dylan, and Marilyn Monroe. With the careful assistance of producer Martin, the band had set a new artistic precedent, replacing the single with the album as musical entity. Among Martin's memorable contributions to the work are the electronically manipulated sound collage of Lennon's "Being for the Benefit of Mr. Kite" and the clarinet trio employed in McCartney's "When I'm Sixty-Four." Notable is his atonal orchestral crescendo in the album's final track, "A Day in the Life," followed by an E major chord (played on three pianos) that he allowed to ring out for more than a minute by increasing the recording level as the piano resonated. The gesture arguably serves as the most experimental moment of the Beatles' entire musical career.

Musical Legacy

In addition to serving as the producer of the Beatles, Martin worked with a number of celebrated artists, including Gerry and the Pacemakers, Peter Sellers, and Sophia Loren. By 1963 he had produced thirty-seven number-one hits, a testament to his success prior to the Beatles.

Ultimately, Martin is inextricably linked to the Beatles' musical legacy. Often dubbed "the fifth Beatle," he earned the title through not only production but also collaboration. Composing arrangements that accompanied some of the group's most celebrated songs, the producer balanced the amateur musical knowledge of the band with his own academic training. Through his expertise, the musical language of high culture began to penetrate the band's repertory, resulting in albums such as Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, a landmark work of music production that obscured the boundaries between popular and art music.

Erica K. Argyropoulos

Further Reading

Lewisohn, Mark. The Beatles Recording Sessions. New York: Harmonie Books, 1988. Provides a detailed chronicle of the recording sessions of the Beatles.

Markowitz, Rhonda. The Greenwood Encyclopedia of Rock History: Folk, Pop, Mods, and Rockers, 1960-1966, Vol. 2. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2006. Examines Martin within the larger context of Beatles history, recognizing his contribution to the success of the group.

Martin, George, and Jeremy Hornsby. All You Need Is Ears. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1979. Martin describes his career as a producer with the Beatles and other artists, including Peter Sellers and Gerry and the Pacemakers.

Martin, George, and William Pearson. With a Little Help from My Friends: The Making of Sgt. Pepper. Boston: Little, Brown, 1994. Martin provides a song-by-song account of the creative process involved in the making of the album, including the vast amount of studio manipulation required to realize the musical vision set forth by the Beatles.

Roylance, Brian, Julian Quance, Oliver Craske, Roman Milisic, and Derek Taylor, eds. The Beatles Anthology. San Francisco: Chronicle Books, 2000. A landmark history of the Beatles comprised of personal interviews with the band members and their surrounding circle, including Martin.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Harrison, George; Herrmann, Bernard; Lennon, John; McCartney, Sir Paul.

Bohuslav Martinů

Czech classical composer

A renowned Czech composer, Martinů created music remarkable for its clarity, driving rhythms, and range of emotion. His compositions reflect the influence of the music of different historical periods and of different countries.

Born: December 8, 1890; Polička, Bohemia (now in Czech Republic)
Died: August 28, 1959; Liestal, Switzerland

Principal works

BALLETS (music and libretto): Istar, 1921 (based on the book by Julius Zeyer); Kdo je na světě nejmocnější?, 1922 (Who Is the Most Powerful in the World?); Vzpoura, 1925 (The Revolt); La Revue de cuisine, 1927 (The Kitchen Revue); Špalíček, 1933 (The Chap-Book); The Strangler, 1948 (libretto by Robert Fitzgerald).

CHAMBER WORKS: Cello Concerto No. 1, 1930 (revised 1939); Four Nocturnes for Cello and Piano, 1931; Violin Sonata No. 2, 1931; Piano Quartet, 1942; Five Madrigal Stanzas for Violin and Piano, 1943; Violin Sonata No. 3, 1944; Czech Rhapsody, 1945 (for violin and piano); Oboe Concerto, 1955; Sonatina for Clarinet and Piano, 1956; Duo No. 2 for Violin and Cello, 1958.

CHORAL WORKS: Polní mše, 1939 (Field Mass); Gilgameš, 1955 (The Epic of Gilgamesh).

OPERAS (music and libretto): Veselohra na mostě, 1935 (Comedy on the Bridge; based on the play by Václav Kliment Klicpera); The Marriage, 1952 (based on the play by Nikolai Gogol); What Men Live By, 1952 (based on the story by Leo Tolstoy); Recké pasije, 1956 (The Greek Passion; based on the novel by Nikos Kazantzakis).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Symphony No. 1, 1942; Symphony No. 4, 1945; Symphony No. 5, 1946; Symphony No. 6, 1953; The Frescoes of Piero della Francesca, 1955; The Parables, 1958.

PIANO WORKS: Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano, and Timpani, 1940; Piano Concerto No. 4, 1956 (Incantations); Piano Concerto No. 5, 1958 (Fantasia concertante).

The Life

Bohuslav Martinů (BOH-hew-slav MAHR-tih-new) spent the first twelve years of his life with his family in the tower of the Church of St. Jacob, in the eastern Bohemia town of Polička. His father rang bells for services and served as a fire watchman from the tower, in addition to his primary occupation as a cobbler.

Martinů started school and violin lessons in 1897, and he made excellent progress on the instrument. His first solo performance took place in 1905, and people in the town raised money to send him to the Prague Conservatory the following year. Martinů's academic life at the conservatory was unsuccessful, ending in his expulsion in 1910. In spite of this failure, the exposure to the musical community in Prague and urban life in general had a profound effect on Martinů's career. Several significant works published in 1910 marked the beginning of Martinů's substantial oeuvre.

Martinů continued to compose through World War I, avoiding direct involvement in that conflict for health reasons, and he supported himself by teaching violin and performing with the Czech Philharmonic. During the early 1920's, he studied composition with Josef Suk in Prague before traveling to Paris to become a student of Albert Roussel. Beyond his lessons with Roussel, Martinů was influenced during this time by jazz and by the music of Claude Debussy, Igor Stravinsky, and Les Six (a group of six composers in France who rebelled against the heavy Romantic style of composition).

Bohuslav Martinů. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

In 1931 Martinů married Charlotte Quennehen, a dressmaker in Paris. During the 1930's, Martinů was interested in various Renaissance and Baroque forms as well as in Czech folk music. The summer of 1938 was the last time that Martinů would be in Czechoslovakia during his lifetime. Nazi victories prevented his return to his homeland, and he and his wife were eventually forced out of France, making their way to New York in 1941. Martinů composed and taught in the United States until 1953, when he moved to Paris and then Nice. The next few years Martinů held teaching positions in New York and Rome, and he settled in Switzerland in 1957. After two years of poor health, Martinů died of stomach cancer on August 28, 1959. Two decades later, in 1979, Martinů's remains were relocated to Polička.

The Music

In his youth, Martinů admired two composers from his own country, Antonín Dvořák and Leoš Janáček. Martinů learned orchestration techniques from Suk, and he was guided away from programmatic writing by Roussel. Igor Stravinsky's neoclassical music encouraged Martinů's leanings toward older historical styles. Debussy's use of orchestral timbres also played an important role in Martinů's compositions. The music of the Baroque and Renaissance periods appealed to Martinů, although he sometimes struggled philosophically with the implications and stylistic requirements of certain forms, such as the symphony. The majority of Martinů's output is tonal in nature, although his pieces can be extremely dissonant, particularly those written in the 1920's and 1930's.

The Kitchen Revue. Martinů's one-act jazz ballet, titled The Kitchen Revue, represents an important fusion of classical and popular elements in his music. The 1920's were an important time of experimentation for Martinů, particularly in his use of jazz. Martinů drew comparisons between jazz rhythms and those of Slovak folk melodies, which strengthened the appeal of this growing idiom. Scored for clarinet, bassoon, trumpet, violin, cello, and piano, this four-movement work is characterized by constantly changing meters, Stravinsky-like gestures, and the juxtaposition of elements as varied as neoclassical melodies and typical big band dances. The ballet premiered in 1927, and Martinů looked back on it later in life as one of his best compositions.

First Piano Quartet. Martinů's Piano Quartet was completed in 1942, soon after his arrival in the United States. The string and piano parts are fairly evenly matched in all three movements. The piano takes priority in the first movement. In the particularly moving second movement, the piano almost drops out entirely as the strings sustain a melancholy mood throughout. The spinning final movement features a more even distribution of material among instruments.

The Epic of Gilgamesh. Typically categorized as an oratorio or cantata, Martinů refused to assign a conventional term to The Epic of Gilgamesh, describing it simply as an epic. It is based on the epic poem describing the ancient Babylonian king Gilgamesh. Martinů adapted Reginald Campbell's translation of the poem into a proper libretto. This large choral work for soloists, speaker, and chorus features music that combines medieval vocal writing with more contemporary orchestration. Martinů finished the piece in 1955, near the end of his life.

Musical Legacy

Martinů's demand as a teacher in the United States and throughout Europe stamped his influence on the musical world. His prolific compositional career spanned a wide array of genres and styles, including the symphony, opera, song, ballet, chamber, and solo music; and he drew on musical ideas from Baroque, classical, modernist, jazz, and folk sources.

Paul E. Killinger

Further Reading

Beckerman, Michael, ed. Martinů's Mysterious Accident: Essays in Memory of Michael Henderson. New York: Pendragon Press, 2007. The title refers to an accident in 1946 in which Martinů fell off a balcony, severely injuring himself and preventing composition for a few years. Several chapters focus on Michael Henderson, an interdisciplinary Martinů scholar, but the book also provides biographical information and insight into the composer's personality.

Evans, Peter. "Martinů the Symphonist." Tempo 55/56 (Autumn/Winter, 1960): 19-26. In a fairly technical essay, Evans examines Martinů's symphonic work both in the physical scores and in the composer's overall aesthetic approach to the genre.

Racek, Jan, and Jiří Vysloužil. "Problems of Style in Twentieth Century Czech Music." The Musical Quarterly 51, no. 1 (January, 1965): 191-204. This article outlines the major Czech musical figures usually associated with nationalism or modernism, and it offers insight into some of the political and social factors that play into the country's musical history.

Šafránek, Miloš. Bohuslav Martinů. London: Dennis Dobson, 1946. Written by Šafránek while Martinů was alive, this book offers a thorough biography as well as analyses of several of the composer's significant works.

_____. "Martinů's Musical Development." Tempo 72 (Spring, 1965): 11-15. Šafránek offers an overall aesthetic picture of the composer's career, and he briefly describes some of Martinů's music in a variety of genres, without an in-depth analysis of the score.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Debussy, Claude; Hogwood, Christopher; Janáček, Leoš; Stravinsky, Igor; Theremin, Léon.

Hugh Masekela

South African jazz composer, singer, and trumpet player

Masekela fused American jazz music with South African song styles, creating his own genre of music appreciated by jazz and world music fans alike. One of the earliest musicians to leave South Africa, he led a diaspora of African musicians to South African jazz and world acclaim.

Born: April 4, 1939; Witbank, South Africa
Also known as: Hugh Ramopolo Masekela (full name)
Member of: The Jazz Epistles

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Trumpet Africane, 1962; Americanization of Ooga Booga, 1966; The Emancipation of Hugh Masekela, 1966; Grr, 1966; Hugh Masekela's Latest, 1967; Lasting Impressions of Hugh Masekela, 1968; Masekela, 1968; The Promise of a Future, 1968; Home Is Where the Music Is, 1972; I'm Not Afraid, 1973; Masekela Introducing Hedzoleh Soundz, 1973 (with Hedzoleh Soundz); The Boy's Doin' It, 1975; Colonial Man, 1976; Melody Maker, 1977; Main Event, 1978 (with Herb Alpert); Technobush, 1984 (with Kalahari Band); Waiting for the Rain, 1985; Tomorrow, 1986; Uptownship, 1988; Beatin' Aroun' de Bush, 1992; Hugh Masekela and Union of South Africa, 1994 (with Union of South Africa); Reconstruction, 1994; Stimela, 1994; Johannasburg, 1995; Black to the Future, 1998; Note of Life, 1999; Sixty, 2000; Live at the B.B.C., 2002; Time, 2002; Umoja: Spirit of Togetherness, 2002; Revival, 2005; Pola, 2008.

ALBUMS (with the Jazz Epistles): Jazz Epistle Verse 1, 1960; Jazz in Africa, Vol. 1: Jazz Epistles, 1994.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Still Grazing, 2004.

The Life

Born during the early days of World War II, Hugh Ramopolo Masekela (hyew ma-seh-KEH-lah) spent his first six years in a town alive with the sounds of wedding choirs and brass bands, and the radios and gramophones in his neighbors' homes played American jazz. Masekela heard percussion music in the boots issued to coal-mine workers and street sweepers, who danced in them on the streets and in the parks. Masekela's grandmother ran a shebeen, an illegal bar where black South Africans gathered to drink liquor during the apartheid-era prohibition of alcohol for blacks. At the shebeen, he heard migrant workers sing the sad folk and traditional songs of their many ethnic homelands.

In the 1950's, Masekela attended St. Peter's Boarding School, in Alexandra Township, run by Father Trevor Huddleston, who sponsored Masekela's first band, called the Huddleston Jazz Band. Masekela went on to play for the African Jazz and Variety touring show in several Southern African cities. In 1960 Masekela had formal music study at the Manhattan School of Music in New York City. Dizzy Gillespie, Theolonious Monk, Harry Belafonte, and fellow South African Miriam Makeba were among the successful musicians who influenced and supported Masekela in those days. During his life, he was married three times, once to Makeba, and he is the father of three children.

The Music

Masekela performed in recording sessions for numerous jazz musicians, eventually recording his own arrangements and compositions. As a soloist and bandleader, he recorded twenty albums between 1966 and 2007 with several record labels, including his own Chisa label. He enjoyed a long and successful career performing and opening for musicians Stevie Wonder, Herb Alpert and Belafonte. After a rigorous schedule of traveling and touring throughout the world, he returned to South Africa in 1991. Though he started as a jazz musician, his music reflects many of the influences, songs, and sounds of his early days in the streets and the township.

Early Works. In 1958 Masekela created orchestrations and played in the orchestra for the musical King Kong (1959). In 1959 he moved to Capetown and joined the trio Jazz Epistles headed by Abdulla Ibrahim, then known as Dollar Brand. In 1960 the album Jazz Epistle Verse I was released by Gallo Records. In the United States, he played trumpet on several jazz recordings, including The Many Voices of Miriam Makeba, and he eventually recorded his first feature album Trumpet Africaine.

In 1964 he formed a quartet and added vocals that expressed his many childhood influences and memories. With this hybrid sound and his own band, he released the album Americanization of Ooga Booga. Favorable reviews noted that Gillespie, John Coltrane, and Freddy Hubbard had influenced Masekela, but the original sound of "township bop" was quickly becoming Masekela's trademark. After television appearances and the establishment of his own record label Chisa, Masekela released the instrumental single "Grazin' in the Grass," a number-one hit in 1968, bolstering Masekela and his new sound into the mainstream of jazz music.

Hugh Masekela. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Graceland Tour. After the touring and recording years of the 1970's, Masekela moved to Botswana, a neighboring country to South Africa. There, he started the Botswana International School of Music with Khabi Mngoma. Nevertheless, Masekela was forced to leave Botswana in 1985 after a massacre by the South African Defense Force killed close friends in a political raid. In 1987 Masekela persuaded Paul Simon to put together a South African touring band for Simon's album Graceland. The Graceland Tour featured South African musicians, Ladysmith Black Mambazo, Makeba, and musicians from Masekela's band. The tour created awareness about the apartheid oppression in South Africa, although there was much controversy about Simon's work in South Africa during an international ban on performances there.

Sarafina! In 1988 the musical Sarafina! (1987) opened on Broadway after a long and successful run at Johannesburg's famous Market Theatre. The musical portrayed the Soweto uprising in 1976 from the perspective of a young black girl, and it featured Masekela both as a composer and as a performer. Cast members were brought from South Africa's townships, and Masekela supervised the young performers for two years as the show toured the United States. In 1992 the film version, starring Whoopi Goldberg, was released. The Broadway musical received five Tony Award nominations, and it became yet another milestone in the South African awareness projects for which Masekela was becoming well known. Singers from the cast were also featured on his album Uptownship, which soared to the top of the jazz charts.

Still Grazing. After returning to South Africa in 1991, Masekela's retrospective albums became his focus. Still Grazing was released in 2004, and it featured hits such as "Grazin' in the Grass" and "Stimela (Coal Train)" along with tracks compiled from six albums released during Masekela's formative years of 1966 to 1974. The album's release coincided with the autobiographical book of the same title, and Masekela has continued releasing retrospective recordings and touring in and out of South Africa with his own band and other South African musical acts.

Musical Legacy

Masekela launched an entire generation of South African musicians onto the international stage, a contribution as important as his own compositions and performances. From the day he received Louis Armstrong's secondhand trumpet in a charity campaign to send instruments to South African youth, and through his years playing with internationally known musicians and in a variety of musical styles, Masekela developed his own brand of world music, sometimes known as "township jazz."

Masekela was featured in the film Amandla! (2002), a documentary that demonstrated the power of music during the apartheid years. The struggle, as it is called among South Africans, was kept alive and eventually ended in part because of audiences being brought to awareness of South Africa's injustices and horrendous racism through the music of Masekela and that of the musicians he influenced, mentored, and copied.

Susan W. Mills

Further Reading

Copland, David. In Township Tonight! South Africa's Black City Music and Theatre. Rev. ed. Chicago: Chicago University Press, 2007. This history of black performing arts in South Africa features dance and theater in the context of the changing political and social landscape.

Makeba, Miriam, and Mwamuka Nomsa. The Miriam Makeba Story. Houghton, South Africa: STE, 2004. Makeba's autobiography interweaves the personal and musical lives of Masekela and Makeba.

Masekela, Hugh, and D. Michael Cheers. Still Grazing. New York: Crown, 2004. This autobiography of Masekela chronicles his life from his birth in South Africa until 2004. It outlines all of Masekela's musical groups and albums, and it includes several photographs.

Muller, Carol. South African Music: A Century of Traditions in Transformation. New York: ABC-CLIO, 2004. This primer on South African music in the twentieth century includes migration information about Masekela and other South African musicians, as well as a chapter on the Graceland Tour controversy.

Shipton, Alyn. A New History of Jazz: Revised and Updated Edition. New York: Continuum, 2007. An overview of jazz history, that features Masekela and South African jazz music in the "Jazz as World Music" chapter.

See also: Alpert, Herb; Armstrong, Louis; Belafonte, Harry; Cahn, Sammy; Coltrane, John; Gillespie, Dizzy; Makeba, Miriam; Monk, Thelonious; Simon, Paul; Wonder, Stevie.

Johnny Mathis

American popular music songwriter and singer

A popular singer with soaring album sales, Mathis is known worldwide for his rich, velvety-smooth voice, with which he emphasizes long sustained notes and heavy vibrato.

Born: September 30, 1935; Gilmer, Texas
Also known as: John Royce Mathis (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Johnny Mathis, 1957; Warm, 1957; Wonderful Wonderful, 1957; Merry Christmas, 1958; Swing Softly, 1958; Faithfully, 1959; Heavenly, 1959; Open Fire, Two Guitars, 1959; Johnny's Mood, 1960; I'll Buy You a Star, 1961; Romantically, 1963; The Sweetheart Tree, 1965; Up, Up, and Away, 1967; Those Were the Days, 1968; Close to You, 1970; Love Story, 1971; The First Time Ever (I Saw Your Face), 1972; Song Sung Blue, 1972; I'm Coming Home, 1973; Killing Me Softly with Her Song, 1973; Me and Mrs. Jones, 1973; The Heart of a Woman, 1974; Feelings, 1975; When Will I See You Again, 1975; I Only Have Eyes for You, 1976; That's What Friends Are For, 1978 (with Deniece Williams); You Light Up My Life, 1978; The Best Days of My Life, 1979; A Special Part of Me, 1984; Right from the Heart, 1985; In the Still of the Night, 1989; All About Love, 1996; Mathis on Broadway, 2000; Winter Wonderland, 2005.

The Life

John Royce Mathis (MATH-ihs) was the fourth of seven children born to Clem and Mildred Mathis. While young, Johnny and his family moved to San Francisco, where Clem shared with Mathis a great love for music, teaching him songs and musical routines and enrolling him for voice lessons at the age of thirteen. Mathis attended George Washington High School, where he was known for his singing and for his athletic ability. He excelled at high jumping, hurdling, and basketball. In 1954 Mathis attended San Francisco State College, where he set the high jump record for that school.

After singing in various nightclubs in San Francisco, Mathis was asked by Columbia Records to travel to New York to record music. He recorded an album of jazz-oriented renditions in March, 1956. After Columbia Records placed him under the supervision of producer Mitch Miller, Mathis recorded two popular hits in the fall of 1956, "Wonderful! Wonderful!" and "It's Not for Me to Say." In 1957 he recorded his first number-one hit, "Chances Are." The first "greatest hits" album in the music industry, Johnny's Greatest Hits, was recorded by Mathis in 1958.

During the 1960's, Mathis concentrated on making albums, and he became Columbia Records' most successful album artist. In 1978 he recorded his second number-one hit, "Too Much, Too Little, Too Late," a duet with Deniece Williams. Mathis continued to produce and to sell albums through the 1980's and 1990's. After 2000, he began limiting his concert appearances to between fifty and sixty per year.

The Music

Mathis is noted for his nasal tenor voice soaring to hit the high notes. Early in his career, he recorded numerous singles that are still popular and frequently requested on radio stations, but his height of popularity came as an album artist. He recorded dozens of albums that reached gold and platinum status, with seventy-three albums making the Billboard charts. His romantic songs offer the promise of romance that can exist forever.

Wonderful Wonderful. The second album recorded by Mathis, Wonderful Wonderful, contained twelve songs, none of which were his first few singles. Featuring an orchestra under the direction of Percy Faith, this album is a substantial recording. In singing Cole Porter's "Looking at You" and "All Through the Night" and Johnny Mercer's "Day In, Day Out" and "Early Autumn," Mathis demonstrates a voice in control, perfectly tuned and vibrantly full of life. "Too Close," "Looking at You," and "Day In, Day Out" were arranged by Bob Price, while Faith arranged the other nine.

Johnny's Greatest Hits. With crystal-clear diction, Mathis in this 1958 album delivers a number of popular romantic ballads with beautiful artistry. The musical arrangements are well constructed. The 1958 album begins with "Chances Are," one of Mathis's most successful songs. In this album, the song has an elegant arrangement that includes harp, piano, and strings accompanying the flawless voice of Mathis. His embracing sensitivity is captured in "The Twelth of Never," featuring a great arrangement for the harp. Mathis passionately sings "All the Time," handling the tempo changes without error.

Mathis celebrates the pure joy of true love in his rendition of "Wonderful! Wonderful!" The upbeat melody continues throughout the song. His singing of the love ballad "Wild Is the Wind" is enhanced by superb chord changes and subtle tempo changes. Accompanied by an elegant arrangement with the piano, Mathis croons "It's Not for Me to Say" with his deep affection for his one true love. Stirring the emotions of adoring listeners with his incredible voice, Johnny's Greatest Hits stayed on the Billboard Hot 100 chart for an incredible 490 weeks.

The Christmas Music of Johnny Mathis. Consisting of fifteen selections from holiday tunes performed by Mathis over several decades, this 1993 album demonstrates his consistent singing style, regardless of current crazes or fads in the music industry. Using his smooth style and warm approach, Mathis brings such Christmas favorites as "It's Beginning to Look a Lot Like Christmas," "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas," "It's the Most Wonderful Time of the Year," "Sleigh Ride," and "Silver Bells" into the hearts of the listeners. This album is a definitive compilation of Christmas songs by Mathis, one of nine Christmas albums that he has recorded.

The Essential Johnny Mathis. This 2004 compilation contains most of the songs for which Mathis is famous, the forty tracks covering 1956 through 2000. Most of his early hits are performed under the direction of Ray Conniff, while others are arranged and conducted by Faith and Gene Page. One Christmas song, "Sleigh Ride," is included. He also sings his versions of a variety of songs from Broadway shows, including Gypsy, Cats, and West Side Story. His popular duet with Williams, "Too Much, Too Little, Too Late," is beautifully arranged and performed.

Musical Legacy

Mathis is noted for his superb artistry, his musicianship, his articulation, his song interpretations, his remarkable professionalism, and his shy, innocent charm. As he sings from deep within his soul, he projects a warm, sincere sensitivity that permeates the soul of the listener. A legendary performer, Mathis has communicated through his timeless music during six different decades with all audiences worldwide.

The work of Mathis spans several genres, including jazz, soft rock, traditional pop, soul, rhythm and blues, and Latino. He has recorded more than 110 albums, and sold more than 350 million records, making him one of the largest album sellers of all time. He has been awarded three Grammys, he is a member of the Grammy Hall of Fame, he has taped twelve television specials, he has made more than three hundred television guest appearances, and he has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. In 2003 he was awarded the Lifetime Achievement Award of the Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences.

Alvin K. Benson

Further Reading

Bloom, Ken. The American Songbook: The Singers, Songwriters, and the Songs. New York: Black Dog & Leventhal, 2005. Features the personal and professional history, the great songs, and the important contributions of more than two hundred artists, including Mathis.

Bossy, Michel-André, Thomas Brothers, and John C. McEnroe, eds. Artists, Writers, and Musicians. Westport, Conn.: Oryx Press, 2001. A compilation of biographies of people, including Mathis, who changed the world with their contributions to music.

Hadleigh, Boze. Sing Out! Gays and Lesbians in the Music World. New York: Barricade Books, 1997. One chapter is devoted to an overview of Mathis's life and his great musical career, with comments about his sexual orientation.

Jasper, Tony. Johnny: The Authorised Biography of Johnny Mathis. London: W .H. Allen, 1983. An in-depth look into the life of Mathis, including information about his relationship with his parents, his recording sessions, his character, and his friends and family. Includes a comprehensive discography.

See also: Burke, Johnny; David, Hal; Dozier, Lamont; Mercer, Johnny; Porter, Cole; Willson, Meredith.

Dave Matthews

American rock singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Matthews is noted for his percussive guitar-playing style, his unusual vocal timbre, and his penchant for incorporating a variety of stylistic influences to create his distinct sound.

Born: January 9, 1967; Johannesburg, South Africa
Also known as: David John Matthews (full name)
Member of: The Dave Matthews Band

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Some Devil, 2003.

ALBUMS (with Dave Matthews Band): Remember Two Things, 1993; Under the Table and Dreaming, 1994; Crash, 1996; Before the Crowded Streets, 1998; Everyday, 2001; Busted Stuff, 2002; Stand Up, 2005.

The Life

David John Matthews was born to physicist John Matthews and architect-painter Val Matthews in Johannesburg, South Africa, in 1967. In 1969 he relocated to suburban New York with his parents and three siblings. By age nine, Matthews had developed an ardent interest in music, and he began taking guitar lessons. Matthews returned to Johannesburg following his father's untimely death in 1977, immersing himself in the works of local musicians while attending school.

In 1986 Matthews returned to the United States in order to avoid compulsory South African military service, which conflicted with the family's religious philosophy. Matthews eventually settled in Charlottesville, Virginia, where he worked as a bartender at Miller's, a pub frequented by prominent local musicians. Eager to develop his song sketches yet apprehensive about performing in public, he elicited the help of several of these artists, including percussionist Carter Beauford, violinist Boyd Tinsley, saxophonist Leroi Moore (who died in August, 2008), and bassist Stefan Lessard, who formed the Dave Matthews Band. Matthews cofounded ATO Records in 2000, and he is active as a singer, guitarist, and songwriter. He moved to Seattle, Washington, with his wife, Ashley, and their three children.

The Music

Matthews's musical style is noted for its eclecticism, drawing from Latin, African, jazz, folk, and rock influences, among others. While broadly described by many as a rock artist, Matthews and his music defy categorization. Within the context of the Dave Matthews Band as well as solo performance, Matthews's music emphasizes complex, syncopated rhythmic patterns and frequent improvisation. Rhythmically, Matthews approaches the acoustic guitar as a percussion instrument, preferring syncopated attack patterns by way of closed harmonies rather than by way of open-chord strumming. This, combined with occasional scat singing and other vocalized percussive sounds, complements the busy, asymmetrical drum patterns of Beauford and funk-inspired bass lines of Lessard. The improvisatory element, immediately obvious in live performance, can also be heard in the studio. Collaborators typically bring their ideas to the songwriting process, treating the studio as a sort of extended jam session in expanding and refining Matthews's initial sketches.

Early Works. Although Matthews had been performing with the Dave Matthews Band since 1991, no commercial recording was available until Remember Two Things. A mix of studio and live recordings, this album depicted the band in its purest form, with few effects mixed in the studio and no contributions from musicians outside of the core membership of the group. Songs here provided a basis for future work, as diverse stylistic influences were immediately apparent, from the Middle Eastern-influenced "Minarets" and a cover of Bob Dylan's folk ballad, "Christmas Song," to the lengthy, syncopated, and highly improvisatory epic, "Seek Up." Several of the songs from this album were revised for later release.

"Ants Marching." This was one of the band's first major hits, a standard that Matthews performs. It was reworked from Remember Two Things to appear on the album Under the Table and Dreaming. Typical of much of Matthews's output, the song employs a moderate tempo, syncopated rhythmic patterns, falsetto, percussive guitar textures and vocalizations, and a pronounced improvisatory character that often varies in performances.

"Crash into Me." First released on the Crash recording in 1996, this is arguably the Dave Matthews Band's most well-known song. While many typical musical features can be heard, the saxophone and violin take on subordinate roles, used primarily to add color to the overall texture. While some vocal improvisation is utilized in live performance, the song remains fairly consistent with the original recording.

"The Space Between." This Everyday ballad represented a drastic stylistic departure. Notable are the absence of the acoustic guitar in favor of an electric, the somewhat simple rhythmic patterns, the nearly nonexistent saxophone and violin lines, and the prevalence of synthesizer effects. The result was more pop-oriented than previous work, and, along with other material from the album, it signaled a trend of experimentation with electronic and computer-generated studio effects which continued on Stand Up.

"Bartender." In the tradition of works such as "Seek Up," this tumultuous Busted Stuff offering was originally scheduled for release on a discarded (now bootleg) collection dubbed The Lillywhite Sessions by fans in reference to former producer Steve Lillywhite. Notable are the song's melancholy lyrics and extended, improvisatory coda, both of which in live performance continue to morph in terms of pitch content and solo-improvisatory characteristics.

"Gravedigger." This live standard was originally released on Matthews's first original solo album, Some Devil, in 2003. While much of the album departs from work with the band in terms of timbre and rhythmic characteristics of the accompaniment, this song is often performed with Matthews's voice accompanied by only an acoustic guitar, an approach to performance that dates back to the early days of his career.

Musical Legacy

Matthews has sold more than thirty million albums. Matthews and the Dave Matthews Band have been nominated for and have won numerous awards, including a Grammy Award for Best Rock Performance by a Duo or Group with Vocal for the song "So Much to Say" in 1997 and a Grammy Award for Best Male Rock Vocal Performance for "Gravedigger" in 2004. Matthews is consistently listed among the top-grossing live acts for any given year. Matthews and the Dave Matthews Band follow the jam band tradition of such groups as the Grateful Dead, Phish, and Blues Traveler. They share with those groups a lenient policy on bootleg recordings, an improvisatory and audience-participatory performance aesthetic, and a fervent following of fans.

Gary W. Burdette

Further Reading

Bridges, Jeffrey Pepper. "Dave Matthews' Rhythm Style." Acoustic Guitar 10, no. 2 (August, 1999): 58. A brief but revealing discussion of Matthews's rhythmic and harmonic approach to the acoustic guitar.

Delancey, Morgan. The Dave Matthews Band: Step Into the Light. 2d ed. Toronto, Ont.: ECW Press, 2001. Biography and history of Matthews and the band with an extensive bibliography, revised from the 1997 edition.

Larkin, Colin, ed. The Encyclopedia of Popular Music, 3d ed., Vol. 5. New York: Muze, 1998. A short summation of the Dave Matthews Band's musical output up to 1998.
Martell, Nevin. Music for the People: Dave Matthews Band. New York: Simon & Schuster, 2004. An updated edition offers biographical and historical information on Matthews and the band. Includes discography and live performance record.
Mettler, Mike. "Profile: Dave Matthews." Guitar Player 30, no. 8 (August, 1996): 29-30. A presentation of Matthews's stylistic approach to the acoustic guitar, with a brief biographical and historical account. The article focuses primarily on the Crash recording session.

See also: Anastasio, Trey; Dylan, Bob; Fleck, Béla; Garcia, Jerry; Harris, Emmylou; Santana, Carlos; Simon, Paul.

Curtis Mayfield

American soul singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Mayfield's fluid guitar work and sweet falsetto tenor voice helped popularize soul music across racial barriers. His lyrics in the soul genre spoke to the social, economic, and political ills of late twentieth century America.

Born: June 3, 1942; Chicago, Illinois
Died: December 26, 1999; Roswell, Georgia
Also known as: Curtis Lee Mayfield (full name)
Member of: The Impressions

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Curtis, 1970; Roots, 1971; Rapping, 1972; Superfly, 1972; Back to the World, 1973; Got to Find a Way, 1974; Sweet Exorcist, 1974; Let's Do It Again, 1975; There's No Place Like America, 1975; Give Get Take and Have, 1976; Never Say You Can't Survive, 1977; Short Eyes, 1977; Do It All Night, 1978; Heartbeat, 1978; Something to Believe In, 1979; The Right Combination, 1980; Honesty, 1982; We Come in Peace, 1985; The Return of Superfly, 1990; Take It to the Streets, 1990; Love Is the Place, 1996; New World Order, 1996; Give It Up, 1998; Man of Inspiration, 1998.
ALBUMS (with the Impressions): The Impressions, 1963; Keep on Pushing, 1964; The Never Ending Impressions, 1964; People Get Ready, 1965; Ridin' High, 1966; The Fabulous Impressions, 1967; This Is My Country, 1968; Young Mods' Forgotten Story, 1969; Check out Your Mind, 1970; The Vintage Years, 1976 (with Jerry Butler).

The Life

Curtis Lee Mayfield grew up in Chicago, Illinois. As a child he formed a gospel singing group, the Modern Jubilaires, with Jerry Butler, another Chicago singer who would become a soul singer in his own right. After that group dissolved, Mayfield formed another gospel group called the Alphatones. When he was fifteen, he left high school to join the soul group the Roosters. This group already included Butler and Arthur and Richard Brooks. Two years later, Sam Gooden joined, and they renamed themselves the Impressions. Mayfield taught himself to play guitar, tuning the strings to the black keys of the piano, known as open F-sharp tuning. The Impressions released their first single, "For Your Precious Love," on Vee-Jay Records in 1958. In 1960 Mayfield and Butler released another single, "He Will Break Your Heart," which featured Mayfield playing guitar. By 1961, after Butler had left the group, Mayfield was the primary songwriter and de facto leader of the Impressions. The group without Butler signed with ABC-Paramount and released a Top 20 hit titled "Gypsy Woman." Not long afterward, the Impressions and Mayfield released several singles and albums produced and written by Mayfield. Many of the singles reached high into the soul and rhythm-and-blues charts and on the pop charts as well, including songs that addressed civil rights and other social-justice issues.

At the same time Mayfield was working as the staff producer for Okeh Records and writing songs for some of that label's artists. He also formed two of his own record labels: Windy C and Mayfield Records. Both of these labels featured artists performing songs penned by Mayfield. In 1968 he created a third record label, called Curtom, that was distributed by Buddah Records. In 1970 Mayfield left the Impressions and released four albums in quick succession. The fourth was the sound track to the blaxploitation film Superfly (1972). This album put Mayfield at center stage in the world of popular music.

Mayfield continued recording and performing throughout the 1970's and 1980's. He scored the film Claudine and wrote the song "On and On," recorded by Gladys Knight and the Pips in 1974. In 1975 he wrote the title song for the film Let's Do It Again, and he scored the Aretha Franklin film Sparkle in 1976. In 1977 he scored and acted in the film Short Eyes (1977). Mayfield signed with Boardwalk Records in 1981 and recorded an album, Love Is the Place, and from it two singles made it to the Top 20 on the rhythm-and-blues charts. He joined the Impressions in 1986 for a reunion tour.

Curtis Mayfield. (AP/Wide World Photos)

His right leg was amputated in 1988 because of diabetes, and further tragedy struck in 1990 when a piece of stage lighting fell on him, paralyzing him from the neck down. After a long period of recovery, Mayfield returned to recording and performing, releasing New World Order in 1996. Mayfield died on December 26, 1999.

The Music

Keep on Pushing. The Impressions' second album with Mayfield as the driving force features many black-pride songs for which Mayfield became noted. Anthemic in nature, the title track was one of Mayfield's signature tunes. The album reached number four on the black album charts and number eight on the pop charts.

People Get Ready. This work showcased Mayfield's songwriting and arranging talents. The gospel-influenced title track was another in his string of freedom songs and featured Mayfield's guitar playing, lead singing, and the Impressions' incredible vocal harmonies.

Curtis. Released in 1970, Curtis was Mayfield's first solo work. A natural progression from his work with the Impressions both lyrically and musically, the album featured lush orchestration, solid percussion that harked back to African beats, a new funkiness, and socially aware lyrics that in Mayfield's hopeful voice brought light to the despair and struggle he saw all around him. The band behind Mayfield was a solid rock-funk force that interacted seamlessly with Mayfield's lead guitar.

Superfly. Mayfield's masterpiece was also his best-selling work. Funky and soulful, the guitar work on this album was as powerful as the lyrics. The lyrics reflected Mayfield's views on the drug abuse and the woes that were decimating African American society. Bleak and angry, Mayfield's message was considerably less hopeful than in his previous work.

Musical Legacy

Mayfield's legacy is political as well as musical in nature. His songwriting blazed musical trails not often traveled in African American and pop music of the 1960's and 1970's, mixing funk, string lead guitar solos, and sweet, forceful harmonies. His lyrics pushed popular black music into political and social commentary, as Bob Dylan pushed rock music in a similar direction. His early 1970 albums were groundbreaking in their portrayal of African American life. His compositions for the Impressions, especially the songs "People Get Ready" and "This Is My Country," are arguably the rhythm-and-blues forerunners of the social commentary to come from the Temptations and Marvin Gaye.

Ron Jacobs

Further Reading

Burns, Peter. Curtis Mayfield: People Never Give Up. London: Sanctuary, 2003. Well-researched and informative account of Mayfield's life and career.

Curtis, Anthony. "Curtis Mayfield." Rolling Stone, February 3, 2000: 50. Curtis outlines Mayfield's legendary career and describes his impact on modern popular music. In addition, he writes about Mayfield's positive spirit and outlook even after the accident that paralyzed him.

Gordon, Robert. "The Original Superfly Guy." Q Magazine, July, 1993. This interview looks at Mayfield's career and his mind-set in the mid-1990's.

Scaggs, Boz. "Curtis Mayfield: The Immortals." Rolling Stone, April 21, 2005: 108. Tribute to Mayfield is part of Rolling Stone's list of the Top 100 rock, blues, and soul artists. Scaggs focuses on the inspirational force of Mayfield's music and the nature of Mayfield's voice.

Werner, Craig. Higher Ground: Stevie Wonder, Aretha Franklin, Curtis Mayfield, and the Rise and Fall of American Soul. New York: Three Rivers Press, 2005. A triple biography by one of soul music's better historians, this book contrasts and describes the lives and careers of Mayfield and the others. He places the music in the social context of the 1960's and assesses the influence of gospel music.

See also: Dylan, Bob; Franklin, Aretha; Gaye, Marvin; Hendrix, Jimi; LaBelle, Patti.

Dame Nellie Melba

Australian classical and opera singer

A celebrated operatic soprano, Melba was a major recording artist of the first decade of the twentieth century, and her numerous recordings are among the earliest in the legacy of singing on record.

Born: May 19, 1861; Richmond, Australia
Died: February 23, 1931; Sydney, Australia
Also known as: Helen Porter Mitchell (birth name)

Principal works

OPERATIC ROLES: Gilda in Giuseppe Verdi's Rigoletto, 1887; Ophelia in Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet, 1888; Lucia in Gaetano Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, 1888; Juliette in Charles Gounod's Romeo et Juliet, 1891; Marguerite in Gounod's Faust, 1895; Brunhilde in Richard Wagner's Siegfried, 1896; Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata, 1902; Desdemona in Verdi's Otello, 1908; Mimi in Giacomo Puccini's La Bohème, 1911.

The Life

Nellie Melba, born Helen Porter Mitchell, had parents who were musically inclined and provided her with piano and singing lessons in her youth. At the age of eighteen, she began operatic study with Pietro Cecchi. In 1882 she had a brief and unsuccessful marriage with Charles Armstrong, with whom she had a son, George, born in 1883. An extraordinarily ambitious young woman, Melba had natural vocal flexibility and instinctive musicality.

In 1886 she moved to Europe for further vocal training with Mathilde Marchesi, who also encouraged her to change her stage name to Nellie Melba. (Melba was selected in tribute to her native city of Melbourne.) In 1888 she began her operatic career, and her success was immediate. By the turn of the century, Melba had become widely known as one of the greatest operatic stars of her generation. A consistently successful career spanned both sides of the Atlantic. Melba was knighted by King George V in 1918. Her farewell concert took place in London in 1926, when the singer was sixty-five years old. After her retirement, she moved back to Australia, and she became president of the Melba Memorial Conservatorium in Melbourne.

Melba died suddenly in 1931, after five weeks of an unexplained illness. (Her doctor suggested that she had contracted an infection from eating watercress in London, although this does not seem credible.) She was a hero in her native country, and more than five thousand Australians attended her funeral.

The Music

Melba's creative output can be studied through her operatic roles and studio recordings. In fact, she is one of the first major vocal artists whose legacy is preserved through early audio recording technology.

Early Career. After study with Marchesi in London, Melba made her operatic debut on October 13, 1887, at the Théatre de la Monnaie in Brussels as Gilda in Giuseppe Verdi's Rigoletto (1851). In the following year, she appeared at Covent Garden as Lucia in Gaetano Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor (1835) and at the Paris Opéra as Ophelia in Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet (1868). The critics and public welcomed her with rave reviews, complimenting her beautiful tone quality and excellent vocal technique.

Maturity. In 1903 Melba sang Lucia at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, and her success in that role began an association with the Metropolitan Opera that lasted until 1910. In America she also sang for Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera and in Chicago. Now in the prime of her career, Melba became particularly well known for her portrayal of the Charles Gounod heroines: Marguerite in Faust (1859) and Juliet in Roméo et Juliette (1867). She was prepared for both roles by the composer. A brief and unsuccessful stint into the realm of Wagnerian opera, specifically Brünnhilde in Siegfried (1876), found Melba in a repertoire too heavy for her light soprano, forcing her into four months of vocal rest. In her final years, she began to concentrate increasingly on the role of Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (1896). She sang her final concert at Covent Garden in London on June 8, 1926.

Dame Nellie Melba. (Library of Congress)

Recorded Legacy. Melba's legacy is preserved primarily through her recordings. In 2002 Naxos released the complete Gramophone Company recordings of Melba on four compact discs. These sessions were derived from her 1904 London recordings. In 2004-2005 Naxos released the complete American Victor Recordings of 1909-1910 on an additional three compact discs. Together, these seven compact discs preserve 148 recordings, and they collectively comprise the vast majority of Melba's recorded legacy.

The London recordings are broken into three distinct sessions. The 1904 recordings were made for the London-based Gramophone & Typewriter company. Most of these recordings are either accompanied by or conducted by Landon Ronald. Highlights include recordings of Mimì's arias and a delicately wrought rendition of George Frideric Handel's "Sweet Bird That Shunn'st the Noise of Folly" from L'allegro (1740). A second round of recordings occurred in London and Paris, from 1908 to 1913. By this time, recording quality had improved immensely, and these sessions offer a better aural portrait of the great Melba before her vocal decline. Her Gounod and Massenet recordings from this era are particularly cherished. A final disc captures performances from 1921 to 1926. While quality has improved by this time, the recordings reveal an aged diva in the final days of her career.

The 1909-1910 American sessions offer several items of interest, particularly the Lucia di Lammermoor and Hamlet mad scenes; more Puccini recordings, with a riveting "Vissi d'arte" from Tosca (1900); and the "Depuis le jour" from Gustave Charpentier's Louise (1900) is perhaps her finest singing on record. The American sessions showcase Melba's greatness, and they are perhaps the best recordings available from the prime of her career.

Musical Legacy

The public was infatuated with Melba during her lifetime, and her recordings provide only an echo of what the true Melba must have been. During her career, critics noted the purity and evenness of her voice from bottom to top, and some of her recordings exemplify these attributes. Melba's voice had the remarkable ability to captivate her audience, although she was not a strong actress. Melba toast and the Peach Melba dessert were named in her honor. She ranks with Enrico Caruso as one of the most important figures in the early history of opera on record.

Matthew Ryan Hoch

Further Reading

Hetherington, John. Nellie Melba: A Biography. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1968. Hetherington's book is a reliable biography that sorts fact from fiction, and it has an excellent selection of photographs.

Melba, Nellie. Melodies and Memories: The Autobiography of Nellie Melba. Introduced and annotated by John Cargher. Melbourne, Vic.: Nelson, 1980. First published in 1925 and written by Melba, this book offers insight into the diva's personality. Self-mythologizing, she does not provide an accurate account of her career, but it makes for engaging reading.

Moran, William R. Nellie Melba: A Contemporary Review. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1985. This is an exhaustively comprehensive guide to all the research on Melba, including her recorded legacy, and it reprints Melba's writings on the art of singing.

Radic, Thérèse. Melba: The Voice of Australia. St. Louis, Mo.: MMB Music, 1986. Radic discusses new theories about the cause of Melba's death, and she elaborates on many topics other biographies mention only briefly (such as Melba's experience with singing Wagner). The helpful appendixes chronicle every performance of Melba's career.

Steane, J. B. "Nellie Melba." In Singers of the Century. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1996. This is an excellent short essay on Melba's career and recorded legacy, from the point of view of an esteemed London Times voice critic.

See also: Caruso, Enrico; Flagstad, Kirsten; Puccini, Giacomo.

Lauritz Melchior

Danish operatic tenor

Regarded as one of the most preeminent heldentenors of the twentieth century, Melchior was known especially for his performances of the heavy Wagnerian roles. He was the leading Wagnerian tenor at the Metropolitan Opera from 1926 to 1950, as well as at other major opera houses in Europe and the Americas.

Born: March 20, 1890; Copenhagen, Denmark
Died: March 18, 1973; Santa Monica, California
Also known as: Lauritz Lebrecht Hommel Melchior (full name)

Principal works

OPERATIC ROLES: Silvio in Ruggero Leoncavallo's Pagliacci, 1913; Tannhäuser in Richard Wagner's Tannhäuser, 1918; Canio in Leoncavallo's Pagliacci, 1919; Samson in Camilla Saint-Saëns's Samson et Dalila, 1919; Sverkel in Johan Peter Emilius Hartmann's Liden Kirsten, 1920; Parsifal in Wagner's Parsifal, 1924; Siegmund in Wagner's Die Walküre, 1924; Turiddu in Pietro Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana, 1924; John of Leyden in Giacomo Meyerbeer's Le Prophète, 1928; Jean van Leyden in Giacomo Meyerbeer's Le Prophète, 1929; Tristan in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, 1929; Radames in Giuseppe Verdi's Aida, 1930; Florestan in Ludwig van Beethoven's Fidelio, 1933; Lohengrin in Wagner's Lohengrin, 1950; Otello in Verdi's Otello, 1960.

The Life

Lauritz Lebrecht Hommel Melchior (LOW-rihtz leh-BREKT HOH-mehl MEHL-kyohr) was born to Jørgen Conradt Melchior, the owner and coprincipal of a private school, and Julie Sofie Møller, a mother of six who died less than a month after the birth of Lauritz. He started his formal vocal studies at the age of eighteen under Poul Bang and received theatrical training from Peter Jerndorff. In 1913, he made his debut in the baritone role of Silvio in Ruggero Leoncavallo's Pagliacci at the Royal Theater in Copenhagen. In 1917, following the advice of the American contralto Madame Charles (Sarah) Cahier, he studied with the noted Danish tenor Vilhelm Herold and made his second debut at the same theater in 1918 as a tenor in the title role of Tannhäuser (1845), by Richard Wagner. He also studied with Victor Beigel in London, Ernst Grenzebach in Berlin, and Anna Bahr-Mildenburg in Munich.

Melchior had several important debuts in 1924, singing the role of Siegmund in Wagner's Die Walküre (1870) at Covent Garden in London, and the role of Parsifal in Wagner's opera of the same name at the Festival House in Bayreuth. In 1926, he made his first appearance in the United States as Tannhäuser at the Metropolitan Opera in New York. Besides frequent appearances at Covent Garden (1924-1939), Bayreuth (1924-1931), and the Metropolitan Opera (1926-1950), he also performed regularly at the State Operas of Berlin (1924-1934) and Hamburg (1927-1930), as well as in Philadelphia (1929-1948), Buenos Aires (1931-1943), Boston (1934-1942), San Francisco (1934-1945), and Chicago (1934-1945).

The Music

Throughout his career, Melchior sang more than thirty-five roles in more then eleven hundred staged performances. Among the most notable collaborators in his Wagnerian performances were sopranos Frida Leider, Kirsten Flagstad, Helen Traubel, and Lotte Lehmann, as well as conductors Arturo Toscanini, Bruno Walter, Wilhelm Furtwängler, and Sir Thomas Beecham. Besides his many Wagnerian roles, he sang Radames in Aïda, the title role of Otello in Giuseppe Verdi's opera, Canio in Leoncavallo's Pagliacci (1892), John of Leyden in Giacomo Meyerbeer's Le Prophète (1849), Samson in Camilla Saint-Saëns's Samson et Dalila (1877), Florestan in Ludwig van Beethoven's Fidelio (1805), Turiddu in Pietro Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana (1890), and Sverkel in Johan Peter Emilius Hartmann's Liden Kirsten (1846).

Melchior also appeared in thousands of concerts; his repertoire included operatic and musical-theater pieces as well as Scandinavian, German, English, and American songs. He retired from opera in 1950 but continued to appear in concert and on radio and television. One of his final performances was in a 1960 radio broadcast of the first act of Die Walküre with the Danish Radio Symphony Orchestra in 1960, which was performed as part of a celebration of his seventieth birthday.

Early Works. Before his debut as a tenor in 1918, Melchior performed baritone or bass roles in Denmark, including Douphol and Germont in Verdi's La Traviata, Brander in Charles Gounod's Faust, Morales in Georges Bizet's Carmen, Ottokar in Carl Maria von Weber's Der Freischütz, and Antonio in Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro (1786; The Marriage of Figaro). He also made several recordings as a baritone on Danish HMV (His Master's Voice) between 1913 and 1915.

Lauritz Melchior. (Library of Congress)

Tannhäuser. A romantic opera in three acts composed and written by Richard Wagner, Tannhäuser is based on two separate medieval legends and the song contest on the Wartburg. The title role marked Melchior's debut as a heldentenor (a tenor who specializes in Wagnerian roles) at the Royal Theater in Copenhagen in 1918 as well as his first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera in New York in 1926. He performed both the Dresden (1845) and Paris (1861) versions, for a total of more than 140 performances in the major opera houses in Denmark, Norway, Germany, Austria, Spain, France, Argentina, England, and the United States.

Tristan. Wagner's composition of Tristan und Isolde was inspired by his relationship with Mathilde Wesendonck and by the philosophy of Arthur Schopenhauer. A music drama in three acts based on a romance by Gottfried von Strassburg, Tristan und Isolde (c. 1210) is considered by many to be one of Wagner's most important works. Melchior made his debut in the male title role at the Gran Teatre del Liceu in Barcelona in 1929 and subsequently sang it 222 times; it was the role he most frequently performed.

Lohengrin. A romantic opera in three acts created in the years 1845 to 1848 by Wagner to his own libretto, Lohengrin centers on the legend of the Holy Grail set in Antwerp during the tenth century. Melchior made his debut of the title role at the Hamburg State Opera in 1927 and performed the Knight of the Swan more than one hundred times. Because of disagreement with Rudolf Bing, the Metropolitan Opera's general manager, Melchior departed from the Metropolitan after his last performance of Lohengrin in February of 1950; the performance also marked his last operatic appearance on any stage.

Musical Legacy

Dead at the age of eighty-two, Melchior left behind a legacy of more than three hundred 78-rpm recordings, dating from 1913 into the 1950's on such major labels as Odeon, Danish, German, and English HMV, Nordisk Polyphon, Polydors, Parlophon, Victor, Columbia, and M-G-M Records. He also appeared in radio comedies and television shows and performed in five Hollywood film musicals, including Thrill of a Romance (1945), Two Sisters from Boston (1946), This Time for Keeps (1947), Luxury Liner (1948), and The Stars Are Singing (1953).

Melchior received numerous awards and honors throughout his career and was made a Commander Cross of Dannebrog (Denmark), a Knight Commander Cross of El Merito (Chile), and a Commander Cross of the White Rose (Finland). A few years before his death, he established his own Lauritz Melchior Heldentenor Foundation through the Juilliard School of New York. The foundation provides cash scholarship awards to promising heldentenors. Among the award recipients are William Cochran, Gary Lakes, Timothy Jenkins, and Ian DeNolfo.

Sonia Lee

Further Reading

Albright, William. "Great Dane in the Morning: Musings on the Centenary of Lauritz Melchior." The Opera Quarterly 7, no. 4 (1990): 110-129. Written to celebrate the centenary of Melchior's birth, this article gives an account of the criticism he received in the early stage of his career.

Emmons, Shirlee. Tristanissimo: The Authorized Biography of Heroic Tenor Lauritz Melchior. New York: Schirmer Books, 1990. An informative biography of Melchior, covering his life, career, and travels. Features a detailed list of sources, as well as the third and expanded edition of the Melchior discography compiled by Hans Hansen.

Melchior, Ib. Lauritz Melchior: The Golden Years of Bayreuth—With Text and Photographs from the Scrapbooks of Lauritz Melchior. Fort Worth, Tex.: Baskerville, 2003. Written by Melchior's son, a filmmaker and screenwriter, this authentic biography focuses on the years between 1923 and 1931 at Bayreuth. Contains text from Melchior's scrapbooks, numerous photographs, and an accompanying compact disc.

See also: Flagstad, Kirsten; Lehmann, Lotte; Menotti, Gian Carlo.

Memphis Minnie

American blues singer, songwriter, and guitarist

Among the first female blues instrumentalists, Memphis Minnie had an active performance career as a guitarist and singer spanning five decades and producing about two hundred recordings.

Born: June 3, 1897; Algiers, Louisiana
Died: August 6, 1973; Memphis, Tennessee
Also known as: Elizabeth Douglas (birth name); Lizzie Douglas; Lizzie McCoy; Kid Douglas; Minnie McCoy; Minnie Lawlars

Principal recordings

SINGLES: "Bumble Bee," 1929; "When the Levee Breaks," 1929; "Can I Do It for You?, Part 1," 1930; "Can I Do It for You?, Part 2," 1930; "Crazy Crying Blues," 1931; "Let's Go to Town," 1931; "Sylvester and His Mule Blues" 1935; "Good Morning," 1936; "Hot Stuff," 1937; "In My Girlish Days," 1941; "Me and My Chauffeur Blues," 1941; "Shout the Boogie," 1947 (with Blind John Davis); "Three Times Seven Blues," 1947 (with Blind John Davis); "Daybreak Blues," 1948; "Million Dollar Blues," 1948; "Downhome Girl," 1949; "Jump Little Rabbit," 1949; "Tonight I Smile on You," 1949; "Sweet Man," 1950; "Tears on My Pillow," 1950; "World of Trouble," 1953.

The Life

Born just outside New Orleans, Elizabeth Douglas developed an interest in music even before her family moved to Walls, Mississippi (near Memphis), in 1904. The eldest of thirteen children, Douglas quickly learned to accompany her own singing on the banjo she was given in 1905, and by the time she was fifteen she was sneaking out to Beale Street in downtown Memphis, where blues artists played. In 1916 she adopted her childhood name Kid Douglas, and she performed with the Ringling Brothers Circus until 1920. During this time she established a reputation as an accomplished guitarist and singer, and she often played in a duo with guitarist Willie Brown and with various jug bands and itinerant musicians.

For most of the 1920's, Douglas's base was Memphis, where she met her first husband, Joe McCoy. McCoy played guitar and sang, and the two of them actively performed on Beale Street and for countless parties, picnics, and other social functions. During an informal performance at a Memphis barbershop, they were heard by a Columbia Records talent scout, who brought them to New York in 1929 for their first recording session. It was for the release of these records that McCoy was dubbed Kansas Joe, and Douglas became Memphis Minnie.

Following the success of their first record releases, Kansas Joe and Memphis Minnie returned to Memphis, where they continued recording. In 1930 they moved to Chicago, where Minnie was based for the next twenty-seven years. She and McCoy continued recording and performing together until they divorced in 1935. During this period, Minnie became known as a blues guitarist who could outplay just about any of her contemporaries and as a redoubtable woman who drank, gambled, fought, cursed, and chewed tobacco. After her divorce, Minnie capitalized on her increasing fame, playing often at the 708 Club as well as touring regularly throughout the South and returning periodically to Memphis.

In 1939 Minnie married another guitarist, Little Son Joe (Ernest Lawlars), with whom she toured and recorded for the rest of her professional life. While still based in Chicago, she began to branch out, living for extended periods in Indianapolis, Indiana, and Detroit, Michigan, in the late 1940's. Both in ill health, Minnie and Lawlars returned to Memphis permanently in 1957. Minnie's career was ended by a severe stroke in 1960, and Lawlars died in 1961. Following a long period of deterioration, Minnie died in 1973.

The Music

Minnie probably composed or helped to compose almost all of the two hundred or so recordings she made from 1929 to 1953. Exact attributions are incomplete or, in many cases, missing, and this is compounded by the fact that Minnie was occasionally credited by her married surnames as well as her stage name. Her guitar style was largely formed by the time of her initial recordings, but at first her singing was shrill and insecure. As the recordings continued, a rising comfort level is evident in her singing, which began to demonstrate a rhythmic confidence not common to her Chicago blues contemporaries. In this regard, she seems to have absorbed much of the style of the classic blues singers of the 1920's, such as Ma Rainey and Bessie Smith. As a guitarist, she demonstrated great versatility in her roles as soloist and accompanist to McCoy, capable of playing lead or rhythm as well as in the bottleneck style. By 1941 she even experimented with an electric guitar (her preferred instrument remained the steel-bodied National she had been playing since before 1930), although she generally left the electric instrument to Lawlers, who was heavily featured on their last recordings.

"Bumble Bee." Almost all of Minnie's recordings made from 1919 to 1934 were done with McCoy. Generally, one is featured with the other playing accompaniment, although there are several examples of theatrical duets, such as both parts of "Can I Do It For You?," performed in the tradition of black vaudeville acts such as Butterbeans and Susie. One of the tunes from their first recording session was Minnie's "Bumble Bee," which remained unreleased by Columbia Records until a rerecording of the same number for Vocalion became a hit eight months later. Minnie made five recordings of this composition (including one with the Memphis Jug Band), and it became one of her signature songs. The subject matter was a series of risqué allusions to a bumble bee's stinger. Imagery from nature is common in Minnie's songs, perhaps stemming from her rural upbringing.

"Sylvester and His Mule Blues." For her first session following the break with Kansas Joe, Minnie also made a break with the elemental country blues style they had shared. On "Sylvester and His Mule Blues," she is accompanied by a pianist rather than another guitarist, and her own style of playing has become more melodic, as opposed to the older, more intricate picking style evident on the McCoy recordings. The subject matter of this recording is also more sophisticated, with the lyrics representing a conversation between President Franklin Roosevelt and a black sharecropper who is not buying the promises of the New Deal.

Memphis Minnie. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

"Me and My Chauffeur Blues." Probably Minnie's most successful recording, "Me and My Chauffeur Blues" was made early in her relationship with Lawlars. Moving away from the rural imagery of her earlier compositions, the lyrics of this tune shift the dominance in the relationship to the woman, who casts her lover as a chauffeur who will "drive me downtown" but whom she plans to shoot because she does not want him riding other girls around. The modern elements are further emphasized by the inclusion of the electric guitar for the first time on a Minnie recording. A remake of this for Checker Records in 1952 attempted to update the sound with drums, piano, and blues harmonica, although it was not successful.

"World of Trouble." The generally unsatisfying attempts to present Minnie in an updated, postwar Chicago blues setting are common to her later recording sessions. "World of Trouble" is the most successful of these, with the prototypical Chicago blues group of electric guitar, piano, and drums providing a sensitive backing to what was a traditional blues lamenting the cold, both in terms of climate and loneliness. Minnie's voice has become thicker and darker, retaining its rhythmic qualities but more expressive in the "moaning" associated with Rainey in her later years of recording.

Musical Legacy

Minnie's tunes have been covered by Chuck Berry, Bob Dylan, Led Zeppelin, and the Rolling Stones, among many others. As one of the few women instrumentalists during the 1930's and 1940's, she has been an inspiration to women performers, who see her as a worthy successor to the classic blues singers of the 1920's. Despite her reputation for toughness (and occasional violence), she was remembered fondly as a mentor by young blues artists, including Little Walter and Homesick James.

John L. Clark, Jr.

Further Reading

Garon, Paul, and Beth Garon. Woman With Guitar: Memphis Minnie's Blues. New York: Da Capo Press, 1992. A definitive study of Minnie's life and work, this unravels the contradictory information contained in other biographies and appreciations of her career. It contains a full discography and a long thematic section discussing the lyrics of her songs.

Shaw, Arnold. Honkers and Shouters: The Golden Years of Rhythm and Blues. New York: Macmillan, 1978. This book is one of the few to contextualize the blues scene in Chicago in the 1930's, with brief mention of Minnie.

See also: Berry, Chuck; Howlin' Wolf; Jagger, Sir Mick; Rainey, Ma; Smith, Bessie.

Gian Carlo Menotti

Italian classical composer

Menotti's lyrical compositional style harked back to the lush vocalism of the nineteenth century while never losing its innovative edge. His operas made a fresh impact on the dramatic music repertoire of the twentieth century.

Born: July 7, 1911; Cadegliano, Italy
Died: February 1, 2007; Monaco

Principal works

BALLETS: Sebastian, 1944; Errand into the Maze, 1947; The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore: Or, The Three Sundays of a Poet, 1956.

CHAMBER WORKS: Four Pieces, 1936 (for string quartet); Trio for a House-warming Party, 1936 (for piano, cello, and flute); Suite, 1973 (for two cellos and piano); Cantilena e scherzo, 1977 (for harp and string quartet); Trio, 1996 (for violin, clarinet, and piano).

CHORAL WORKS: The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi, 1963 (for soloists, choruses, and orchestra); Landscapes and Remembrances, 1976 (for voices, chorus, and orchestra); Miracles, 1979 (for boys' chorus and orchestra); Missa o pulchritudo, 1979 (for voices, chorus, and orchestra); A Song of Hope, 1980 (for baritone, chorus, and orchestra); Moans, Groans, Cries, and Sighs (A Composer at Work), 1981 (for six-part chorus); Muero porque no muero, 1982 (cantata; for soprano, chorus, and orchestra); Mass for the Contemporary English Liturgy, 1985 (for voices and organ); My Christmas, 1987 (for male chorus and chamber orchestra); For the Death of Orpheus, 1990 (for tenor, chorus, and orchestra); Llama de amor viva, 1991 (for baritone, chorus, and orchestra); Gloria, 1995 (for tenor, chorus, and orchestra).

INSTRUMENTAL WORKS: Six Compositions for Carillon, 1934; Ricercare, 1984 (for organ).

OPERAS (music and libretto): Amelia al ballo, 1937 (Amelia Goes to the Ball); The Old Maid and the Thief, 1939 (radio opera); The Island God, 1942; The Medium, 1946; The Telephone: Or, L'Amour à trois, 1947; The Consul, 1950; Amahl and the Night Visitors, 1951 (television opera); The Saint of Bleecker Street, 1954; Maria Golovin, 1958; Labyrinth, 1963 (television opera); L'ultimo selvaggio, 1963 (The Last Savage); Martin's Lie, 1964 (children's church opera); Help, Help, the Globolinks!, 1968 (children's opera); The Most Important Man, 1971; Tamu-Tamu, 1973 (The Guests; chamber opera); The Egg, 1976 (children's church opera); The Hero, 1976 (comic opera); The Trial of the Gypsy, 1978 (children's opera); Chip and His Dog, 1979 (children's opera); La loco, 1979; The Boy Who Grew Too Fast, 1982 (children's opera); A Bride from Pluto, 1982 (children's opera); Goya, 1986; The Wedding, 1988 (comic opera); The Singing Child, 1993.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Pastorale and Dance, 1934 (for piano and string orchestra); Piano Concerto in F, 1945; Apocalypse, 1951; Violin Concerto in A, 1952; Lewisohn Stadium Fanfare, 1965 (for brass, timpani, percussion, and strings); Fantasia, 1976 (for cello and orchestra); The Halcyon, 1976; Double Bass Concerto, 1983.

PIANO WORKS: Variations on a Theme of Schumann, 1930; Poemetti per Maria Rosa: Twelve Pieces for Children, 1937.

VOCAL WORKS: The Hero, 1952 (for voice and piano); Canti della lontananza, 1967 (cycle of seven songs for soprano and piano); Triplo concerto a tre, 1970 (for soloists and chamber orchestra); Five Songs, 1981 (for tenor and piano); Nocturne, 1982 (for voice, harp, and string quartet); Jacob's Prayer, 1997 (for voices and orchestra).

The Life

Gian Carlo Menotti (zhyahn KAHR-loh meh-NAH-tee) was born the sixth of ten children. His mother was an amateur musician and was responsible for his early musical education. By the time he entered the Milan Conservatory at the age of thirteen he had already written two operas, including The Death of Pierrot, which he completed when he was ten. In 1928 he began his studies with Rosario Scalero at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It was here that his lifelong friendship with the composer Samuel Barber began.

Menotti's career as an opera composer was launched with two successful scores in the opera buffa style: Amelia Goes to the Ball, which premiered in 1937, and The Old Maid and the Thief, which premiered on NBC radio and on the stage in 1939. Menotti's personal life settled down in 1943 when he and Barber moved into a home together in Mount Kisco, New York. The Medium, a tragic opera which established Menotti as a successful composer-librettist, and the comedy The Telephone premiered in 1946 and 1947 respectively and ran as a double bill in productions in the United States and Europe.

The Consul was his first full-length opera. It was a tragedy based on ideas from one of Menotti's film scripts, and it premiered with great success on March 15, 1950. On Christmas Eve of the following year, NBC premiered his television opera, Amahl and the Night Visitors. His next success, The Saint of Bleecker Street, once again commanded critical acclaim.

Menotti composed The Unicorn, the Gorgon, and the Manticore on a commission from the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in 1956 around the time he was writing the libretto for Barber's opera Vanessa. Menotti's next opera, Maria Golovin, was another commission from NBC and premiered in 1958. He founded the Spoleto Festival of Two Worlds that same year and served as its director until 1967.

The 1960's, 1970's, and 1980's saw an explosion of composition, the bulk of which was opera. In 1973 Menotti and Barber sold their home in New York, and Menotti moved to Scotland with his adopted son Francis. Menotti expanded the Spoleto Festival to Charleston, South Carolina, in 1977. Conflicts with the director of the U.S. festival nearly led to Menotti's dismissal in 1991. However, he retained control until 1993, when he withdrew. In spite of this, he continued his artistic endeavors. In 1995 he was commissioned by the American Choral Directors to write a Gloria in honor of the 1995 Nobel Peace Prize, and in 1996 he directed his second film version of Amahl and the Night Visitors.

The Music

Menotti's style of composition was traditionally tonal in an age of avant-garde composition. He rejected atonality because he felt it had limited expressive qualities. He did compose music in several genres, including cantatas, ballets, symphonic poems, piano concerti, songs, and chamber music; however, his operas remain his most important contribution to the repertoire. He was the librettist for his own works, having the luxury of building a musical composition on a foundation of his own creation.

The Medium. Premiered in 1946, this opera tells the story of a dissembling spiritualist who preys on grieving families in order to make money. During one of her many feigned séances the medium feels a cold hand at her throat. This leads to her slow descent into madness as the voices of the dead begin to fill her mind, causing her to lash out at her daughter and the Gypsy boy she has taken in during her travels. Menotti uses dissonance to create an eerie atmospheric effect, and it is striking in contrast to the tonal nature of the rest of the music.

Gian Carlo Menotti. (Library of Congress)

The Consul. Winner of the Drama Critics' Circle Award as well as the Pulitzer Prize in Music, this opera premiered in 1950 at the beginning of the Cold War. Set in an unnamed country, the story centers on the wife of a resistance fighter who is desperately attempting to escape her totalitarian country with her family. Although the opera is named for him, the consul never appears on stage. Instead, Menotti uses a wide cast of characters, all stuck in a looping story of waiting in the consulate's outer office, to tell the story of human beings being denied their humanity.

The music becomes a powerful reminder of the ever-present oppression that plagues the characters as well as their own inner struggles. A wide variety of orchestral colors, driving rhythms, soaring vocal lines, and short declamations paint this drama in a large scale.

Amahl and the Night Visitors. This work was commissioned by NBC television and premiered on Christmas Eve, 1951, the first opera written specifically for television. It enjoyed a long and successful run, being aired every year during the Christmas season. In addition to this, the opera was produced seasonally across the country and around the world.

Menotti's use of music to express the various characters of the opera is masterful. The foolish old King Kaspar's aria, "This Is My Box," is both delightful and silly, while the mother's aria, "All That Gold," betrays the desperate situation in which she and her son live. Melchior's aria, "Woman, You May Keep the Gold," is grand and sympathetic, communicating the generosity of the king's spirit and the promise of the Christ child.

The Saint of Bleecker Street. In the serious style of The Consul, this opera continues the theme of the physical versus the spiritual worlds seen in The Medium. It premiered in 1954 and won the New York Music Critics' Circle Award for Best Opera as well as a Drama Critics' Circle Award and the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 1955.

Once again Menotti uses music to draw the characters. Annina is a religious mystic who experiences the stigmata in the first scene of the opera, and her music expresses her otherworldly beauty of spirit. Her agnostic brother, Michele, is expressed through harsh, rhythmically driven music. Desideria, Michele's mistress, starts the opera with worldly music in the vein of Michele's. At the end of act 2, however, when she is dying and Annina is comforting her, Desideria's music begins to sound like Annina's.

Musical Legacy

Although he retained his Italian citizenship all his life, Menotti was lauded as an American opera composer. He utilized music to convey a story, with all its emotional nuances, to the audience, and was not afraid to reject the more popular avant-garde styles of composition in order to express his own artistic visions. His influence was seen in the operas of his lifelong companion, Barber, and similar ideas were reflected in the works of English composer Benjamin Britten.

Teri A. Herron

Further Reading

Ardoin, John. The Stages of Menotti. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1985. Discusses various works by the composer in chronological order by genre and premiere. Includes numerous photographs, illustrations, and short musical examples.

Barnes, Jennifer. "A Daring Experiment." In Television Opera: The Fall of Opera Commissioned for Television. Rochester, N.Y.: The Boydell Press, 2003. Discusses the background, execution, and impact of Menotti's Amahl and the Night Visitors, the first opera commissioned for television.

Chotzinoff, Samuel. A Little Night Music: Intimate Conversations with Jascha Heifetz, Vladimir Horowitz, Gian Carlo Menotti, Leontyne Price, Richard Rodgers, Artur Rubinstein, Andrés Segovia. London: Hamish Hamilton, 1964. The author was the general music manager for NBC who commissioned Menotti to write Amahl and the Night Visitors. Includes a transcript of an interview with the composer.

Gruen, John. Menotti: A Biography. New York: Macmillan, 1978. A biography based on interviews with the composer at his home at Yester House in Scotland.

Hixon, Donald L. Gian Carlo Menotti: A Bio-Bibliography. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2000. Includes a brief biography, general references about the composer and his music, lists of the composer's works, and a bibliography of works about the composer and the composer's works with a cutoff date of 1997.

See also: Barber, Samuel; Britten, Benjamin.

Sir Yehudi Menuhin

American classical composer, violinist, and conductor

A major violinist, Menuhin is remembered for his delicate tone and his poignantly Romantic musical intuition as well as for his wide-ranging intellectual and spiritual pursuits and his commitment to humanitarian causes.

Born: April 22, 1916; New York, New York
Died: March 12, 1999; Berlin, Germany

Also known as: Lord Menuhin of Stoke d'Abernon

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (as violinist): Beethoven: Violin Concerto in D Major, Op. 61, 1947; Bach: Orchestral Suite No. 3 in D, 1948; Bach: Orchestral Suites Nos. 1-3, 1960 (as conductor); Fascinating Rhythm: Music of the Thirties, 1988; For All Seasons, 1988; Jealousy: Hits of the Thirties, 1990 (with Stéphane Grappelli); Strictly for the Birds, 1993; Yehudi Menuhin: The Album, 1998.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Violin: Six Lessons with Yehudi Menuhin, 1971; Theme and Variations, 1972; Violin and Viola, 1976; Unfinished Journey, 1977 (autobiography); The Music of Man, 1979 (with Curtis W. Davis); The Compleat Violinist: Thoughts, Exercises, Reflections of an Itinerant Violinist, 1986 (renamed Life Class); Unfinished Journey: Twenty Years Later, 1997.

The Life

Yehudi Menuhin (yeh-HEW-dee MEHN-ew-ehn) was born to Moshe and Marutha Sher, East European Jews who emigrated to Palestine and eventually to the United States. Menuhin spent most of his childhood in San Francisco, where he accompanied his parents to San Francisco Symphony Orchestra concerts. He first expressed a desire to play the violin at age four. He first studied with Sigmund Anker, and in 1923 he began lessons with the concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Louis Persinger. The young violinist excelled, moving rapidly in his studies and giving his first public performance at age seven, his New York debut at age nine, his European premiere concerts at ten, and his first world tour at nineteen. His exceptional talent was quickly recognized by other well-known violin pedagogues, including George Enesco and Adolf Busch, both of whom instructed Menuhin in the art of the violin.

In March of 1938, Menuhin met Nola Nicholas backstage at a London concert. He quickly became enamored with the wealthy Australian beauty, and they were married in May of the same year. Although Menuhin's U.S. military service was deferred, during World War II, he tirelessly performed for U.S. troops on the European and the Pacific fronts. His absences from Nola and their two children, Zamira and Krov, placed a heavy strain on their marriage. Matters were further complicated when Menuhin was introduced to British ballet dancer and actress Diana Gould. After an unsuccessful attempt at reconciliation with Nola in 1946, Menuhin divorced her in 1947, and he married Diana a few weeks later. They had two children, Gerard and Jeremy, and a third son died within an hour of his birth.

Sir Yehudi Menuhin. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The emotionally stressful period of marital conflict with Nola coincided with Menuhin's loss of youthful confidence on the stage and a lapse in technique that prompted him to begin a lengthy reexamination of all aspects of violin artistry. He regained some self-assurance through his inventive use of skills derived from yoga, from Hindu philosophy, and from traditional Indian music, which he discovered on his first tour of India in 1952. Convinced of the practical and spiritual value of Indian culture, Menuhin adopted a daily yoga routine to complement his violin practice, and he began a strict vegetarian diet. As he sought spiritual enlightenment, he became increasingly committed to humanitarian causes, touring India in support of famine relief in 1952, boycotting South Africa from 1956 until the end of apartheid, giving concerts in support of Palestinian refugees after the 1973 Arab-Israeli War, and frequently rallying against the antidemocratic abuses of the Soviet Union.

Menuhin's appointment as artistic director of the Bath Music Festival in 1959 came as part of a gradual career reorientation characterized by an increased focus on conducting and teaching, an adjustment that would prove by the 1980's a necessity because of the severe deterioration of his violinistic abilities. In 1963 he founded the Yehudi Menuhin International School based eventually at Stoke d'Abernon in Surrey, England, a progressive institution with a broad educational program designed to cultivate creative and perceptive musicians. In 1977 he oversaw the creation of a second educational establishment, the International Menuhin Academy at Gstaad, Switzerland. As a conductor, Menuhin developed close relationships with several orchestras, including the Sinfonia Varsovia of Poland and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, of which he was named lifetime president in 1982.

Having taken up residence in England many years earlier, Menuhin assumed British citizenship in 1985, and he was accorded the title Sir Yehudi after receiving an honorary knighthood in 1965. In 1993, after being invited to join the House of Lords, he took another title, Lord Menuhin of Stoke d'Abernon. The decorated musician and humanist continued to promote humanitarian causes throughout the 1990's, working with special dedication toward the creation of an Assembly of Cultures intended to encourage multicultural interaction and expression. Despite suffering hearing loss, Menuhin continued appearing as a conductor until a few days before his sudden death from a heart attack on March 12, 1999.

The Music

Menuhin was an exceptional child prodigy. The rapid acquisition of technical facility comprised only part of his youthful brilliance; it was his innate faculty for profound expression that made his playing sound more mature. Age and experience only refined his musicianship, even in the face of deteriorating technique. Menuhin's virtuosity was never static, but in a lifelong struggle to maintain technical brilliance, his musicality grew into new dimensions.

Youth. In 1927 Menuhin performed Ludwig van Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D Major (1806) at Carnegie Hall, with Fritz Busch conducting. Busch had been hesitant to conduct an eleven-year-old in a concerto of such depth and with so many musical subtleties; he had suggested that a concerto by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart might better serve the young violinist. Nevertheless, Menuhin quickly persuaded Busch of his interpretive capabilities, bestowing upon Beethoven's music its well-known nobility, refinement, and expressive sophistication. In 1929 Bruno Walter conducted Menuhin in an even greater feat: a performance of concerti by Beethoven, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Johannes Brahms. It was a program of extraordinary variety, difficulty, and intensity, with works that demanded a commanding technique and a discriminating musicality. Deeply moved by Menuhin's musical offering, the Berlin audience attempted to rush the stage after the concert.

In July of 1932, Menuhin recorded Edward Elgar's Violin Concerto in B Minor (1910), with the composer at the conductor's podium. Epic in size and lavishly romantic, Elgar's concerto is overflowing with nocturnal passion and brooding pathos. Menuhin was up to the task; critics immediately acknowledged that Menuhin's performance exhibited a heartfelt tenderness and expressive certitude. Though only a boy of sixteen at the time of the recording, he exhibited the musical perceptivity of a mature violinist.

Maturity. The 1940's were a turbulent period for Menuhin, and his technique suffered. Even in youth, his tone was imbued with a certain delicacy, a perceptible fragility, making his sound unique and easily distinguished. However, by the time Menuhin was thirty, the fragilely beautiful sound of his playing had dissipated into tonal insecurities; his lack of instrumental mastery was compounded by a sudden lapse of confidence on the stage. A natural talent from the start, Menuhin had previously been little concerned with the fundamentals of violin technique. Now he began an extensive study of the intricate motions of the arms, hands, and fingers, and he sought a holistic understanding of the mechanics of the body, finding answers in yoga, as he said, his "yardstick of inner peace."

Menuhin's self-confidence was rejuvenated through an encounter with the Hungarian composer Béla Bartók, whose music he revered because of its flawless construction and profound emotional depths. Bartók equally admired Menuhin, and, in 1944, he composed his Sonata for Solo Violin expressly for the violinst, who performed it with resplendence and fantasy. Having found new inspiration in Bartók, Menuhin continued his rehabilitation through the exploration of traditional Indian music and jazz, performing with sitar player Ravi Shankar at the Bath Music Festival and with French jazz violinist Stéphane Grappelli in the 1970's.

By the time Menuhin reached his sixties, his bow had become noticeably unstable, especially in the lower half, and his intonation tended to be sharp. Though the struggling violinist remained capable of attaining moments of musical brilliance, he was increasingly prone to embarrassing performances. Hampered by problems in violin mechanics, Menuhin traded his bow for a baton with greater frequency in later life. Indeed, as a conductor, he was more successful than most of his violinist contemporaries. Menuhin enjoyed a long and illustrious career at the podium, during which time he made a number of celebrated recordings. Among the most memorable is a 1960 recording of the Bach orchestral suites with the Bath Festival Orchestra, noted for its expansiveness and nobility.

Musical Legacy

Although critics may emphasize the detrimental effect of Menuhin's physical problems on his violin career, until his last public appearance as a violinist in 1996, enthusiastic audiences continued to attend his concerts, captivated by a man whose capacity for musical communication seemed inexhaustible. Menuhin's art arose from the passionate outpouring of a thoughtful intellect; his music touched the hearts of millions of listeners. For Menuhin, the violin was the perfect tool to communicate with others in a way that is deeply human.

Menuhin's legacy as communicator of the human condition stretched beyond the realm of musical performance. His unique approach to music pedagogy was multifaceted, employing vocal study, jazz, improvisation, yoga, breathing exercises, and even specific dietary measures toward the cultivation of both the violinist and the human being. Moreover, for Menuhin, music symbolized universal values, and therefore it must be utilized to establish cultural dialogues as a means of promoting peace and cooperation. In each of his varied pursuits, Menuhin was dedicated to peace, humanitarianism, and environmentalism.

Joshua Addison and Bland Addison

Further Reading

Burton, Humphrey. Yehudi Menuhin: A Life. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 2000. A comprehensive and insightful biography complete with photographs, recommended recordings, and a chronology.

Dubal, David. Conversations with Menuhin. Orlando, Fla.: Harcourt, 1992. In a series of interviews conducted by a Juilliard professor, Menuhin provides valuable insights into his character and his convictions, as a violinist and as a humanitarian.

Menuhin, Diana. Fiddler's Moll: Life with Yehudi. New York: St Martin's Press, 1984. Nearly forty years in the life of Menuhin is revealed in this book from the perspective of his second wife, Diana Gould.

Menuhin, Yehudi. Unfinished Journey: Twenty Years Later. New York: Fromm, 1996. Updated edition of Menuhin's eloquently written and profoundly reflective autobiography of 1976. Includes photographs.

Palmer, Tony. Menuhin: A Family Portrait. London: Faber & Faber, 1991. Controversial work that focuses on the interactions of the seemingly troubled relations among the members of the Menuhin family.

See also: Bartók, Béla; Busch, Adolf; Elgar, Sir Edward; Gould, Glenn; Grappelli, Stéphane; Khan, Ali Akbar; Oistrakh, David; Shankar, Ravi; Stern, Isaac; Walter, Bruno.

Johnny Mercer

American musical-theater lyricist

A major contributor to the golden age of American popular song, Mercer in his lyrics and melodies combined a sense of nostalgia for lost romances and personal heartbreak with a mastery of vernacular speech and jazz rhythms.

Born: November 18, 1909; Savannah, Georgia
Died: June 25, 1976; Bel-Air, California
Also known as: John Herndon Mercer (full name)

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (lyrics): Garrick Gaieties, 1930 (revue); Americana, 1932 (music by Harold Arlen; lyrics by Edgar "Yip" Harburg and Johnny Mercer); Lew Leslie's Blackbirds of 1939, 1939 (revue; libretto by Lew Leslie); Walk with Music, 1940 (music by Hoagy Carmichael; libretto by Guy Bolton, Parke Levy, and Alan Lipscott); Saint Louis Woman, 1946 (music by Arlen; lyrics by Countée Cullen and Mercer; libretto by Arna Bontemps); Texas L'il Darlin', 1949 (music by Robert Emmett Dolan; libretto by John Whedon and Sam Moore); Top Banana, 1951 (music by Mercer; libretto by Hy Kraft); Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, 1954 (music by Gene de Paul; libretto by Lawrence Kasha and David Landay); L'il Abner, 1956 (music by de Paul; libretto by Norman Panama and Melvin Frank); Saratoga, 1959 (music by Arlen; libretto by Morton Da Costa); Foxy, 1964 (music by Dolan; libretto by Ian McLellan Hunter and Ring Lardner, Jr.); The Good Companions, 1974 (music by André Previn; based on J. B. Priestley's novel).

The Life

John Herndon Mercer (MUR-sur) was born in Savannah, Georgia, and in some sense he never left his Southern home and boyhood roots. His father was a wealthy real estate salesman whose first wife had died during the early 1900's. George Mercer then married Lillian Ciucevich, and their first child was Johnny Mercer. He attended local schools and then completed his education at Woodberry Forest, a boys' school in Virginia from which he graduated in 1927. Financial reverses in his father's real-estate business ruled out college for young Mercer. (When he became a wealthy songwriter, Mercer paid off all his father's debts.)

Intent on becoming an actor, Mercer left for New York City in 1927. His career on the stage went nowhere, but he displayed a talent for songwriting. In 1930 his song "Out of Breath" was featured in the Garrick Gaieties. He later recalled that the experience sent him on his way to Tin Pan Alley, the area of New York where songwriters and music publishers congregated. He married Ginger Meltzer on June 8, 1931, and they adopted two children.

Mercer's career took off during the 1930's. He was the lyricist on such hits as "Lazy Bones" (written with Hoagy Carmichael), "I'm an Old Cowhand," and "Jeepers Creepers." His appearances on radio with big band leader Benny Goodman and singer Bing Crosby revealed that he had a winning style of singing all his own. In the 1940's Mercer collaborated with Harold Arlen on such standards as "That Old Black Magic" and "One for My Baby." With Mercer's satirical lyrics, "Hooray for Hollywood" has become an unofficial anthem for the film community. Mercer was a success in writing song hits for the movies, but he had not yet composed the Broadway musical that would put him in the league of his contemporaries Richard Rodgers, Cole Porter, and Irving Berlin.

As the era of the big bands waned in the late 1940's and rock and roll appeared on the musical scene, Mercer's career stalled. Success on Broadway still eluded him until Li'l Abner in 1956, but even that long-running triumph was not the artistic success he had sought. He then had a series of flops that included Saratoga and Foxy but enjoyed a movie hit with Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, for which he wrote the words and music in 1954. Throughout the 1950's, however, a despondent Mercer indicated that the popular interest in his kind of songs was fading. He wavered between drinking bouts when he would embarrass himself and other occasions when he was generous to aspiring songwriters and musicians.

During the early 1960's his fortunes revived when songs he wrote with Henry Mancini won him two Academy Awards: "Moon River" and "The Days of Wine and Roses." Both lyrics caught the sense of nostalgia and youth escaping that was so much a part of Mercer's style. He struggled with alcoholism and depression all of his life, and his own pervasive sadness and melancholy are apparent in many of his best lyrics. Mercer continued to write until his death from a brain tumor in 1976. His ashes were buried in the Bonaventure Cemetery in his native Savannah.

The Music

From the early 1930's to the mid-1960's Mercer contributed a body of lyrics that enhanced the work of such important songwriters as Harold Arlen, Jerome Kern, Henry Mancini, Harry Warren, and Richard Whiting. Those discussed here are only a sampling of his rich contributions to the American songbook.

"Laura." Among his most heartfelt songs is "Laura," featured in the 1944 movie of the same name, with its evocation of a lost love glimpsed on a passing train or through the clouds of a misty night. In "Skylark" Mercer wrote about the birds he had known in his native Georgia, and his lyrics speak about his attachment to these creatures. This is one of his loveliest songs, with references to blossom-covered lanes, lonely flights, and music in the night.

Jazz Rhythms. While a longing for the past was at the heart of Mercer's approach to songs and lyrics, he was also adept at infusing jazz rhythms into his work. Such songs as "Goody Goody," "Too Marvelous for Words," and "Jeepers Creepers" have a rhythmic pulse that made them the favorites of such singers as Frank Sinatra, Mel Tormé, and Dick Haymes. Many of Mercer's phrases passed into everyday language, such as "accentuate the positive" and "come rain or come shine."

French Songs. Mercer enjoyed some of his greatest successes when he put English lyrics to the songs of French composers. His most notable work in this area includes "Autumn Leaves," "The Summer Wind," and, perhaps the most poignant of all, "When the World Was Young."

Musical Legacy

Mercer's songs are still popular more than three decades after his death, and he is regarded as one of the giants of the heyday of American popular song.

His lyrics embody the rhythms and speech patterns of mid-twentieth century life in the United States while speaking to emotions of love, longing, and regret that are timeless in their resonance. Blues-tinged, influenced by the landscapes of the South, and subtle in their use of language, Mercer's songs and lyrics are as powerful and engaging today as they were when first written.

Lewis L. Gould

Further Reading

Bach, Bob, and Ginger Mercer. Johnny Mercer: The Life, Times, and Song Lyrics of Our Huckleberry Friend. Secaucus, N.J.: Lyle Stuart, 1982. Mercer's lyrics compiled by his wife and a close friend.

Furia, Philip. Skylark: The Life and Times of Johnny Mercer. New York: St. Martin's Press, 2003. A biography by one of the leading scholars on American songwriters.

Lees, Gene. Portrait of Johnny: The Life of John Herndon Mercer. New York: Pantheon Books, 2004. A personal friend of Mercer and fellow songwriter, Lees's insights are invaluable.

_____. Singers and the Song II. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. Contains an essay on Mercer that has proved influential for students of his career.

Wilk, Max. They're Playing Our Song: The Truth Behind the Words and Music of Three Generations. Mount Kisco, N.Y.: Moyer Bell, 1991. Contains an interview with Mercer from the early 1970's that gives a good sense of the man and his craft.

See also: Arlen, Harold; Bergman, Alan; Berlin, Irving; Fitzgerald, Ella; Hamlisch, Marvin; Jordan, Louis; Kern, Jerome; Mathis, Johnny; Porter, Cole; Previn, Sir André; Rodgers, Richard; Tormé, Mel; Travis, Merle; Van Heusen, Jimmy.

Ethel Merman

American popular music and musical-theater singer

Brassy and loud, Merman's voice dominated Broadway musical theater from the 1930's to the 1970's. Composers Cole Porter and Irving Berlin wrote specifically for her powerful voice, and she introduced many of their most important hits.

Born: January 16, 1908; Queens, New York
Died: February 18, 1984; New York, New York
Also known as: Ethel Agnes Zimmermann (birth name)

Principal works

MUSICAL THEATER (singer): Girl Crazy, 1930 (libretto by Guy Bolton and John McGowan; music by George Gershwin; lyrics by Ira Gershwin); George White's Scandals, 1931 (libretto by George White, Irving Caesar, and Lew Brown; music by Ray Henderson; lyrics by Brown); Take a Chance, 1932 (libretto by B. G. De Sylva and Lawrence Schwab; music by Nacio Herb Brown and Richard A. Whiting; lyrics by De Sylva); Anything Goes, 1934 (libretto by Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse; music and lyrics by Cole Porter); Red, Hot, and Blue, 1936 (libretto by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse; music and lyrics by Porter); Du Barry Was a Lady, 1939 (libretto by Herbert Fields and De Sylva; music and lyrics by Porter); Stars in Your Eyes, 1939 (libretto by J. P. McEnvoy; music by Arthur Schwartz; lyrics by Dorothy Fields); Panama Hattie, 1940 (libretto by Herbert Fields and De Sylva; music and lyrics by Porter); Something for the Boys, 1943 (libretto by Herbert Fields and Dorothy Fields; music and lyrics by Porter); Sadie Thompson, 1944 (libretto by Howard Dietz and Rouben Mamoulian; music by Vernon Duke; lyrics by Dietz); Annie Get Your Gun, 1946 (libretto by Herbert Fields and Dorothy Fields; music and lyrics by Irving Berlin); Call Me Madam, 1950 (libretto by Lindsay and Crouse; music and lyrics by Berlin); Happy Hunting, 1956 (libretto by Lindsay and Crouse; music by Harold Karr; lyrics by Matt Dubey); Gypsy, 1959 (libretto by Arthur Laurents; music by Jule Styne; lyrics by Stephen Sondheim); Hello, Dolly!, 1964 (libretto by Michael Stewart; music and lyrics by Jerry Herman).

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Songs She Has Made Famous, 1947; Merman in Vegas, 1963; Merman Sings Merman, 1972; Ethel's Riding High, 1975; The Ethel Merman Disco Album, 1979.

The Life

Ethel Merman was the only child of bookkeeper Edward Zimmermann and his wife Agnes Gardner. Raised in Long Island, Merman sang at age three and first performed in public at age five, joining her amateur pianist father wherever she could. Regularly taken to the Palace vaudeville theater, she learned from singers whose voices could fill theaters long before microphones were invented. Her parents nurtured her talent, but they insisted that, for financial security, she have a steady job. She took a high school secretarial course, learning skills and attitudes that sustained her throughout her career. Self-disciplined, she regarded the theater as simply a job, handling her own correspondence and taking stage directions in shorthand. She was prompt, knew her material, gave consistent performances, and was intolerant of unprofessional behavior.

While holding secretarial jobs, Merman performed wherever she could find work, sometimes commuting late at night across New York City. By 1927 she had abridged her name to Ethel Merman, and she was well-known enough to be pictured on sheet music. Singing at the Little Russia nightclub, she attracted an agent who introduced her to composer George Gershwin. Her Broadway success thereafter was meteoric. She was less successful in Hollywood, where her vitality and her lack of conventional glamour generally relegated her to secondary roles. Of films made from her Broadway successes, she starred only in a much changed Anything Goes and, almost two decades later, in Call Me Madam.

Ethel Merman. (AP/Wide World Photos)

In 1970 her last stage performance was as Dolly Levi in the final months of the long-running Hello, Dolly!, a role originally written for her. She sang in concert from 1975 on, and she appeared frequently on television. Merman was diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor ten months before her death on February 18, 1984.

The Music

Merman entered the stage, faced the audience, and sang—every note, word, and gesture communicating her energy and her delight in performing. Although her voice was untrained, it filled even the largest theater without amplification. Her vocal range was limited, estimated at about an octave and a half, but her voice was clear and her enunciation impeccable, She could communicate clearly even the wordiest of lyrics, as, for example, in Cole Porter's "You're the Top." She possessed remarkable breath control, with the ability to sustain decibel levels; in

George Gershwin's "I Got Rhythm," from 1930's Girl Crazy, she held the "I" for at least sixteen measures, electrifying the audience. Her flawless timing and rhythm allowed her to sing counterpoint songs: "Anything You Can Do," sung with Ray Middleton in Annie Get Your Gun (1946) and "You're Just in Love," with Russell Nype in Call Me Madam.

Early Works. Originally hired simply to sing in Girl Crazy, Merman's role expanded as her comic gifts were recognized. At that time, she was so unaware of the importance of a theatrical hit that, to Gershwin's amazement, she failed to read reviews. She played club dates during the run of the show, and she filmed short films at the Paramount lot near her home in Astoria, Long Island.

In her next two shows, however, she introduced some of Cole Porter's most famous hits. In Anything Goes, she played evangelist-turned-nightclub hostess Reno Sweeney, singing four of the show's major numbers: "I Get a Kick out of You," "You're the Top," "Anything Goes," and "Blow, Gabriel, Blow." In these early shows, she played a brassy, streetwise woman with tremendous vitality and, especially in Panama Hattie, courage. She appeared with comedians Bob Hope (Red, Hot, and Blue), Jimmy Durante (Red, Hot, and Blue and Stars in Your Eyes), and Bert Lahr (Du Barry Was a Lady).

Annie Get Your Gun. Merman believed that show finally established her importance on Broadway, allowing her wider scope as an actress. She played historical sharpshooter Annie Oakley, who toured in William F. Cody's "Buffalo Bill" Wild West shows. Here, Merman belted out Irving Berlin's "There's No Business Like Show Business," but she also played a country woman, singing "Doin' What Comes Natur'lly" and "I Got the Sun in the Morning," and a woman vulnerably and tenderly in love, singing "You Can't Get a Man with a Gun" and "They Say It's Wonderful."

Gypsy. Musical-theater historian Ethan Mordden described Merman's Gypsy performance as among the greatest in musical-theater history. Based on Gypsy Rose Lee's book Gypsy: Memoirs of America's Most Famous Stripper (1957), it starred Merman as Rose, a monstrous stage mother who ruthlessly controls her two daughters, Lee and future actress June Havoc, and who is determined to propel them into theatrical success. Although Merman compared Rose with William Shakespeare's Lady Macbeth, she also communicated Rose's vulnerability, neediness, and longing in the most nuanced performance of her career. Rose dominates her daughters, but, in Merman's earthy portrayal, she is also someone who, trapped in what she perceives as a futile, life-wasting existence, reaches out for recognition. The show ends with "Rose's Turn," during which, her dreams fractured, Rose mentally disintegrates as she sings.

Musical Legacy

Merman's career spanned Broadway's golden age, and by the time of Gypsy, fewer Broadway and Hollywood musicals were being produced and popular music was being directed to a younger, more fragmented, audience. Merman's voice, however, lives on in recordings and films, including those made of her television appearances. She worked with many of the top entertainment stars, from Jimmy Durante, Bing Crosby, and Bob Hope to Barbra Streisand, Johnny Carson, and the Muppets. Her importance was recognized with a Tony Lifetime Achievement Award in 1972 and the Pied Piper Award, from the American Society of Authors, Composers, and Publishers (ASCAP) in 1982. She won a Tony Award in 1950 for her performance in Call Me Madam and a Golden Globe Award in 1953 for her performance in the film version. She was inducted into the Theatre Hall of Fame in 1982. Other performers have recorded her songs and sung her roles, but her performances remain the standard against which the others are measured.

Betty Richardson

Further Reading

Flinn, Caryl. Brass Diva: The Life and Legends of Ethel Merman. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2007. This important biography separates fact from rumor and legend, analyzing the latter in terms of cultural attitudes and prejudices. Includes a discography, a list of stage appearances, and a filmography.

Kellow, Brian. Ethel Merman: A Life. New York: Viking, 2007. This biography is written in a popular style, and it lists major awards and Broadway, film, and television appearances.

Mark, Geoffrey. Ethel Merman: The Biggest Star on

Broadway. Fort Lee, N.J.: Barricade Books, 2006. Popular biography with extensive lists of radio, television, film, recording, and Broadway performances with some commentary.

Mordden, Ethan. Coming Up Roses: The Broadway Musical in the 1950's. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. This resource contains glowing references to Merman's Gypsy performance.

See also: Berio, Luciano; Fields, Dorothy; Gershwin, George; Gershwin, Ira; Porter, Cole; Sondheim, Stephen; Styne, Jule.

Robert Merrill

American opera and musical-theater singer

Merrill had a thirty-year career at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, and he appeared many times on radio and on television, becoming an effective representative of the opera world in other media.

Born: June 4, 1917; Brooklyn, New York
Died: October 23, 2004; New Rochelle, New York
Also known as: Moishe Miller (birth name); Merrill Miller

Principal works

OPERATIC ROLES: Amonasro in Giuseppe Verdi's Aida, 1944; Germont in Verdi's La traviata, 1945; Escamillo in Georges Bizet's Carmen, 1946; Valentin in Charles Gounod's Faust, 1946; Count Di Luna in Verdi's Il trovatore, 1947; Rodrigo in Verdi's Don Carlos, 1950; Marcello in Giacomo Puccini's La Bohème, 1952; Tonio in Ruggero Leoncavallo's Pagliacci, 1952; Rigoletto in Verdi's Rigoletto, 1952; Renato in Verdi's Un ballo in maschera, 1954; Iago in Verdi's Otello, 1963.

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Fiddler on the Roof, 1968; Hark! The Herald Angels Sing, 1974; The Radio Years: Robert Merrill on Radio, Unpublished Broadcasts 1940-1946, 1995.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Once More from the Beginning, 1965 (autobiography); Between Acts: An Irreverent Look at Opera, 1976 (memoirs).

The Life

Robert Merrill was born Moishe Miller in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, New York, in 1917. His parents, Abe and Lotza Millstein, had changed their name to Miller after emigrating from Poland to the United States. As a youth, Merrill was interested in baseball, and he played sandlot games for ten dollars each. He also worked in the garment district, pushing carts of clothing. He gradually became interested in singing, influenced partly by his mother, who was a singer, and partly by hearing records of Bing Crosby and Russ Columbo. He began formal voice training, first with a cantor, then with Samuel Margolis, who had a studio next to the opera house. Soon, he was singing on the radio on station WFOX, using the name Merrill Miller.

His broadcast career expanded to include the Major Bowes Amateur Hour and NBC's Salute to America series. In 1944 he changed his name to Robert Merrill. In 1952 he was briefly married to soprano Roberta Peters. After they divorced, he married Marion Machno, a pianist who became his accompanist and mother of his two children, Lizanne and David. They lived in New Rochelle, New York. It was there Merrill died while watching the 2004 World Series on television.

The Music

Merrill auditioned unsuccessfully for the Metropolitan Opera in 1941. He then filled his schedule with jobs at various hotels in the Catskills, a summer resort area, where he sang popular songs as well as his audition aria "Largo al factotum" from Gioacchino Rossini's The Barber of Seville (1816). At this time, he also performed in comedy routines with Red Skelton, the Three Stooges, and other entertainers. The theatrical agent Moe Gale helped him find radio work on the NBC Concert Orchestra program and on Serenade to America, where the conductor was Phil Spitalny. Later, he was engaged at Radio City Music Hall.

Operatic Debut. In 1944, through the efforts of Gale's friend Michael de Pace, Merrill was hired to sing his operatic debut in the role of Amonasro in Giuseppe Verdi's Aida (1871) in Newark, New Jersey. Tenor Giovanni Martinelli was also in the cast, and he befriended Merrill. With Martinelli's help, more roles followed: Tonio in Ruggero Leoncavallo's Pagliacci (1892) in Worcester, Massachusetts; Escamillo in Georges Bizet's Carmen (1873) in Hartford, Connecticut; and Valentin in Charles Gounod's Faust (1859) in Trenton, New Jersey.

The Metropolitan Opera. In June, 1945, after a successful audition, Merrill was hired by Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera. His debut with that company in December, 1945, was in the role of Germont in Verdi's La traviata (1853), a role he was to sing many times in his career. Other cast members that night were Richard Tucker and Licia Albanese. During this period, Merrill was also singing weekly on radio on The Voice of Firestone and Music America Loves Best. His recording of "The Whiffenpoof Song" soared to number one on the Hit Parade radio show. Conductor Arturo Toscanini selected Merrill to sing the role of Germont for his 1946 radio broadcast of La traviata with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. The broadcast also featured Albanese as Violetta and Jan Peerce as Alfredo.

During his first three seasons at the Metropolitan Opera, Merrill sang in eight different operas, including Verdi's La Traviata, Il trovatore (1853), and Aida. In 1947 he gave his first performance of Figaro in The Barber of Seville. In 1951 Merrill decided to go to Hollywood to make a film called Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick (1952), costarring Dinah Shore. The film was a disaster, and it almost cost Merrill his career at the Metropolitan Opera. Because he had skipped some performances to make the film, he was in breach of his contract. He was fired by Rudolf Bing, who had succeeded Johnson as general manager at the Metropolitan Opera. Merrill missed from February, 1951, until March, 1952, at the Metropolitan Opera, but he spent some time entertaining at Army bases in Europe for the United Service Organizations (USO) in support of the troops. After making an abject apology to Bing (which was published in The New York Times and The Herald Tribune), Merrill was rehired in the spring of 1952, when he added the role of Marcello in Giacomo Puccini's La Bohème (1896) to his repertoire. His biggest part that year was the title role in Verdi's Rigoletto (1851). Merrill was becoming a major Verdi baritone. In succeeding seasons, he added the Verdi roles of Alvaro in La forza del destino (1862), Rodrigo in Don Carlos (1867), Renato in Un ballo in maschera (1859), and Iago in Otello (1887).

Robert Merrill. (© CORBIS)

Merrill remained active at the Metropolitan Opera for thirty-one seasons, and he made guest appearances in opera houses around the world, including in Mexico City, in Havana, in Buenos Aires, in London, and in Venice. He sang with the company on its spring tours and on its visits to Tokyo in 1975 and to Paris in 1966. He retired from the Metropolitan Opera in 1976.

Las Vegas. In addition to his operatic work, Merrill performed in nightclub acts in Las Vegas, with such fellow entertainers as Louis Armstrong, Talullah Bankhead, and Noël Coward. He signed a five-year, ten-thousand-dollar-per-week contract at the Sands casino. In 1971 Merrill assumed the role of Tevye in a traveling company of the musical Fiddler on the Roof (1964) by Jerry Bock, Joseph Stein, and Sheldon Harnick. In this endeavor, Merrill performed the role two hundred times over a three-year period.

Musical Legacy

Merrill leaves a musical legacy in his 789 Metropolitan Opera performances, mainly in Verdi roles. He also made many opera recordings for RCA Victor still treasured by listeners. In addition to his operatic work, he was a rare example of an artist who could cross over into mass media, such as radio and television. In so doing, he became a familiar face and an effective representative of the opera world. In 1968 he was appointed to the National Council of Arts by President Lyndon Johnson, and in 1993 he was awarded the National Medal of Arts by President Bill Clinton.

John R. Phillips

Further Reading

Bing, Rudolf. Five Thousand Nights at the Opera. New York: Doubleday, 1972. The author was general manager of the New York Metropolitan Opera for twenty-two years, and in this book he tells many stories about the artists and productions. Of the firing of Merrill, he says that the Met "lost the services of a great baritone, but sustained a principle without which there could be no hope of first-class opera production."

Davis, Peter G. American Opera Singers. New York: Doubleday, 1997. This resource covers singers from 1825 to 1997. The author finds Merrill's voice powerful and beautiful, but his acting sometimes wooden. Short biographical articles on famous singers, with notes on their vocal qualities and idiosyncrasies.

Merrill, Robert, with Sandford Dody. Once More from the Beginning. New York: Macmillan, 1965. This autobiography includes photographs of the author in his major operatic roles.

Steane, J. B. The Grand Tradition. 2d ed. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1993. A serious work that surveys seventy years of opera recordings and that offers critiques of hundreds of singers, including Merrill.

See also: Armstrong, Louis; Björling, Jussi; Coward, Sir Noël; Crosby, Bing; Sutherland, Dame Joan; Toscanini, Arturo.

Olivier Messiaen

French classical composer

Messiaen developed a unique spiritual and personal musical language, fusing such disparate elements as birdsong, ancient Hindu rhythms, and the musical traditions of Roman Catholicism.

Born: December 10, 1908; Avignon, France
Died: April 28, 1992; Clichy, France
Also known as: Olivier Eugène Prosper Charles Messiaen (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Thème et variations, 1932 (Theme and Variations; for violin and piano); Quatuor pour la fin du temps, 1941 (Quartet for the End of Time; for violin, cello, clarinet, and piano); Visions de l'amen, 1943 (Visions of the Amen; for two pianos); Le Merle noir, 1952 (The Blackbird; for flute and piano); Couleurs de la cité céleste, 1963 (Colours of the Celestial City; for solo piano and ensemble); Un Vitrail et des oiseaux, 1986 (Stained-Glass Window and Birds; for solo piano, brass, wind, and percussion); La Ville d'en haut, 1987 (The City on High; for solo piano, brass, wind, and percussion); Pièce pour piano et quatuor à cordes, 1991 (Piece for Piano and String Quartet).

CHORAL WORKS: O sacrum convivium!, 1937 (O Sacred Banquet); Trois Petites Liturgies de la présence divine, 1944 (Three Small Liturgies of the Divine Presence; for female chorus, piano solo, ondes martenot solo, and orchestra); La Transfiguration de notre seigneur, Jésus-Christ, 1969 (The Transfiguration of Our Lord Jesus Christ; for ten-part chorus and orchestra).

OPERA (music): Saint François d'Assise, 1983 (Saint Francis of Assisi, libretto by Messiaen).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Les Offrandes oubliées, 1930 (The Forgotten Offerings; for piano and orchestra); L'Ascension, 1933 (The Ascension); Hymne au Saint Sacrement, 1946 (Hymn to the Holy Sacrament); Turangalîla-Symphonie, 1949; Réveil des oiseaux, 1953 (Dawn Chorus; for solo piano and orchestra); Oiseaux exotiques, 1956 (Exotic Birds; for solo piano and orchestra);

Chronochromie, 1960 (Time Color); Sept Haïkaï, 1962 (Seven Haikus; for solo piano and orchestra); Et exspecto resurrectionem mortuorum, 1964 (And I Look Forward to the Resurrection of the Dead; for wind, brass, and percussion); Des canyons aux étoiles . . ., 1974 (From the Canyons to the Stars); Un Sourire, 1989 (A Smile); Concert à quatre, 1991 (Quadruple Concerto); Éclairs sur l'au delà . . ., 1992 (Illuminations on the Beyond . . .).

ORGAN WORKS: Le Banquet céleste, 1928 (The Celestial Banquet); Dyptique, 1930; Apparition de l'église éternelle, 1932 (Apparition of the Eternal Church); La Nativité du Seigneur, 1935 (The Lord's Nativity); Les Corps glorieux, 1939 (Glorious Bodies); Messe de la pentecôte, 1950 (Pentecost Mass); Livre d'orgue, 1952; Verset pour la fête de la dédicace, 1960 (Verse for the Feast of the Dedication); Méditations sur le mystère de la Sainte Trinité, 1969; Livre du saint sacrament, 1986 (Book of the Holy Sacrament).

PIANO WORKS: Préludes, 1929; Fantaisie burlesque, 1932; Pièce pour le tombeau de Paul Dukas, 1935; Rondeau, 1943; Vingt Regards sur l'enfant-Jésus, 1944 (Twenty Gazes on the Christ Child); Cantéyodjayâ, 1949; Quatre Études de rythme, 1950 (Four Studies in Rhythm); Catalogue d'oiseaux, 1958 (Bird Catalog); La Fauvette des jardins, 1970 (Garden Warbler); Petites Esquisses d'oiseaux, 1985 (Small Sketches of Birds).

VOCAL WORKS: Poèmes pour Mi, 1937 (song cycle for soprano and orchestra); Harawi: Chants d'amour et de mort, 1944 (Harawi: Songs of Love and Death); song cycle; Cinq rechants, 1948.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Technique de mon langage musical, 1944 (Technique of My Musical Language, 1957).

The Life

Olivier Eugène Prosper Charles Messiaen (oh-LIHV-yay yew-ZHEHN mehs-seh-EHN) was born into a literary family. His father, Pierre, translated the complete works of William Shakespeare into French, and his mother, Cécile Sauvage, was a poet. In 1919, Olivier entered the Paris Conservatory, where he studied composition with Paul Dukas and organ performance and improvisation with Marcel Dupré. In 1931 he succeeded Charles Quef as the principal organist at the Church of St. Trinité, making him the youngest organist in Paris to hold such a prestigious position; Messiaen would hold this post until his death.

Messiaen united with friends and fellow composers Yves Baudrier, André Jolivet and Daniel-Lésur to form the group La Jeune France. The group sponsored a series of concerts in Paris and produced a manifesto that outlined their intent to reintroduce human and spiritual dimensions in French music.

In 1932 Messiaen married the violinist Claire Delbos, and in 1937 their son Pascal was born. Messiaen enlisted in the French military, serving as a medic in the early days of World War II. He was taken prisoner in 1940 and interned in Stalag VIII A at Görlitz in Silesia, where he composed his Quartet for the End of Time. The first performance of the work was given in the prison camp and has since become one of the most famous musical premieres of the twentieth century.

Repatriated in 1941, Messiaen was appointed as professor of harmony at the Paris Conservatory, where his pupils included Pierre Boulez, Karlheinz Stockhausen, and the pianist Yvonne Loriod. Messiaen elaborated on his compositional methods in a treatise entitled Technique de mon langage musical (1944; Technique of My Musical Language, 1957). From 1950 to 1953 he taught a summer course at the Darmstadt School, where he and his students famously explored the compositional possibilities of the serial ordering of musical durations, timbres, and intensities.

Claire succumbed to an ever-worsening mental condition and was institutionalized in the years before her death in 1959. During this time, Messiaen became increasingly close to Loriod, both professionally and personally, and the two were married in 1961. Loriod became the foremost performer of her husband's works for piano. Together, they traveled the world; Messiaen spent much time during these trips absorbing his natural surroundings. His later compositions were built around his inspirations from nature, especially birdsong. Messiaen wrote a number of commissioned works, including From the Canyons to the Stars, inspired by a trip to Bryce Canyon in Utah. As result of this work, Lion's Peak in Utah was renamed Mount Messiaen in 1978.

Late in life, Messiaen experienced a steady decline in health and a number of injurious falls. In April, 1992, he underwent surgery to support collapsed vertebrae and died in the days following the operation. Messiaen was buried near his home at Petichet, France, under a headstone carved in the shape of a white bird.

The Music

Messiaen's unique musical language developed early in his life. Exposure to the music of Claude Debussy when Messiaen was a child had a profound impact on the development of his own musical style. In the 1920's Messiaen became intrigued by a thirteenth century treatise on classical Indian music. He studied a collection of 120 ancient deçitâlas (regional rhythms) and from these derived his unique approach to musical rhythm. Messiaen's early musical style is outlined in detail in his Technique of My Musical Language, which systemically explains his use of nonretrogradable rhythms (rhythmic palindromes), modes of limited transposition (scales with fewer than twelve transpositions, and other facets of his writing.

Olivier Messiaen. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Early Works. Messiaen's music and his theology were always fundamentally linked. By 1940 he had already composed some of his most enduring religious compositions, including the organ piece The Celestial Banquet and the choral motet O Sacred Banquet! The Lord's Nativity is a nine-movement work for organ depicting images surrounding the birth of Christ. Another work from this period, The Ascension, existed in its first version as a four-movement orchestral suite; Messiaen rescored the work for organ, substituting a new third movement.

Quartet for the End of Time. Perhaps the composer's most famous work, the quartet was written while Messiaen was a prisoner in World War II. The premiere performance was given in the prison camp on January 15, 1941, by fellow prisoners violinist Jean Le Boulaire, cellist Étienne Pasquier (Messiaen's commanding officer), clarinetist Henri Akoka, and the composer as pianist. Cast in eight movements (to symbolize the six days of creation, the seventh day of rest, and an eighth day to represent eternity), the quartet is inspired by the fantastic and sometimes brutal imagery of the Apocalypse. In addition to his theological inspirations, Messiaen sought to experiment with the abolition of musical time, achieved through various means, such as irregular rhythmic groupings, incredibly slow tempi, and complex, overlapping rhythms.

The Tristan Trilogy. The late 1940's are marked by Messiaen's fascination with the themes of love and death, famously embodied in the mythical lovers Tristan and Isolde. The composition of these works coincides with the onset of the protracted illness of his first wife, Claire, and his developing relationship with Loriod. Dating from 1944, Harawi is a song cycle for soprano and piano, with poetry written by the composer. The title is a Quechua word, from a native South American language, for a love song in which the couple is joined in death.

In 1946 Serge Koussevitzky, music director for the Boston Symphony, commissioned Messiaen for a symphonic work. The Turangalîla-Symphonie received its premiere in 1949, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony. The title is a compound Sanskrit word: According to Messiaen, turanga refers to movement and rhythm; lîla denotes cosmic force as well as the spiritual and physical unions of love. The dichotomy in the title plays out in the ten movements of the work, in which sensuous love themes alternate with driving, propulsive rhythms. Scored for large orchestra (including prominent parts for piano and ondes Martenot), it received mixed reviews at its premieres in Boston and New York.

Soon after its premiere, Messiaen received a commission to write a vocal work for the French L'Ensemble Vocale. The resulting Cinq rechants for twelve unaccompanied voices is a surreal concoction of Peruvian legend, the Tristan myth, the Bluebeard legend, and other elements.

Birdsong. In the 1950's Messiaen started to amass a collection of notated birdsong, which he compiled in special manuscript notebooks. He even took up ornithological studies to familiarize himself with the various species. His extensive travels throughout Europe, North America, Japan, Australia, and the Middle East allowed him to notate bird calls from throughout the world. Messiaen adapted the birdsong to traditional instruments, adding to them a harmonic dimension.

His first major experiment translating birdsong into music is his Dawn Chorus for piano and orchestra, which uses the transcribed birdsongs as its only musical material. Other works soon followed. In writing Exotic Birds for piano and chamber orchestra, Messiaen noted birdsong from around the world by listening to phonograph records. Bird Catalog is a monumental two-and-a-half-hour work for piano solo. From this point onward, all of his compositions incorporate birdsong.

Late Works of Epic Proportion. The last two decades of Messiaen's life were consumed with the composition of large-scale works. His trips to the American West inspired the composition of From the Canyon to the Stars, a twelve-movement work for orchestra, piano, and horn that evokes the natural surroundings of Bryce Canyon, Cedar Breaks, and Zion Park in Utah. In 1975 Messiaen began to compose the opera Saint Francis of Assisi and continued work on its composition and orchestration until 1983. The work is staged for nine soloists and scored for a ten-part chorus of 150 members and an orchestra of 120. Included in the orchestration is a full battery of brass, percussion, and three ondes Martenot. Messiaen's last large-scale work for the organ is the Book of the Holy Sacrament, which received its premiere in Detroit, Michigan, in 1986. The eighteen movements of the cycle follow the liturgical pattern of the Eucharistic celebration and represent a compendium of musical ideas Messiaen had worked out in his years as an organist in Paris.

Musical Legacy

At his death in 1992 The New York Times hailed Messiaen as one of the most important and influential French composers of the twentieth century. At a time when most serious composers were turning to electronic music and strict serialism as preeminent compositional languages (paths Messiaen did, in fact, explore briefly), he found his inspiration in his religious faith, in nature, and in the human condition. Messiaen stated himself that all his music was a reflection of his spiritual convictions. Even the works that were not overtly religious (the Tristan trilogy and the birdsong works of the 1950's) contained for Messiaen powerful symbols of human love and the presence of God in nature.

Messiaen's music brought new technical and interpretive challenges to performers, especially pianists and organists. His works for organ constitute a contribution to the repertoire unparalleled in the twentieth century. Taking inspiration from the colorful Cavaillé-Coll organ at Sainte Trinité, Messiaen created some of the most evocative and colorful music of the century. His late orchestral works and his opera, while important contributions to the repertoire, are difficult to mount because of the complexity of the music and the sheer size of the required forces.

As a teacher, Messiaen never imposed his own compositional methods on his students but rather preferred that they follow their own inspiration. His students (Boulez, Stockhausen, and Iannis Xenakis notable among them) forged important musical paths in the twentieth century.

Joseph A. Bognar

Further Reading

Bruhn, Siglind, ed. Messiaen's Language of Musical Love. New York: Garland, 1998. Essays by eleven authors explore Messiaen's religious and spiritual symbolism.

Dingle, Christopher. The Life of Messiaen. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2007. A readable biography that takes into account recent researches into the composer's life and music.

Griffiths, Paul. Olivier Messiaen and the Music of Time. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1985. A biographical study of Messiaen, with an emphasis on his music.

Hill, Peter, ed. The Messiaen Companion. Portland, Oreg.: Amadeus Press, 1994. A collection of essays by various authors. Includes an interview with Loriod and reminiscences of Messiaen as a teacher.

Hill, Peter, and Nigel Simeone. Messiaen. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2005. A comprehensive study of the life of the composer that includes more than two hundred photographs and reproductions of documents.

Johnson, Robert Sherlaw. Messiaen. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1989. An expanded reissue of Johnson's original 1975 study focuses on musical analysis of Messiaen's compositions; Appendix II reproduces the 120 ancient Hindu tâlas that inspired Messiaen's rhythmic approach to composition.

Messiaen, Olivier. Technique of My Musical Language. Translated by John Satterfield. Paris: Leduc, 2001. Commentary and hundreds of musical illustrations from Messiaen's earliest works elucidate his unique compositional style.

Pople, Anthony. Messiaen: Quatour pour la fin du Temps. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1998. A thin volume containing descriptive analyses of each of the eight movements in the Messiaen quartet. An appendix addresses Messiaen's use of modes of limited transposition.

Rischin, Rebecca. For the End of Time: The Story of the Messiaen Quartet. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 2006. Study of the personalities and events surrounding the genesis of the Quartet for the End of Time debunks a number of myths regarding its premiere.

See also: Babbitt, Milton; Boulez, Pierre; Debussy, Claude; Hancock, Herbie; Koussevitzky, Serge; Piazzolla, Astor; Previn, Sir André; Ravel, Maurice; Schaeffer, Pierre; Scriabin, Aleksandr; Stockhausen, Karlheinz; Takemitsu, Tōru; Tavener, Sir John; Xenakis, Iannis.

Pat Metheny

American jazz guitarist and composer

A creative guitarist, Metheny has developed a lyrical style that soars over dense layers of percussion, vocals, and synthesizers, creating a unique blend of jazz improvisation with folk, rock, and world influences.

Born: August 12, 1954; Lee's Summit, Missouri
Also known as: Patrick Bruce Metheny (full name)
Member of: Pat Metheny Group

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Bright Size Life, 1975; Watercolors, 1977; An Hour with Pat Metheny, 1979; New Chautauqua, 1979; As Falls Wichita, So Falls Wichita Falls, 1980 (with Lyle Mays); 80/81, 1980; Rejoicing, 1983 (with Charlie Haden and Billy Higgin); The Falcon and the Snowman, 1985; Song X, 1985 (with Ornette Coleman); Question and Answer, 1989 (with Dave Holland and Roy Haynes); Works I, 1991; Works II, 1991; Secret Story, 1992; Under Fire, 1992; Zero Tolerance for Silence, 1992; I Can See Your House from Here, 1993 (with John Scofield); Dream Teams, 1994 (with the Sonny Rollins Trio); The Sign of Four, 1996 (with others); Passaggio per il paradiso, 1998; A Map of the World, 1999; Trio 99-00, 2000; Move to the Groove, 2001 (with the Heath Brothers); Parallel Universe, 2001; One Quiet Night, 2003; Metheny Mehldau, 2006 (with Brad Mehldau); Quartet, 2007 (with Mehldau); Day Trip, 2008 (with the Pat Metheny Trio).

ALBUMS (with the Pat Metheny Group): Pat Metheny Group, 1978; American Garage, 1980; Offramp, 1981; First Circle, 1984; Still Life (Talking), 1987; Letter from Home, 1989; We Live Here, 1994; Quartet, 1996; Imaginary Day, 1997; Speaking of Now, 2002; The Way Up, 2005.

The Life

Patrick Bruce Metheny (meh-THEE-nee) was born on August 12, 1954, to David and Lois Metheny in Lee's Summit, Missouri. His grandfather was a professional trumpet player, and his older brother, Mike, grew up to play trumpet professionally. It is no surprise that this was the first instrument Metheny began playing at age eight. Comparisons to his brother and getting braces on his teeth were factors that led him to take up the guitar at age twelve, and through high school he performed professionally in the Kansas City area.

In 1972 Metheny attended the University of Miami for a semester, and he was asked to return to teach guitar lessons the next spring. He met vibraphonist Gary Burton in the summer of 1973 at the Wichita Jazz Festival. At that time, Burton offered Metheny, then nineteen, a position in his band and recommended him to teach at the Berklee College of Music in Boston. In 1974 he met pianist Lyle Mays, with whom he collaborated with for more than twenty years in the Pat Metheny Group. While continuing his rigorous touring schedule, Metheny lived in Brazil from 1986 to 1990. He married Latifa Azhar in 1995, and they had two sons.

The Music

Metheny's music is characterized by its diversity of style. Working with Mays and the other members of the Pat Metheny Group, he has entertained millions of fans around the world. Metheny's collaborations with numerous jazz musicians in smaller combo settings have ranged from traditional to adventurous in scope. Metheny has composed works for ballet, small ensembles, and orchestras, in addition to several film sound tracks, including The Falcon and the Snowman and A Map of the World.

Early Works. Metheny's playing on the twelve-string guitar can be heard on three albums recorded while he was a member of Burton's group, including Passengers, on which he composed three of the tracks. The 1976 recording Bright Size Life features his debut as a group leader. The lean sound of bass and drums accompanying Metheny's airy guitar improvisation anticipates his later small group work.

First Circle. This 1984 release highlights the strengths of the Pat Metheny Group as it settled into some of its characteristic styles. Brazilian rhythms and percussion that were added to the group's sound in the previous release, Offramp, are still evident, as are the wordless vocals that parallel Metheny's melodic lines, giving his guitar phrases richness. Metheny's humorous side is evident in the opening track "Forward March," which is a parody of an out-of-tune and out-of-sync marching band. Even the mainstream selections have rhythmic and harmonic complexities that expand this music beyond New Age and easy-listening categories. For example, the off-balance eleven-beat meter in the title track, "First Circle," gives the piece a propulsive energy that cools only briefly at its heart during Mays's beautiful piano improvisation before the intensity builds again, escalating to a joyous conclusion. The recording garnered the group a Grammy Award.

Secret Story. This ambitious project released in 1992 was composed and arranged entirely by Metheny, but it includes performances by a wealth of musicians, including, among others, his brother Mike, a Cambodian choir, members of the London Orchestra, and members of the Pat Metheny Group. The fourteen tracks portray Metheny's emotions over the course of a relationship with a Brazilian girlfriend that ultimately ended. The confident optimism of the rock-inspired second track, "Facing West," and the romantic tenderness of track four, "Finding and Believing," ultimately change to the slow, mournful quality of track twelve, "The Truth Will Always Be," building to Metheny's anguished guitar melody crying over rich string and synthesizer harmonies. The work represents one of Metheny's three gold records and his seventh Grammy Award.

Quartet. One of Metheny's small group collaborations, this release teams Metheny with jazz pianist Brad Mehldau and his trio partners Larry Grenadier on bass and Jeff Ballard on drums. Some of Metheny's experimental guitars can be heard on this recording, including a forty-two-string guitar that adds delicate harplike timbres to the contemplative selection "The Sound of Water." His signature guitar synthesizer sounds blend nicely with Mehldau's inventive improvisation on "Toward the Light." The most progressive piece, "Santa Cruz Slacker," opens with an angular melody over a slow blues groove, and then it breaks out into several free-form improvisations from Metheny and Mehldau. While the track never becomes radical, it is less approachable than Metheny's mainstream style.

Musical Legacy

Metheny's diverse endeavors span genres from classical to Latin, rock, and jazz. Despite favoring extended six-to-nine-minute pieces that are not conducive to radio airplay, Metheny has achieved great popularity, receiving sixteen Grammy Awards and enjoying sold-out concert tours. He has expanded the boundaries of jazz guitar playing by creating a more comprehensive definition of jazz improvisation. While some critics argue his predominant style is not really jazz, its inclusiveness has broadened the audience for all jazz artists. He has worked with many notable jazz musicians, including Ornette Coleman, Herbie Hancock, Sonny Rollins, and Joshua Redman. He has experimented with new types of guitars and synthesized effects to explore unique sounds. His talent inspired the contemporary minimalist composer Steve Reich to compose a three-movement work for him, Electric Counterpoint (1987), that features Metheny playing over a tape of ten layered tracks he had previously recorded.

R. Todd Rober

Further Reading

Goins, Wayne E. Emotional Response to Music: Pat Metheny's Secret Story. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellon Press, 2001. Although this includes a dense psychological study of how listeners perceive the emotional aspect of Metheny's music, it does feature one of the few comprehensive discussions of Metheny's life and music in print.

Levy, Adam. "Pat Answers." Guitar Player 35, no. 3 (March, 2001): 104-110. Levy interviews Metheny about his experiences playing in trios.

Mandel, Howard. "Pat Metheny Plays It His Way." Down Beat 62, no. 4 (April, 1995): 16-19. Mandel's interview with Metheny highlights his musical inspirations and goals for his career.

Metheny, Pat. "In Search of Sound." Down Beat 65, no. 2 (February, 1998): 16-20. An excellent overview of Metheny's musical life in his own words.

Peterson, Lloyd. Music and the Creative Spirit: Innovators in Jazz, Improvisation, and the Avant Garde. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2006. Includes a chapter that features Metheny explaining his ideas about the creative process. The closing chapter has a keynote address Metheny gave in 2001 to a jazz educators' conference.

See also: Burton, Gary; Coleman, Ornette; Hancock, Herbie; Nascimento, Milton; Reich, Steve; Rollins, Sonny.

Darius Milhaud

French classical composer

An important composer associated with the French avant-garde and a group known as Les Six, Milhaud was among the first to experiment with polytonality and jazz in classical genres. His influence as a composer and educator continued in the United States from 1940 until his death.

Born: September 4, 1892; Aix-en-Provence, France
Died: June 22, 1974; Geneva, Switzerland

Principal works

BALLETS (music): L'Homme et son désir, 1918 (libretto by Paul Claudel); Le Boeuf sur le toit, 1919 (The Nothing Doing Bar; libretto by Jean Cocteau); La Création du monde, 1923 (The Creation of the World; libretto by Blaise Cendrars); Moïse (Opus Americanum No. 2), Op. 219, 1940.

CHAMBER WORKS: String Quartet No. 4, Op. 46, 1918; String Quartet No. 7, Op. 87, 1925; Sonatina, Op. 100, 1927 (for clarinet and piano); Suite, Op. 157b, 1936 (for clarinet and piano); La Cheminée du roi René, Op. 205, 1939 (The Chimney of King René; for wind quintet); String Quartet No. 12, Op. 252, 1945; String Quartet No. 18, Op. 308, 1950; Duo Concertante, op. 351, 1956 (for clarinet and piano).

CHORAL WORKS: Alissa, 1913; Machines agricoles, 1919; Catalogue de fleurs, 1920; Psalm 121, Op. 72, 1921; Service sacré, Op. 279, 1947; Le Château de feu, Op. 338, 1954; Tristesses, 1956.

OPERAS (music): Les Malheurs d'Orphée, 1926 (libretto by Armand Lunel); Le Pauvre Matelot, 1927 (The Poor Sailor; libretto by Cocteau); Les Choéphores, Op. 24, 1927 (libretto by Claudel); Christophe Colomb, 1930, revised 1968 (libretto by Claudel); Esther de Carpentras, 1938 (libretto by Lunel); David, 1955 (libretto by Lunel).

ORCHESTRAL WORKS: Five Études, Op. 63, 1920; Le Carnaval d'Aix, Op. 83b, 1926; Concerto

No. 1, Op. 93, 1927 (for viola); Concerto Op. 109, 1930 (for percussion and chamber orchestra); Suite provençale, Op. 152c, 1936; Suite anglaise, Op. 234, 1942 (for harmonica, violin, and orchestra); Suite française, Op. 248, 1944; Violin Concerto No. 2, Op. 263, 1946; Concerto Op. 278, 1947 (for marimba, vibraphone, and orchestra); Kentuckiana, 1948; Concertino d'automne, Op. 309, 1951; Suite Concertante, Op. 278a, 1952; Concertino d'hiver, Op. 327, 1953 (for trombone and strings); Viola Concerto, No. 2, Op. 340, 1955.

PIANO WORKS: Saudades do Brasil, Op. 67, 1922; Trois rag caprices, Op. 78, 1922; Scaramouche, Op. 165b, 1937 (for two pianos); La Muse Ménagère, Op. 245, 1945.

The Life

Darius Milhaud (DAH-ree-uhs mee-YOH) was born into a Jewish family in Aix-en-Provence, France, in 1892. Showing an early talent for music, he began formal lessons at age seven, and he enrolled in the Paris Conservatory in 1909. He studied with Paul Dukas, and he was influenced by Erik Satie.

By 1917 Milhaud's music was performed regularly in Paris, often with that of five other composers who together became known as Les Six: Georges Auric, Louis Durey, Arthur Honegger, Francis Poulenc, and Germaine Tailleferre. He lived in Brazil from 1917 to 1918, collaborating with Paul Claudel on his first ballet, L'Homme et son désir. During these years, he integrated popular Brazilian styles and polytonality. On his return from Brazil, he stopped in New York City and acquired the sounds of jazz.

During the 1920's and 1930's, Milhaud taught at the Paris Conservatory, and he composed for Claudel, Jean Cocteau, Ballets Suédois, and Ballets Russes. In 1940, when the Nazi army invaded France, he was forced to leave Paris. He moved to the United States, accepting a teaching position at Mills College in Oakland, California. After the war, he alternated between Mills College and the Paris Conservatory, until a time near his death in 1974.

The Music

Milhaud is well known for two of his ballets, The Nothing Doing Bar and The Creation of the World. The former is an example of polytonality, and the latter is an example of jazz-influenced art music. He was, however, a prolific composer throughout his entire career. His total output of at least 443 compositions include twelve symphonies, eighteen string quartets, eighteen ballets, sixteen operas, numerous chamber and choral works, and music for film, radio, and television. Although his characteristic style did not change after his move to the United States, he acknowledged his second home in titles such as Moïse (Opus Americanum No. 2) and Kentuckiana.

L'Homme et son désir. Milhaud's first ballet, composed in Rio de Janeiro in 1918 in collaboration with Claudel, who called the work a poème plastique, and Audrey Parr, who designed the sets and costumes, was an experiment in capturing the primitivism suggested by the Brazilian jungle. The work is scored for twenty percussion instruments performing polyrhythmically to mimic the jungle sounds. Primitivism is expressed further in the overall theme of man stripped to his most basic desires. A canon with twelve successive entries that drop by half-step each time and cycle through all twelve keys occurs just as the man is about to be overcome by a taunting woman who circles him and leads him in a sleepwalking chase. The ballet was first performed in 1921 by the Ballets Suédois in Paris.

Darius Milhaud. (Library of Congress)

The Nothing Doing Bar. Composed in 1919 after Milhaud's return from Brazil, this was the first of his ballets to be performed. Inspired by Brazilian popular dances and rhythms, the work was originally conceived as an accompaniment to a Charlie Chaplin film. When Jean Cocteau heard it, he created a ballet scenario for it, and he arranged for a performance in Paris in 1920. Although the title Le Boeuf sur le toit is literally translated as the ox on the roof, Cocteau called it The Nothing Doing Bar for a London premiere later that year.

The story revolves around a barman during a time of prohibition. Customers enter, order, and dance. When police arrive, the bar suddenly turns into a milk bar. The music, in rondo form, associates the refrain with the barman's activities. The episodes occur with the entrance of each customer, and they are based on Brazilian popular dances. Harmonically the piece moves through nearly every major and minor key (the exception is E minor), the key changes coinciding with the episodes. This work also contains polytonal sections within this framework, for which it is famous.

The Creation of the World. In 1923 Milhaud composed his next major ballet for the Ballets Suédois. This portrayed primitivism through an African tale of creation based on Blaise Cendrars's scenario for a ballet nègre. Its set and characters were designed by Fernand Léger, and it musically incorporated jazz idioms that Milhaud associated with black popular music.

The music is characterized by both jazz elements and classical forms. It features solos for saxophone, oboe, flute, and clarinet with prominent piano, trumpet, and trombone parts. The music contains oscillating blues thirds, riffs, and syncopation. Classically, its overall form can be interpreted as a modified refrain form. It has a formal overture and a fugue, although the fugue is harmonically atypical in its subject entrances.

Christophe Colomb. This opera, another collaboration with Claudel and written in 1928, was first performed by the Berlin Opera in 1930. A revision was performed in 1968. The work is in two large sections with more than twenty short scenes that depict Columbus's life and beyond. Four different singers portray different stages, the last one being his shadow, or conscience, who confronts him regarding his wrongdoings. The music corresponds tightly to the complexities of the drama, and it represents one of Milhaud's masterpieces.

Musical Legacy

Milhaud was one of the earliest composers to incorporate jazz into classical styles. This, along with the polytonal and polyrhythmic works that borrowed from carnival and café popular music, became the hallmark of his style and the model for many later composers. In the United States, his influence expanded through his teaching at Mills College, shaping the styles of students such as William Bolcom, David Del Tredici, Burt Bacharach, Philip Glass, Leland Smith, Pete Rugolo, and Howard and Dave Brubeck.

Sandra S. Yang

Further Reading

Collaer, Paul. Darius Milhaud. Translated and edited by Jane Hohfeld Galante. San Francisco: San Francisco Press, 1988. Written by a musicologist close to Milhaud, this book offers a complete biography of the composer. Galante's catalog of compositions, compiled in consultation with the composer's widow, is thorough and well organized.

Kelly, Barbara L. Tradition and Style in the Works of Darius Milhaud, 1912-1939. Hants, England: Ashgate, 2003. This work focuses on the influences that affected the development of Milhaud's style during his first professional decades in France. It brings to light a number of works that have been largely overlooked.

Mawer, Deborah. Darius Milhaud: Modality and Structure in Music of the 1920's. Hants, England: Scolar Press, 1997. An impressive analytical study of Milhaud's music during one of his most experimental periods, Mawer applies several models by leading music theorists to explain Milhaud's technique and musical language.

Milhaud, Darius. My Happy Life: An Autobiography. Translated by Donald Evans, George Hall, and

Christopher Palmer. London: Marion Boyars, 1995. Milhaud's autobiography was first published in French as Notes sans Musique in 1949. The completed autobiography was retitled as Ma Vie Heureuse.

See also: Bacharach, Burt; Berio, Luciano; Boulanger, Nadia; Brubeck, Dave; Evans, Bill; Glass, Philip; Honegger, Arthur; Poulenc, Francis; Reich, Steve; Satie, Erik; Villa-Lobos, Heitor; Xenakis, Iannis.

Glenn Miller

American jazz composer and trombonist

One of the most popular dance bandleaders of the swing era of the 1930's and 1940's, Miller established a smooth, lyrical sound that has endured for decades.

Born: March 1, 1904; Clarinda, Iowa
Died: December 15, 1944; English Channel
Also known as: Alton Glenn Miller (full name)

Principal recordings

SINGLES: "In the Mood," 1939; "Little Brown Jug," 1939; "Moonlight Serenade," 1939; "Blueberry Hill," 1940; "Fools Rush in Where Angels Fear to Tread," 1940; "Pennsylvania 6-5000," 1940; "Tuxedo Junction," 1940; "Chattanooga Choo Choo," 1941; "Elmer's Tune," 1941; "Song of the Volga Boatmen," 1941; "American Patrol," 1942; "At Last," 1942; "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree (With Anyone Else but Me)," 1942; "(I've Got a Gal in) Kalamazoo," 1942; "Moonlight Cocktail," 1942; "A String of Pearls," 1942; "That Old Black Magic," 1943.

The Life

Alton Glenn Miller was born in Clarinda, Iowa, on March 1, 1904, the second son of Elmer and Mattie Lou Miller. His family moved to Nebraska, Missouri, and Colorado when Miller was young. During this nomadic existence, he showed a talent for playing the trombone, and he organized bands with his friends. After finishing high school in Fort Morgan, Colorado, he played in Boulder while attending the University of Colorado. He then moved to Los Angeles to become a full-time professional musician. For a time he roomed with clarinetist and future King of Swing Benny Goodman. Miller married Helen Burger on October 6, 1928, and she proved indispensable to his future professional success.

Miller was a competent but not outstanding trombonist. He displayed excellent business skill and the ability to help put bands together during the 1930's. He was also a talented arranger. His first attempt to assemble a band of his own failed in 1937, but he tried again in 1938. Though Miller admired jazz, he was never an improviser. What he was looking for in his band was a smooth sound that would attract the widest possible audience of dancers and listeners. To achieve that distinctive musical identity, Miller hit upon the idea of a clarinet lead over the four saxophones of his orchestra. His theme song, "Moonlight Serenade," is an excellent expression of what made the Miller orchestra so popular at that time and in the years that followed.

From 1939 through the middle of 1942, Miller and his band had a series of popular hits, including "Tuxedo Junction," "I've Got a Gal in Kalamazoo," and "In the Mood." Good examples of the orchestra in its prime can be seen in the two movies that they made: Sun Valley Serenade (1941) and Orchestra Wives (1942).

Radio broadcasts further added to the appeal of Miller and his organization. As a leader, he was a disciplinarian who demanded professionalism at all times. On occasion, however, he would embark on drinking bouts that suggested professional tensions.

In October, 1942, Miller joined the Army Air Corps to build morale through his expanded and skilled orchestra, made up of the best musicians in military service. Participants in the orchestra later said that it was the best band ever to play the popular music of its time. Gifted musicians such as drummer Ray McKinley and pianist Mel Powell led smaller units spun off from the fifty-member organization. Miller entertained troops in the United States before taking the orchestra to Great Britain during the summer of 1944.

On December 15, 1944, Miller boarded a monoplane for a trip across the English Channel to

Glenn Miller. (AP/Wide World Photos)

France. He was never seen again. The most plausible of the many theories about his death is that British bombers returning from a mission dropped unexploded bombs that accidentally hit Miller's plane below and sent it into the waters of the English Channel. Since the postwar years, various orchestras have carried on the Miller musical legacy under his name. While pleasant to listen to, none has ever attained the unique sound and appeal of the original.

The Music

Entertainment Entreprenuer. Miller's days as a sideman and instrumentalist on record dates during the 1930's were a prelude to the rapid rise to popularity of his dance band between 1938 and 1942. A shrewd entertainment entrepreneur who knew just what he wanted from his musicians, Miller captured the middle ground between the sweet and swing bands of that period. His records were designed to appeal to the jukeboxes that had spread across the United States during the 1930's and defined teen-age tastes. His appearances at dance halls offered an appealing blend of high-energy instrumentals, such as "In the Mood," along with romantic ballads, such as "At Last." While his band members often chafed at the repetitive nature of his selections, Miller understood that the customers had come to hear his hits, and he made sure to gratify the audience's desires.

Wartime. By all accounts, Miller took his music to a more sophisticated and complex level during his wartime service. Records and air-checks from that brief period attest to the high quality of the Miller military orchestra. He had an unerring sense of the musical needs of his audience in that period when the United States moved from peace to war in the early 1940's. His ballads call up memories for a generation whose lives were shaped by conflict and sacrifice. His up-tempo tunes, such as "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree (With Anyone Else But Me)" convey the poignancy of separation and anxiety at a time when people did not know how the war would end. Miller's enigmatic and tragic wartime death at a relatively young age leaves the question open of how he and his orchestra would have adapted to the bebop generation in jazz and the arrival of rock with Elvis Presley and others.

Musical Legacy

Continuations of the Miller orchestra in the ghost band format reinforced his popularity over the decades. The motion picture made about his life, The Glenn Miller Story (1955), with Jimmy Stewart and June Allyson, while filled with inaccuracies and misleading information, is still a means for Miller fans and those new to his music to learn about his career and impact. Miller has remained an iconic figure of the swing era, eclipsing the popularity of his contemporaries Benny Goodman and Artie Shaw.

Lewis L. Gould

Further Reading

Butcher, Geoffrey. Next to a Letter From Home: Major Glenn Miller's Wartime Band. London: Trafalgar

Square, 1997. This source examines Miller's wartime service in the British Isles.

Grudens, Richard. Chattanooga Choo Choo: The Life and Times of the World Famous Glenn Miller Orchestra. Stony Brook, N.Y.: Celebrity Profiles, 2004. With a foreword by Kathryn Crosby, the widow of singer Bing Crosby, this book is a thorough chronicle of Miller's life, including interviews with musicians vocalists, songwriters, and arrangers. Includes more than 150 photographs.

Lees, Gene. "The Glenn Miller Years I-VII." Jazzletter 24 (June-December. 2007). A series of essays by a distinguished author on popular music and jazz offers an excellent guide to Miller's life.

Simon, George T. Glenn Miller and His Orchestra. New York: Da Capo Press, 1988. A comprehensive survey of the band's career in the United States by a preeminent historian of the swing era.

See also: Barretto, Ray; Burke, Johnny; Carter, Benny; Domino, Fats; Goodman, Benny; James, Etta; Mancini, Henry; Nichols, Red; Shaw, Artie; Willson, Meredith; Wonder, Stevie.

Roger Miller

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Miller was a successful country songwriter in the 1950's, composing hits for other singers. Later, he charmed listeners by singing his folksy, humorous songs in his twanging voice.

Born: January 2, 1936; Fort Worth, Texas
Died: October 25, 1992; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: Roger Dean Miller (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Roger Miller Featuring Dang Me!, 1960; Roger and Out, 1964; Roger Miller, 1964; The Country Side of Roger Miller, 1965; The One and Only, 1965; The Return of Roger Miller, 1965; The Third Time Around, 1965; Wild-Child, 1965; Words and Music, 1966; Walkin' in the Sunshine, 1967; Waterhole Number Three, 1967; A Tender Look at Love, 1968; Roger Miller 1970, 1970; A Trip in the Country, 1970; Dear Folks, Sorry I Haven't Written Lately, 1973; Celebration, 1976; Painted Poetry, 1977; Off the Wall, 1978; Making a Name for Myself, 1979; Old Friends, 1982; Green Green Grass of Home, 1994.

The Life

Roger Dean Miller's father, Jean Miller, died of spinal meningitis when Miller was one year old, and his mother, Laudene Holt Miller, was in her twenties. Unable to care for her three sons, Laudene parceled them out to three of Jean's brothers, and Miller moved in with Armelia and Elmer Miller on a farm near Erick, Oklahoma. He walked three miles to his tiny school every day, and he spent the rest of the time picking cotton or working the land. A dreamy, lonely child, he found some solace in his imagination.

His early introduction to music came from Sheb Wooley, an Erick native who was married to Miller's cousin. Fifteen years older than Miller, Wooley had the same ambitions, and together they listened to Grand Ole Opry and the Light Crust Doughboys on the radio. Wooley taught Miller his first chords on the guitar, and he bought Miller his first fiddle. Desperate to own a guitar, Miller stole one, but he turned himself in the next day. Offered enlistment in the Army instead of jail, Miller joined the armed services. After service in Korea, he was stationed in Fort McPherson in Georgia, where he played fiddle in the Circle A Wranglers, a group of military personnel musicians, started by Faron Young, who was a private in the Army. After being discharged, Miller headed to Nashville, and he took a job as a bellhop at the Andrew Jackson Hotel. His first record was not a success, and Miller, married by now to his first wife, Barbara, with a child on the way, moved to Amarillo, Texas, and joined the fire department. At a show in Amarillo, Miller met superstar Ray Price, who signed him to sing in the Cherokee Cowboys. Miller and his family moved back to Nashville with Price and started writing songs.

In 1978, Miller married Mary Arnold, who was a musician in Kenny Rogers's backup band, Kenny Rogers and the First Edition. When Miller died of lung cancer in 1992, Arnold became the trustee of his estate.

The Music

Miller became a hot country songwriter in the 1950's following Price's hit recording of Miller's "Invitation to the Blues," which was also recorded by motion picture cowboy Rex Allen. Marley scored a hit for Ernest Tubb with "Half a Mind" and for Young, who made a Top 10 hit of Miller's "That's the Way I Feel." Jim Reeves took Miller's "Billy Bayou" to number one, following it a few months later with Miller's "Home," which rose to number two.

Before Price had turned Miller's song "Invitation to the Blues" into a hit, Miller had signed a songwriting deal with Tree Publishing for fifty dollars a week. There he met Buddy Killen, Tree's manager, with whom he developed a lifelong friendship. With Killen plugging his songs, Miller scored hits for other artists, but he still longed to be a singer. Killen brought him to Decca Records, where he sang a duet with Johnny Little. That song and a second song he recorded with Decca Records were not successes.

Roger Miller. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Fortuitously, one evening Miller ran into Young, who hired him to be a drummer in his band. While playing for Young, Miller signed a deal with RCA Records' Nashville office, which was run by guitarist Chet Atkins. Miller's first recording for RCA Records was "You Don't Want My Love," which reached number fourteen on the country-music charts and was later recorded by Andy Williams. He became well known, and he began to tour in his solo act.

By 1963 RCA Records dropped Miller, and his first marriage fell apart. A natural comedian, he was invited to be a guest on television's The Tonight Show, and he subsequently appeared on other shows. He was thinking of giving up his music career for acting, but Smash Records, a subsidiary of Mercury Records, was growing popular on radio, and it signed a contract with Miller. There he recorded fifteen of his own songs during a two-day session. Of all the songs cut that day, "Dang Me" was a huge hit, and Miller's career was finally launched.

"Dang Me." Recorded in January, 1964, "Dang Me" was a hit by June, first becoming known in Seattle and Houston on pop radio, then on jukeboxes all over the country. By the end of June, it was rising on both the country and the popular music charts. "Dang Me" won Miller his first five Grammy Awards including, ironically, Best New Country and Western Artist. It also won for Best Country Song; Best Country and Western Recording, Single; Best Country and Western Album; and Best Western Performance. The lyrics, sung by the persona of a no-good drinker and spendthrift who spends his rent money buying drinks, while his wife and baby sit at home, have the cheerful and robust feeling of many of his songs, ending in "I'm a son of a gun."

"King of the Road." Recorded in November, 1964, at another album session, "King of the Road" became Miller's career record. He had written it on the road the previous summer, prompted by a sign he saw outside

Chicago: "Trailers for Sale or Rent." These became the opening words of the song, but in Boise, Idaho, when he noticed an itinerant in an airport gift shop, he was inspired to write the rest of the song, about a hobo who enjoys his freedom riding the rails. Released early in 1965, "King of the Road" became a smash hit, reaching number one on the country-music chart in March, number four on the pop music chart. By May, the single had sold a million copies, becoming a gold record.

Musical Legacy

Miller will always be remembered for his country standards, including such hits as "Invitation to the Blues," "Half a Mind," "That's the Way I Feel," "Billy Bayou," and above all "King of the Road." He was inducted posthumously into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1995.

Dedicated to Miller, a museum in Erick features a collection of memorabilia, with an overview of his life and numerous tapes of his concerts to view. It is located on the corner of Sheb Wooley and Roger Miller boulevards. The museum offers a scholarship to aspiring musicians, publishes a newsletter on its Web site, and holds an annual Roger Miller Festival. Miller's son, Dean, serves on the museum board and also performs in the concerts.

Sheila Golburgh Johnson

Further Reading

Ching, B. Wrong's What I Do Best: Hard Country Music and American Culture. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 2001. A look at the prevalent themes in country music and how they reflect American culture.

Jensen, J. The Nashville Sound: Authenticity, Commercialism, and Country Music. Nashville, Tenn.: Vanderbilt University Press, 1998. A look at what commercialism has done to authentic country music.

Netti, Bruno, and Helen Myers. Folk Music in the United States. Detroit, Mich.: Wayne State University Press, 1976. An informative introduction to the study of folk music as an aspect of culture.

Style, Lyle E. Ain't Got No Cigarettes: Memories of Music Legend Roger Miller. Winnipeg, Man.: Great Plains Publications, 2005. Miller's life is recounted in taped interviews with those who knew him personally and professionally, including Waylon Jennings, Kris Kristofferson, Merle Haggard, and Willie Nelson. The source covers his struggles with drugs and depression.

See also: Atkins, Chet; Jennings, Waylon; Kristofferson, Kris; Milsap, Ronnie; Nelson, Willie.

Ronnie Milsap

American country singer, songwriter, keyboardist, and pianist

A country musician, Milsap was widely popular during the 1970's and 1980's, notable for his soulful voice and for his piano stylings.

Born: January 16, 1944; Robbinsville, North Carolina

Also known as: Ronnie Lee Milsap (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Ronnie Milsap, 1971; Pure Love, 1974; Where My Heart Is, 1974; A Legend in My Time, 1975; Night Things, 1975; A Rose by Any Other Name, 1975; 20/20 Vision, 1976; It Was Almost Like a Song, 1977; Images, 1979; Milsap Magic, 1980; There's No Getting Over Me, 1980; Out Where the Bright Lights Are Glowing, 1981; Inside, 1982; Keyed Up, 1983; One More Try for Love, 1984; Lost in the Fifties Tonight, 1985; Christmas with Ronnie Milsap, 1986; Heart and Soul, 1987; Stranger Things Have Happened, 1989; Believe It, 1990; Back to the Grindstone, 1991; Back on My Mind, 1992; True Believer, 1993; Christmas in Dixie, 1997; Wish You Were Here, 2000; Just for a Thrill, 2004; My Life, 2006.

The Life

Ronnie Lee Milsap was born in Robbinsville, North Carolina, to parents James Lee and Grace Milsap with a congenital glaucoma that left him blind. Milsap's mother believed that the blindness was a punishment from God, and when he was little more than a year old, Milsap was given to his grandmother for care. At six years old, Milsap was sent to the Morehead State School for the Blind in Raleigh, North Carolina. At Morehead, he studied classical music, and he began to play the piano.

Although Milsap was successful on the piano, he decided to pursue a pre-law degree at Young-Harris Junior College in Atlanta, Georgia. He earned an associate's degree in 1964, and he was the recipient of a full scholarship to Emory University. However, Milsap decided to postpone his academic endeavors in favor of a musical career. At twenty, Milsap released his first single, and he began playing as a sideman to noted blues musician J. J. Cale.

On October 30, 1965, Milsap married Frances Joyce Reeves, and the two became parents of Ronald Todd Milsap. In 1973 Milsap moved his family to Nashville, Tennessee, in hopes of making it big in the Nashville music scene. While there, Milsap performed at Roger Miller's King of the Road Motel, and he eventually found himself playing piano for other local Nashville musicians, such as Chips Moman and Elvis Presley. That same year, Milsap signed to RCA Records and immediately released his first major label single, "Total Disaster." The single was a surprise success, and it climbed the list to become one of the Top 10 country-music songs in the United States.

Milsap was filled with songwriting confidence, and in 1974 he had three number-one songs on the Top 10 country-music charts. Milsap hit it big again in 1976 with an unprecedented six number-one songs on the country-music charts.

After Milsap's success, he was invited to join the Grand Ole Opry, and he performed numerous times in Grand Ole Opry showcases. Milsap was noted for his humor as well as his music making; audiences loved Milsap's sound as well as his optimistic personality.

Milsap was not content with singing only country music. In 1977 he attempted a crossover career into pop music. While he was not an immediate success, he was able to crack the pop chart's Top 20 after only a few attempts.

By the 1980's, however, Milsap had figured out the crossover formula, and he garnered several successful hits in pop, adult contemporary, and country-music genres. Between 1980 and 1982, Milsap had ten continuous number-one songs, and he had another eight between 1985 and 1987. Milsap's enormous success as a crossover artist inspired numerous Nashville country singers to follow suit.

The 1990's proved to be difficult for Milsap, when his chart-topping success waned. In 1992 Milsap left RCA Records and signed with Liberty Records. Despite his previous success, he was unable to re-create his prior accomplishments in the 1990's.

The Music

Milsap trained for many years as a classical pianist, but he says his heart belongs to country music. Milsap's influences draw heavily from jazz, blues, and soul musical genres, and for that Milsap is often labeled a soulful country singer. His proficiency at the keyboard is matched only by his uncanny ability to select hit songs. Much of Milsap's music draws upon his Southern roots, middle-class work ethics, and associated rural imagery. In his long career, Milsap's style has changed: Early works are heavily influenced by country music, while jazz and pop influences are prevalent in later years.

"Pure Love." "Pure Love" was Milsap's first single to reach the number-one spot on the 1974 Billboard hot country singles chart. The song is in the vein of country music during the 1970's, complete with female backing vocals, steel guitar, and rambling percussion. It draws upon several pop culture references, such as an Ivory soap commercial and Cap'n Crunch breakfast cereal. "Pure Love" was written by former Presley songwriter Eddie Rabbitt, and Milsap flawlessly performed the song. "Pure Love" has been credited with launching Milsap's impressive country-music career.

"It Was Almost Like a Song." In 1977 "It Was Almost Like a Song" eclipsed all successes that Milsap had experienced until that point. This song was Milsap's first crossover success, landing at number one on the country charts, number sixteen on the pop charts, and number seven on the adult contemporary charts. Written by Hal David and Archie Jordan, "It Was Almost Like a Song" is a slow country ballad with emphasis on the piano coupled with violin accompaniment. This song was such a defining point in Milsap's career that he used it as the title for his cowritten autobiography.

"Smokey Mountain Rain." Written by Kye Fleming and Dennis Morgan, "Smokey Mountain Rain" is one of Milsap's most memorable songs. Released in 1980, it became an instant success. It was Milsap's sixteenth number-one song on the country charts, and with the wide appeal of its subject matter and Milsap's heartbreaking performance, the album reached number one on the adult contemporary charts and number twenty-four on the pop charts. Rock, pop, country, and adult contemporary radio stations played Milsap's "Smokey Mountain Rain." With a traditional country-music instrumentation of piano, guitar, backing vocals, bass, and drums, the song was part of Milsap's unprecedented ten continuous number-one country-music singles.

"(There's) No Gettin' Over Me." "(There's) No Gettin' Over Me" was Milsap's most successful single by music chart standards: number one on country-music charts, number five on pop music charts, and number two on adult contemporary music charts. It was Milsap's eighteenth number-one single. Complete with a saxophone solo, "(There's) No Gettin' Over Me" is synonymous with Milsap's urban approach to country music in the 1980's.

Musical Legacy

With an amazing forty number-one hit singles, twenty-seven million albums sold, seven Grammy Awards, four Academy of Country Music Awards, and eight Country Music Association Awards, Milsap is one of the most widely known and respected performers in the history of country music. Only two other country musicians have had more number-one hits than Milsap: Conway Twitty and George Strait. Milsap pioneered the path for crossover artists, and his career is an inspiration to pop, country, adult contemporary, and rock artists.

Delbert S. Bowers

Further Reading

Carter, Tom, and Ronnie Milsap. Almost Like a Song. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1990. An autobiography cowritten by Milsap provides an interesting perspective on his life, career, and marriage. A must read for any Milsap fan.

Goldsmith, Thomas. The Encyclopedia of Country Music. Edited by Paul Kingsbury. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998. A comprehensive look at country music's influences, origins, and musicians, this includes a contextual view of Milsap's contributions. An excellent resource for Milsap fans as well as country-music fans.

Havighurst, Craig. Air Castle of the South: WSM and the Making of Music City (Music in American Life). Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2007. A look at varied business perspectives in country music, including a detailed account of crossover artists such as Milsap. The book follows the practices of noted radio station WSM and the changes that occurred in country music over the years. Other notables include Owen Bradley, Minnie Pearl, Jim Denny, Edwin Craig, and Dinah Shore.

Malone, Bill. Country Music, U.S.A. Austin: University of Texas Press, 2002. Considered by most to be the cornerstone of country-music research, this book traces the history of country music and its musicians, including Milsap.

Whitburn, Joel. The Billboard Book of Top 40 Country Hits. New York: Billboard Books, 2006. A complete history of Billboard's Top 40 since 1942. With more than two hundred photographs, this is an excellent resource for country-music historians and Ronnie Milsap admirers.

See also: Charles, Ray; David, Hal; Presley, Elvis.

Charles Mingus

American jazz bassist and composer

A foremost composer of jazz, as a bassist and bandleader Mingus left a wealth of recordings that continue to influence musicians.

Born: April 22, 1922; Nogales, Arizona
Died: January 5, 1979; Cuernavaca, Mexico

Principal works

ORCHESTRAL WORK: Epitaph, 1989 (jazz).

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Strings and Keys, 1952; Charles Mingus Trios, 1953 (with Bud Powell); Intrusions, 1954; Jazz Composers Workshop, 1954; The Jazz Experiments of Charles Mingus, 1954; Jazzical Moods, Vol. 1, 1954; Moods of Mingus, 1954; The Charles Mingus Quintet plus Max Roach, 1955;

Chazz, 1955; Jazz Collaborations, 1955; Jazzical Moods, Vol. 2, 1955; Art of Charles Mingus, 1956; Pithecanthropus Erectus, 1956; The Clown, 1957; East Coasting, 1957; Mingus Three, 1957; A Modern Jazz Symposium of Music and Poetry, 1957; Reincarnation of a Lovebird, 1957; Scenes in the City, 1957; Tijuana Moods, 1957; Tonight at Noon, 1957; Ah Um, 1959; Blues and Roots, 1959; Dynasty, 1959; Mingus in Wonderland, 1959; Shoes of the Fisherman's Wife, 1959; Weary Blues, 1959; Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus, 1960; Mingus!, 1960; Mingus Revisited, 1960; Mysterious Blues, 1960; Pre-Bird, 1960; Oh Yeah, 1961; Town Hall Concert, 1962; The Black Saint and the Sinner Lady, 1963; Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, 1963; Mingus Plays Piano, 1963; Astral Weeks, 1964; Meditations on Integration, 1964; Charles Mingus, 1965; Portrait, 1965; Charles Mingus and Cecil Taylor, 1966; Let My Children Hear Music, 1972; Mingus Moves, 1973; Changes One, 1974; Changes Two, 1975; Cumbia and Jazz Fusion, 1976; Lionel Hampton Presents Charles Mingus, 1977; Lionel's Sessions, 1977; Three or Four Shades of Blue, 1977; Me, Myself, an Eye, 1978; Something like a Bird, 1978.

WRITINGS OF INTEREST: Beneath the Underdog: His World as Composed by Mingus, 1971 (autobiography).

The Life

Born in Nogales, Arizona, where his father was stationed, Charles Mingus, Jr., was the third (and youngest) child of Sergeant Charles Mingus, Sr., and his second wife, Harriet Mingus. Harriet fell ill and died before her son reached the age of five months. In the 1930's the family moved to Watts, a racially mixed suburb of Los Angeles. While living there, Mingus—with his African American, white, and Chinese ancestry—dealt with prejudice from all sides since he did not fit in with any of the groups. Music was his one refuge. He became a serious cello player and advanced to such a level that he became a member of the Los Angeles Junior Philharmonic. He fell in love with the music of Duke Ellington that he heard on the radio.

In high school Mingus switched to bass, practiced voraciously, and took formal lessons as both a bassist and a composer. He played professionally around Los Angeles, performing with top-level artists such as Art Tatum before he was twenty. He worked in Hollywood, assisting composer Dmitri Tiomkin with orchestrations. He toured with the bands of Barney Bigard and Louis Armstrong. In 1944 he entered a stormy first marriage and made his first recordings as a leader. He began to have a reputation as a volatile personality.

In the late 1940's Mingus joined the band of Lionel Hampton. With virtuoso playing and innovative compositions, Mingus helped Hampton's band survive the move beyond swing that had derailed so many of its competitors. By the end of the decade, Mingus was disheartened with the music scene and retired from music to emulate his father's career as a mail carrier. He was coaxed back to the bass, and his first real recognition came from his work with Red Norvo in the early 1950's. New York became his home base.

Always independent, Mingus founded his own label, along with his second wife, Celia, and drummer Max Roach, in 1952. Mingus flourished as both a leader and a sideman. He even had a short stint, in 1953, as a member of the band of his idol, Ellington, but lost his job after a racially motivated altercation with one of the long-term band members, Juan Tizol.

Later in 1953 the New Jazz Society of Toronto contacted Mingus for help organizing a concert featuring the top artists in bebop. The Quintet consisted of Mingus, Roach, Bud Powell, Charlie Parker, and Dizzy Gillespie, and they performed at Toronto's Massey Hall. The record Jazz at Massey Hall (which some critics consider the best live album in jazz history) was released on Mingus's Debut label and helped put the label on the map.

Mingus continued to create new sounds as a bassist and composer, even experimenting with techniques foreshadowing the free jazz that was to burst onto the scene a few years later. He began to develop his famous workshop method: using no written music, sharing his ideas aurally, and assembling the piece in rehearsals. Mingus's 1956 release featuring members of his Jazz Workshop, Pithecanthropus Erectus, demonstrated the effectiveness of this method and placed Mingus in the leadership of the jazz avant-garde.

In 1957 Gunther Schuller, an advocate of Third Stream (a synthesis of classical and jazz music), organized a festival of modern music at Brandeis University and commissioned Mingus to compose a work combining classical and jazz influences. The resulting piece, Revelations, further established Mingus's reputation as a jazz iconoclast and prophet.

Mingus was thriving as a composer and leader, and each new release, consisting primarily of his own compositions, brought new glimpses into the composer's personality. He began to emphasize political issues, such as the famed "Fables of Faubus," protesting the intransigence of Arkansas governor Orval Faubus's opposition to school integration in Little Rock. Mingus had felt the sting of racism, and his bands were almost always integrated. Three of his four wives were white.

The Mingus legend grew. In 1962 Mingus persuaded United Artists to let him organize an experiment that would push his workshop technique to the limit: The musicians would conduct a workshop and record an album in front of a live audience in New York's Town Hall. Unfortunately, the project was overreaching, and Mingus was so frustrated with the preparations that, the afternoon before the concert, he punched his friend Jimmy Knepper in the mouth, dislodging a tooth and damaging his career as a professional trombonist. The audience did not appreciate the session much more than Knepper did, and United Artists had to provide refunds. Despite that fiasco, the recording cobbled together from the Town Hall concert earned five stars in Down Beat magazine, and stories of the session only enlarged the Mingus legend.

As the 1960's wore on, Mingus grew more emotionally fragile and became increasingly dissatisfied with the music profession. In 1968 Mingus snapped, requiring hospitalization and medication. The following year, however, he was coaxed back to the stage, and by 1970 he was touring internationally again. In 1971 Mingus's career reignited with the grant of a Guggenheim Fellowship, the awarding of an academic chair, and the publication of his fanciful autobiography, Beneath the Underdog. He was collaborating with such well-known artists as choreographer Alvin Ailey and folk vocalist Joni Mitchell and performing at such major venues as the Montreux Jazz Festival and Carnegie Hall.

The heady success of the first half of the 1970's was short-lived. In 1977 Mingus was diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, often referred to as Lou Gehrig's disease. The disease quickly weakened the artist, and before long he was confined to a wheelchair. When it became clear that conventional medicine had failed, Sue, his fourth wife, took Mingus to Mexico, hoping that a shaman there could avert his fate. It was not to be. On January 5, 1979, Mingus lost his final battle. To Sue was left the difficult task of satisfying Mingus's final request in line with his Hindu beliefs: Mingus's body was cremated, and Sue transported the ashes halfway across the globe to India to scatter them over the Ganges River.

Charles Mingus. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

While Mingus is often described as iconoclastic, one cannot take that term too literally. True, his music was unique and groundbreaking, but at the same time Mingus did not destroy the icons who had preceded him. Instead, he subsumed their influences and created respectful homages, filtered through his innovative sensibility. Examples of this respectful attitude toward his predecessors include "My Jelly Roll Soul" (Jelly Roll Morton); "Goodbye Pork Pie Hat" (Lester Young); "O.P." (Oscar Pettiford); "Duke Ellington's Sound of Love" and "Open Letter to Duke" (Duke Ellington); "Gunslinging Bird," "Reincarnation of a Lovebird," and "Parkeriana" (Charlie Parker); and "Jump Monk" (Thelonious Monk). Mingus was particularly enamored of and influenced by the music of Ellington.

"Mingus Fingers." Mingus's first composition to achieve recognition was "Mingus Fingers," composed for Hampton's band in 1947. Mingus's striking use of instrumentation, his advanced harmonic language, with hints of Claude Debussy (such as the whole-tone introduction) and Ellington, were groundbreaking and offered new horizons for big band composing. At the same time, the piece—practically a concerto for bass and big band—fit within some traditional guidelines, roughly based on the familiar chords of George Gershwin's "I Got Rhythm." Mingus gives hints of his future as a composer by defying the traditional eight-bar phrase lengths and instead emphasizing eleven-bar phrases. Other early works went much further afield (such as "Half-Mast Inhibition" and "The Chill of Death"), but were not performed publicly for decades.

Jazz at Massey Hall. The famous recording of Parker, Gillespie, Powell, Roach, and Mingus was the breakthrough album for Mingus's Debut Records label. The quality of the recordings, however, was poor. In particular, the tapes, which were never intended for release in the first place, were unable to pick up much of the sound of Mingus's bass, so he went into the studio and overdubbed the parts, quite a feat for an improvised art form. Parker was under contract to another label, so he was called Charlie Chan on this recording. The resulting album featured impressive, inspired playing, of standard repertoire, by the icons of bebop at the height of their powers. It should come as no surprise that some musicians place Jazz at Massey Hall in their Top 10 lists. Gillespie's "A Night in Tunisia" is considered by some to be the definitive performance.

From the mid-1950's on, Mingus was known for his extended compositions. These pieces, assembled in workshop sessions, were sectional in nature. Thus the hallmarks of Mingus's mature compositions were his propensity for abrupt tempo, meter, and feeling changes within a single piece.

"Goodbye Pork Pie Hat." Dedicated to Lester Young (one of Mingus's first jobs was with Young's brother, Lee), the tune is adapted to an extended blues format that achingly memorializes the late tenor saxophonist. "Goodbye Pork Pie Hat" (first recorded on Ah Um) was created using Mingus's workshop technique. Many artists have recorded their own versions of the standard, including Joni Mitchell (with Jaco Pastorius, Wayne Shorter, Peter Erskine, and Herbie Hancock), Jeff Beck, and Kevin Mahogany (with Joe Lovano).

"Fables of Faubus." Although the lyrics were expunged from the first recorded version of "Fables of Faubus" (1959, also on Ah Um), the 1960 version included Mingus's lyrics, damning Faubus's opposition to integration. Replete with tempo and feeling changes, the piece also conveys a sardonic sense of humor present even in the version without lyrics. While Mingus provides melodic and harmonic frameworks for the sections, the success of the piece is also dependent on the quality of improvisations. Of course, in Mingus's recordings of the piece, he was able, through his workshop technique, to influence the character of his soloists' improvisations. It is much more difficult, because of the large amount of freedom of choice Mingus left for his musicians, for other ensembles to perform "Fables of Faubus" effectively without referring heavily to Mingus's recorded version of the song.

Epitaph. This immense composition, of which only portions (such as "Better Get Hit in Your Soul" and "Freedom"), were performed during Mingus's lifetime is arguably his magnum opus. The complete work, as assembled by Sue Mingus and Schuller for thirty-piece jazz orchestra, contains more than four thousand measures and takes two hours to perform. The first complete performance of the work, conducted by Schuller, took place in 1989, and the recording was issued in 1990 to great critical acclaim.

Schuller conducted a series of performances of the work again in 2007, to commemorate the eighty-fifth anniversary of Mingus's birth. Schuller considers the piece a masterwork even beyond the jazz category and points out that the variety contained within the nearly five hundred pages of score runs the gamut from the most heartfelt gutbucket blues to music showing clear influences of Charles Ives, Arnold Schoenberg, and Igor Stravinsky. The comparisons with Ellington's extended works are obvious, though Ellington never achieved the extreme variety that Mingus did. Even before he attempted to perform portions of the piece at his ill-fated Town Hall concert, Mingus knew that this compendium of his life's work would serve as his Epitaph.

Musical Legacy

The musical legacy of Mingus is enormous. He completed more than three hundred compositions and more than one hundred recordings during his lifetime. Many of these works, as described above, added new possibilities to the world of jazz. Mingus's Jazz Workshop provided critical training for dozens of important musicians. Thanks to the perseverance of his wife Sue, the Mingus legacy extended beyond his death. Several ensembles exist, perpetuating his music and presenting it in performance, and even in new arrangements. The ensembles include the Mingus Dynasty, the Mingus Orchestra, and the Mingus Big Band.

William S. Carson

Further Reading

Mingus, Charles. Beneath the Underdog: His World as Composed by Mingus. New York: Knopf, 1971. Mingus's partially fictionalized Beat autobiography.

Mingus, Sue. Tonight at Noon: A Love Story. New York: Pantheon, 2002. Mingus's fourth wife gives her account of his life.

Priestley, Brian. Mingus: A Critical Biography. New York: Quartet, 1983. Priestley's thorough analysis of the man and his music. Discography.

Santoro, Gene. Myself When I Am Real. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000. Santoro's complex and comprehensive story of Mingus, based largely on the Mingus archives of the Library of Congress and an exhaustive series of interviews with family, colleagues, and friends. Discography, bibliography.

See also: Akiyoshi, Toshiko; Beck, Jeff; Dolphy, Eric; Ellington, Duke; Gillespie, Dizzy; Hampton, Lionel; Jones, Elvin; Kirk, Rahsaan Roland; Mitchell, Joni; Monk, Thelonious; Montgomery, Wes; Navarro, Fats; Parker, Charlie; Powell, Bud; Roach, Max; Schoenberg, Arnold; Stravinsky, Igor; Washington, Dinah.

Joni Mitchell

Canadian singer, songwriter, pianist, and guitarist

Critics and fans lauded Mitchell's contributions to the folk-rock genre in the 1960's and 1970's, responding to her inventive, melodic songs and poetic lyrics. Self-taught but musically sophisticated, Mitchell developed into an increasingly experimental songwriter, expanding her horizons to include jazz and other musical forms.

Born: November 7, 1943; Fort Macleod, Alberta, Canada

Also known as: Roberta Joan Anderson (birth name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Song of the Seagull, 1968; Clouds, 1969; Ladies of the Canyon, 1970; Blue, 1971; For the Roses, 1972; Court and Spark, 1974; The Hissing of Summer Lawns, 1975; Hejira, 1976; Don Juan's Reckless Daughter, 1977; Mingus, 1979; Wild Things Run Fast, 1982; Dog Eat Dog, 1985; Chalk Mark in a Rain Storm, 1988; Night Ride Home, 1991; Turbulent Indigo, 1994; Taming the Tiger, 1998; Both Sides Now, 2000; Travelogue, 2002; Shine, 2007.

The Life

The daughter of a teacher and a former Canadian airman who became a grocer after World War II, Joni (JOH-nee) Mitchell was raised in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. She first became interested in singing during her hospitalization for polio at the age of nine, and she briefly took piano lessons as a child. She taught herself ukulele and guitar, and she was inspired by a teacher to develop her talent for poetry. Nevertheless, she saw herself as primarily a visual artist. In 1964 she enrolled in the Alberta College of Art and Design in Calgary. However, Mitchell had already begun playing clubs and festivals around Canada, and a year later, she moved to Toronto to work as a folksinger. That same year, she gave birth to a daughter by an ex-boyfriend. Soon after, she married folksinger Chuck Mitchell, and she began to perform with him as Joni Mitchell. Reluctantly giving up her child for adoption, Mitchell moved with her husband to Detroit, Michigan. After their divorce in 1966, Mitchell moved to New York City, becoming well known in clubs for her poetic songs and her unique guitar style. During this time she became romantically involved with singer-songwriter David Crosby, who in 1967 brought her into the Southern California folk-rock music scene and who produced her first album. Later, she met Crosby's friend, singer-songwriter Graham Nash, and in 1969 she moved in with him. The 1970's were the period of Mitchell's greatest professional success; her songs were covered by established singers and she enjoyed a string of hit records, awards, and critical praise. She also toured and traveled extensively. Always determined to follow her interests, Mitchell began to produce work that was less accessible and more experimental, retreating from the folk-rock world.

Mitchell began to divide her time between British Columbia and a new home in Bel Air, California. After living for a time in Bel Air with jazz-fusion drummer John Guerin, in 1982 she met and married bassist-sound engineer Larry Klein, who often collaborated on her increasingly avant-garde musical recordings. Klein and Mitchell divorced in 1994. In 1996 Mitchell was happily reunited with her daughter, at which time her identity as a mother and as a grandmother to her daughter's two young children became an important part of her life. Having created much of the artwork for her albums, Mitchell began at that time to concentrate on her first love, painting. She returned to writing and recording in 2007.

The Music

Mitchell's songs are melodious, poetic, and personal, and her vocal range at one time could extend beyond three octaves. Her guitar style is innovative and intuitive, characterized by open or alternative tunings and complex harmonies.

Clouds. Mitchell was originally a folksinger, but her second album, Clouds, secured her reputation as a major talent on the burgeoning folk-rock scene, gaining her wide recognition and a Grammy Award in 1969. This album, featuring her distinctive acoustic guitar and lilting vocals, contained her hit songs "Chelsea Morning" and "Both Sides Now," the latter song one that has been most covered by other artists and has become a popular standard.

Ladies of the Canyon. Ladies of the Canyon introduced two more of Mitchell's most well-known works: the environmental protest song "Big Yellow Taxi" and "Woodstock," about the legendary music festival. "Woodstock" became an anthem for the 1960's era. Self-taught as a musician, Mitchell created songs that fit perfectly into the needs of her generation for voices and visions from outside the musical establishment. She became one of the major musical voices to speak to and to speak for the generation that came of age in the 1960's and 1970's. In subsequent decades Mitchell continued to be a freethinking outsider, going her own way musically, even at the expense of commercial success.

Blue. Mitchell's fourth album, Blue, represented a break with her earlier work associated with the folk-rock movement. Composed while Mitchell was fleeing the pressures of stardom through travel in Europe, this poetic suite of songs featured darker emotional colors, with lyrical confessions of deep sorrow and regret. With vocals that were more nuanced and complex than in her earlier work, this cycle of songs has been praised for its haunting melodies and the extraordinary intimacy of its introspective, confessional lyrics. The songs on Blue had simple accompaniments on piano, guitar, and Appalachian dulcimer, but they also introduced a percussive guitar style and rock-oriented piano rhythms that suggested a move away from Mitchell's folk origins. Two torchy songs from that album, "A Case of You" and "River," have become much-recorded popular standards. This album is considered the best work of Mitchell's early period, and it is considered among the great popular albums of all time. In 1999 Blue was given a Grammy Hall of Fame award, for recordings that are at least twenty-five years old and that have proved their artistic merit or historical significance. It was also listed by Time in 2006 as among the All-Time 100 Albums of the last half-century, and in 2003 it was on Rolling Stone's list of the greatest albums of all time.

Court and Spark. Her most commercially successful collection of songs, this album was a breakthrough in terms of expanding Mitchell's musical horizons. With its quirky and adventurous melody, the ambivalent love song, "Help Me," one of her best-selling singles, pointed the way to Mitchell's free, jazz-inflected and experimental work. Court and Spark was, significantly, backed by the jazz-fusion band L.A. Express; Mitchell went on to include in her subsequent recordings other well-known jazz musicians, such as Wayne Shorter, Herbie Hancock, Tom Scott, Jaco Pastorius, and Charles Mingus, with whom she collaborated on an entire album. During this period, her melodies and instrumental settings became more complex and unusual, and while praised as revolutionary by her admirers, her work after the best-selling Court and Spark became increasingly less accessible to a popular audience.

Turbulent Indigo. Mitchell's recordings during the 1980's continued her explorations of jazz, with the addition of electronic synthesizers. Her 1994 album Turbulent Indigo, however, returned to some extent to her simple and direct folk-rock roots. One of her most critically acclaimed recordings, this album also definitely marked a change in Mitchell's voice, which, while losing much of its airy upper register, became deeper, huskier, and more expressive in its lower range. Her subject matter was also dark and serious, with commentary on the damage done to contemporary society by violence, greed, global warming, and consumerism, troubling themes interestingly counterpointed by attractive melody lines. Considered something of a comeback album, Turbulent Indigo won two Grammy Awards, including Best Pop Album in 1995.

Shine. In albums such as Turbulent Indigo and her later album Shine, Mitchell continued to explore a contrapuntal dynamic between pleasing music and lyrics that often concentrated on disillusionment and disappointment, especially with regard to social and political issues. It made perfect sense, in this context, for Mitchell to record a new version of her early environmentalist song, "Big Yellow Taxi," for her album Shine. Although her later work included more protest lyrics, there is also an element in Mitchell's mature music of what she called romantic classicism, acting as a counterweight to her hard-edged social commentary. In addition, Mitchell's writing has always contained both humor and hope, which are still in evidence in her later music.

Joni Mitchell. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Musical Legacy

Mitchell exerted a powerful influence on those musicians who have responded not only to her more accessible early work but also to her later experimental song cycles. Mitchell is credited especially with blazing a trail for women songwriters such as Patti Smith, Chrissie Hynde, Courtney Love, Sarah McLachlan, Tori Amos, Annie Lennox, Björk, and Sheryl Crow. Her unique musicianship and her poetic song lyrics made a deep impression on male musicians such as Elvis Costello, Prince, Morrissey, Seal, Beck, and Led Zeppelin. Not only has her music inspired other songwriters, she has been the subject of the lyrics of other songwriters, confirming her iconic status. For artists of either gender, her determination to preserve her artistic integrity has made her a role model. Mitchell's songs have been covered by numerous artists of her own and succeeding generations; a number of them, such as "Both Sides Now," "Big Yellow Taxi," "Woodstock," "River," "The Circle Game," "A Case of You," and "Chelsea Morning" have become contemporary standards. In 2003 Rolling Stone named Mitchell among the hundred greatest guitarists of all time, the highest-ranking woman on the list. In 2004 Rolling Stone included her in its list of the hundred Greatest Artists of All Time. In 1997 Mitchell was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. She has received numerous honors, among them five Grammy Awards, and she was given a Grammy for Lifetime Achievement in 2002. Her native country of Canada has also given her many awards. She has been featured on a Canadian postage stamp, and she was made a Companion of the Order of Canada, that country's highest civilian honor.

Margaret Boe Birns

Further Reading

Bego, Mark. Joni Mitchell. Boulder, Colo.: Taylor, 2005. This biography of Mitchell includes an interview with Mitchell and commentary on her work.

Hoskyns, Barney. Hotel California. Hoboken, N.J.: John Wiley & Sons, 2007. This resource includes Mitchell in a sociocultural history of folk-rock musicians of the 1960's and 1970's, especially those who lived in and around Laurel Canyon in Southern California.

Luftig, Stacy, ed. The Joni Mitchell Companion: Four Decades of Commentary. New York: Music Sales, 2000. A collection of reviews, articles, columns, interviews, and photographs from 1966 to 1999. Covers each of Mitchell's albums, her musical development, and her personal life.

Mitchell, Joni. Anthology. Van Nuys, Calif.: Alfred, 1999. Music and lyrics for thirty-one of Mitchell's songs from the 1960's and 1970's, including "A Case of You," "Big Yellow Taxi," "Both Sides Now," "Help Me," "Woodstock," and "River."

Nelson, Sean. Court and Spark. New York: Continuum, 2007. Places Court and Spark within Mitchell's body of work, showing it to be an example of an artist working at the peak of her powers.

Rodgers, Jeffrey Pepper. Rock Troubadours: Conversations on the Art and Craft of Songwriting with Jerry Garcia, Ani DiFranco, Dave Matthews, Joni Mitchell, Paul Simon, and More. San Rafael, Calif.: String Letter, 2000. This book includes an interview with Mitchell about her songwriting process.

Smith, Larry David. Elvis Costello, Joni Mitchell, and the Torch Song Tradition. Westport, Conn.: Praeger, 2004. Includes biographical material, artist commentary, critical interpretation, and examples of Mitchell's work in the context of the torch song tradition.

Unterberger, Richie. Eight Miles High: Folk-Rock's Flight from Haight-Ashbury to Woodstock. San Francisco: Backbeat Books, 2003. Mitchell is included in a chapter on singer-songwriters of the folk-rock movement of the 1960's.

Weller, Sheila. Girls Like Us: Carole King, Joni Mitchell, and Carly Simon and the Journey of a Generation. New York: Simon & Schuster, 2008. Based on numerous interviews, this book includes Mitchell in a study of the lives and songs of three major female singer-songwriters viewed as representatives of the women of their generation.

Whiteley, Sheila. "The Lonely Road: Blue and Female Subjectivity." In Women and Popular Music: Sexuality, Identity and Subjectivity. New York: Routledge, 2000. This discussion of women musicians includes a chapter on Mitchell, with particular reference to her album Blue.

See also: Baez, Joan; Cohen, Leonard; Collins, Judy; Costello, Elvis; Crosby, David; Denny, Sandy; Diamond, Neil; Hancock, Herbie; Lennon, John; Mingus, Charles; Morrissey; Prince; Robertson, Robbie; Rush, Tom; Shorter, Wayne; Stills, Stephen; Taylor, James; Van Ronk, Dave.

Thelonious Monk

American jazz pianist and composer

A major figure in the post-swing era of jazz known as bebop, Monk produced more than seventy songs, many of which became standards in the jazz repertory.

Born: October 10, 1917; Rocky Mount, North Carolina

Died: February 17, 1982; Weehawken, New Jersey

Also known as: Thelonious Sphere Monk (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Genius of Modern Music, Vol. 1, 1947; Genius of Modern Music, Vol. 2, 1951; Monk, 1953; Thelonious Monk and Sonny Rollins, 1953; Thelonious Monk Trio, 1954; Nica's Tempo, 1955 (with Gigi Gryce and others); Thelonious Monk Plays Duke Ellington, 1955; Brilliant Corners, 1956; The Riverside Trios, 1956; The Unique Thelonious Monk, 1956; Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers with Thelonious Monk, 1957; Monk with Coltrane, 1957; Thelonious Himself, 1957; Live at the Five Spot—Discovery!, 1958; Misterioso, 1958; Alone in San Francisco, 1959; Evidence, 1959; Five by Monk by Five, 1959; In Person, 1959; Two Hours with Thelonious Monk, Vol. 1, 1961; Two Hours with Thelonious Monk, Vol. 2, 1961; Always Know, 1962; Criss-Cross, 1962; Monk's Dream, 1962; Solo Monk, 1964; Monk's Music, 1965; Straight, No Chaser, 1966; Underground, 1967; Monk's Blues, 1968.

The Life

Thelonious Sphere Monk (theh-LOH-nee-uhs sfeer muhnk) was born to Thelonious and Barbara Batts Monk in a predominantly African American section of Rocky Mount, North Carolina, known as Red Row. In 1922 Barbara migrated north to New York City, taking her three young children: Thelonious, Jr., Marion, and Thomas. They settled in a small apartment on West Sixty-third Street. Shortly after their arrival, Barbara found work in a nursery, which allowed her to provide for her family; she eventually had enough money to purchase a radio and an upright piano.

By the time Monk was twelve, he had displayed a prodigious talent and an unrivaled ability to play by ear. Around that time he began formal piano and theory lessons with a neighborhood teacher.

In 1934 Monk decided to pursue a career as a professional musician. He discontinued his education at Stuyvesant High School and began performing in high-profile venues such as the Apollo Theater for its amateur contest.

After a two-year stint as an accompanist to a traveling evangelist, Monk returned to New York City to live with his family and concentrate on composing. By the time he reached the age of twenty, he had written two songs that would become among his most famous, "Ruby, My Dear" and "'Round Midnight."

The year 1940 was pivotal: Monk's first break came when he was hired as the house pianist for a small Harlem nightclub called Minton's Playhouse, a popular place where jazz musicians experimented with the new sounds of bebop. There Monk's innovative sense of swing, angular melodies, and dissonant harmonies gained exposure. He continued to work there until the mid-1940's alongside such musical visionaries as drummer Kenny Clarke. Aside from performing together, Monk and Clarke collaborated in writing "Epistrophy" (initially entitled "Fly Right"), which became one of Monk's most recognizable tunes.

On October 19, 1944, Monk entered the recording studio for the first time. He was part of the rhythm section for Coleman Hawkins's Bean and the Boys. Monk's association with Hawkins continued through 1946, and he performed at the Downbeat Club in New York City and toured with Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic.

Monk's recording career as a leader began in 1947, when he was under contract with Blue Note Records. Over the course of five years and six recording sessions, he documented the first works to capture the Monkian aesthetic.

The year of 1951 brought much turmoil to Monk's life, especially when he was arrested and imprisoned for sixty days on a narcotics charge. The most devastating ramification of the arrest was the loss of his cabaret card, which prevented him from performing in New York City clubs that served alcohol; this privilege would not be reinstated for six years.

In 1952 Monk procured a contract with Prestige Records. This association spawned one of his finest solo performances with the recording of "Bags' Groove." After three years with Prestige, Orrin Keepnews of Riverside Records bought Monk's contract; Monk would remain with Riverside Records until 1961. Under the direction of Keepnews, Monk's earliest output for the fledgling label was an album of Ellington compositions, Thelonious Monk Plays Duke Ellington; this was an attempt to make Monk more accessible to the general public. By 1954 Monk was being promoted through the efforts of his manager, Harry Colomby. Later he performed on The Steve Allen Show, which gave him national exposure.

Monk's connection with John Coltrane (throughout much of 1957) propelled the pianist into a broader spotlight—most notable were the regular appearances at the Five Spot and a Carnegie Hall concert.

By the 1960's Monk's fame was growing exponentially; he signed a contract with Columbia Records and was made the subject of a Time magazine cover story (1964).

Shortly after gaining much-deserved acclaim from critics and fans, Monk began to display erratic behavior. Many believed he suffered from a mental illness such as schizophrenia or bipolar disorder, although tests did not substantiate these claims. Monk continued to garner laudatory praises during the 1960's, despite his ailments.

The 1970's were riddled with hospitalizations and great mental deterioration. Monk's health continued to decline, and in February, 1982, he was taken to the hospital. He spent nearly ten days in a coma and died on February 17.

Thelonious Monk. (AP/Wide World Photos)

The Music

Along with such pioneers as Bud Powell, Charlie Parker, Charlie Christian, and Dizzy Gillespie, Monk helped to usher in the modern jazz movement of the 1940's. Close examination of Monk's style, however, reveals that his conception of the bebop genre was not completely congruous with that of his contemporaries. Like his peers, he worked within the confines of the thirty-two-measure popular song and the twelve-bar blues forms, sometimes borrowing chord progressions or reharmonizing existing tunes; unlike them, he exhibited a greater predilection for the compositional process.

More specifically, in his manipulation of the popular song, he preferred to retain the melody while adding elements that were uniquely his own—his idiomatic sense of reharmonization, his affinity for tone clusters and dissonance, the use of metric displacement, the coloristic addition of the whole-tone scale (in explicit and implied variations), among others. An exquisite example of Monk's manipulation of the popular song was the 1962 recording of Johnny Green's "Body and Soul."

Monk's original compositions can best be understood if separated in two categories: form and function. The first follows the basic structural and harmonic scheme of the blues or the chord sequence of a popular song. The second consists of works that are seemingly intended to evoke a specific mood or extra-musical element.

"Misterioso." Composed around 1948, employing the three conventional chords of the blues and a traditional walking-bass pattern, "Misterioso" exemplifies the first category. "Crepuscule with Nellie," a fine example of how Monk attempted to capture a scene or mood in his writing, slowly unfolds to establish a sense of twilight.

Brilliant Corners. Monk's first album of original tunes, Brilliant Corners, was recorded during his tenure with Riverside Records. On October 15, 1956, Monk assembled a first-rate ensemble with Max Roach on drums, Oscar Pettiford on bass, Sonny Rollins on tenor saxophone, and a lesser known Ernie Henry on alto saxophone. The album featured the idiomatic, angular writing of Monk that was augmented by the improvisational virtuosity of players such as Rollins. The band recorded "Ba-Lue Bolivar Ba-Lues-Are," a blues tune named for the Hotel Bolivar, where Monk's friend the Baroness Pannonica Koenigswarter rented a suite; "Bemsha Swing," a blues piece composed by Monk and the drummer Denzil Best; a lush ballad, "Pannonica," written for the baroness; "I Surrender, Dear"; and the title song, "Brilliant Corners."

Live at the Five Spot—Discovery! Monk invited saxophonist John Coltrane to perform with him, and the album Live at the Five Spot—Discovery! was a live performance of their association at the famed Five Spot club in New York City. Coltrane's first wife, Naima, taped the legendary group, which included bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik and drummer Roy Haynes, in the summer of 1957. Blue Note Records posthumously released the quartet's recording in 1993.

Monk's Dream. Monk began recording for Columbia Records in 1962. This was the greatest opportunity for Monk to reach the general public through his recordings. Monk's Dream was a composite of original tunes and popular songs—one of which was the aforementioned "Body and Soul." The result, as Colomby had hoped, was Monk's first album to reach the Billboard charts. This was an indication that the pianist had transcended obscurity to reach the new heights of commercial viability.

Musical Legacy

In 1959 Monk said, "You play what you want and let the public pick up on what you doing—even if it does take them fifteen, twenty years." Often seen as an enigmatic figure who refused to compromise his musical integrity, Monk followed his artistic muse and consequently influenced countless musicians, including pianists Randy Weston, Chick Corea, Fred Hersch, and Cecil Taylor, saxophonists Coltrane, Charlie Rouse, Steve Lacy, and many others.

Monk paved the way for subsequent jazz musicians to stretch the boundaries of tonality through his emancipation of dissonance and freed the music of rhythmic constraints by displacing the underlying metric pulse. In many ways Monk can be seen as the harbinger of the 1960's avant-garde movement. He placed great importance on musical risk-taking, saying "the only cats worth anything are the cats who take chances." When Monk took chances, the jazz community reaped the rewards.

Michael Conklin

Further Reading

Fitterling, Thomas. Thelonious Monk: His Life and Music. Berkeley, Calif.: Berkeley Hills Books, 1997. A thorough document on the life and music of Monk.

Gourse, Leslie. Straight, No Chaser: The Life and Genius of Thelonious Monk. New York: Schirmer Books, 1997. The first full-length biography in English provides insight into the struggles and triumphs of the legendary jazz pianist. Photographs, bibliography, and selected discography.

Martin, Henry, and Keith Waters. Jazz: The First Hundred Years. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth/Thomson Learning, 2002. Well-written text that traces the development of jazz from its inception. Listening guides help the reader, musician or nonmusician, to understand the compositional and improvisational processes within the context of Monk's compositions. Photographs, bibliography, and selected discography.

Sheridan, Chris. Brilliant Corners: A Bio-discography of Thelonious Monk. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2001. Sheridan presents a comprehensive discography.

Van der Bliek, Rob. The Thelonious Monk Reader. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001. Wonderful compilation of significant reportage, articles, and commentaries surveying the pianist's life.

Williams, Martin. "What Kind of Composer Was Monk?" The Musical Quarterly 76, no. 3 (Autumn, 1992): 433-441. Article dissects Monk's compositional approach. Photographs, extensive musical analysis, and selected discography.

See also: Akiyoshi, Toshiko; Blakey, Art; Christian, Charlie; Coltrane, John; Dolphy, Eric; Ellington, Duke; Evans, Bill; Gillespie, Dizzy; Hawkins, Coleman; Kirk, Rahsaan Roland; Lewis, John; Mingus, Charles; Palmieri, Eddie; Parker, Charlie; Peterson, Oscar; Powell, Bud; Rollins, Sonny; Shorter, Wayne; Taylor, Cecil; Waller, Fats; Williams, Mary Lou.

Bill Monroe

American country singer, guitarist, and songwriter

Monroe was noted for his dazzling mandolin playing and his contribution to the genre of country music known as bluegrass.

Born: September 13, 1911; Rosine, Kentucky
Died: September 9, 1996; Springfield, Tennessee
Also known as: William Smith Monroe (full name); Father of Bluegrass
Member of: The Bluegrass Boys

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Knee Deep in Blue Grass, 1958; I Saw the Light, 1959; Mr. Blue Grass, 1960; The Great Bill Monroe, 1961; The Father of Bluegrass Music, 1962; My All Time Country Favorites, 1962; Blue Grass Special, 1963; I'll Meet You in Church Sunday Morning, 1964; Bluegrass Instrumentals, 1965; The High Lonesome Sound of Bill Monroe, 1966; Bluegrass Time, 1967; A Voice from on High, 1969; Kentucky Bluegrass, 1970; Bill Monroe's Uncle Pen, 1972; Bean Blossom, 1973; Weary Traveler, 1976; Bill Monroe Sings Bluegrass Body and Soul, 1977; Bean Blossom '79, 1979; Bill Monroe and Friends, 1984; Bluegrass '87, 1987; Southern Flavor, 1988.

The Life

William Smith Monroe was the youngest of the eight children of J. B. "Buck" Monroe and Malissa Vandiver of western Kentucky. Though hardworking farmers, Buck was an educated man, and Malissa was musically gifted, playing the fiddle, the accordion, and the harmonica. Malissa was also a talented dancer and a singer, who knew the old Southern ballads and mountain songs. However, it was her brother, Pendleton Vandiver—later immortalized in one of Monroe's songs, "Uncle Penn"—who was perhaps the biggest musical influence on Monroe. Most of the Monroe children played instruments, and legend has it that Monroe took up the mandolin because his older brothers had already claimed the household guitar and fiddles. In his teens, Monroe accompanied his Uncle Penn, who was playing for dances. Monroe also picked up the blues idiom from Arnold Schultz, a local African American day laborer, said to be one of the best bottleneck blues guitarists in the area.

With his brothers Birch on fiddle and Charlie on guitar, Monroe began playing locally for dances and parties. However, when their father died in 1928, the brothers left the farm to work in the oil refineries in Gary, Indiana, and in Chicago. In their spare time, they established themselves as dancers and musicians, highly in demand, and they often appeared on WLS Radio's National Barn Dance program. Though Birch left, Monroe and Charlie became one of the many country brother duos of the period, recording sixty songs by 1938. However, personal and musical differences caused the brothers to go their separate ways early that year.

This split gave Monroe the opportunity to develop musically in ways that the duet format had not allowed. He wanted to reinvigorate country music, starting with old string-band and fiddle tunes—largely based on traditional British, Irish, and Southern American folk songs—and expanding them in ways that would make them more popular, commercial, and accessible. He would do this by adding elements of African American blues, traditional gospel songs, and instrumental improvisations found in jazz. The challenge, however, was to remain connected to the music's rural roots.

In 1939 Monroe formed a new group, and he went to Nashville, Tennessee, to audition for the live Grand Ole Opry show on the fifty-thousand-watt radio station WSM. A performance at Grand Ole Opry could make an entertainer an instant success because of the station's far-reaching range. Performing Jimmie Rodgers' earlier hit, "Muleskinner Blues," with such energy in such an intriguing arrangement earned Monroe and his Bluegrass Boys the Grand Ole Opry's first encore. They were immediately hired as regulars, and Monroe stayed at the Grand Ole Opry until he died of a stroke sixty years later.

The Music

Breakneck Bluegrass. Monroe's new form of music (called bluegrass, after Monroe's home state of Kentucky) was to be played at breakneck speed, imitating the fast fiddle "breakdowns" of the rural dances. Bringing all these elements together created a sound that was something quite radical. Although some people believe that bluegrass is pure, unspoiled, and noncommercial country music from the hills, that is not the case. Monroe always intended for his bluegrass music—which he unabashedly credited himself with inventing—to have wide appeal.

By about 1945, Monroe had finally brought all the parts together: an acoustic group with fiddle, banjo, and mandolin exchanging lead melody breaks, supported by a strong rhythm guitar and acoustic bass (with an accordion for a brief period). The whole group would back the strong vocals that Monroe called the "high lonesome sound." The tenor voice would be dominant, sometimes singing in a key slightly higher than the vocalist's natural range. Below would be woven intricate lines of harmonies, sometimes in quartet fashion reflective of old country gospel music. This format—Bill Monroe and His Bluegrass Boys—would change the face of American music.

The Bluegrass Boys. The band that Monroe had gathered in the late 1940's—Monroe on mandolin, Lester Flatt on guitar, Howard Watts on bass, Chubby Wise on fiddle, and an innovative artist named Earl Scruggs on banjo—is often thought to be the quintessential bluegrass band, the band by which all others have been measured. Its two dozen recordings defined the genre, with these songs now part of the bluegrass canon. Between 1946 and 1951 Monroe also began to compose in earnest, rather than relying mostly on traditional ballads as he and his brother had done when singing duets. These included both virtuoso instrumentals such as "Rawhide" and "Jerusalem Ridge" as well as vocals such as "Blue Moon of Kentucky," "Kentucky Waltz," and "My Rose of Old Kentucky."

As much as Monroe sought superstardom, the times—and perhaps his own stubborn personality and singular musical vision—worked against him. The definitive bluegrass band lasted only a few years when Flatt and Scruggs went on to form their own group by 1948. This pattern would continue throughout Monroe's career; more than one hundred musicians would call themselves the Bluegrass Boys over the next fifty years. Monroe's bluegrass alternative to the honky-tonk of Hank Williams, the rockabilly of Johnny Cash, the smooth country crooning of Eddy Arnold, and the rock and roll of Carl Perkins was not widely accepted outside the relatively smaller niche of traditional country-music enthusiasts. For example, though the Bluegrass Boys recorded "Blue Moon of Kentucky" in 1946 to some commercial success, it was Elvis Presley who made it a hit record (his first) in 1954.

Lean Times. By the 1960's and 1970's Monroe's records were getting little airplay on country radio, largely because he refused to electrify his instruments or to use drums in his band. Country music fought the (often British) rock-and-roll avalanche in 1960's by using the studio-production techniques of the Nashville sound—making country smooth, pop, homogenized, and mainstream. Monroe would not go along; while the banjo and fiddle were thought to be a legacy of country music's hillbilly heritage, and best forgotten, they were at the forefront of the bluegrass sound. Monroe continued to be a member of the Grand Ole Opry, although it was merely a courtesy. He continued to record and tour prolifically, but these were lean times for both Monroe and bluegrass music.

Bill Monroe. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Bluegrass Revival. Monroe's career was revitalized by an unexpected audience: "Folkie" and "Yankee" urban folk music enthusiasts and college students saw in Monroe an authenticity lacking in other forms of country music. In 1965 the first bluegrass music festival was sparsely attended, but the number of festivals and sizes of the crowd mushroomed in the coming years. The following year, the fan base became large enough to support a magazine, Bluegrass Unlimited, which was instrumental in spreading the genre and Monroe's name by listing upcoming festivals, printing record reviews, and giving aficionados a way to keep in contact with one another.

Throughout the 1960's and 1970's, the festival circuit fostered and propagated bluegrass music. Establishing his own festival park in Bean Blossom, Indiana, Monroe began to receive belated recognition from mainstream country musicians who were acknowledging his influence in their music. Tours to Japan, the countries of the Pacific, and Europe (where he was always enthusiastically welcomed) started to give bluegrass music an international following.

The 1980's, however, saw some personal setbacks. Monroe married his second wife, Della, in 1985, but they divorced less than two years later. Vandals almost destroyed his two famous 1920's "Lloyd Loar" Gibson mandolins. Monroe also was charged with assault by a woman who claimed to be having a relationship with him, though the charges were dropped and he was exonerated. Family business ventures faltered. Slowly his musical energies began to wane.

Many critics, however, argue that some of his best music was made during this period. Through the 1990's Monroe recorded and toured in spite of declining health and several backstage collapses. He played the Grand Ole Opry on Friday, March 15, 1996, but he could not come back for his Saturday performance. The effects of an undetected stroke in February had finally taken their toll. Monroe died on September 9.

Musical Legacy

Monroe's many awards include induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1970, the Nashville Songwriters Hall of Fame in 1971, the Society for the Preservation of Bluegrass Music in America's Bluegrass Hall of Fame in 1984, the International Bluegrass Music Association's Bluegrass Music Hall of Fame in 1991 (charter member), and the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1997. He performed before four presidents: Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan, George H. W. Bush, and Bill Clinton. He was honored as a Cultural Figure by the U.S. Senate in 1986, and he received the National Medal of Arts from Clinton in 1995. He received several Grammy Awards: for Best Bluegrass Recording (Vocal or Instrumental) in 1989 for the album Southern Flavor (first Grammy awarded to a bluegrass record) and a Lifetime Achievement Award in 1993. In 1988 "Blue Moon of Kentucky" was adopted as the state song of Kentucky, replacing Stephen Foster's "My Old Kentucky Home." While bluegrass now has a large international following (from Japan to Eastern Europe), it is impossible to overestimate Monroe's influence on all of American music. He will be remembered as one of the country's greatest composers, instrumental innovators, and musical stylists.

James Stanlaw

Further Reading

Amatneek, Bill. Acoustic Stories: Playing Bass with Peter, Paul, and Mary, Jerry Garcia, and Bill Monroe, and Eighteen Other Unamplified Tales. Sebastopol, Calif.: Vineyards Press, 2003. An eclectic collection of stories about playing with Monroe, the Bluegrass Boys, and other greats artists, such as Peter Rowan, Tony Rice, and Frank Wakefield.

Black, Bob. Come Hither to Go Yonder: Playing Bluegrass with Bill Monroe. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2005. An intriguing behind-the-scenes look at life as a Bluegrass Boy in the 1970's by one of Monroe's former banjo players.

Cantwell, Robert. Bluegrass Breakdown: The Making of the Old Southern Sound. New York: Da Capo Press, 1992. This source explores bluegrass as a social phenomenon. Cantwell examines how bluegrass "represents"—or stands in place of—Appalachian music. A reviewer in Bluegrass Unlimited called this the most thought-provoking work on bluegrass and its father, Monroe, he had ever read.

Ewing, Tom, ed. The Bill Monroe Reader. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2000. An outstanding collection of some four dozen interviews and articles on Bill Monroe—many taken from country-music magazines—by a noted journalist and former Bluegrass Boy who worked with Monroe from 1986 until his last performance.

Goldsmith, Thomas, ed. The Bluegrass Reader. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2004. A noted music writer provides an excellent collection of essays, covering bluegrass music in general with several references to Monroe.

Rooney, James. Bossmen: Bill Monroe and Muddy Waters. New York: Da Capo Press, 1971. Though dated—his career would continue on for another twenty-five years—the first half of this book, with its extended hundred-page Monroe interview, provides extensive autobiographical material.

Rosenberg, Neil. Bluegrass: A History. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1985. The best academic survey of bluegrass music to the early 1980's. Though incomplete, the material on Monroe's early contributions is outstanding.

Rosenberg, Neil, and Charles Wolfe. The Music of Bill Monroe. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2007. Two of country music's respected scholars offers an authoritative bio-discography of the thousand Monroe commercial recordings.

Smith, Richard. Can't You Hear Me Callin'? The Life of Bill Monroe. Boston: Little, Brown, 2000. A well-written and well-researched biography of the singer, covering the strengths, weaknesses, and complexities in his character.

See also: Arnold, Eddy; Cash, Johnny; Flatt, Lester; Perkins, Carl; Presley, Elvis; Rodgers, Jimmie; Scruggs, Earl; Stanley, Ralph; Watson, Doc; Williams, Hank.

Wes Montgomery

American jazz composer and guitarist

At a time when jazz had been eclipsed in popularity by guitar-dominated rock, Montgomery elevated the guitar in jazz to a new level of dynamic intensity.

Born: March 6, 1925; Indianapolis, Indiana
Died: June 15, 1968; Indianapolis, Indiana

Also known as: John Leslie "Wes" Montgomery (full name)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Fingerpickin', 1957; Far Wes, 1958; Kismet, 1958; Montgomery Brothers, 1958 (with Buddy Montgomery and Monk Montgomery); Guitar on the Go, 1959; Pretty Blue, 1959; The Wes Montgomery Trio, 1959 (with the Wes Montgomery Trio); Yesterdays, 1959; The Alternative Wes Montgomery, 1960; The Incredible Jazz Guitar of Wes Montgomery, 1960; Movin' Along, 1960; So Much Guitar, 1961; Wes and Friends, 1961 (with others); Boss Guitar, 1963; Fusion! Wes Montgomery with Strings, 1963; Portrait of Wes, 1963; Movin' Wes, 1964; Bumpin', 1965; Goin' Out of My Head, 1965; Impressions, 1965; Soliture, 1965; California Dreaming, 1966; Further Adventures of Jimmy and Wes, 1966 (with Jimmy Smith); Tequila, 1966; A Day in the Life, 1967; Down Home on the Ground, 1967; Road Song, 1968.

The Life

John Leslie "Wes" Montgomery was born in Indianapolis to a hard-working African American family. His siblings played music, and one of Montgomery's earliest musical influences was his older brother Monk, a bassist who gave Montgomery a four-stringed tenor guitar. Although he did not acquire a six-stringed electric guitar and amplifier until a few years later, he practiced intensely, and he learned by ear many of Charlie Christian's recorded solos. This feat earned him a job playing in local clubs. Although he went on the road several times with various musical acts, these early efforts did not generate enough income to support his family, and he returned to Indianapolis, working outside of music during the day, while continuing to play at night. In 1948 Montgomery began a promising period of work with vibraphonist Lionel Hampton, but Montgomery missed his family, and after two years he returned to Indianapolis, where he worked during the day as a welder, while continuing to play professionally at night over the next decade. He began playing and recording with his brothers, who moved to the West Coast in 1957. During the 1960's Montgomery became internationally famous, leading his own groups and recording sessions. Tragically, he died of a heart attack in 1968, at the peak of his career.

The Music

Unique Techniques. Along with his rhythmic accuracy, inventive melodies, and other attributes, Montgomery produced a highly individual sound on the guitar. Part of this was achieved though his special techniques. He sounded the strings with his thumb rather than a plectrum, producing a deeper tone, and he developed complementary left-hand muting techniques so that he could maintain a powerful stroke with his right hand when strumming octaves. In this way the strokes could encompass three strings, but the middle string would be muted, adding to the depth of the attack. When playing octaves, Montgomery would occasionally use his right-hand fingers for the higher notes, creating further variations in tone.

In jazz soloing, it is desirable for solos to have an overall compositional structure, even though the details of that structure are determined spontaneously through improvisation. While he varied it considerably, Montgomery's fundamental approach to building a solo was surprisingly simple in concept, yet he took full advantage of his prodigious technique in three different dimensions. First, he would play long, flowing single-note lines, with interesting rhythmic patterns and sequences. Next, he would play melodic solos with his characteristic octave doubling, often sliding into notes with expressive glissandi but stopping at just the right moments for the target notes to be heard clearly. Finally, he would change to homophonic chordal playing. The overall effect was a constant increase in intensity.

Hampton and the Montgomery Brothers. Montgomery's first recordings, made with Hampton, show the strong influence of Christian, whose recordings had provided Montgomery with his initial concepts of guitar soloing. Montgomery, who played primarily by ear, gained a great deal of valuable experience as he toured with this group, which included not only Hampton but also other important jazz musicians, such as bassist Charles Mingus. Aside from this two-year period, from 1948 to 1950, and his final eight years as a star, Montgomery conducted most of his musical activities in his hometown, often with his brothers: Monk, who played electric bass, and Buddy, who played piano and vibraphone. When Monk and Buddy moved to the West Coast in 1957, they invited Montgomery to join them on recordings and performances.

Group Leader. After being recommended by visiting musicians in 1959, Montgomery started to lead his own recording sessions for Riverside Records, and he led his own groups in performances. He included his brothers in some of these projects, and in addition he recorded with other musicians, including vibraphonist Milt Jackson, saxophonists Cannonball Adderly and Johnny Griffin, as well as members of Miles Davis's rhythm section, bassist Paul Chambers, pianist Wynton Kelly, and drummer Jimmy Cobb. During this period, he played with saxophonist John Coltrane and his group, although they did not record together. Montgomery was a fan of both Davis and Coltrane, but he avoided the dissonant trends of Coltrane's late period, preferring to refine his own approaches to improvisation. Montgomery's fame increased, and he won awards in Down Beat and other important music publications.

Commercial Recordings. In 1965, when Montgomery left Riverside Records for Verve Records, Verve producer Creed Taylor decided on a new marketing direction for Montgomery, featuring him in instrumental arrangements of current hit songs. To some extent, Montgomery was continuing the jazz tradition of reinterpreting popular music, but in this case he was doing this with soft rock pieces that had just recently been introduced to the public rather than the older standards. One of the first of these was "Goin' Out of My Head." These arrangements, including many by Don Sebesky, often added layers of other instruments such as bowed strings, recorded on tracks that were superimposed over an initial recording with Montgomery and a rhythm section. The beautiful tone and subtle embellishments that Montgomery had cultivated fit well in these settings, even though his improvisation was increasingly restricted in length and dissonance as he became more popular. While some jazz critics were disappointed in this commercial trend, Montgomery continued to be respected by many jazz musicians, who remembered his artistry as an improviser.

Musical Legacy

Montgomery reestablished a connection between jazz and popular music through the voice of the electric guitar, which along with the drum set and piano remained a common instrument in both genres. He had a profound influence on George Benson and other jazz guitarists. He is also recognized as a composer of jazz pieces, several of which have entered the standard repertoire.

John Myers

Further Reading

Giddins, Gary. Riding on a Blue Note: Jazz and American Pop. New York: Da Capo Press, 2004. Exploration of the relationship of the two fields, with a full chapter on Montgomery. Includes index.

Ingram, Adrian. Wes Montgomery. Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England: Ashley Mark, 1985. Definitive biography, with photographs, illustrations, discography, lists of compositions, and references.

Montgomery, Wes, and Wolf Marshall. Best of Wes Montgomery. Milwaukee, Wis.: Hal Leonard, 2001. Music transcription and analysis of solos, for music study. Includes compact disc.

Morgenstern, Dan. Living with Jazz. Edited by Sheldon Meyer. New York: Pantheon Books, 2004. Collection of reviews, liner notes, and other pieces by a prolific and influential jazz critic, including a perceptive review of Mongtomery's album A Day in the Life.

See also: Adderley, Cannonball; Bacharach, Burt; Barretto, Ray; Christian, Charlie; Davis, Miles; Hampton, Lionel; Mingus, Charles.

Ennio Morricone

Italian classical and film-score composer

Morricone defined the musical style for the spaghetti Western, but that is only one of his contributions. His film composing is notable for its captivating sounds and rich thematic relevance, uniting characters to the story.

Born: November 10, 1928; Rome, Italy

Also known as: Dan Savio

Principal works

FILM SCORES (music): The Fascist, 1961; Crazy Desire, 1962; The Little Nuns, 1963; Before the Revolution, 1964; A Fistful of Dollars, 1964; Fist in His Pocket, 1965; For a Few Dollars More, 1965; Nightmare Castle, 1965; The Battle of Algiers, 1966; The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, 1966; The Hawks and the Sparrows, 1966; The Hills Run Red, 1966; Navajo Joe, 1966; Wake Up and Die, 1966; The Big Gundown, 1967; Death Rides a Horse, 1967; The Girl and the General, 1967; The Witches, 1967; Come Play with Me, 1968; Dirty Angels, 1968; Dirty Heroes, 1968; A Fine Pair, 1968; The Mercenary, 1968; Once upon a Time in the West, 1968; The Bird with the Crystal Plumage, 1969; Brief Season, 1969; Hornet's Nest, 1970; Two Mules for Sister Sara, 1970; The Burglars, 1971; Duck You Sucker, 1971; Lulu the Tool, 1971; Sacco and Vanzetti, 1971; Devil in the Brain, 1972; Far West Story, 1972; Hearts and Minds, 1973; Revolver, 1973; The Devil Is a Woman, 1974; Night Caller, 1974; A Thousand and One Nights, 1974; Space 1999, 1974; The End of the Game, 1975; Salo: The 120 Days of Sodom, 1975; The Sunday Woman, 1975; 1900, 1976; Down the Ancient Stairs, 1976; The Inheritance, 1976; The Exorcist II, 1977; The Heretic, 1977; Orca: Killer Whale, 1977; La Cage aux Folles, 1978; Days of Heaven, 1978; Bloodline, 1979; The Meadow, 1979; The Thief, 1979; Windows, 1979; The Island, 1980; So Fine, 1980; The True Story of Camille, 1980; The Professional, 1981; The Thing, 1982; Butterfly, 1983; The Scarlet and the Black, 1983; Order of Death, 1983; Sahara, 1983; A Time to Die, 1983; Once upon a Time in America, 1984; The Seven, 1984; Red Sonja, 1985; The Trap, 1985; Fred and Ginger, 1986; Good Morning Babylon, 1986; The Mission, 1986; Frantic, 1987; The Untouchables, 1987; Cinema Paradiso, 1988; Casualties of War, 1989; Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!, 1989; Hamlet, 1990; State of Grace, 1990; Voices of the Moon, 1990; Bugsy, 1991; Money, 1991; City of Joy, 1992; In the Line of Fire, 1993; Disclosure, 1994; Wolf, 1994; A Pure Formality, 1995; Samson and Delilah, 1996; Lolita, 1997; Bulworth, 1998; The Legend of 1900, 1998; Malena, 2000; Mission to Mars, 2000; Ripley's Game, 2002.

The Life

Ennio Morricone (EHN-nyoh mohr-rih-KOH-nih) was born in Rome in 1928. His early musical influence came from his father, Mario, who played the trumpet for jazz, opera, and occasionally for movie scores. Morricone started composing at age six, and at age twelve he gained admission to the Santa Cecilia Conservatory in Rome. He began writing for television in 1960, and his first full film composition was for the Western A Fistful of Dollars. He composed the scores for two sequels: For a Few Dollars More and The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly. In 1984 Morricone founded the Institute of Research for Musical Theatre (IRTEM). In 2007 he was awarded an honorary Academy Award for lifetime achievement.

The Music

Morricone's success began with the 1964 score for the film A Fistful of Dollars, which launched his collaborative career with director Sergio Leone. After this Morricone became the master of the spaghetti Western, creating the unforgettable theme from The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly and scoring more than thirty-five movie Westerns. His musical ideas and sounds were brand new to the Western film genre. For many years the heavy-metal band Metallica used a theme from The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly to open their shows.

The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly. Morricone's thoughtful compositional style shows in his careful scoring of three distinct instruments and themes. A silver flute represents the good, an ocarina (a potato-shaped ceramic flute) represents the ugly, and the bad is represented by two men singing together off key.

Once upon a Time in the West. This film was the final collaboration between Leone and Morricone in the Western film genre. The relationship between the music and the plot are tightly intertwined. As in The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, Morricone uses a wordless human voice to create a haunting mood. The central theme is found in "The Man with the Harmonica."

The Mission. In Morricone's 1986 film score for The Mission, "Gabriel's Oboe" winds its way through the story line as its own character. Morricone received an Academy Award nomination for this score, a masterful blend of musical styles and instruments that creates the perfect backdrop for an epic film about eighteenth century Spanish Jesuits trying to convert South American Indians to Christianity. Conflicts arise between the Jesuits and those kidnapping the Indians to use as slaves. Morricone highlights these conflicts by combining classical elements, such as "Gabriel's Oboe," with liturgical chorales, native drums, and Spanish guitars.

The Untouchables. Brian De Palma's 1987 film is, like Leone's Westerns, enhanced by Morricone's mastery. In this sound track Morricone blends old and new, such as a modern-day orchestra complemented by older instruments such as the player piano. Muted trumpets, percussion, harmonica, and electronic instruments combine with surprising ease. The scoring provides each character with a theme. Morricone's compositional style and his ability to musically represent Eliot Ness's struggle with Al Capone earned him an Academy Award nomination, a British Academy of Film and Television (BAFTA) Award, and a Grammy Award.

Cinema Paradiso. This highly regarded 1988 film received many awards and honors, and Morricone's score earned the BAFTA Award. With Morricone at his most melodic and romantic, the film tells of the relationship between a young film lover and an older man who runs the projector at the local theater. Operatic in scope and style, the score richly supported the characters, and audiences were captivated by the intertwining of the characters with the music.

Musical Legacy

Although Morricone has contributed more than a hundred works to the concert repertoire, he is best known for his work in cinema. He has scored more than four hundred films. He continues to win awards and accolades, and in 1994 Morricone was the first non-American to receive a lifetime achievement award from the Society for the Preservation of Film Music. On the compact disc We All Love Ennio Morricone, his music is covered by such artists as Metallica, Celine Dion, Bruce Springsteen, and Quincy Jones.

Diane M. Ricks

Further Reading

Corliss, Richard. "The Man with No Name." Time, February, 2007. This article profiles Morricone, discussing his music from many motion pictures including, The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, The Untouchables, and Cinema Paradiso.

Leinberger, Charles. Ennio Morricone's "The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly": A Film Score Guide. Lanham, Mass.: Scarecrow Press, 2004. Provides analysis of the score, information about Morricone's techniques in scoring, and historical background on the composer.

Pilchak, Angela M. Contemporary Musicians: Profiles of the People in Music. Vol. 53. Detroit, Mich.: Thomson Gale, 2005. Morricone is included among discussions of twentieth century composers, performers, and conductors.

See also: Jones, Quincy; Ma, Yo-Yo; Mancini, Henry; Rózsa, Miklós; Springsteen, Bruce.

Jim Morrison

American rock singer and songwriter

An enigma during his brief life, and a cult figure since his death, Morrison was a paradigm of the modern rock star. Lead vocalist and main lyricist for the popular counterculture group the Doors, he was alternately aloof and charismatic, given to excess between bouts of creativity.

Born: December 8, 1943; Melbourne, Florida
Died: July 3, 1971; Paris, France
Also known as: James Douglas Morrison (full name); Lizard King; Mr. Mojo Risin'
Member of: The Doors

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (with the Doors): The Doors, 1967; Strange Days, 1967; Waiting for the Sun, 1968; The Soft Parade, 1969; Morrison Hotel, 1970; L. A. Woman, 1971.

The Life

James Douglas Morrison was born December 8, 1943, in Melbourne, Florida. He was the first of three children of George Stephen Morrison—a World War II veteran and one of the Navy's youngest admirals—and Clara Clarke Morrison. A sensitive, inquisitive child with a high IQ, Jim began reading and writing at an early age.

Like most military families, the Morrisons moved often. Jim adapted well to unfamiliar surroundings and excelled in schools in Virginia, Texas, New Mexico, and California. An event that greatly affected him and provided the catalyst for both the morbidity and the aboriginal shamanism that permeated his written work occurred in 1947 when, while driving through the New Mexico desert, the family passed a truckload of Indians involved in a bloody highway accident.

As he reached adolescence, Jim rebelled against the strict household discipline his father imposed. In his early teens he acquired a taste for alcohol and drugs, a habit he would maintain for the rest of his life. By the time Jim graduated in 1961 from high school in Alexandria, Virginia, he had broken with his family and lived with his grandparents in Florida, where he attended St. Petersburg Junior College. The following year he transferred to Florida State University to study theater and philosophy. In 1964 he transferred to the University of California Los Angeles (UCLA) film school, receiving a bachelor's degree in 1965.

Living a homeless, gypsy existence near Venice Beach, Morrison immersed himself in the counterculture and stepped up his ingestion of drugs, particularly LSD, which inspired a flood of written work. He encountered fellow UCLA student Ray Manzarek, a keyboardist with a struggling group who, impressed with Morrison's poetry and presence, suggested they form a band. They recruited guitarist Robby Krieger and drummer John Densmore from the Psychedelic Rangers. In 1965-1966 the fledgling band worked clubs on Hollywood's Sunset Strip, borrowing its name from Aldous Huxley's book The Doors of Perception (1954), inspired by a quotation from British poet William Blake.

With a handsome, brooding, leather-clad lead singer and music that was an eclectic amalgam of rock, blues, jazz, and psychedelic, the Doors were an immediate sensation. By 1967 they had signed with Elektra Records, and a hit single, "Light My Fire," propelled the band to an appearance on television's The Ed Sullivan Show. Between 1967 and 1971 they released six studio albums that yielded a string of chart-toppers, plus live-performance and compilation albums.

Meanwhile, Morrison's personal life disintegrated. Heavily involved in drugs and alcohol, he gained weight, grew a beard, and was named in numerous paternity suits, the result of indiscriminate liaisons with groupies. Morrison, engaged in a common-law marriage with girlfriend Pamela Courson, also wedded rock writer Patricia Kennealy in a Celtic ceremony. An outspoken opponent of authority and the war in Vietnam, Morrison became a target for law-enforcement agencies. He was arrested multiple times for drunkenness, profanity, disorderly conduct, and indecent exposure.

Morrison gave up stardom and fled to Paris, France, to compose poetry. He died there on July 3, 1971, a death shrouded in mystery. Though the official cause was recorded as a heart attack, there was no autopsy, and rumors abounded that he perished from a drug overdose, was murdered, or faked his own death and is still alive. His gravesite in Père Lachaise Cemetery in Paris remains a popular rock shrine.

The Music

From their formation in the volatile 1960's, the Doors proved popular along the Sunset Strip, especially at the Whiskey A Go Go. They became known for dark, cryptic lyrics, set to melodies that wedded antiestablishment rock sensibilities, free-form jazz, drug-inspired improvisation, blues angst, and pop music. Compositions were true collaborative efforts: Morrison or Krieger usually introduced his lyrics to the group and sketched out rough melodies, Manzarek offered ideas for instrumentation and harmony, and Densmore provided rhythmic and tempo suggestions.

Despite the synergistic talents of other band members—Manzarek is widely recognized for solidifying the composition of much of the music, and Krieger wrote lyrics for such major hits as "Light My Fire," "Touch Me," and "Love Me Two Times"—Morrison, as sex symbol, front man, and underground rock poet, was always the center of attention. Outspoken and manic, the well-read Morrison wrote lyrics inspired by a multitude of sources, from nihilist German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche to Decadent French poet Arthur Rimbaud, and from Beat writers such as Jack Kerouac to experimentalists such as James Joyce. A private person when not performing, Morrison before a crowd became an unconstrained showman. His behavior, abetted by whatever substance he had ingested, became increasingly unpredictable at live shows and recording sessions. As part of Morrison's early act, he would fall off the stage into the audience, driving female fans wild. At other times, he would turn his back on the crowd, stop songs midstream to give antiauthoritarian tirades, flop around as though in the throes of an epileptic fit, or pretend to expose himself. Morrison's natural baritone would range from a husky growl to a whispered croon to an incoherent mumble to a tortured shriek.

Jim Morrison. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

After Morrison's death, the surviving members of the Doors continued to perform for a time, with Krieger and Manzarek handling the vocals on tours and on two additional albums: Other Voices and Full Circle. Neither album sold particularly well; the band broke up early in 1973.

The Doors. As professional recording artists, the Doors opened with a splash on the release of their best-selling self-titled first album. The Doors featured a mix of original songs and covers (including Howlin' Wolf's "Back Door Man" and the Bertolt Brecht-Kurt Weill "Alabama Song"). One notable original was "Break on Through (to the Other Side)," which the band promoted on film, the first of several early precursors to the music videos that today serve as typical marketing tools for singles and albums. Other cuts included "The End," an eleven-minute musical drama presaging the extended jams that have become a staple, and "Light My Fire," which rose to number one on American charts by the summer of 1967. Unusual for bands of the time or since, the Doors seldom employed a bass player for live shows (though they hired bassists for studio albums): Manzarek typically provided the bass lines left-handed on a Fender Rhodes keyboard and played melodic lines with his right hand on other keyboards.

Strange Days. A second album, released in 1967, the moody, atmospheric Strange Days, solidified the Doors' reputation, producing a number of singles that charted well. Among these are "Strange Days," "You're Lost Little Girl," "Love Me Two Times," "People Are Strange," and "When the Music's Over." Paradoxically, though Strange Days broadened the appeal of the band, it also cost the Doors the loyalty of early fans who believed the band had sold out their underground image for the sake of money and fame.

Waiting for the Sun. The Doors' third album, Waiting for the Sun, went to number one on the charts and produced a top single, "Hello, I Love You." More commercial and accessible than their first two albums, Waiting for the Sun nonetheless contained several politically charged tunes, such as the controversial antiwar anthem "The Unknown Soldier" and "Five to One," which alludes to racism and the drug subculture.

The Soft Parade. An experiment that added horns and strings to the mix, The Soft Parade was also a commercial success, but it further alienated the Doors' core fans for its blatant pop-music appeal. Written primarily by and largely credited to guitarist Krieger—previous albums had attributed lyrics only to "The Doors"—The Soft Parade yielded the standard "Touch Me," but none of the songs hit the Top 40 charts. Except for vocals, Morrison contributed little to the album because he was inebriated during the recording and could not be relied upon to show up for sessions or perform as expected.

Morrison Hotel. With their bluesy fifth studio album, Morrison Hotel, the Doors returned to the sound that had made them famous. Morrison, struggling for sobriety, wrote most of the lyrics. The album yielded such standards as "Roadhouse Blues," the acid-charged "Ship of Fools," and the politically inspired "Peace Frog" and "Waiting for the Sun." The album featured two noted guest artists: John Sebastian of the Lovin' Spoonful played harmonica (as "G. Puglese"—he wanted to avoid the fallout from Morrison's 1969 arrest and eventual conviction for obscenity and indecent exposure at a concert in Miami, Florida), and legendary blues guitarist Lonnie Mack played bass.

L.A. Woman. The final Doors studio album released during Morrison's lifetime, L.A. Woman delivered on the blues emphasis hinted at in the previous album. In addition to the title tune, L.A. Woman produced such hit singles as "Love Her Madly" and "Riders on the Storm."

Musical Legacy

The Morrison mystique—epitomized by "live fast, die young, and leave a good-looking corpse"—and the Doors' haunting sound continue to resonate with music lovers to this day. Their albums still sell well, and singles featuring their lead singer's evocative voice appear on radio playlists worldwide. Interest in Morrison's written work remains high, thanks to reprints of his self-published volumes of poetry, An American Prayer (1970) and The Lords and the New Creatures (1970), and the posthumous publication of such collections as Wilderness: The Lost Writings of Jim Morrison, Volume 1 (1988).

The Doors were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993 and received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in 2007. The group was honored with a lifetime achievement award at the 2007 Grammy Awards. Their music, ironically for a group with a fierce counterculture stance, has also entered mainstream consciousness. Doors songs have been featured on television shows (such as The Simpsons), in numerous video games and commercials, and in many movies, including Apocalypse

Now (1979), Forrest Gump (1994), The Lost Boys (1987), Girl, Interrupted (1999), and Jarhead (2005). The prototypical rock star, Morrison has served as the inspiration for dozens of antic lead singers, from Roger Daltrey and Robert Plant to Iggy Pop and Patti Smith.

Jack Ewing

Further Reading

Bangs, Lester. "Bozo Dionysus a Decade Later." In Mainlines, Blood Feasts, and Bad Taste: A Lester Bangs Reader, edited by John Morthland. New York: Anchor, 2003. This collection of essays from the late rock critic delves into the lives of musical icons from the late 1960's to the early 1980's and includes an examination of Morrison's influence.

Butler, Patricia. Angels Dance and Angels Die: The Tragic Romance of Pamela and Jim Morrison. New York: Schirmer Books, 2001. Based on extensive interviews, police reports, and other documentation, this book dwells primarily upon the tortured relationship between Morrison and his common-law wife.

Davis, Stephen. Jim Morrison: Life, Death, Legend. New York: Gotham Books, 2005. A biography and psychological evaluation, this book traces Morrison's life and influence from birth to death and beyond.

Manzarek, Ray. Light My Fire. New York: Berkley Trade, 1999. This is a memoir from Doors keyboardist Manzarek that chronicles the rise and fall of the band's charismatic front man, Morrison.

Opsasnick, Mark. The Lizard King Was Here: The Life and Times of Jim Morrison in Alexandria, Virginia. Philadelphia, Pa.: Xlibris, 2006. Self-published book focuses on Morrison's formative years when he resided on the East Coast.

Sundling, Doug, and Danny Sugerman. Doors: Artistic Vision—Their Vision of America and Life Portrayed in Their Six Studio Albums. Collingdale, Pa.: Diane, 1996. Enhanced by photographs, this book concentrates on the music of Morrison and the Doors, as related by Sugerman, the band's former manager.

See also: Daltrey, Roger; Howlin' Wolf; Odetta; Plant, Robert; Vincent, Gene; Weill, Kurt.

Van Morrison

Irish rock singer and songwriter

Characterized as a white soul singer, Morrison extended himself musically and lyrically in a number of disparate genres, including garage-band rock, blues, rhythm and blues, folk, jazz, and country.

Born: August 31, 1945; Belfast, Northern Ireland
Also known as: George Ivan Morrison (full name)
Member of: Them

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Blowin' Your Mind!, 1967; Astral Weeks, 1968; His Band and the Street Choir, 1970; Moondance, 1970; Tupelo Honey, 1971; Saint Dominic's Preview, 1972; Hard Nose the Highway, 1973; Veedon Fleece, 1974; A Period of Transition, 1977; Wavelength, 1978; Into the Music, 1979; Common One, 1980; Beautiful Vision, 1982; Inarticulate Speech of the Heart, 1983; A Sense of Wonder, 1985; No Guru, No Method, No Teacher, 1986; Poetic Champions Compose, 1987; Irish Heartbeat, 1988 (with the Chieftans); Avalon Sunset, 1989; Enlightenment, 1990; Hymns to the Silence, 1991; Too Long in Exile, 1993; Days Like This, 1995; How Long Has This Been Going On, 1996 (with Georgie Fame); Tell Me Something: The Songs of Mose Allison, 1996; The Healing Game, 1997; Back to the Top, 1999; You Win Again, 2000 (with Linda Gail Lewis); Down the Road, 2002; What's Wrong with This Picture?, 2003; Madame George, 2004; Magic Time, 2005; Pay the Devil, 2006; Keep It Simple, 2008.

ALBUMS (with Them): Here Comes the Night, 1965; Them, 1965; Them First, 1965; Them Again, 1966; Now and Them, 1967; Them Belfast Gypsies, 1967; Time Out! Time in for Them, 1968; Them in Reality, 1971.

The Life

George Ivan Morrison was born on August 31, 1945, in Belfast, Northern Ireland, to George and Violet Stitt Morrison. His interest in American music, particularly blues and rhythm-and-blues, was fueled by his father's extraordinary record collection.

Almost from infancy, Morrison listened to blues from Muddy Waters, jazz from Charlie Parker, folk from Leadbelly (Huddie Ledbetter), and country music from Hank Williams. He had his first spiritual vision at the age of three while listening to gospel singer Mahalia Jackson. Later, the memory of that intense emotional experience gave him the desire to re-create that experience for his listeners.

Morrison began by playing guitar, but when the skiffle (folk music with a jazz and blues influence) craze produced a surplus of guitar players, he learned to play saxophone and soon found work with several dance bands. At the age of sixteen, Morrison became a professional musician, and he spent a grueling musical apprenticeship in clubs in Germany, playing seven sets a night, seven days a week. In 1964 he formed the rock band Them, and Morrison proved to be an electrifying performer and talented songwriter, producing the classic "Gloria." In 1966, after numerous personnel changes, the band dissolved.

Morrison moved to the United States to record as a solo artist, and he had an immediate Top 10 hit with the single "Brown Eyed Girl." In 1968 he married Janet (Planet) Rigsbee, and his next several albums centered on the themes of conjugal love and domestic harmony. They had a daughter, Shana, but by 1973 they divorced. After that Morrison went nearly three years without releasing an album or touring. He returned to the stage at the Band's Last Waltz concert in 1976, and by 1978 he was firmly back on top with Wavelength. In the 1990's and the 2000's, he continued to ignore genre boundaries, and his numerous projects included albums devoted to traditional Celtic music, skiffle music, country, and his trademark blend of soul, jazz, blues, and rhythm and blues.

Morrison won Grammy Awards in 1996 for his work with the Chieftains and in 1998 for his work with John Lee Hooker. What's Wrong with This Picture? was nominated for a Grammy Award for Best Contemporary Blues Album. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993 by Robbie Robertson of the Band (characteristically, Morrison was the first member not to attend his own ceremony), and he was inducted into the Songwriters Hall of Fame in 2003 by Ray Charles. He and his longtime girlfriend, Michelle Rocca (Miss Ireland of 1980), lived in Ireland with their two children.

The Music

Morrison frustrated record labels with his disinterest in trying to write hit singles and becoming a rock star. Pursuing his personal artistic vision was always more important than selling records. As it happened, his decision to produce high-quality albums of lasting beauty rather than give in to the pressure to write hits coincided with the rise of album-oriented rock (AOR) radio stations, and the steady sales of his albums over his long career transformed his purely artistic convictions into prescient commercial wisdom.

Astral Weeks. By 1968 Morrison was regarded as a rising pop star, but he showed little interest in devoting himself to churning out hits. Nothing in his previous work could have prepared audiences for Astral Weeks, the first record over which he had complete artistic control. He abandoned the frenetic rhythm-and-blues style he had perfected with Them and worked with a small group of veteran jazz musicians. Morrison showed them the basic structure of the songs on his acoustic guitar, and then he let the recording tape roll, improvising impressionistic stream-of-consciousness lyrics as the other artists improvised the music, forging a unique hybrid of jazz, folk, blues, and rock. While "Brown Eyed Girl" was the result of a tightly produced session demanding twenty-two takes, there were no rehearsals for Astral Weeks, and many of the songs on the album are first takes, edited down from long jam sessions, with strings and harpsichord overdubbed later.

Van Morrison. (Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Moondance. Morrison followed the artistic triumph (but commercial failure) of Astral Weeks with another completely different album, determined not to repeat himself or grow complacent as an artist. Moondance was a radio-friendly set of ten short, meticulously crafted songs, most with conventional verse and chorus structures. Working with a new band that featured a horn section and keyboards, Morrison added elements of Stax Records-style soul music to the raw blues sound of Them and the jazz of Astral Weeks, a blend that Morrison dubbed Caledonia soul music. This Top 40 album produced a Top 40 single, "Come Running," and his next two albums, His Band and the Street Choir and Tupelo Honey, continued in this accessible vein, producing three successful singles each.

Saint Dominic's Preview. Despite the commercial success of his previous albums, in 1972 Morrison broke away from their formula and released the meditative Saint Dominic's Preview. This album juxtaposed compact and tuneful rock-and-rhythm-and-blues-styled songs with ten- and eleven-minute improvised meditations that recalled the free-form lyricism of Astral Weeks. This hybrid, with a mixture of shorter and longer songs, allowed Morrison to range freely as a writer and was adopted for many of his future albums.

Veedon Fleece. An introspective song cycle with affinities to Astral Weeks, Veedon Fleece created little stir, because of market factors as well as critical myopia. It was released in the shadow of a superb double live album, It's Too Late to Stop Now, that functioned as both a greatest-hits collection and an introduction to the excitement of Morrison's legendary live performances. The quiet and contemplative Veedon Fleece may also have suffered from the tendency of critics to use Bob Dylan's songwriting, with its unpredictable rhymes and ingenious wordplay, as the touchstone for evaluating lyrics, which trounced Morrison's plainer style. Critics eventually realized that Morrison was using his voice as a musical instrument rather than a means for reciting verses to a repetitive strummed background. In Veedon Fleece he breaks down his lyrics into fragments over the course of a song, repeating and varying them, improvising with syllables much as a saxophone player does with musical notes. Morrison was an accomplished musician well before he began singing, and he often pointed to his saxophone playing as his model for vocal phrasing.

Into the Music. While Morrison always emphasized the spirituality and healing powers of music, not all critics were pleased by the overtly religious themes and more polished production values that characterized his albums of the 1980's, roughly from Into the Music to Hymns to the Silence. Morrison strongly denied that he was a disciple of any organized religion or thought system, as exemplified by the title of his 1986 release No Guru, No Method, No Teacher. Rather, he drew from many philosophies, as he often had from literature, to produce meditative states in his listeners, the goal of many of his albums since Astral Weeks and one of his measures of success for his live performances. He increasingly turned from saxophone, guitar, and harmonica to piano as his primary instrument, creating a more ethereal sound, and included instrumentals on several albums.

Magic Time. Morrison's albums continued to earn critical praise, and Magic Time followed the model of much of his mature work, at least since Too Long in Exile, with a mixture of soul, jazz, and blues originals, from fast shuffles to slow ballads, accompanied by a few cover versions of standards. The follow-up to Magic Time, Pay the Devil, showed Morrison in an experimental mood, with a collection of a few originals mixed with straightforward country-western songs.

Musical Legacy

In 1995 Morrison began publishing under his own Exile Productions, which resolved his antipathy toward the music business and recording contracts by doing without them. He had complete control over all aspects of production, using record companies only to distribute finished albums. His large body of recorded work was unmatched in terms of quantity, consistent quality, and breadth of musical range by any other rock musician. His expressive vocal style and synthesis of musical genres directly influenced such singer-songwriters as Bruce Springsteen, John Mellencamp, Bono of U2, Bob Seger, Graham Parker, Elvis Costello, and Ben Harper. His commitment to artistic integrity above commercial success helped lead the way for many serious rock musicians to produce well-crafted albums, rather than hit singles, as the basic units of musical expression.

If reviewers were lukewarm and journalists and biographers were negative, Morrison's fan base never wavered. Hindsight demonstrated that Morrison's musical vision was well ahead of that of his critics, who frequently were obliged to reassess his albums more favorably. In 2003, thirty-five years after its release, Astral Weeks ranked number nineteen on Rolling Stone's 500 Greatest Albums of All Time list, a testimony to the timeless qualities of Morrison's best work.

William Nelles

Further Reading

Collis, John. Van Morrison: Inarticulate Speech of the Heart. New York: Da Capo Press, 1996. Good research on the earlier phases of Morrison's career, but sketchy on the latter phases. Features a thorough discography and an extensive list of bootleg albums.

Friskics-Warren, Bill. I'll Take You There: Pop Music and the Urge for Transcendence. New York: Continuum, 2005. The first chapter offers an analysis of Morrison's career-long quest for transcendence. Makes the excellent observation that Morrison must be classified as a "spiritual omnivore" with sympathy for many belief systems but exclusive allegiance to none.

Heylin, Clinton. Can You Feel the Silence? Van Morrison: A New Biography. Chicago: Chicago Review Press, 2003. Presents valuable research, including a detailed "sessionography" of Morrison's work in recording studios over the years, but spends too much time repeating petulant gossip.

Hinton, Brian. Celtic Crossroads: The Art of Van Morrison. 2d ed. London: Sanctuary, 2000. Morrison's legendary disdain for biographers and his refusal to cooperate have frustrated writers. Hinton, however, focused on the facts and produced a literate, balanced, and insightful book. Includes extensive discussions of the music as well as Morrison's personal history.

Turner, Steve. Van Morrison: Too Late to Stop Now. London: Bloomsbury, 1993. Though dated, this book is valuable for its hundreds of superb photographs, with images from Morrison's personal as well as professional life.

See also: Burke, Solomon; Costello, Elvis; Dylan, Bob; Guthrie, Arlo; Hooker, John Lee; Jackson, Mahalia; Leadbelly; Parker, Charlie; Reed, Jimmy; Robertson, Robbie; Seger, Bob; Stewart, Rod; Vincent, Gene; Waters, Muddy; Williams, Hank; Young, Neil.

Morrissey

English rock singer and songwriter

A prominent figure in alternative rock, Morrissey is recognized for his sensitive, melancholy persona and his witty, dark lyrics.

Born: May 22, 1959; Manchester, England
Also known as: Steven Patrick Morrissey (full name)
Member of: The Smiths

Principal recordings

ALBUMS (solo): Viva Hate, 1988; Kill Uncle, 1991; Your Arsenal, 1992; Vauxhall and I, 1994; Southpaw Grammar, 1995; Maladjusted, 1997; You Are the Quarry, 2004; Ringleader of the Tormentors, 2006.

ALBUMS (with the Smiths): The Smiths, 1984; Meat Is Murder, 1985; The Queen Is Dead, 1986; Strangeways, Here We Come, 1987.

The Life

Steven Patrick Morrissey (MOHR-rih-see) was born on May 22, 1959, to Irish Catholic immigrants. His father, Peter Morrissey, was a hospital porter, and his mother, Elizabeth Dwyer, was a librarian. He was raised primarily in Hulme and Stretford, Manchester. He attended St. Mary's Secondary Modern School and Stretford Technical School, where he passed three O levels, including English literature. He frequently sent letters to music magazines such as Melody Maker and New Musical Express, offering his frank opinion on various bands. He later wrote three books: about his favorite band, the New York Dolls; about actor James Dean; and about obscure B-motion picture actors.

After Morrissey met the guitarist Johnny Marr in 1982, the two formed one of the most fruitful collaborations in British pop music, resulting in the formation of the Smiths. The band became a sensation in England, Ireland, and Australia; it developed a cult following in the United States; and it achieved extraordinary coverage in the music press. The band separated in 1987, after Marr and Morrissey quarreled over musical and creative differences. The group released four studio albums and several compilations between 1984 and the time of their breakup, including The Queen Is Dead. Following the Smiths' split, Morrissey's first solo album, Viva Hate, was released in 1988. His album Ringleader of the Tormentors debuted at the top of England's album charts.

The Music

Morrissey's solo career replicates the sexual ambiguity, opulently indulgent lyrics, and unmatched crooning style he made legendary with the Smiths. In addition, he enjoys the freedom to experiment with synth-pop, Latin, and rockabilly music. His musical preferences are known to range from pre-Beatles British pop to high-camp glam rock and indie bands such as Ludus and Bradford. Morrissey was once president of the New York Dolls fan club in England, and he was also interested in British soap operas of the late 1950's and early 1960's, as well as the works of Oscar Wilde and Shelagh Delaney. Morrissey's lyrical subject matter tends to focus on life issues, everything from anguish, rejection, and death to vegetarianism and the English music scene.

"How Soon Is Now?" "How Soon Is Now?" is a song written in 1984 by Morrissey and Marr, and it was initially released by the Smiths. It features Marr's tremolo guitar work and Morrissey's chilly vocals. The subject of the song is a person who cannot find a means to escape his shyness. Two couplets from the song are eminent in pop culture: the opening to the verse, "I am the son, and the heir, of a shyness that is criminally vulgar," and the chorus, "I am human and I need to be loved." The opening was adapted from a line in George Eliot's Middlemarch (1874). The lyrics have also been interpreted as a reference to Manchester's gay club culture at the time.

"Meat Is Murder." Like "How Soon Is Now?," "Meat Is Murder" is on the album entitled Meat Is Murder. The song is an outlet for Morrissey's militant stance on vegetarianism. It contains gruesome imagery and barnyard sounds, with simulated bovine cries and buzz-saw guitars. The song has inspired many fans to stop eating meat, including the Smiths' bassist, Andy Rourke.

"The More You Ignore Me." This single by Morrissey was released in 1994 on his Vauxhall and I album. It is also Morrissey's only charting single on the U.S. Billboard Hot 100 and his only number-one single on the modern rock tracks. The song starts as a declaration of love by an innocuous loner; it then slowly transforms into a much darker tale. The bright, lyrical melody is juxtaposed with Morrissey's grim lyrics about unrequited love.

"Irish Blood English Heart." This is an example of Morrissey's musical commentary on sociopolitical events in England. The two-minute-long song has a lively accompaniment with an unexpected ending. The song was a debut single written for his 2004 album You Are the Quarry. Morrissey's first album in seven years yearns for an England that no longer exists, and his lyrics speak against his homeland's apparent stagnation.

"You Have Killed Me." The first single from the album Ringleader of the Tormentors is "You Have Killed Me." Written by Morrissey and Jesse Tobias, the single was released in 2006. The song's lyrics contain many references to Rome and Romans, with allusions to director Pier Paolo Pasolini's 1961 film, Accattone, about prostitution in the slums of Rome. The lyrics also mention Italian actress Anna Magnani, American record producer Tony Visconti, and, in some live performances, Italian film director Federico Fellini.

Musical Legacy

Morrissey crafted his career as the ultimate rock outsider and antihero. Although he has recorded several solo albums, none has equaled the success he achieved with Marr in the Smiths, where he personified a learned romanticism and an incurable contrarianism. Morrissey is a highly sexual pop star of uncertain orientation who practices celibacy, wears flowers in his pockets, and croons in a dejected, narcissistic warble. He is an unforgiving satirist who expresses the heaviness in his heart with forthrightness.

People were lured to the Smiths' music mostly through word of mouth, especially with backing from alternative and college radio. Morrissey's musical legacy continues to be passed down in an analogous manner. Many current bands have felt his influence, among them the Killers, Radiohead, Blur, Suede, Oasis, the Stone Roses, the Libertines, and the Arctic Monkeys.

Samantha Ryan Barnsfather

Further Reading

Goddard, Simon. The Smiths: Songs That Saved Your Life. 3d ed. Surrey, England: Reynolds & Hearn, 2006. This book offers a thorough chronological study of the group's music based upon interviews with band members, producers, and friends.

Rogan, Johnny. Morrissey. London: Rogan Books, 2007. The albums of the Smiths and of Morrissey are discussed in detail.

_____. Morrissey and Marr: The Severed Alliance. London: Omnibus Press, 1993. This controversial book deals with every detail regarding the Smiths, from the birth of Morrissey's parents in Dublin to the creation of the English band in the 1980's.

Slee, Jo. Peepholism: Into the Art of Morrissey. London: Sidgwick & Jackson, 1994. An elegant coffee table book recounting the career of the Smiths and Morrissey, complied by the art collaborator for Morrissey and the Smiths.

Woods, Paul A., ed. Morrissey in Conversation: The Essential Interviews. London: Plexus, 2007. This noteworthy book includes the well-known statements of Britain's improbable modern rock icon.

See also: Bowie, David; Mitchell, Joni; Sting.

Jelly Roll Morton

American jazz composer and pianist

Morton merged blues and ragtime, going beyond formal conventions to develop musical ideas through variation, contrasting texture, and improvisation.

Born: October 20, 1890; New Orleans, Louisiana
Died: July 10, 1941; Los Angeles, California
Also known as: Ferdinand Joseph Lamothe (birth name)
Member of: The Red Hot Peppers

Principal recordings

SINGLES (solo): "Big Foot Ham," 1924; "Froggie Moore," 1924; "Ganjam," 1924; "Jelly Roll Blues," 1924; "London Blues," 1924; "Mamamita," 1924; "Milenberg Joys," 1924; "Mr. Jelly Roll," 1924; "New Orleans Blues," 1924; "Stratford Hunch," 1924; "Mr. Jelly Lord," 1926; "Pacific Rag," 1926; "Burnin' the Iceberg," 1929; "Freakish," 1929; "New Orleans Bump," 1929; "Pep," 1929; "Tank Town Bump," 1929; "Turtle Twist," 1929; "Creepy Feeling," 1938; "Finger Buster," 1938; "I Ain't Got Nobody," 1938; "Animule Dance," 1939; "The Crave," 1939; "Don't You Leave Me Here," 1939; "I Thought I Heard Buddy Bolden Say," 1939; "Winin' Boy Blues," 1939; "Good Old New York," 1940; "My Home Is in a Southern Town," 1940; "Sweet Substitute," 1940; "Why?," 1940.

SINGLES (with the Red Hot Peppers): "King Porter Stomp," 1923; "New Orleans Joys," 1923; "Wolverine Blues," 1923; "Black Bottom Stomp," 1926; "Cannon Ball Blues," 1926; "The Chant," 1926; "Doctor Jazz Stomp," 1926; "Grandpa's Spells," 1926; "Original Jelly Roll Blues," 1926; "Sidewalk Blues," 1926; "Someday Sweetheart," 1926; "Beale Street Blues," 1927; "Hyena Stomp," 1927; "Jungle Blues," 1927; "The Pearls," 1927; "Wild Man Blues," 1927; "Kansas City Stomp," 1928; "Red Hot Pepper," 1928; "Shreveport Stomp," 1928; "Mint Julep," 1929; "Fickle Fay Creep," 1930; "If Someone Would Only Love Me," 1930;

"Mushmouth Shuffle," 1930; "Ponchatrain," 1930.

The Life

Jelly Roll Morton was born into a Creole family with roots in the West Indies that resided primarily in New Orleans. He was raised by his mother and stepfather, but he spent considerable time with his godmother, Laura Hunter (also known as Eulalie Echo). His father, Ferdinand P. La Menthe, was a trombonist, but there is little evidence he had any musical influence on his son. Morton's early childhood was filled with classical music. At the age of six, he began taking guitar lessons from a local Spanish resident, and by the time he was seven years old he was performing with Creole string bands (typically consisting of guitar, mandolin, and bass). He took up piano at the age of ten, and he was eventually taught by a piano instructor at St. Joseph's University. Morton was further mentored by pianist and vocalist Tony Jackson, with whom he performed in the bordellos of New Orlean's Storyville district.

In 1904 Morton performed throughout Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida. From 1907 to 1911 he toured the Gulf Coast with the Big Eye Louis Delisle and Billy Kersand minstrel shows, and the East Coast with Will Benbow's vaudeville act. By 1912 he began to tour under his own name in Texas, and from 1914 to 1917 he toured the Midwest. In 1917 Morton began performing with Bill Johnson's band, and he followed the band to Los Angeles. Once there, he met Johnson's sister Bessie (also known as Anita Gonzalez, Anita Ford, and Anita Morton), who became his common-law wife. He met with such success from Los Angeles audiences and critics that he remained there until 1922.

In the years between 1922 and 1928, Morton resided in Chicago. His was staff arranger for Melrose Brothers Publishing Company (1923-1927), and he made his first recordings. In Chicago he recorded with OKeh Records, Paramount Records, Victor Records, and Gennett Records, and he made piano rolls for QRS. He recorded his compositions in solo performances and in sextet and octet band arrangements. The group Morton organized for these recordings became known as the Red Hot Peppers, and it subsequently became an influential band of the period. Among its members were Kid Ory, Omar Simeon, George Mitchell, Johnny St. Cyr, Barney Bigard, Johnny Dodds, and Baby Dodds. In 1928 Morton married Mabel Bertrand, another New Orleans Creole who was working in Chicago as a showgirl.

In the early 1930's the successes Morton had experienced in the previous decade began to decline. His recording contract with Victor Records was not renewed, and the fan base he enjoyed in Chicago was not easy to re-create in New York. One difficulty was that Morton preferred working with small ensembles, and at the time large orchestras were becoming the norm. He held firm to his belief that improvisation should derive from variations of the melody, while New York musicians held that improvisation should be based on the harmonic structure. Morton's arranging style came to be regarded as anachronistic. Even though his compositions continued to be performed by other groups, his arrangements were frequently updated by other arrangers. The ragtimelike B section of "King Porter Stomp," for example, was often removed. Although in the 1930's Morton's compositions initiated the swing era, he was generally viewed as entrenched in an old-fashioned style. He left New York, and between 1935 and 1938 he managed performances and performed at a Washington, D.C., jazz club known alternatively as the Jungle Inn, Music Box, and Blue Moon Inn.

Morton's final years brought him in touch with his early fears. Like many New Orleans Creoles, Morton was a devout Catholic and a firm believer in the potency of Louisiana voodoo. His godmother and Bessie Johnson were voodoo priestesses, and he witnessed and participated in numerous ceremonies that made a considerable impression on him. He was terrified of spirits, and he often placed holy water around his bed to protect himself. Bessie Johnson explained that becoming a voodoo priestess required selling the person she loves most to Satan, and when she died, she would bring her loved one along with her. According to Bessie Johnson, Morton always believed that his godmother had sold him to Satan, so when he received word that she was ill he immediately became concerned.

At the time Morton was in New York. He and Bertrand left the Jungle Inn after an incident with a drunken audience member that resulted in Morton being stabbed in the head and just above the heart.

Jelly Roll Morton. (National Archives)

Many believed that the wound to the heart was mishandled by the hospital staff and that it aggravated Morton's heart condition. After that, his finances and his health declined, and he began accepting assistance from local Catholic charities. Shortly before he was about to appear at the Golden Gate Ballroom in Harlem, Morton had a severe asthma attack that hospitalized him for three months. The doctors told him not to play piano any longer; nevertheless, he made some of his finest solo recording at this time.

Morton appeared on national radio broadcasts such as Gabriel Heatter's We, the People in 1939 and NBC's Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street in 1940. His career seemed to be back on track when he found out that his godmother died. Leaving his wife in New York in the middle of winter, he drove alone to Los Angeles, pulling a spare car. Along the way he had to be rescued from a snowstorm, but eventually he made it to Los Angeles. After a brief stay, he died in the arms of Bessie Johnson from heart failure, the result of chronic high blood pressure.

The Music

Blues, Jazz, and Stomps. Morton's particular style of merging blues and ragtime was considerably influential. He developed his musical ideas in three types of structures: three-section pieces (most common), such as "The Pearls" and "King Porter Stomp"; two-section pieces in which one section is more prominent than the other, such as "Jelly Roll Blues" and "Black Bottom Stomp"; and composed variations based on a single section of material (for example, a twelve-bar blues), such as "Hyena Stomp" and "Jungle Blues."

"Jelly Roll Blues." One of Morton's earliest compositions—and possibly the first extant jazz composition of any composer—is "Jelly Roll Blues." Composed in 1905 and published in 1915, the piece consists of two sections, each containing multiple twelve-bar blues choruses. The energetic first section in B-flat is contrasted by the more lyrical second section in E-flat. Both contain five twelve-bar blues choruses, which are bridged. Section one consists of a four-measure introduction followed by five blues measures; section two consists of a four-measure transition, again followed by five blues measures.

The second section has a richer harmonic structure, and it uses the habanera rhythm in the left hand. In addition, the first section has composed breaks and composed variations, while the second section is designed for improvised variations.

"King Porter Stomp." One of Morton's best-known compositions is "King Porter Stomp," composed for his friend, pianist Porter King, in 1906 and published in 1924. He made more recordings of this piece than any other, and it was recorded approximately twenty times by other groups. Its formal structure of three sections, aabbccc, borrows heavily from ragtime, although without a return to a after the second section, and with composed variations in the final sections. The first sign that "King Porter Stomp" is not a straightforward rag appears in its initial measures. Although a similar harmonic sophistication is evident, the piece is in 4/4, without ragtime's typical stride bass. Although the second section is raglike, the final section is forward-looking in its use of composed variations, full-voiced chords, and the division of right and left hand statements (suggesting a call and response between band sections).

Musical Legacy

Morton's self-proclaimed status as the inventor of jazz must be qualified. Nevertheless, he was the first important jazz composer, and his music provides an exemplary study of the transition from ragtime to jazz. His musical legacy can be seen not only through his compositions but also through his virtuosic piano technique, his meticulous band arrangements, and his precision leadership of the performance groups he maintained. Many of the telltale elements of early jazz—such as smears, elisions, growls, slap bass, tailgates, and the use of dissonance—were heard first in Morton's recordings. Through his compositions and arrangements, Morton was responsible for innovations in the structural elements that continue to serve as jazz hallmarks today. These include the use of breaks, riffs, contrasting textures, countermelodies, and extensive improvisational space for each of the players.

Brian Timothy Harlan

Further Reading

Floyd, Samuel A. International Dictionary of Black Composers. Columbia College Center for Black Music Research. Chicago: Fitzroy Dearborn, 1999. A two-volume set that includes essays, biographies, bibliographies, and discographies on African American classical and popular music composers. Entries cover over two hundred and fifty years from the early eighteenth century to the twentieth.

Lomax, Alan. Mister Jelly Roll. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001. The first biography of Morton, originally published in 1950, is based on the transcripts of Lomax's Library of Congress interviews with Morton in the late 1940's.

Morton, Jelly Roll. Collected Piano Music of Ferdinand "Jelly Roll" Morton. Edited by James Dapogny. New York: G. Schirmer, 1982. A comprehensive collection of Morton's piano music, with a biography and an explanation of the historical context in which the works were composed. It also includes extensive analytical commentary on Morton's compositional and piano performance style.

Pastras, Philip. Dead Man Blues: Jelly Roll Morton Way Out West. Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001. This source extends Lomax's work by including Morton's personal papers and other archival ephemera in a critical analysis of his life. The focus on Morton's experiences in California provides insight into the West Coast's impact on the development of early jazz.

Reich, Howard, and William Gaines. Jelly's Blues: The Life, Music, and Redemption of Jelly Roll Morton. Cambridge, Mass.: Da Capo, 2003. A biographical discussion of Morton's difficulties with record companies, publishers, and particularly his protests against the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers for their treatment of African American composers.

See also: Beiderbecke, Bix; Blake, Eubie; Ellington, Duke; Hampton, Lionel; Henderson, Fletcher; Kirk, Rahsaan Roland; Lomax, Alan; Mingus, Charles; Monk, Thelonious; Professor Longhair; Rainey, Ma; Tatum, Art; Waller, Fats.

Anne-Sophie Mutter

German classical violinist

A virtuoso violinist, Mutter is known for her superb technical command of the instrument, her accurate intonation, and her production of rich sound.

Born: June 29, 1963; Rheinfelden, Baden-Württemberg, West Germany (now in Germany)

Principal recordings

ALBUMS: Bach: Violin Concerto No. 2, Magnificat—Karajan and Mutter, 1984; Lutaslowski: Partitat and Chain 2; Stravinsky Violin Concerto, 1988; Beethoven: The String Trios—Mutter, Giuranna, and Rostropovich, 1989; Bach: Concerto for Two Violins, 1990; Beethoven: Triple Concerto—Karajan, Mutter, Zetser, and Ma, 1990; Great

Violin Concertos, 1990; Vivaldi: Four Seasons, 1990; Violinkonzer; Gesungenezeit, 1992; Brahms: Violin Concerto and Double Concerto, 1993; Mendelssohn, Brahms: Violin Concertos, 1995; Romance: Anne-Sophie Mutter, 1995; Sibelius: Violin Concertos and Serenades, 1996; The Berlin Recital—Anne-Sophie Mutter, 1997; Penderecki Violin Concerto No. 2; Bartók Sonata for Violin and Piano No. 2, 1997; Beethoven: Complete Violin Sonatas, 2002; Brahms: Violin Sonatas, 2003; Previn: Violin Concerto; Bernstein: Serenade, 2003; Tango Song and Dance, 2003; Tchaikovsky/ Korngold: Violin Concertos, 2004; Carmen—Fantasie—Wiener Philharmoniker, 2005; Anne Sophie Mutter—The Mozart Project, 2006; Mozart: Piano Trios, 2006; Simply Anne-Sophie, 2006; Mozart: The Violin Concertos, 2007; Mozart: The Violin Sonatas, 2007.

The Life

Anne-Sophie Mutter (AN-neh SOH-fee MEW-tur) was born in Rheinfelden, a small town in West Germany near the Swiss border, the youngest child and only daughter of Gerlinde Winter and Karl Wilhelm Mutter, editor of the daily newspaper, the Sudkurier. Mutter's parents considered the study of an instrument part of a well-rounded education; their daughter began piano lessons at age five, and she followed this shortly after with violin lessons. In 1970 Mutter performed at the Jugend Musiziert contest, a national music competition for musicians aged six to twenty-four. She won the first prize with special distinction for violin and another prize for her piano duo performance with her brother Christoph. When she dominated the competition again in 1974, the judges asked her not to reenter the contest.

Until age ten, Mutter studied violin with Erna Honigberger. After Honigberger's death, Mutter studied for eight and a half years with Aida Stucki at the Winterthur Conservatory in Switzerland. Both her teachers had learned to play the violin in the tradition of Carl Flesch, and they taught her according to the Flesch philosophy.

Herbert von Karajan heard Mutter play a recital with her brother, Christoph, at the Lucerne Festival in 1976, and he invited her to Berlin for an audition. He engaged her for the 1977 Salzburg Whitsun Festival and asked her to record two violin concerti of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. This was the start of her professional career.

Mutter is an acknowledged teacher who has held the International Chair of Violin Studies at the Royal Academy of Music in London since 1986, where she imparts to students the necessary techniques for mastery of the violin art. In 1987 she established a foundation in Germany to help younger players.

In January, 1989, Mutter married Detlef Wunderlich, a corporate lawyer. They made their home in Munich and had two children before Wunderlich's untimely death in 1995. On August 1, 2002, Mutter wed composer André Previn in New York. The couple often performed and recorded together, although the Mutter-Previn marriage ended in divorce in 2006.

The Music

Performances. Upon the recommendation of von Karajan, Mutter began to play five or six professional concerts a year. She has performed annually in Britain since 1977, and she has appeared in North America annually since her 1980 debut with the New York Philharmonic. Since then, Mutter rapidly became an international celebrity, performing more than a hundred concerts a year with major orchestras in Europe, in the United States, and in Canada. Her schedule has included several tours of Japan and an invitation to perform in the Soviet Union.

One of her first public performances was at the 1976 International Music Festival in Lucerne, Switzerland. After this concert, von Karajan asked the young violinist to audition for him. During a break in a rehearsal of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, Mutter played two pieces. Though she knew of von Karajan's importance, she claims that she was not nervous because she did not expect to be chosen to play a solo with the orchestra. Nevertheless, the renowned conductor invited Mutter to perform Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 3 in G Major (1775) at the Salzburg Easter Festival in 1977, her professional debut.

From the beginning of her professional career, Mutter has played recitals, a musical form she seems to enjoy since she has more control of the program and of the musical expression, including the sound, the phrasing, and the dynamics. She performs and records with Bruno Giuranna (viola) and Mstislav Rostropovich (cello).

Anne-Sophie Mutter. (AP/Wide World Photos)

Recordings. Under von Karajan's direction, Mutter performed many times with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and made several recordings. She often acknowledged the influence that von Karajan, the first important musician in her life, had on her career.

In 1978 Mutter made her first recording, with the Berlin Philharmonic under the baton of von Karajan. She performed Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 3 in G Major and Violin Concerto No. 5 in A Major (1775). Since then she has recorded an impressive list of works on the Deutsche Grammophone and EMI-Angel labels.

Her recording of Chain 2 and Partita by Polish composer Witold Lutosławski won the Grand Prix du Disque. Mutter has stated frequently that she enjoys recording, and she prefers to do it in a single session, like a live concert, rather than recording several takes and using the best parts of each to make a single recording.

Contemporary Composers. The works of great masters, such as Mozart, Ludwig von Beethoven, and Johannes Brahms, make up much of Mutter's repertoire, but she does not neglect the works of latter eras. She is deeply committed to contemporary composers, and she has been instrumental in commissioning and then performing new works for the violin. The composers she has worked with include Wolfgang Rihm (on 1992's Gesungene Zeit), Sebastian Currier, Norbert Moret, and Krzysztof Penderecki (on 1995's Violin Concerto No. 2). In 1988 she premiered En Rêve, a concerto by Moret, which is dedicated to her.

The Mozart Project. In honor of Mozart's 250th birthday, Mutter recorded in three sessions all of Mozart's major compositions for violin on the Deutsche Grammophon label, an endeavor called The Mozart Project. She recorded the violin concerti and the Sinfonia Concertante for Violin, Viola, and Orchestra in E-flat Major (1779) together with violist Yuri Bashmet and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. The orchestra was directed by the violinist herself. The two sonatas were performed together with Lambert Orkis, and the piano concerti were recorded together with her then-husband André Previn and Daniel Müller-Schott. She was awarded the Le Monde de la Musique and Record Geijutsu for The Mozart Project.

Partnership with Previn. Mutter collaborated with Previn on Tango Song and Dance and on a piece that Previn composed for her in 2002, Violin Concerto ("Anne-Sophie"), which provided the perfect setting for what critics described as Mutter's inimitable jewellike tone. Their recorded collaboration on this piece earned them both Grammy Awards. Later, Deutsche Grammophon released the Mutter-Previn album of Mozart piano trios, again accompanied by cellist Müller-Schott.

Musical Legacy

Mutter is a charismatic violinist, known for her rich tone, her secure technique, and her strong sense of musical structure that highlight her impassioned performances of the classic violin repertory.

In 1987 Mutter established the Rudolf Eberle Foundation to support young string instrumentalists. In 1997 she established the Anne-Sophie Mutter Circle of Friends Foundation to support violin, viola, cello, and contrabass soloists worldwide. On April 24, 2008, the Bavarian Academy of Fine Arts presented to Mutter the International Ernst von Siemens Music Prize, which included a cash endowment of 200,000 euros. The violinist donated half of the prize money to a foundation that supports promising young musicians. Mutter is also is a bearer of the Order of Merit of the German Federal Republic, the Bavarian Order of Merit, the Austrian Honor Cross, and the Ordre des Arts et des Lettres.

Martin J. Manning

Further Reading

Apthorp, Shirley. "Queen of Sheen." The Strad 113 (March, 2002): 234-241. In an article in a classical music magazine for string enthusiasts, the author describes Mutter as a glamorous violin icon who is the utterly focused pilot of her musical destiny.

Eisler, Edith. "Farewells." Strings 14, no. 8 (May/June, 2000): 84, 86, 89-91, 93-94. Interesting profile of several violinists, including Mutter, who are presenting entire festivals of contemporary music. In Mutter's case, this includes a combination of old (Bernstein) and new composers (Lutosławski, Rihm, and Penderecki). The opening of the article reviews Mutter's performance.

Sand, Barbara L. "Anne-Sophie Mutter." Musical America 110, no. 2 (March, 1990): 10-14. Detailed article on Mutter, which observes that Mutter made the transition from protégée of von Karajan to master violinist with relative ease.

Stearns, David P. "Beauty and the Bow." Ovation 9, no. 3 (April, 1988): 12-14, 27. The author, a classical music critic of USA Today, explains the impact of Mutter as she began her extensive concert career in the United States. He highlights this with a sample of her itinerary in one year, 1988, alone.

See also: Karajan, Herbert von; Korngold, Erich Wolfgang; Lutosławski, Witold; Ma, Yo-Yo; Previn, Sir André; Rostropovich, Mstislav.

N

Conlon Nancarrow

American classical composer

Nancarrow's work with clashing tempi and rhythmic superimposition forged a radically new rhythmic language, redefining musical composition, especially for player piano.

Born: October 27, 1912; Texarkana, Arkansas
Died: August 10, 1997; Mexico City, Mexico
Also known as: Samuel Conlon Nancarrow (full name)

Principal works

CHAMBER WORKS: Sarabande and Scherzo, 1930 (for oboe, bassoon, and piano); Toccata, 1935 (for violin and piano); Septet, 1940; Trio No. 1, 1942 (for clarinet, bassoon, and piano); Piece No. 1, 1943; String Quartet No. 1, 1945; String Quartet No. 2, 1948; Piece No. 2, 1985; String Quartet No. 3, 1987; Trio No. 2, 1991 (for oboe, bassoon, and piano).

PIANO WORKS: Blues, 1935; Prelude, 1935; Sonatina, 1941; Tango?, 1983; Two Canons for Ursula, 1989.

PLAYER PIANO WORKS: Studies Nos. 1-30, 1960; Studies Nos. 31-37, 40-51, 1992; Contraption No. 1, 1993.

The Life

Samuel Conlon Nancarrow (nan-KAHR-roh) was born in Texarkana, Arkansas, in 1912. He attended the Western Military Academy in Illinois, where he started playing trumpet, and he later went to the national music camp in Interlochen, Michigan. At Cincinnati College Conservatory (1929-1932), he first heard Igor Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring (1913), which inspired him to explore complex rhythms in his own compositions. Although Nancarrow studied privately in Boston with Roger Sessions, Walter Piston, and Nicolas Slonimsky from 1933 to 1936, he later described himself as an autodidact. While in Boston, Nancarrow joined the Communist Party.

In 1936 Nancarrow sailed to Europe, paying his passage by playing jazz trumpet, and in 1937 he enlisted in the Lincoln Brigade to fight in the Spanish Civil War. In 1939 he returned to the United States and moved to New York, where he read composer Henry Cowell's New Musical Resources (1930), in which Cowell suggests that player pianos could be used to perform complex rhythms beyond the abilities of humans.

Increasing animosity in the United States toward Communists drove Nancarrow to relocate to Mexico City in 1940, and he became a Mexican citizen in 1955. He returned temporarily to New York in 1947 to buy a player piano and a piano-roll-punching machine. Nancarrow visited the United States for the first time in three decades in 1981, and he continued to reside in Mexico City until his death from heart failure in 1997.

The Music

